THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND,

During the REIGNS of

King WILLIAM AND Queen MARY, || Queen ANNE AND King GEORGE I.

BEING THE

Sequel of the Reigns of the STUARTS.

THE

Matter has been Collected from many Curious MANUSCRIPTS, and the moſt rare Printed TRACTS.

IT CONTAINS

A very exact Account of the DEBATES in PARLIAMENT, and ſhort Extracts of the moſt Remarkable Political PIECES within this Compaſs of TIME.

The whole is in Proſecution of the AUTHOR's FIRST SCHEME to ſet the Dark and Pernicious Deſigns of the Enemies to our preſent Happy CONSTITUTION, in a FAIR and FULL Light.

To which is prefix'd,

A Large VINDICATION of the AUTHOR againſt the Groundleſs CHARGE of PARTIALITY.

PROVING,

That the Reverend DOCTORS, and others who charg'd him with it, are themſelves, of all Men, the moſt PARTIAL.

By Mr. OLDMIXON.

THE PREFACE.

THE Mind of Man is certainly capable of no greater Pleaſure than what it takes in the Accompliſhment of ſome good Work, upon which it was much ſet. This would be my Caſe, was it not for the Apprehenſions I am under of the Treatment I may meet with from Prejudice and Faction, Bigotry and Ignorance, which miſlead ſo many in theſe our Days, that an Author has little ſure Ground to tread upon.

This Conſideration, and the Recency of the Facts, beſides particular Diſcouragements, which the Publick not being concern'd in, ought not to be troubled with, would have deterr'd any one from this Undertaking, who had it not ſo much at Heart as this Hiſtorian, whom nothing could deter in Proſecution of a Deſign, from which he thought his Country might receive ſome Benefit, both now and hereafter: For that that was his principal View, will appear to all who know and conſider the Difficulties he had to encounter from Indiſpoſition, Vexation, &c. and the little Advantage that is made of ſuch large and laborious Productions, when they are left to make their own way in the World.

To the Knowing and Candid, his Deſign will appear generous, profitable, and even neceſſary; by others it will be cenſur'd as raſh, vain and partial. The laſt Branch of this Charge has been mightily exaggerated, with Reference to the Reigns of the Stuarts, by the Enemies of our preſent happy Conſtitution, founded on the Revolution, and ſupported by the Proteſtant Succeſſion, who could not but have it in Abhorrence, it being to expoſe their wicked, ſeditious and rebellious Principles and Practices, that they may be guarded againſt for the future. Now, how was it poſſible to expoſe them, without relating the Actions, and naming the Agents; and was that poſſible without a Charge of Partiality? No, it never was, and never will be done. Perſons touch'd by it, will eternally rail at thoſe that touch them as Partial, let the Relation of their Actions be never ſo juſt. There is not an ugly Fellow in the World, as much as he is enamour'd with himſelf otherwiſe, who is delighted with his own Picture, and who will not take it as an Affront to have it held up to his Face by one he does not love.

Can the Principles and Practices of the Faction be expos'd without the Uſe of proper Terms? Can we treat of them while they were diſtreſſing King William in all the Parts of his Reign, or when they were publiſhing High-Church Memorials in Queen Anne's, or of her Miniſtry, in her four laſt Years, with Moderation and Decorum? Can one, I ſay, treat of thoſe Miniſters, the Chief of whom have been impeach'd and attainted for High-Treaſon, without uſing the Language of the Law, and calling them Traytors and Criminals? Can any one treat of the Utrecht Peace, ſo often and ſo ſolemnly declar'd by the Legiſlature to be treacherous, ſcandalous, and ignominious, without leaving the Marks of Treachery, Scandal and Ignominy on the Negotiators of it, their Supporters and Adherents? Is it to be partial to ſay, what both Houſes of Parliament have ſaid in Votes and Addreſſes? Can ſuch evil Miniſters and Councellors be ſpoken of in the Stile of Panegyrick? In a word, is Hiſtory the only Place where Flattery ceaſes to be a Vice, and Sincerity a Virtue; where Fact is to give way to Ceremony, and Truth to Complaiſance? Are all theſe Things apparently abſurd and ridiculous? Let thoſe that raſhly cenſure the Author as Partial, conſider how much the Character of unjuſt will be improv'd by Abſurdity and Ridiculouſneſs. Thoſe that are unacquainted with the Nature and Privilege of Hiſtory, and yet paſs that Cenſure upon him, bring themſelves into an odd Dilemma, having nothing but Ignorance to plead for their Injuſtice. Thoſe that know more of the Matter, and yet abuſe him with the ſame Cenſure, do it out of Reſentment and Malice, and are better to be born with by him, their Hatred being leſs directed againſt him, than againſt the Conſtitution which he has endeavour'd to ſerve: And that he has ſo done, in their Opinion, is prov'd by the Bitterneſs and Continuance of their Animoſity; of which he was ſufficiently appriz'd before he undertook this Labour, and had ſuffer'd ſufficiently by it, for his Secret Hiſtory of Europe, his Critical Hiſtories, his Remarks upon Clarendon, cum multis aliis.

If any, though a few, of the Well-affected have given into this injurious Clamour, 'tis in them as ungenerous, not to ſay ungrateful, as unjuſt; becauſe they cannot but be ſenſible of the Honeſty of his Intention; to which they bore their Teſtimony, by the favourable Reception the laſt-mention'd Treatiſes met with from them. And as the Clamourers have not been able, in four or five Years Time, to fix one Falſhood on his Hiſtory, even in the Facts that bear hardeſt upon their Friends, methinks they ſhould have conſider'd that the Facts being true, 'tis Truth that is Partial, and not the Hiſtorian.

Should not the following Reflections have firſt offer'd themſelves to ingenuous and well-affected Minds.

Nothing in the World is plainer, than that the Conſtitution contains the whole, is the General in which every Particular is equally concern'd, according to his Station. To vindicate this, is every one's Duty, and 'tis Nonſenſe to ſay a Man can be Partial to the whole. The Factious, whether Diſaffected or Diſguſted, who divide themſelves from it, who ſet up Particular Intereſts in Oppoſition to the General, are the only Partial; and only thoſe, and ſuch as they have deluded, condemn the Hiſtorian for Partiality, and that, as has been obſerv'd, without one Inſtance of Falſity in his Hiſtory, the Folly and Iniquity of which will further appear, by conſidering, it is impoſſible to write a Hiſtory in a Country divided into Parties, without incurring the Reproach of being Partial by one Side or another. Whatever Good, and whatever Evil is ſaid of Perſons in the oppoſite Party, will neceſſarily have that Blemiſh in the Judgment of thoſe on the other Side: What then has the Hiſtorian to do, but to ſeek after the Truth, to relate it, and then let it touch where it will, to be in no Pain about it?

It has been ſaid he ought to relate Things nakedly, and not cloath them with Reflections. That would be to do what no Hiſtorian ever did before, or ever will do. For as ſoon as he ſinks into that low Manner, he ceaſes to be an Hiſtorian, and becomes a Journaliſt, or Gazetteer; and even Gazettes and Journals, thoſe dry and barren Pieces, would in a Country divided into Parties, be ſtill liable to Exception, on Account of Partiality. The London and Paris Gazettes, when the London Gazette contain'd Facts as well as the Paris, were Partial in the Opinion of the Engliſh and French, the Engliſhman judging of the Paris, and the Frenchman of the London Gazette. Whitlock's Memorials containing Facts as they happen'd from Day to Day, without one Word of Reflection, were many Years kept in Manuſcript, becauſe the Courtiers thought them too Partial to be printed: And when the Earl of Angleſey undertook the publiſhing of them, he was forc'd to leave out many Paſſages that bore hard on King Charles the Firſt, and his Government, becauſe, though true, they were in Favour of the Parliament, which the Cavaliers term'd being Partial to the Roundheads. Rapin, who took as much Care as ever Hiſtorian did, to ſteer in the midway between the Rocks on both Sides, Whig and Tory, has yet miſcarry'd. If the High-Church Criticks have not miſcarry'd themſelves, and fallen into the Gulph of Partiality. I ſay nothing of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and Echard's Hiſtory, the latter being only a poor Copy of the former, and the former ſo notoriouſly Partial, beyond all other Hiſtories, that there is not one Fact in the ſeveral Volumes on the Side of the Parliament, but is diſtinguiſh'd more by its Partiality, than by any other Quality, good or bad.

The Abſurdity as well as the Abuſe in the Charge brought againſt the Writer of this Hiſtory, is the more iniquitous and provoking; for that thoſe that bring it are themſelves, of all Men, the moſt Partial. Will any one pretend that the late Biſhop Atterbury, Zachary Gray, Bevil Higgons, Earberry, and the whole Tribe of Weekly Miſcellany-Men are impartial and unbiaſs'd; or that he is too mean to be nam'd, a late Voluminous Collector of Hiſtorical Rubbiſh, who has labour'd to waſh the Blackmore White, and make the Cauſe of the Cavaliers and Tories, that of Religion and Law, is without Side or Biaſs? Yet from thoſe, and other ſuch foul Streams, have flow'd the Torrents of Reproach, with which they have vainly endeavour'd to overwhelm this Author, for ſpeaking the Truth of both Friends and Enemies to our Conſtitution.

Some, though very unreaſonably, may expect that I ſhould add ſomething here to the Information I receiv'd from Mr. Ducket, relating to the Management of the Chriſt-Church Men, in the Editing of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, as they call it: But as I know know no more of the Matter than what I had from Mr. Ducket, in the Contents of the Letter he ſent me to be printed, and was printed in my Preface to the Reigns of the Stuarts; and that Gentleman having been dead two or three Years, I can know no more of it; I muſt therefore leave it where he left it, and bear patiently the Load of Abuſe and Scandal, which Dr. W——r, and other ſuch Doctors, have caſt upon me, without Regard to Truth or Decency, for what another Man ſaid, and that too, after he was in his Grave, and could ſay nothing for himſelf. 'Tis conjuring Work to enter into the Particulars of Alterations, without collating the Original Manuſcript with the printed Copy, which I have had no Opportunity to do, and I dare ſay never ſhall, for Reaſons too obvious to need Explanation.

But the great Objection to their Hiſtory, lies not in Mr. Ducket's, or any other Alterations made in it; if it is full of Falſhood and Miſrepreſentation, as I have prov'd by innumerable Inſtances in the Critical Hiſtories, and Clarendon and Whitlock compar'd, What matters who was the Author? Is that an Honour to be conteſted? I own it is incumbent on me to make good that Charge, which I am, and ſhall always be ready to do; and to give as many more Inſtances, when call'd upon: Without it, I muſt leave that too, where it is left: The Returns I have met with for the Pains I have already taken, being by no Means anſwerable to the Labour, Honeſty and Uſefulneſs of my Deſign. What I have ſuffer'd, and do daily ſuffer, from the Enemies to the Conſtitution, all the World know: But they know not what I have ſuffer'd from ſome of its Friends, and I am not at preſent fond of letting them into that Secret. Such Diſputes, with the Weight of a ſtrong turbulent Party againſt you, are not to be ſupported by Truth only, and Argument. Mr. Pierce of Exeter, wrote me, when I conſulted him about the Firſt Critical Hiſtory; I ſhould be miſtaken, if I expected to be well us'd by the Whigs, becauſe the Tories us'd me ill, or Words to that Effect; they are in the Body of this Book. But my Zeal for the Cauſe, has born me thus far through all Oppoſition, and no ill Uſage has made me out of Love with it, however it may deaden one, in Efforts of this Kind, as much as I have ſtill to ſay of the Chriſt-Church Chronicle. I am not the only Writer that has charg'd it with Miſrepreſentation and Falſhood; the beſt Judges of our Times, Mr. Manwaring, Lord Lanſdown, Mr. Rapin Thoyras, and others, have done the ſame, and have been anſwered the wiſeſt way the Reverend Doctors have for it, with Silence. The Admirers of that Work, who can give any Reaſon for what they admire, have but one Thing to urge in its Praiſe, and that is the beautiful Pictures, which are all out of Nature and Character in Hiſtory, as will be ſeen preſently.

The Reverend Doctors, as I have obſerv'd, have contented themſelves to leave their Hiſtory under ſo deplorable a Charge, without making the leaſt Attempt to clear it of it, well knowing it would be a Rock on which they would undoubtedly ſplit. They have not only had that Diſregard of juſt Cenſure, with Reſpect to this Hiſtorian, but to every one that has objected to the Truth of their Hiſtory, whether Abroad or at Home. Monſieur Rapin has given many Proofs of the Miſrepreſentations and Falſities in it. The Lord Lanſdown has done the ſame in what relates to General Monk, and Sir Richard Granville. Mr. Manwaring and Dr. Calamy, have expos'd the like Infirmities in it; but the Reverend Doctors are ſilent in this, the moſt important of all Hiſtorical Caſes. And their Chiefs, and they within Doors, and without, in Pulpits, and in Roſtrums, have vainly imagin'd that their Hiſtory would ſupport it ſelf againſt every Body, and every Thing, purely by the very Quality, which is the moſt vicious in Hiſtory, the falſe, but beautiful Colouring in the Pictures; though the Paint in the Face of a Lais, has as much Beauty and Nature in it. They have been told this again and again, but either will not, or what, out of Charity, I rather incline to believe, do not underſtand it. However, they fancy they have demoliſh'd this Hiſtorian in as great a Degree, as he and others have demoliſhed their Hiſtory. But a little to improve their Judgment in ſuch Things, let us repeat what was ſaid of it by Arthur Manwaring, Eſq; a Pupil of Dr. Smalridge, at Chriſt-Church, * There was once a Hiſtory ſo famous among the Grecians, that the greateſt Orator they had, writ it over Eight Times. I wiſh all our Engliſh Orators, that are ſo fond of our Hiſtory of the Rebellion, would reſolve, for their Improvement, to write it over as often. And that they may ſtill like it better hereafter, adviſe them no longer to call it a Hiſtory, which it no way reſembles, but give it the more agreeable Title, of Faults on both Sides, a mean Pamphlet, ſo call'd, which then made a great Noiſe, on Account of its being ſuppos'd to be written by Direction of Mr. Robert Harley, by one Clements, a New-England Jobber, to carry on a very bad Cauſe. Mr. Manwaring was, in the Opinion of the beſt Judges, the greateſt Critick of his Time in polite Literature; but of him theſe Doctors take no Notice. And this Neglect of theirs has been, of all Things, the main Reaſon of the languiſhing, irrecoverable Condition to which their Hiſtory is now reduc'd: For Men in Sobriety of Thinking, can have no Conception that Perſons ſo much concern'd in that Book, as to have the Property of it, as an ineſtimable Treaſure, would ſo far neglect their own In- tereſt, whatever they might do by their Reputation, as to be quiet under ſo many Provocations; and to have nothing to ſay for their Book, againſt ſo many Charges of Falſities and Miſrepreſentations, if they really had a Word to ſay: Which being the Caſe, this Author can have no Reaſon to ſet a greater Value upon it, than they do themſelves, or to be at any more Trouble about it.

Some Readers, no Enemies to our preſent happy Settlement, nor to the Author, for endeavouring to ſerve it, have, however, excepted againſt the Reigns of the Stuarts, on Account of the Critical Remarks in it. This is for want of conſidering, that there had been no Need of his Hiſtory of England, if that of the Rebellion, and Archdeacon Echard's Hiſtory had been true; and that his main Buſineſs was to prove them falſe, to prevent their impoſing on Poſterity, as for a Time they impos'd on the Age we live in: And his Succeſs in that Attempt having anſwer'd, beyond Expectation, the End he propos'd, methinks it deſerves other Returns than thoſe Readers have made him. While the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and Mr. Echard's, were doing the intended Miſchief, ſubverting Revolution Principles, and weakening the Foundation of our Liberties, Spiritual and Temporal, to the great endangering of the Proteſtant Succeſſion, which all good Britons had moſt at Heart, What would they not have given for a ſure Hope of ſeeing thoſe two Hiſtories in their preſent lamentable Circumſtances, the one perfectly dead, and the other in ſo languiſhing a Condition, that the moſt ſanguine of this Hiſtorian's Enemies, are almoſt aſham'd to make Uſe of it as an Authority? Theſe Chronicles could not have been reduc'd to this pitious Plight, without expoſing their Errors, voluntary and involuntary: And by doing ſo in the Reigns of the Stuarts, the Author incurr'd the Diſpleaſure of a Party, that were never diſtinguiſh'd by a forgiving Temper, and the Cenſure even of ſome, that wiſh'd the Thing done, but were afraid of doing Juſtice to him that did it, looking, as narrow Minds always do, on Gratitude, as too expenſive a Virtue. There are few Critical Remarks in the following Hiſtory; which prove that the Author did not run into them in the former out of Wantonneſs or Ill-Nature, but to render his own Work uſeful, by proving the others to be pernicious. He is more ſenſible, than ever, of the Difficulty and Danger of relating Events, ſo Recent as the Three laſt Reigns; which are not only within his own Memory, but the Memory of many, into whoſe Hands his Hiſtory may fall; and as People do remember the ſame Thing, as well as conceive, in a different Manner from one another, occaſion'd by the Diſtance of Time, and the different Lights they were ſeen in; ſo the Author runs great Hazard of being thought in the Wrong by every one that is in the Wrong himſelf; which will turn the Odds againſt him ſo much, that his Diſcretion will be call'd in Queſtion, for throwing his Reputation, be it what it will, into ſuch a Lottery. But Zeal and Diſcretion are as contrary Elements as Fire and Water; and when the Cauſe is good, to be zealous in it, is a Duty, the Performance of which is more to a Man's Honour, than his being diſcreet, though probably it may not be ſo much for his Intereſt; which being now the firſt Principle, all other Principles ſhould give way to it, in the Opinion of the wiſe ones.

This Work was writ to pleaſe thoſe that think their own Intereſt is not ſeparate from that of the Publick, and are deſirous to have the Liberty and Bleſſings they enjoy in the Government of the Proteſtant Line, tranſmitted down to their lateſt Poſterity, thoſe that abhor the Spirit of Perſecution and Oppreſſion; and that being eaſy themſelves, under the beſt Government in the World, endeavour to make that Government eaſy, in Return for the Happineſs and Security that are deriv'd to them from it, thoſe that being ſenſible of the Miſeries this Kingdom ſuffer'd from the Reſtoration to the Revolution, by the Betrayers of their Liberties, are ſollicitous to prevent its falling again into the ſame Calamities, by truſting the ſame Sort of Men, or ſuch as join with them, whether out of Weakneſs or Diſguſt. That they may be known, the Reader will, in this Volume, ſee how faithfully they purſue the Meaſures of the Abhorrers, Addreſſers, Decree and Quo-warranto Men, Penaliſts, &c. in the Reigns of King Charles and King James II. How they plotted and labour'd to undo all that had been done, upon the Abdication of King James; to diſturb, diſtreſs and deſtroy King William; to hinder the reducing the exorbitant Power of France, and to ruin the Confederacy; to weaken the Proteſtant Intereſt by Schiſm Bills; and Occaſional Bills; to prevent the Proteſtant Succeſſion, and impoſe a Popiſh Pretender upon theſe Kingdoms; how, ſince that was found Impracticable, they have not only calumniated and inſulted the Sovereign on the Throne, and his moſt wiſe and faithful Miniſters, but have broken out into open Rebellion; and even after Suppreſſion and Pardon, have with unparallel'd Obſtinacy and Inſolence, continu'd their Factious, and treaſonable Practices againſt their Rightful and Lawful King, and the moſt Mild and Equal Adminiſtration. Theſe are the Men, and theſe the Deſigns, which this Hiſtory was written to expoſe: And if to do ſo is to be Partial, the Hiſtorian's Partiality is continu'd in theſe Reigns; and he is willing, and even proud to ſuffer under this Cenſure with the greateſt Patriots in the Legiſlature, and even with the Laws which condemn'd the Guilty.

As

As to the Memoirs from whence he took his Facts, many of them are in ſo many Hands, that 'tis needleſs to Particularize them. Why he has made ſo much, or ſo cloſe Uſe of ſome of them, will be obvious to every judicious Reader. Though he was by no Means in Love with the Writers Talents and Manner, yet when he knew, or had Reaſon to believe what they wrote was true, he follow'd them to the Letter, to make them accountable to thoſe that have Power to call them to Account: A very great Shame to Liberty, and Publick Spirit, as well as a ſhameful Reſtraint to Hiſtorians, who keeping to Truth and Decency, ought to have nothing to fear from Power and Privilege.

There is no want of Helps to furniſh Materials for ſeveral Folio's, during this Period only. The Ancients, Grecians and Romans, could have no ſuch Advantage in writing Hiſtory, the Preſs having ſupply'd the Moderns with more Store of Matter for a Month, than their Regiſters and Faſti could do for Years. The greateſt Difficulty an Hiſtorian has in writing of our own Times, is to throw Aſide, with Judgment, what the Publick Papers offer to him, and preſerve nothing but what is Curious and Memorable. The Reign of King William and Queen Mary, and, in a great Meaſure, the Reigns of Queen Anne and King George, muſt be taken from Gazettes, Mercuries and Votes, which with Pamphlets and Occaſional Papers, make perhaps ſome Thouſands of Sheets; and how to bring the Pith of them into a Hundred or Two, is a harder Task than the forming a Story of the like Extent by a quick Invention. The Reign of Queen Anne, written by the Annaliſt, contains more Sheets than all theſe Three Reigns. And to reduce them into ſo little Compaſs, and yet not to ſeem to want Room or Perſpicuity, is a Labour which rather deſerves the Reader's Indulgence than Severity; and of which few can be ſenſible that have not made the Experiment.

The Author ſaid in his Propoſals, that he had not only made Uſe of the moſt rare Prints, but of ſeveral Manuſcripts; his Work will vouch for him that they were not Words of Courſe, it will be viſible in all the Parts of it: And this will give it ſo great Advantage over all Attempts of this Kind, that there's no Occaſion of his entring into Competition with any about it. If he had had no Materials but the Common Prints and News-Papers, and had known no more of the Matter than a Foreigner could, he ſhould have thought it a vain and mean Undertaking. If the Criticks are in the Right, who give their Judgment that Hiſtory ſhould be written in the Capital of the Province or Kingdom it treats of, it will be thought monſtrous in People to receive one writ in another Country, at the ſame Time that one more copious is offer'd them at Home. Is it conſiſtent with common Senſe, to imagine a Stranger can, from Tranſlations of News-Papers, give true and clear Lights into Facts, and the Cauſes of them, at Two or Three Hundred Miles Diſtance from the Scene of Action? But there's ſtill a greater Advantage which an Hiſtorian may pretend to that writes on the Spot, and liv'd at the Time when the Events happen'd; and that is the Help of a good Memory, which in moſt Caſes will preſerve ſome Circumſtances omitted by common Collectors, that make them in a manner new. This will appear evident beyond Doubt, to any one that will compare the latter Part of the Reigns of the Stuarts, with the Reigns of King Charles and King James II. in Rapin. And the Difference between this Hiſtory and the Continuation of Rapin's will be ſo great, on Account of the Hiſtorian's better Acquaintance with Perſons and Things, during this Period, that excepting Names and Dates, there will be little Agreement in the Narration: The Reader may make the Compariſon, if he thinks it worth his while, which the Author cannot do.

'Tis a pretty general, but miſtaken Opinion, that no Perſons can write Hiſtory ſo well, as thoſe that are the Subject of it; and that none ſhould relate Facts, but thoſe that were concern'd in them, an abſurd and ridiculous Imagination; not only becauſe it is impoſſible that any one Man's Knowledge ſhould ſupply him with all Facts, but becauſe 'tis hardly poſſible for one of thoſe illuſtrious Politicians, qualify'd for ſuch a Work, to avoid repreſenting Things in the Light which ſerves him beſt in the Decoration of his own Character. And ſuch Political Hiſtorians will certainly, out of Diſcretion or Decency, conceal, on many Occaſions, as much as they diſcover. And as they muſt write out of Vanity, rather than Ambition or Zeal, their Writing will conſequently be full of that eternel Moy, condemn'd in the French Memoirs by the late Earl of Shaftsbury, in his Charecteriſticks. The greateſt Man of the Romans, Julius Cæſar, is not free from the Cenſure of this Foible in his Commentaries. The Earl of Angleſey ſays of them, in his Preface to Whitlock, Julius Cæſar deals not bona fide in his Story; he takes no Notice of his Scuffle with Metellus about the Sacred Treaſure; and whereſoever his Prudence or his Juſtice might be arraign'd, all is ſlur'd over in Silence, To which let us add, his concealing his being beaten by the Britons, who according to ſome Roman Wits, ſaw nothing of him but his Back. And as one cannot hope to ſee a greater Genius than Cæſar engag'd in ſuch an Undertaking, one may be ſure that thoſe that write their own Memoirs, will remember themſelves more than any Thing elſe, and ſo 'tis a vain Imagination, that only Stateſmen ſhould relate Affairs of State. Monſieur de Thou was a Stateſman man in an Eminent Degree; and his Hiſtory of his own Times was written with a Religious Regard to Truth, in the main of the Story; yet Lord Angleſey, before-mention'd, after a very great Critick, ſays, there is in it many Things Falſe and Scandalous, ; which only proves that Hiſtory, like other human Productions, bears the grand Mark of Human Nature, the want of Perfection. And if this Hiſtorian has done his beſt, with the like Regard to Veracity, he need not fear but his Performance will meet with the like Reception from Able and Equal Judges.

As difficult as it really is to write Hiſtory, there's no Part of Literature which, in the vulgar Opinion, may be more eaſily and freely judg'd of. We have elſewhere explain'd what is meant by the Vulgar, who think, that it is only to Tell; and every one that hears a Tale, cannot conceive there's any ſuch Difficulty in telling it. But it is the Hiſtorian's Duty not only to relate Events, but ſo to relate them, as to let thoſe that read his Work into the Characters of Perſons. He ſhould ſo circumſtantiate and explain both Perſons and Things, as that his Readers may think they are living with, and ſeeing the Things and Perſons he treats of; which this Hiſtorian has all along done, and made it a Point which he has always had in View; though meer Tellers either know not this, or are at no Pains about it.

It is impoſſible, and indeed unneceſſary to obſerve the regular Order of Time in the Hiſtory of Actions in many Nations, by Land and by Sea: The doing it is the Form of a Diary, not of a Hiſtory. Errors in Dates may ariſe, from the Difference in the Old and New Stile, and the Computation of the Year from the firſt of January, or Lady-Day; the laſt an unaccountable Compliance with the Uſage of Lawyers, who are ſo much guided by Cuſtom, that in too many Caſes it ſtands in the Stead of Right and Reaſon.

In the Reigns of the Stuarts, I endeavour'd to expoſe the evil and pernicious Counſels and Actions of thoſe Men, who did their utmoſt, after the Reſtoration, to deſtroy our Liberties, Spiritual and Temporal. I have ſhewn in this Work, how the ſame Sort of Men have ever ſince the Revolution, continued thoſe evil and pernicious Counſels and Actions.

Every Briton, well grounded in Revolution Principles, cannot but be ſenſible of the Uſe and Neceſſity of this Undertaking.

The Uſe of it is in the Inſtruction which goes along with the Example. The ill Conſequences of truſting the Betrayers of the Rights and Privileges of the Nation with the Care of them, are like Buoys and Lights on the Coaſts, which warn Mariners of the Rocks and Shelves where others periſhed before.

The Neceſſity of it is apparent, for that it may be a Means, either to prevent the writing of any ſuch Hiſtories as thoſe I have had ſo much Trouble about, or their doing the Miſchief intended, if they are written.

The Danger of this Period's falling into the like Hands, was not the leaſt Inducement to me in the Performance of this Work: To finiſh which, I poſtpon'd the publiſhing my Hiſtory of Chriſtianity, which has been ready for the Preſs theſe Four Years. I wrote it in the Country, with a ſincere and hearty Deſire that it may anſwer the End in Spirituals, as it is hop'd this Hiſtory of England will in Temporals; confirm People in a Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, and a Hatred to Superſtition and Tyranny. But this Deſign will be better explain'd by the Title of the Book: The Hiſtory of Chriſtianity; being an Attempt to prove the Perpetuity of the Faith, and to trace our moſt Holy Religion, in its Purity, through all the dark Ages of Popery, to the Reformation; interſpers'd with the Civil Hiſtory of the Roman and Greek Empires, of Great Britain, France, Italy, Spain, &c. And with Critical Remarks on the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians, as well Foreign as Engliſh; particularly the Biſhop of Meaux, Dupin, Heylin and Collier: In Seven Books.

As this Subject has ſeldom or never fallen into Lay-Hands, it muſt excite Curioſity to ſee how it will come out of them; for though the ſtricteſt Regard has been had to Truth, as will appear by the Authorities made Uſe of, yet certainly this Subject, in this Work, makes a different Figure from what it has hitherto made in all Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories. The Contents of each Book and Chapter, ſhall be printed in the Propoſals, when the Author finds himſelf ſufficiently encourag'd to go on with the Printing it. And on this Occaſion he ought to excuſe himſelf to all thoſe who expected this preſent Hiſtory would have been ſooner publiſhed: Of the Thirty Months ſince he firſt ſet about it, he has been render'd incapable of writing Twelve Months, at leaſt, by ſore and weak Eyes, with which he had not been troubled Twenty Years before, To this may be added two or three ſevere Fits of the Gout, and at laſt ſuch a Hurry of Buſineſs among the Printers, that at Six Houſes, he could not ſometimes get Six Sheets a Week; this has been his main Hindrance for ſeveral Months paſt.

The Reader will obſerve by the Errata, that they are moſtly Literals, or ſuch Slips as are uſually the Effects of Hurry, and ſhifting Hands; it having been the Misfortune of this Book either to have lain by, or to have been put forward in Haſte.

THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND, &c.

The REIGNS of King WILLIAM and Queen MARY.

CHAP. I.

Containing the Hiſtory of England, from the Revolution to the Reduction of Ireland.

The Space, Three Years, Eight Months.

A.D.1688 HAVING ſufficiently explain'd the Deſign and Uſe of this Work in the Preface; I proceed to the Hiſtory, during the Reigns of King WILLIAM and Queen MARY; who having been proclaim'd King and Queen, his Majeſty King William, who had the ſole Adminiſtration of the Government veſted in him, did the next day, February 14th, make choice of the following Lords and Gentlemen to be of his Privy-Council.

King William's Privy-Council.

His Royal Highneſs Prince George of Denmark.
William Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury.
Thomas Earl of Danby, Lord-Preſident of the Council.
Charles Marquis of Halliſax, Lord Privy-Seal.
Henry Duke of Norfolk.
Charles Marquis of Winchester.
Robert Earl of Lindſey, Lord Great-Chamberlain of England.
William Earl of Devonſhire, Lord-Steward of the Houſhold.
Charles Earl of Dorſet, Lord-Chamberlain of the Houſhold.
Aubery Earl of Oxford.
Charles Earl of Shrewſbury, Principal Secretary of State.
William Earl of Bedford.
John Earl of Bath.
Daniel Earl of Nottingham.
Thomas Viſc. Falconberg.
Francis Viſc. Newport, Treaſurer of the Houſhold.
Richard Viſc. Lumley.
Henry Lord Biſhop of London.
Philip Lord Wharton.
Ralph Lord Montagu.
Henry Lord Delamere.
John Lord Churchill.
Mr. Bentinck, Groom of the Stole.
Henry Sidney Eſq;
Sir Robert Howard.
Sir Henry Capel.
Henry Powle Eſq; Speaker of the Houſe of Commons.
Edward Ruſſel Eſq;
Hugh Boſcawen Eſq;
To whom were added,
Thomas Wharton Eſq; Comptroller of the Houſhold.
Sir John Lowther of Lowther, Vice-Chamberlain to the King.

A.D.1688

Exception was taken by the Friends to the Revolution, at the Earl of Nottingham's being nam'd one of the Council, he having ſtrenuouſly oppos'd the Vacancy of the Throne, and perſiſting ſtill in the ſame Sentiments ſo far, that it was queſtion'd, whether he would accept of any Office under the new Government. Biſhop Kennet ſays, he was offer'd the Great Seal, the Truth of which is

A.D.1688 much to be doubted; for beſides, that it would have exaſperated the Well-wiſhers to this Government beyond meaſure, the excuſe he is ſaid to have made, That he was not fit for the Employment, it requiring a conſtant Application, renders it ſuſpected; ſince it is well known, his Lordſhip did not want Application.

Their Majeſties having iſſu'd a Proclamation for continuing all qualify'd Perſons in Offices; made the following Promotions. The Earl of Nottingham was appointed the other Principal Secretary of State; an Office, which certainly requires as much Application in a Time of ſuch multiplicity of Buſineſs, as that of Lord-Keeper; and his accepting of it was not to the liking of many, as well Enemies as Friends to the Government. Monſ. D'Auverquerque was made Maſter of the Horſe; the Mareſchal de Schomberg, Maſter of the Ordnance; the Lord Montagu, Maſter of the Great Wardrobe; Monſ. Zuleſtein, Maſter of the Robes; the Biſhop of London, Dean of the Chapel; the Lord Lovelace, Captain of the Gentlemen-Penſioners; the Duke of Ormond, the Earl of Oxford, the Lord Mordaunt, the Lord Lumley, the Lord Churchill, Mr. Sidney, Gentlemen of the Bed-Chamber; the Earl of Wiltſhire, Lord-Chamberlain to the Queen; John How Eſq; Vice-Chamberlain; Mr. Villers, Maſter of the Horſe to the Queen; the Counteſs of Derby, firſt Lady of the Bed-Chamber. The Seals, being refus'd by the Marquis of Hallifax, as well as Lord Nottingham, according to the ſame Information, were given to Sir John Maynard, Anthony Kecke Eſq; and William Rawlinſon Eſq; who were both knighted, as Lords Commiſſioners. The Admiralty was alſo put in Commiſſion, and Admiral Herbert, the Earl of Carberry, Sir Michael Wharton, Sir Thomas Lee, Sir John Chichely, Sir John Lowther of Whitehaven, and William Sacheverel Eſq; were appointed Commiſſioners; the latter was then as much an Honour to his Name, as Henry Sacheverel, the condemn'd Doctor, was afterwards a diſgrace. This Mr. Sacheverel had diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by ſeveral eloquent Speeches for the Bill of Excluſion, when that Act was debated in the Houſe of Commons, in the Weſtminſter and Oxford Parliaments, in which he was one of the Knights of the Shire for Derby County; and having liv'd in a midland Country moſt part of his Time, had very little Knowledge of Maritime Affairs: of which he was ſo ſenſible, and of his Duty to the Publick, that not long after he was put into the Commiſſion of Admiralty, he waited upon the King, to pray him to excuſe his acting in it, on account of Inſufficiency to ſerve at that Board. His Majeſty was pleas'd to ſay, 'Tis no matter, there are enough who do underſtand the Buſineſs, which a Man of his Senſe would ſoon be maſter of, and he cou'd depend on his Integrity; or to that effect. But Mr. Sacheverel perſiſted in excuſing himſelf, ſaying, Since he was not qualify'd for the Service, he cou'd not in Conſcience accept of the Salary.

Mr. Sacheverel's Honour.

The Treaſury was put into the hands of the Lord Mordaunt, the Lord Delamere, the Lord Godolphin, Richard Hampden Eſq; afterwards Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Sir Henry Capel. Henry Powle Eſq; was made Maſter of the Rolls; Henry Pollexfen Eſq; Attorney-General; Sir George Treby, Sollicitor-General; the Honourable George Booth Eſq; Sir Richard Temple Bart. Sir Robert Southwel, Thomas Pelham Eſq; Sir Robert Clayton, Sir Patience Ward, Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms; Sir Henry Vane, Sir Henry Aſhurſt, Sir Humphry Edwin, Thomas Frankland Eſq; John Danvers Eſq; Francis Perry Eſq; John Wilcocks, jun. Eſq; Commiſſioners of the Exciſe. This wiſe Choice of Miniſters and Officers of State, pleas'd all but the Enemies to the Government, and thoſe who expected to have Places in theſe Promotions. The latter being diſguſted, took hold of all Occaſions to malign and diſtreſs the Adminiſtration under various Pretexts; they began to ſhew their diſaffection even within a few days after the Convention had done ſuch great Things for Liberty, and the Proteſtant Religion. I cannot give a better Idea of the early Oppoſition to King William's Meaſures by theſe Men, who in the two laſt Reigns had been the Promoters and Inſtruments of Popiſh and Arbitrary Counſels, and of their Abettors, than in the Sentiments of a French Hiſtorian. A.D.1688

Thus William de Naſſau, and Mary Stuart of England, came to the Crown upon Whig Principles. However, the Tories had a great hand in accompliſhing it. But the Spirit of Party, which the Dangers the Nation was lately in, had in a manner ſuppreſt, ſeem'd to revive again the very Moment that Things were ſettled on this Foundation. Some out of a miſtaken Principle of Conſcience; ſome out of greedineſs for Employments, of which there were not enough to anſwer the leaſt part of the Demands; ſome out of hatred to Diſſenters, to whom the King had ſhewn his Benevolence; and ſome biaſs'd by the Prejudices of Education, or rather the natural Inconſtancy of Men; form'd together a Faction, which appear'd in the Convention even before it was turn'd into a Parliament: for it was ſaid in the Houſe of Commons, that what had been done was not valid, that the Convention not having been call'd by the King's Writ, their Acts were not in force. Tho' there was nothing in this Objection, yet ſuch a Notion being infus'd into ſuch as the Party could deceive; his Majeſty thought fit to propoſe in Council, the firſt Time they met, Whether the Convention might be legally turn'd into a Parliament? To which the Majority agreeing, the King went to the Houſe of Lords, the 18th of February, and being ſeated on the Throne, and the Commons attending at the Bar; he made this Speech to both Houſes. Monſ. de Cize, *p.*16. Faction fermenting.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

King William's firſt Speech to the Parliament.

" I Have lately told you how ſenſible I am of " your Kindneſs, and how much I value the " Confidence you have repos'd in me; and I come
" hither to aſſure you, that I ſhall never do any " Thing that may leſſen your good Opinion of " Me.

" I think it neceſſary to acquaint you, that the " Condition of our Allies abroad, and particular-
" ly that of Holland, is ſuch, that unleſs ſome
" ſpeedy Care be taken of them, they run a greater
" hazard than you would have them expos'd to.

" You yourſelves muſt be ſenſible, that the Po-
" ſture of Affairs here, requires your ſerious Con-
" ſideration, and that a good Settlement at home
" is neceſſary, not only for your own Peace, but " for the Support of the Proteſtant Intereſt both
" Here and Abroad.

" And particularly the State of Ireland is ſuch,
" that the Dangers are grown too great to be ob-
" viated by any ſlow Methods.

" I muſt leave it to you, to conſider of the
" moſt effectual ways of preventing the Inconve-
" niences which may ariſe by Delays, and to
" judge what Forms may be moſt proper to bring
" theſe Things to paſs for the good of the Nation,
" which I am confident are all your Minds, and
" which I, on my Part, ſhall be always ready to
" promote."

This Speech was receiv'd with unuſual Marks of Applauſe, there being at the cloſe of it that general Humm, by which the Commons of England do on extraordinay Occaſions ſhew their Approbation; and that Humm was echo'd by the People every where, as faſt as the Report of it ſpread, as I well remember

A.D.1688 remember to have known, and to have heard. The King's Speech could not fail of ſo good Effects in the Hearts of his Subjects, who believ'd it ſincere, having the beſt Proof of it in their Deliverance by the Prince who ſpoke it; whoſe Affection for the Britiſh Nation, and his Concern for their Safety and Intereſts, had been remarkable in all Times. Let us remember an Inſtance of it, ſo far back as the Death of King Charles II.

His Love to England. The Elector of Brandenburgh, always anxious for the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberties of Europe; and foreſeeing the Danger they were likely to fall into by the Acceſſion of King James II. to the Throne, who was in the ſtricteſt League with Lewis XIV. of France, the common Enemy of that Religion and theſe Liberties, would have engag'd the Prince of Orange, his Couſin, to go over to England then, when the Duke of Monmouth undertook his raſh and ruinous Enterprize. The Prince reply'd, I will never make any Attempt againſt the King, my Father-in-Law, without an abſolute Neceſſity; but I at the ſame time proteſt, that if I cannot otherwiſe prevent the Subverters of the Laws and Religion of England, I will undertake the Voyage, tho' I ſhould be oblig'd to embark in a Fiſher-Boat.

Such was the Diſpoſition of this Great and Excellent Prince towards this Nation, and ſuch their Affection and Reſpect to him at the Time of their Deliverance. How and by whom they were loſt, or leſſen'd afterwards, will be ſeen in the Sequel.

Nor did his Care for the Safety and Welfare of his new Subjects diminiſh his Concern for the Security and Happineſs of his old Friends the States-General of the United Provinces, to whom on his Advancement to the Throne he wrote a Letter, wherein he aſſur'd them,

His Letter to the States.

" THAT his new Dignity, inſtead of diminiſhing the Affections he ever had, or the Care he ever took, for the Preſervation and Proſperity of their Republick, would only ſerve to enable him to diſcharge his Office of Stadtholder with more Weight and Succeſs, towards the Benefit and Advantage of their State; and that during his Reign, he would make it his conſtant Buſineſs and Endeavour, to eſtabliſh and maintain a perfect Intelligence, as alſo an inviolable Friendſhip between his Kingdom and the United Provinces, for the Safety, Welfare, and Repoſe of both States, and Support of the Proteſtant Religion."

The ſame Expreſs that carry'd this Letter to Holland, carry'd another for the Diſcharge of the Earl of Sunderland, who had been ſeiz'd at Rotterdam. It was thought his Detention was by Colluſion, and that he was apprehended on purpoſe to be formally diſcharg'd, to make way for his more honourable Return to England. For tho' he might not be originally in the Secret of the Prince of Orange's intended Expedition to England, which however was well known to his Lady, yet he certainly was very inſtrumental in the Succeſs of it, by hindring King James's accepting the Offer of a French Army of 30,000 Veteran Troops to oppoſe him. As to his being excepted out of King William's Act of Indemnity, it was ſuppos'd to be done purely in Compliance with common Fame, that he had been deeply concern'd in all King James's Arbitrary and Illegal Acts of Government: for the Confidence King William put in him not long after, ſhews he was well ſatisfy'd with his Conduct at that Juncture; and one may perceive even by Pere Orleans's Account of it, that what the Earl ſaid of himſelf in his Letter from Rotterdam, upon his Detention there, has more Truth in it than was then imagin'd. I ſhall only inſert one Paſſage; If the Report is true, of Men, Ships, and Money, intended lately for England out of France, it was agreed upon ſince I was out of Buſineſs, or without my Knowledge. If it had been otherwiſe, I believe no body thinks my Diſgrace would have happen'd. A.D.1688

Father Orleans owns, " The Methods he perſuaded his Maſter to follow, depriv'd that Monarch of the only Means left him to oppoſe his Enemies."

Amidſt the general Joy, and the Expreſſions of it, on King William and Queen Mary's Acceſſion to the Crown; the Diſſenters, who reaſonably hoped to have a due Share of the Happineſs, which our recovered Liberty promis'd them, were not backward in paying their Duty and grateful Acknowledgments to their Majeſties. The Miniſters of their ſeveral Denominations join'd with the Reverend Clergy of the Church of England, when they attended the Biſhop of London with their firſt Addreſs to the Prince of Orange; but that good Correſpondence, ſome how or other, met with a Check even in its Birth. Other Diſſenting Miniſters, to the Number of Ninety, preſented an Addreſs to the Prince of Orange, the 2d of January, being introduc'd by the Earl of Devonſhire, the Lord Wharton, and the Earl of Wiltſhire, in which they ſpoke of their Non-Attendance on the Biſhop of London, when he waited on his Highneſs with others of their Brethren, as occaſion'd by Want of timely Notice, and not on any diſtinct Account. They were graciouſly receiv'd, and aſſur'd that his Highneſs would do his utmoſt Endeavours for promoting a firm Union among Proteſtants.

Their Addreſs, after their Majeſties were proclaim'd, was preſented by their own Miniſters, Dr. Bates at their head. This Reverend Divine was the ſame who refus'd the Deanery of Coventry and Litchfield, on account of Non-Conformity, and was in general Eſteem for his Piety, Learning, and Politeneſs; he made Speeches to both the King and the Queen. In that to his Majeſty, he ſaid among other Things; Dr. Bates the Preſbyterian's Speech to the King.

WE are encouraged by your gracious Promiſe upon our firſt Addreſs, humbly to deſire and hope, that your Majeſty will be pleaſed by your Wiſdom and Authority, to eſtabliſh a firm Union of your Proteſtant Subjects in the Matters of Religion, by making the Rule of Chriſtianity to be the Rule of Conformity. Our bleſſed Union in the Purity and Peace of the Goſpel will make this Church a fair and lovely Type of Heaven, and terrible to our Antichriſtian Enemies. You will make England the ſteady Center, from whence a powerful Influence will be deriv'd for the Support of Reform'd Chriſtianity abroad. This will bring immortal Honour to your Name, above the Trophies and Triumphs of the moſt renown'd Conquerors. We do aſſure your Majeſty, that we ſhall cordially embrace the Terms of Union, which the ruling Wiſdom of our Saviour has preſcrib'd in his Word, &c.

I Take kindly your good Wiſhes, and whatever is in my Power ſhall be employed for obtaining ſuch a Union among you. I do aſſure you of my Protection and Kindneſs.

It is to be obſerv'd here, that Dr. Bates explains that Union to be ſuch as the Ruling Wiſdom of our Saviour preſcrib'd, which certainly is not conſiſtent with any Union preſcrib'd by other Wiſdom, by the Wiſdom of this World in lucrative and coercive Acts. It was a Goſpel-Union which King William told thoſe Reform'd Divines, he would employ whatever was in his power to obtain; and this could not but alarm thoſe Perſons, Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, whoſe firſt religious Principle is founded in Superiority and Perſe-

A.D. 1688 Perſecution: and that they took the Alarm, will appear preſently. Dr. Bates in his Speech to the Queen had theſe Expreſſions;

Dr. Bates's Speech to the Queen.

WE humbly deſire your Majeſty will be pleas'd by your Wiſdom and Goodneſs to compoſe the Differences between your Proteſtant Subjects. We hope thoſe reverend Perſons, who conſpire with us in the main End, the Glory of God, and the publick Good, will conſent to the Terms of Union, wherein all the Reform'd Churches agree, &c.

Her Majeſty return'd this moſt gracious Anſwer.

I Will uſe all Endeavours for the obtaining a Union that is neceſſary, for the edifying of the Church. I deſire your Prayers.

Extempore Prayer warranted.

People, who had been taught ever ſince the Conformity Act, that all extempore Prayers were weak, if not wicked, muſt needs be ſurpriz'd at the Queen's deſiring the Nonconformiſt Miniſters to pray for her; and this too help'd to put Things into their Heads, which their Hearts were willing enough to receive, as will be ſeen e'er it be long.

The Houſe of Peers ſhewing a particular Regard to his Majeſty's Deſires and Intereſts, we ſhall find that moſt of the remarkable Bills had their Riſe now in that Houſe, which has in ſo many difficult Junctures, ſince King James's Time, been the Bulwark of the Liberties of England; which has made their Enemies more than once run on deſperate Experiments to fruſtrate their good Intentions.

In purſuance of the Tenour of King William's Speech laſt mention'd, their Lordſhips order'd a Bill to be brought in, To remove and prevent all Queſtions and Diſputes concerning the aſſembling and ſitting of the preſent Parliament; which was read twice in their Houſe the 18th of February, paſt the next Day, and ſent to the Commons for their Concurrence

Convention turn'd into a Parliament.

Richard Hampden, Eſq; Son of Hampden the great Patriot in the Reign of King Charles I. being in the Chair, put this Queſtion; Whether a King, Elected and Declar'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons aſſembled at Weſtminſter, 22 Jan. 1688, coming to, and conſulting with the ſaid Lords and Commons, did not make as compleat a Parliament, as if the ſaid King ſhould cauſe new Summons to be given, and new Elections to be made by Writs? This occaſion'd a long and warm Debate, in which Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave, Sir Thomas Clargis, and Heneage Finch Eſq; the two laſt, Members for the Univerſity of Oxford, ſignaliz'd their Talents and their Zeal on the Negative Side; their main Reaſon being that, which has at all Times hinder'd, and will at all Times hinder any Amendments, or Improvements, in Laws or Uſages; the Maxim to keep ſtrictly to the old Cuſtom, which Maxim would not only have kept us in Popiſh, but in Pagan Idolatry, and might have been as well made uſe of by our Fathers the Britons and Saxons, for ſtripping and painting, and worſhipping Woden and Frea, as for refuſing to change from bad to good, on any other Occaſion. We ſhall find when we come to the Convocation, that ſome of the Spokeſmen there too, were of the ſame Opinion. The Gentlemen, who were for the Affirmative in this Queſtion, argu'd upon ſeveral Precedents, and there was a notorious one within the Memory of many of them, That of the Convention who reſtor'd King Charles II. and were ſummon'd by the Keepers of the Liberties of ENGLAND; yet upon that King's Reſtoration, they were adjudg'd a Parliament. The preſent Neceſſity, urg'd by ſeveral Members, muſt have been a poor Argument to thoſe that oppos'd the Bill, only to perplex the Adminiſtration; but it weighing with the Majority, the Act paſs'd, and had the Royal Aſſent the 23d of February; after which, what was before term'd the Convention, was always call'd the Parliament: To which Biſhop Kennet tells us, Some of the Commons had before proteſted they would never ſubmit. And indeed ſome of them, tho' not many, did refuſe to take the Oath, and ſign the Declaration enjoin'd by this Act, as did ſeveral of the Houſe of Lords, as well Temporal as Spiritual; as the Earl of Clarendon, the Earl of Exeter, the Earl of Stafford, the Duke of Newcaſtle, the Lord Stawel, and two or three Peers more: The Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of Ely, the Biſhop of Norwich, the Biſhop of Glouceſter, the Biſhop of Bath and Wells, the Biſhop of Peterborough, the Biſhop of Chicheſter. Five of theſe, as Dr. Sancroft Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Dr. Turner Biſhop of Ely, Dr. Lake Biſhop of Chicheſter, Dr. Kenn Biſhop of Bath and Wells, and Dr. White Biſhop of Peterborough, were five of the ſeven Biſhops King James ſent to the Tower: The other two, Dr. Lloyd Biſhop of St. Aſaph, and Dr. Jonathan Trelawney Biſhop of Briſtol, took the Oaths to King William and Queen Mary; as did alſo Dr. Lamplugh Archbiſhop of York, Dr. Compton Biſhop of London, Dr. Barlow Biſhop of Lincoln, Dr. Mew Biſhop of Wincheſter, Dr. Sprat Biſhop of Rocheſter, Dr. Beaw Biſhop of Landaff, Dr. Smith Biſhop of Carliſle, and Dr. Watſon Biſhop of St. David's.

A.D. 168

Temporal and Spiritual Peers refuſe the Oaths to King William and Queen Mary.

Biſhops take the Oaths.

The Biſhop of Peterborough in his Hiſtory of this Reign intimates very juſtly, that the diſcontented Party, who refus'd the Oaths to the Government, were inſtigated to it by their Hopes or their Fears; their Hopes of Rewards, and their Fears of Puniſhment if King James was reſtor'd. He imputes the dilatory Proceedings in the Relief of Ireland to the Oppoſition the Adminiſtration met with from theſe Men, by which means King James had an Opportunity to get conſiderable Footing in that Kingdom, and conceiv'd Hopes of re-aſcending the Throne. This Party prevail'd ſo far in the Houſe of Commons, that a Queſtion was put, February 26, Whether the Revenue was expir'd by the Vacancy of the Throne, or whether it was devolv'd on their Majeſties? The firſt Part of the Queſtion was carried in the Affirmative; and a Committee was appointed to regulate their preſent Majeſties Revenue, ſome of whom contended to have it ſettled on them for three Years only. The ſame Day a Bill was brought into the Houſe of Lords, For the better regulating the Trials of the Peers of England, which occaſion'd great Debates, but paſt that Houſe, fifteen Lords entring their Diſſent; and their Lordſhips Reaſons had ſo great Influence in the Lower Houſe, that it dropt there.

Vain Hopes of the Diſcontented.

The next Day, February 27, the King acquainted the Houſe of Commons with the certain News of the late King James's being ſail'd from Breſt with French Troops, in order to land in Ireland. Upon which the Commons unanimouſly voted, To ſtand by, and aſſiſt his Majeſty with their Lives and Fortunes, in ſupporting his Alliances abroad, in reducing of Ireland, and in Defence of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Laws of the Kingdom; which Vote was communicated to the Peers, who confirm'd it by entring it into their Journal, and concurr'd with the Commons in an Addreſs to the ſame purpoſe; which was preſented to his Majeſty the 8th of March, and his Majeſty return'd a moſt gracious and remarkable Anſwer, ſaid to be drawn up in concert with Mr. Powle, Speaker of the Houſe of Commons.

King James ſails to Ireland.

Parliament Addreſs againſt Him.

" THAT their Addreſs in the Manner, as well
" as Matter, had every Thing in it that ought " to recommend it to him. He aſſur'd them he " would never abuſe the Confidence they put in
" him, being fully perſuaded that there was no ſure
" Foundation of a good Agreement between a King
" and his People, but a mutual Truſt; which when " once

A.D.1688 " once broken, a Government was half diſſolv'd: " That it ſhould therefore be his chief Care, never " to give any Parliament cauſe to diſtruſt him; and " the beſt Method he could uſe for that Purpoſe, " was never to expect any Thing from them, but " what ſhould be their own Intereſt to grant.

" That he came over for the Good of the King- " dom, and ſince it was by their Deſire that he was " in that Station, he would purſue the ſame Ends " that brought him; that God had been pleaſed " to make him inſtrumental to redeem them from " the Ills they fear'd, and that it was ſtill his De- " ſire, as well as Duty, to ſerve them in their Re- " ligion, Laws and Liberties: That he had told them " lately of the Neceſſity of aſſiſting their Allies, and " more eſpecially Holland, whoſe Readineſs to re- " lieve them, at ſo much Hazard and Expence, " needed no other Argument to move them to " the Conſideration of it: That as he was then a " Witneſs of their Zeal and Affection to ſecond his " Endeavours, even with the Neglect of their own " Safety; ſo he was now ſenſible of the inevitable " Ruin they had drawn upon themſelves, in giving " them aſſiſtance, if they ſhould not return it to " them. That they had really exhauſted themſelves " very much; and he was confident their Gene- " roſity would have as little Bounds towards the " States, as they had towards them; and that they " would not only enable him to make good the " Treaties with them, and repay what they had ac- " tually laid out upon that Occaſion; but that they " would further ſupport them to the utmoſt of their " Ability, againſt the Power of their Enemies, who " muſt be theirs too, by their Intereſt and Religion, " and who certainly deſign'd the Ruin of Holland " to be a Step for their Deſtruction. Then he ſet " before them the deplorable Condition of Ireland, " that it was not thought adviſeable to attempt the " reducing of it, otherwiſe than by a conſiderable " Force; and which by the Bleſſing of God, would " make the Work ſhorter, and conſequently the " Charge eaſier; that there muſt be ſuch a Fleet " fitted out, as might in Conjunction with the States, " make them entire Maſters of that Sea.

" He concluded, that thoſe Things would amount " to a great Sum, and muſt of conſequence be a " preſent Weight to the People; but conſidering " that neither their Religion, nor their Safety, could " probably be ſecured without them, nothing could " be too great a Price for their Preſervation; and " he would engage his ſolemn Word, that whate- " ver they ſhould give to thoſe publick Ends, ſhould " be ſtrictly applied to them; and that as they freely " offer'd to hazard all that was dear to them, ſo " he ſhould as freely expoſe himſelf for the Support " of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Safety and " Honour of the Nation."

I do not intend to ſwell this Work with Addreſſes, Anſwers, Speeches, Proclamations, &c. at large, and ſhall for the moſt part, inſert only the Heads of ſome of the moſt curious and important.

On the 1ſt of March, the King ſent two remarkable Meſſages to the Parliament; the firſt was to the Houſe of Lords by the Lord Mordaunt, now Earl of Peterborough, and ſtill living, to this effect; That he had thought fit to ſecure ſome dangerous Perſons, as the Earl of Arran, afterwards Duke Hamilton, Sir Robert Hamilton, and others, for the Preſervation of the publick Peace, and the Security of the Government. The Lords voted an Addreſs of Thanks to his Majeſty, and wou'd have had the Commons join in it, but the latter thought it a ſort of diſpenſing with the Habeas Corpus Act, and therefore brought in a Bill to empower his Majeſty, to apprehend and detain ſuch Perſons; which Act paſs'd both Houſes, and had the Royal Aſſent. There were alſo in Cuſtody at that time the Lord Jefferies, the Lord Montgomery, the Earl of Salisbury, the Earl of Caſtlemaine, the Earl of Peterborough, the Lord Clifford, who were admitted to bail not long after, all but Jefferies the late Chancellor, infamous and deteſted beyond Expreſſion. I ſaw him as he was in his way to the Tower, guarded by the Militia from the Rabble, who ſhew'd a Readineſs to tear him in pieces. He held up his hands in a lamenting poſture, earneſtly beſeeching thoſe that were in the Coach with him to protect him. After his Impriſonment, he was frequently inſulted with Taunts and Meſſages; and taking to drink Brandy, and other ſpirituous Liquors, he ſoon put an end to that hated Life, which the whole Kingdom wiſh'd had been the Work of the Hangman.

Earl of Arran, afterwards Duke Hamilton, a Jacobite.

He and other Lords ſecur'd.

A.D.1688 The infamous Jefferies in danger from the Populace.

Dies miſerably.

There was a Talk of proceeding againſt ſome Lords and others for turning Papiſts, and ſome Steps were taken towards it, but it came to nothing.

King William parts with Chimney-Money.

The other Meſſage was ſent to the Commons by Mr. Wharton, Comptroller of the Houſhold, importing, that his Majeſty was willing to part with Chimney-Money, a heavy and moſt ungrateful Tax, for the Eaſe of his Subjects; upon which the Houſe voted an Addreſs of Thanks.

The Houſe of Peers receiving Information that ſeveral Papiſts continu'd in the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, they order'd Sir William Waller, who acted with ſo much Diligence and Zeal in the time of the Popiſh Plot, to cauſe all Papiſts to be ſecur'd, and to return their Names to a Committee appointed to bring in a Bill for removing all ſuch from the ſaid Cities.

The City of London had generouſly advanced 200,000 Pounds to the Prince of Orange, before the Throne was declar'd vacant; and after his Acceſſion to it, they continu'd for ſome time in the ſame good Diſpoſition. They were now ſo well pleas'd with the Addreſs of the Lords and Commons, and the King's Anſwer above-mention'd, that they themſelves preſented an Addreſs of Thanks to the Houſe of Lords.

About this time Dr. Burnet, who had come over with the Prince of Orange, had read his Highneſs's Declaration in the Cathedral at Exeter, and preach'd a Sermon before the Prince in the Chapel-Royal at St. James's, of which it was then ſaid there were ſold 100,000, was promoted to the Biſhoprick of Salisbury, on the Death of Dr. Seth Ward. He was conſecrated in the Chapel of the Biſhop's Palace at Fulham by Dr. Compton Biſhop of London, Dr. Mew Biſhop of Wincheſter, Dr. Barlow Biſhop of Lincoln, Dr. Beaw Biſhop of Landaff, and Dr. Loyd Biſhop of St. Aſaph, by virtue of a Commiſſion granted to them by Dr. Sancroft Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who began now to deny the Legality of the New Government, and therefore, ſays Biſhop Kennet, would not be concern'd in the Conſecration of Dr. Burnet. Let us conſider a little the Conſiſtency of this Biſhop's Conduct, and we ſhall find him deficient in Sincerity or Underſtanding. He was a ſtrenuous Aſſertor of Paſſive Obedience and Non-Reſiſtance, and yet he afterwards took the Keys of the Tower from Skelton, whom King James had made Governor of it, and gave them to Lord Lucas, whom himſelf, and other Lords met at Guildhall, made Governor of it, King James being then living, and in England; which was as much Treaſon in Law, as the Duke of Monmouth's Rebellion. He was one of the Peers, who invited the Prince of Orange to come to London, and take upon him the Government, upon King James's withdrawing himſelf. Yet when the Prince came thither, he forbore waiting upon him, as the other Peers did, who addreſt with him before the Prince's Coming; he wou'd not conſecrate the Biſhop of Salisbury, but he granted a Commiſſion to other Biſhops to conſecrate him; as if, ſays the Biſhop of Peterborough, he cou'd authorize others to do what he thought cou'd not be lawfully done by himſelf. That Prelate adds, he was prevail'd upon to grant that Commiſſion by Archbiſhop Sancroft's Conduct inconſiſtent.

*A.D.*1688 the Importunity of Dr. Woodward Chancellor of the Dioceſe of Sarum, after ſeveral Biſhops and the Earl of Nottingham had try'd in vain to perſuade him to it. Now if King William had no Right to call the Convention, in which he refus'd to ſit, he had certainly no Right to iſſue a Conge d'Elire to the Chapter of Salisbury; and how could Archbiſhop Sancroft, in Reaſon or Conſcience, conſecrate a Biſhop by his Commiſſion, who had invaded the Church as much as King William had invaded the Kingdom? We ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak more of him. Biſhop Kennet cloſes what he ſays of Biſhop Burnet in that Place thus; "On April 3, His "Lordſhip was ſworn and admitted Chancellor of "the moſt noble Order of the Garter, and was al-"ways true and faithful to the King's Perſon, In-"tereſt, and Honour." How does this agree with ſome late Invectives againſt him upon the laſt Article? "and very exemplary in his Dioceſe, for Diſ-"cipline, Hoſpitality, and Charity."

The Lords having paſt a Bill for removing PAPISTS from the Cities of London and Weſtminſter; the Commons added a Proviſo relating to the Queen-Dowager, and her Family, by which her Articles of Marriage ſeem to be infring'd. The Lords diſagreeing to this Proviſo, ſeveral warm Debates and Conferences enſu'd, which ended in this Expedient, That the Queen-Dowager ſhould have thirty Servants of the King's Engliſh Subjects, provided none of them were Prieſts or Monks. The Reaſons why the Lords interpos'd in behalf of that Princeſs were, "That her Majeſty had for many Years made ſuch "moderate Uſe of the ſaid Articles, that there had "not been any juſt Occaſion of Complaint: That "it was evident in the Time of King James, when "her Majeſty might have been encouraged to en-"tertain more Perſons of her own Religion, moſt "of her Servants, and thoſe of the moſt conſide-"rable Places, were continued, and alſo others re-"ceived into her Family, though Proteſtants, &c." It muſt be own'd that the Zeal of ſome buſy Men about the Time of the Popiſh Plot did entertain wrong Notions of the Conduct of this Princeſs, who certainly never engag'd in any Meaſures, that tended to promote a French, and conſequently a Popiſh Intereſt in England. Her laſt Words are enough to convince one of the Truth of this Aſſertion.

Queen-Dowager no Enemy to the Engliſh Proteſtants.

A Friend of mine Dr. Chrichton, an able Phyſician of the College, was ſent for in the Year 1705, by the Portugal Miniſtry, to cure their King of a Diſtemper too well known to need naming. How that King's Phyſicians fruſtrated the Intent of his Voyage is no Part of Engliſh Hiſtory; but he inform'd me, that the Queen-Dowager of England, then in a very languiſhing Condition, often conſulted him while he was at the Court of Lisbon; and as the ill State of her Brother's Health oblig'd him to confide much in her, Affairs had been under her Influence ſome time. At laſt finding herſelf near her end, ſhe made an Effort to ſit up in her Bed to ſpeak ſomething to the Doctor, which ſhe was not willing her Attendants ſhould hear. The Doctor gave her his Aſſiſtance, and ſhe ſaid, I have liv'd long enough in the World, and am weary of it, but cou'd be willing to live yet a little longer for the Good of the Common Cauſe, being ſatisfy'd that as ſoon as the Breath is out of my Body, the French Faction, (meaning the Duke de Cadaval's) will make my Brother do what they pleaſe. Theſe were her Expreſſions, as well as I can remember at ſo great a Diſtance of Time, and ſhew plainly that ſhe had not Juſtice done her in the Opinion of thoſe, who thought ſhe eſpous'd Intereſts inconſiſtent with thoſe of England, both as to Religion and Liberty.

A Friend to the Allies.

The Revolt of a ſmall Body of the Troops in England, about the middle of March, put a little Life in the Faces of the Enemies to the Government. The Royal Regiment of Scots Horſe, that was quarter'd at Abingdon, almoſt totally deſerted; as did alſo 500 of Dunbarton's Regiment, headed by five Captains. *A.D.*1688 Theſe Rebels took the Rout to Scotland, and no doubt acted in concert with the Earl of Arran, who according to the Brags of Lockhart of Carnwarth, and one that apes him, was always faithful to his unfortunate Sovereign King James, in whoſe Service he commanded a Regiment of Horſe, and was Brigadier-General. He accompany'd King James when he abdicated, and returning to London, waited on the Prince of Orange with a very coarſe Compliment, as we have ſaid in the former Volume. The Prince gave his Regiment to the Earl of Oxford, and on Information of his correſponding with his Enemies, caus'd him to be confin'd in the Tower, which was clamour'd at as a Breach of the Habeas Corpus Act. What Reaſon there was for confining him appears now in Lockhart's Memoirs, He was ready to have commanded in the North of England, had not ſome fatal Accidents prevented that Deſign. One of thoſe fatal Accidents was General Ginkle's marching Northward with a ſufficient Force of Horſe and Dragoons, who ſoon reduc'd the Rebels, whom he ſurrounded in Lancaſhire, and forc'd them to ſubmit to King William's Mercy, who ſent them over to Holland.

Earl of Arran, afterwards Duke Hamilton, confin'd.

On the 16th of March, his Majeſty gave the Royal Aſſent to an Act for the annulling and making void the Attainder of William Ruſſel, Eſq; commonly call'd Lord Ruſſel, Grandfather to his Grace the Duke of Bedford; by which Act the deplorable Death of that illuſtrious Patriot is declar'd a Murder, and is prov'd to have been ſo by Sir John Hawles the Sollicitor-General's Obſervations on his Lordſhip's Trial. At the ſame that the King paſs'd that and other Acts, he made the following Speech to the Parliament.

Lord Ruſſel's Death declar'd a Murder.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"NOW I have the Occaſion of coming hither "to paſs theſe Bills, I ſhall put you in mind "of one Thing, which will conduce much to our "Settlement, as a Settlement will to the Diſappoint-"ment of our Enemies. I am, with all the Expe-"dition I can, filling up the Vacancies that are in "Offices and Places of Truſt by this late Revolution. "I hope you are ſenſible there is a Neceſſity of "ſome Law to ſettle the Oaths, to be taken by all "Perſons to be admitted to ſuch Places. I recom-"mend it to your Care, to make a ſpeedy Provi-"ſion for it. And as I doubt not but you will ſuf-"ficiently provide againſt Papiſts, ſo I hope you "will leave Room for the Admiſſion of all Pro-"teſtants that are willing and able to ſerve. This "Conjunction in my Service, will tend to the bet-"ter uniting you among yourſelves, and the ſtrength-"ning you againſt your common Adverſaries."

His Majeſty had ſignify'd this Deſire of his, for the Admiſſion of all Proteſtants to Places, to his Privy-Council, before he made his Speech; which was approved by them, and a Bill was brought into the Houſe of Lords for Abrogating the former Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, and appointing other Oaths in their ſtead; which being read a ſecond Time, a ſelect Committee of the Houſe was order'd to draw up two Clauſes, the one to explain the Abrogating the ſaid Oaths, the other to take away the Neceſſity of Receiving the Sacrament to make a Man capable of enjoying any Office, Employment, or Place of Truſt; which Clauſe being drawn up, and reported to the Houſe, was rejected by a great Majority, notwithſtanding the many ſtrong Arguments for paſſing it, contain'd in the Proteſt of the Earl of Stamford, the Earl of Cheſterfield, the Lord Delamere, the Lord North and Grey, the Lord Wharton, the Lord Lovelace, and the Lord Vaughan. One Argument was, "That an hearty Union among Proteſtants, was a "greater Security to the Church and State than any Reaſon for repealing the Sacramental Teſt.

"Teſt

A.D.1688 " Teſt that could be invented: That this Obliga-
" tion to Receive the Sacrament, was a Teſt on the
" Proteſtants rather than on the Papiſts: That as " long as it continued, there could not be that
" hearty and thorough Union among Proteſtants,
" as had always been wiſhed, and was at this time
" indiſpenſably neceſſary: And laſtly, that a greater
" Caution ought not to be required from ſuch as
" were admitted into Offices, than from the Mem-
" bers of the two Houſes of Parliament, who are
" not oblig'd to Receive the Sacrament." I do not find any ſtronger Reaſon againſt theſe very ſtrong ones, than this in Biſhop Kennet's Hiſtory, The Majority thought it neceſſary to preſerve the Government in the Hands of thoſe that were of the National Church and Religion. I muſt confeſs, I do not underſtand what he means, as if the Proteſtant Religion was not the National Religion, and the Diſſenters were not Proteſtants.

After this, another Clauſe was inſerted in the ſame Bill, by which it was provided, that any Man ſhould be ſufficiently qualified for any Office, who, within a Year before, or after his Admiſſion, did Receive the Sacrament, either according to the Uſage of the Church of England, or in any other Proteſtant Congregation, and could produce a Certificate under the Hands of the Miniſter, &c. Which Clauſe was alſo Rejected, tho' ſeveral weighty Reaſons were given for paſſing it, by the Earl of Oxford, the Lord Lovelace, the Lord Mordaunt, the Lord Wharton, the Lord Montagu, and the Lord Paget, ſome of which are contain'd in the Proteſt of thoſe noble Peers. I ſhall content myſelf with the two laſt only, becauſe they ſeem to concern the National Church, as well as the Nonconformiſts, and are very hard to be reconcil'd to the Leſſons on the Lord's Supper, which are preſcrib'd to worthy Communicants.

5. " Becauſe Myſteries of Religion, and Divine
" Worſhip, are of Divine Original, and of a Nature
" ſo wholly diſtinct from the ſecular Affairs of po-
" litick Society, that they cannot be applied to thoſe
" Ends; and therefore the Church, by the Law of
" the Goſpel, as well as common Prudence, ought
" to take care, neither to offend tender Conſciences
" within itſelf, nor give Offence to thoſe without,
" by mixing their ſacred Myſteries with ſecular In-
" tereſts.

6. " Becauſe, we cannot ſee how it can conſiſt
" with the Law of God, common Equity, or the " Right of any free-born Subject, that any one be
" puniſh'd without Crime. If it be a Crime not " to take the Sacrament, according to the Uſage
" of the Church of England, every one ought to
" be puniſh'd for it, which no body affirms; if it
" be no Crime, thoſe who are capable, and judg'd
" fit for Employments by the King, ought not to " be puniſh'd with a Law of Excluſion, for not
" doing that which is no Crime to forbear.

" If it be urg'd ſtill as an effectual Teſt to diſco-
" ver and keep out Papiſts, the taking the Sacrament
" in thoſe Proteſtant Congregations, where they are
" Members, and known, will be at leaſt as effectual
" to that purpoſe."

I ſhould have been glad to have met with ſome Anſwer to theſe Reaſons in Biſhop Kennet's Hiſtory, or elſewhere; but the Act it ſelf is the beſt Anſwer thoſe that admire it can reſort to. Tho' the Earl of Nottingham did not proteſt with theſe, nor, as I have learn'd, ſpeak in Publick on that ſide of the Queſtion, yet I have been credibly inform'd, that both then and afterwards, he declar'd againſt the Teſt Act, as it regards Proteſtants; and the Biſhop of London was very far from promoting it, tho' he was ſilent in the paſſing of it into a Law, with reſpect to Proteſtant Diſſenters.

1689. On the 4th of April, when the Lords had under Conſideration the Report of the Amendments to the Bill for the uniting their Majeſties Proteſtant Subjects, the Queſtion was put, whether to agree with the Committee in leaving out the Clauſe about the Indifferency of the Poſture at Receiving the Sacrament? and the Votes were equal, wherefore, according to Cuſtom, it was adjudg'd a Negative. The next Day the Lords reſum'd the Debate of the Report of the ſaid Amendments, particularly of the Clauſe concerning the Commiſſion to be given out by the King to the Biſhops and others of the Clergy; and it was propos'd, that ſome Lay-Men ſhould be added to the Commiſſion: but the Votes being again equal, it was again taken for a Negative, againſt which the Marquiſs of Wincheſter, the Lord Mordaunt, the Lord Lovelace, and the Earl of Stamford proteſted. Their ſecond Reaſon was, A.D.1688

" Becauſe the Matters to be conſidered, being
" barely of human Conſtitution, viz. the Liturgies
" and Ceremonies of the Church of England, which " had their Eſtabliſhment from King, Lords Spiri-
" tual and Temporal, and Commons aſſembled in " Parliament, there can be no Reaſon why the
" Commiſſioners for altering any thing in the Civil
" Conſtitution, ſhould conſiſt only of Men of but
" one ſort of them, unleſs it be ſuppos'd that human
" Reaſon is to be quitted in this Affair, and the In-
" ſpiration of Spiritual Men to be only depended
" upon."

The Earl of Stamford, to theſe Reaſons, added the Precedents of three Statutes for Lay-Commiſſioners in Henry VIIIth's Reign, and one in Edward VIth's, which empower Thirty-two Commiſſioners to alter the Canon and Eccleſiaſtical Law, &c. of whom Sixteen to be of the Laity, and Sixteen of the Clergy. But no Reaſons prevail'd over the Jealouſies and Animoſities of the rigid Eccleſiaſticks and their Followers, who began already to give out, that both King and Queen were Presbyterians in their Hearts. It had been obſerv'd, that the King put on his Hat once in Sermon-time, after the Hugonot Faſhion, and the Queen had forbidden the uſe of Violins in the Chapel Muſick, which was more than enough to infuſe Notions of the Church's Danger into the Minds of weak and warm Bigots, and encourage their Leaders, in and out of Convocation, to oppoſe all Terms of Comprehenſion. Foreigners are ſuppos'd to judge with more Candour of our Conduct, than Men of Party in England, which indeed take in the whole Nation on one ſide or the other. One French Author writing of the abovemention'd Exceptions taken againſt King William and Queen Mary, ſays in Raillery, Ces deux terribles Circonſtances, " Theſe two terrible Circumſtances
" alarm'd the zealous Epiſcopalians, and made them
" conclude, that an Inundation of Hugonotiſm was " about to overwhelm the Kingdom, and the Vogue
" was, que l'Egliſe étoit en danger, The Danger of
" the Church:" for our Folly has made us ridiculous to all Nations. Another French Author, ſpeaking of this Alarm, writes, The Cry was made particularly de ceux de Clergé, ſi ſujets à prendre Feu, quand ils croyent qu'il peut s'agir de Benefices, by the Clergy, ſo apt to take fire when they think their Benefices are the leaſt concern'd. The truth is, there's all the Reaſon in the World to believe, that the Reſolution not to give an Inch of Ground in the way of Comprehenſion, was taken at Oxford, where are Hundreds, if not Thouſands of Perſons, thrown out of ſecular Profeſſions, to ſubſiſt on thoſe Benefices, who could not but be alarm'd at the very Dream of Union, by which ſome Hundreds of Proteſtant Miniſters would have a reaſonable Claim to ſo many of them, and at leaſt as good Qualifications, both for Virtue and Learning, as thoſe who aſſume the Title of Orthodox.

High-Church diſguſted againſt King William and Queen Mary.

On the 28th of March, the Earl of Shrewsbury acquainted the Houſe of Lords with his Majeſty's Deſire to have an Act of Indemnity paſs, and an Act for the Naturalizing the Prince of Denmark, whom the King intended to create a Duke of this Kingdom.

A.D. 1689 For both which, the House order'd the Marquiss of Winchester, and the Earl of Bedford to attend his Majesty with their Thanks.

And now the Ceremony of their Majesties Coronation drawing on, the King was pleas'd to confer several Titles and Honours preparatory to it.

Peers created. Prince George of Denmark was created Duke of Cumberland.

Charles, Lord Marquess of Winchester, Duke of Bolton.

William Bentinck, Esq; Earl of Portland.

Thomas Lord Viscount Falconberg, Earl of Falconberg.

Charles, Lord Viscount Mordaunt, Earl of Monmouth.

Ralph Lord Montagu, Earl of Montagu.

John Lord Churchill, Earl of Marlborough.

Richard Lord Viscount Lumley of Ireland, Lord Viscount Lumley of England.

Hugh Lord Viscount Cholmondeley of Ireland, Lord Cholmondeley of England.

Sir George Hewet, Lord Goran of Ireland.

Lord Coote of Ireland was made Treasurer to the Queen.

The Mareschal Schomberg created a Duke of England, William Earl of Devonshire, and James Duke of Ormond, the same who has spent his latter Days in the Service of the Enemies of his Country, were made Knights of the Garter. On the 9th of April the King pass'd the Bill for establishing the Coronation-Oath, which had been alter'd from the ancient Form for the Use of King James. The Care that was taken of the Peoples Liberties in the ancient Oath was then left out, and instead of it, great Regard had to the Rights of the Clergy, and the Prerogative of the Crown: For Proof of which I refer to a Contemporary Author.

State Tr. vol. II. p. 93. The Oath King William and Queen Mary took at their Coronation, April 11, was plain English.

Will you solemnly promise and swear to govern the People of this Kingdom of England, and the Dominions thereto belonging, according to the Statutes in Parliament agreed on, and the Laws and Customs of the same?

King William and Queen Mary crown'd. I shall not enlarge on the Ceremonies of the Coronation, nor the Procession from Westminster-Hall to the Abbey, where it was perform'd; but observe only, that towards the Close of the Procession came the Marquiss of Hallifax Lord Privy-Seal, the Marquiss of Carmarthen Lord-President of the Council, Dr. Lamplugh Archbishop of York, his Highness George Prince of Denmark; then the Regalia, and then their Majesties thus.

The Earl of Manchester bearing St. Edward's Staff.

The Lord Grey of Ruthen, the Spurs.

The Earl of Clare, the Queen's Scepter.

The Earl of Northampton, the King's.

The Earl of Shrewsbury,
The Earl of Derby,
The Earl of Pembroke, } the three Swords.

The Lord Great-Chamberlain, Robert Earl of Lindsey.

The Earl of Oxford with the Sword of State, between the Duke of Norfolk Earl-Marshal, and the Duke of Ormond Lord High-Constable for that Day.

The Earl of Bedford with the Queen's Sceptre of the Dove.

The Earl of Rutland with the King's.

The Duke of Bolton with the Queen's Orb.

The Duke of Grafton with the King's.

The Duke of Somerset with the Queen's Crown.

The Earl of Devonshire, Lord High-Steward of England for that Day, with the King's.

The Bishop of London with the Bible, between the Bishop of St. Asaph with the Patin, and the Bishop of Rochester with the Chalice.

The KING supported by the Bishop of Winchester.

The QUEEN by the Bishop of Bristol. A.D. 1689

His Majesty's Train was borne by Monsr. Zulestein Master of the Robes, assisted by the Lord Eland Son to the Marquiss of Hallifax, Lord Lansdown Son to the Earl of Bath, Lord Willoughby Son to the Earl of Lindsey, Lord Dumblain Son to the Marquess of Carmarthen.

Her Majesty's Train borne by Lady Elizabeth Pawlet Daughter to the Duke of Bolton, Lady Diana Vere Daughter to the Earl of Oxford, Lady Elizabeth Cavendish Daughter to the Earl of Devonshire, and Lady Harriet Hyde, Daughter to the Earl of Rochester.

We see by this short View of the Coronation, that several Persons, who afterwards fell in with those who treated it as an Usurpation, were very ready to participate of the Honours that are usually distributed on that solemn Occasion.

Her Royal Highness the Princess of Denmark was present at the Solemnity in the Abbey-Church; and observing that her Majesty seem'd a little discompos'd with the Variety of the Ceremonies, and the Burthen of the Regalia, she being near enough to be heard by her, said, Madam, I pity your Fatigue; the Queen reply'd, A Crown, Sister, is not so heavy as it seems to be. The Bishop of London, pursuant to a Clause in the Act for the Coronation-Oath, put the Crowns on their Majesties Heads, after a Sermon preach'd by the Bishop of Salisbury; and there were such Acclamations of Joy in the Abbey, that are not usual in such August Assemblies. The numerous Spectators answered without doors with repeated Shouts, and immediately the whole City rang with Acclaim, which had not been known there in the Memory of Man.

Queen Mary's Saying to Princess Anne of the Crown.

The next Day the House of Commons in a full Body, walk'd from Westminster to the Banquetting-House, where they attended their Majesties, to congratulate them upon their Coronation, which was perform'd by Mr. Powle their Speaker, in an elegant Speech to them both; addressing himself in a part of it thus to the King in particular;

The Speaker's Congratulation to the King and Queen.

May the same Divine Providence, which hath hitherto preserved your Majesty in the greatest Dangers, and so often given you Victory over your Enemies, still crown your Undertakings with Success.

And thus to the Queen in particular;

And may those unparallel'd Virtues, which adorn your Majesty's Royal Person, be the Admiration of the present Age, and an Example to the future.

His Majesty made the following Answer, both in his own, and in his Queen's Name.

Gentlemen,

WE return you our hearty Thanks for the Kindness that you have, upon all Occasions, shew'd to both of Us. We shall take care to the best of Our Powers, of all Things that conduce to the Good of the Kingdom. And I do not doubt, but by God's Assistance, and yours, We shall be able in a short time, to make you a flourishing People.

And it was not the Judgment of his Majesty only, but that of the honest Part of the whole Kingdom, whose Views and Hopes were clouded and frustrated by the Perverseness of Bigots, and those to whom they were Tools.

First Cry of the Danger of the Church. A homely Historian, in his Life of King William writes; "Not long after their Majesties Coronation, "the Church-Party growing jealous, lest the Dis- "senters shou'd have too large a Share in their Af- "fections, or at least more than they were willing "should be dispensed to them, agreed upon an Ad- "dress, in which the Lords concurr'd." And it is a very extraordinary one, considering what Courtship and Promises had been made to the Non-Conformists by the Bishops and Clergy not a year before this Jealousy of them had been conceiv'd. To explain this Matter, it will be necessary to look back

A.D.1689 back a little on the Tranſactions preceding the Revolution.

The Biſhops, in the very Petition for which King James ſent them to Priſon, ſaid, They wanted no due Tenderneſs to Diſſenters, in relation to whom they were willing to come to ſuch a Temper, as ſhould be thought fit, &c.

And his Grace my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, then Biſhop of Lincoln, in his excellent Speech at Sacheverel's Trial, informs us farther; "That "Dr. Sancroft, then Archbiſhop of Canterbury, "foreſeeing ſome ſuch Revolution, as ſoon after "was happily brought about, began to conſider "how utterly unprepar'd they had been at the Re- "ſtoration of King Charles II. to ſettle many Things "to the Advantage of the Church, and what a "happy Opportunity had been loſt, for Want of "ſuch a previous Care, as he was therefore de- "ſirous ſhould be now taken for the better and "more perfect Eſtabliſhment of it: And he at the "ſame time was for conſidering what might be "done to gain Diſſenters, without doing any pre- "judice to the Church. The Scheme was laid "out, and the ſeveral Parts of it were committed, "not only with his Approbation, but Direction, to "ſuch Divines of the Church, as were thought "moſt proper to be intruſted with it. His Grace "took one Part to himſelf; another was commit- "ted to Dr Patrick, afterwards Biſhop of Ely. "And the Reviewing of the Daily Service, and the "Communion-Book was referr'd to a ſelect Num- "ber of Divines, of whom Dr. Sharp, afterwards "Archbiſhop of York, and Dr. Patrick were two. "The Deſign was to improve and inforce the Diſ- "cipline of the Church, to review and enlarge the "Liturgy, by correcting of ſome things, and add- "ing of others; and if it ſhould be thought adviſe- "able by Authority, when this Matter ſhould come "to be legally conſider'd, firſt in Convocation, and "then in Parliament, by leaving ſome few Cere- "monies, confeſt to be indifferent in their Natures, "as indifferent in their Uſage, ſo as not neceſſarily "to be obſerv'd by ſuch as ſhould make a Scruple "of them: And this good Deſign was known to, "and approved by the other Biſhops."

Archbiſhop Sancroft's Deſign in favour of Diſſenters.

Purſuant to this pious and prudent Diſpoſition were the Articles Archbiſhop Sancroft ſent to his Clergy about two Months after he and his Brethren were impriſoned in the Tower, which Articles are inſerted in the Reign of the Stuarts. In one of theſe Articles, after ſpeaking of the Readineſs of the Biſhops to ſhew their Zeal againſt Popery, he enjoins his Clergy, moſt affectionately to exhort the Diſſenters to join with them in daily fervent Prayer to the God of Peace, for an univerſal bleſſed Union of all Reformed Churches, both at home and abroad, againſt their common Enemies. It is worth obſerving here, that the Presbyterians in England and Scotland are term'd Reform'd Churches, not Fanaticks and Schiſmaticks, as in Sacheverel's Sermons, and Cart-loads of Sermons by Prieſts of the ſame Kidney and Character. Dr. Fleetwood, then Biſhop of St. Aſaph, citing this very Paſſage in his Charge to the Clergy of that Dioceſe in 1710, ſays, From this the ordinary Reader will, I believe, conclude that Archbiſhop Sancroft thought both the Diſſenters at home, and the Proteſtants abroad to be Chriſtians at leaſt. His Predeceſſor in the See of St. Aſaph, the learned and worthy Dr. Loyd, paſſing through Oſ-weſtry in Shropſhire, in his way to London, juſt before he was impriſoned there for Petitioning, ſent for Mr. James Owen the Diſſenting Miniſter of that Town, and enter'd into much Freedom of Diſcourſe with him about the great Danger of the Proteſtant Religion. He ventur'd to acquaint him with the Secret of the Invitation ſent to the Prince of Orange by many Lords and Gentlemen, of which he own'd himſelf to be one. And he freely expreſt his hope, that the Proteſtant Diſſenters wou'd readily concur for the promoting the common Intereſt. Adding theſe remarkable Words, You and we are Brethren; we have indeed been angry Brethren, but we have ſeen our Folly; and are reſolv'd, if ever we have it in our Power, to ſhew that we will treat you as Brethren. A.D.1689

Dr. C. Pref. vol. 1. Cont.

Such was the Frame of Spirit of the Biſhops and Clergy of the Church of England, when it was really in danger from Popery. By this we ſee that the firſt Deſign of Alterations and Improvements of the Book of Common-Prayer was by Archbiſhop Sancroft, in concert with thoſe very Biſhops, who were afterwards Nonjurors; ſuch was their Deſire of a Comprehenſion and Coalition with their Proteſtant Brethren, as they then call'd the Diſſenters, who had given them no Reaſon to change their Sentiments and Conduct towards them: but no ſooner were King William and Queen Mary ſeated on the Throne, and expreſt their Willingneſs to come into the ſame Meaſures, than ſome of the Biſhops and the far greater Number of the inferior Clergy reſolv'd to oppoſe all Coalition and Comprehenſion; and their Party among the Laity giving into the ſame Opinion, a ſurpriſing Care of the Church ſeiz'd them on a ſudden, and ſerv'd to cement the Diſaffected of all Denominations in one Intereſt, oppoſite to that of the Government. It was well known, that the late King's Adherents fomented this Jealouſy of the Diſſenters, purely to divide the Friends to the Revolution, and increaſe the Number of King James's, who was at the ſame time deſtroying the Proteſtants in Ireland with Sword and Fire, if what his Soldiers did with his Permiſſion may be call'd his doing. Thus it was not a ſincere Concern for the Safety of the Church, as it is a Door of Salvation to all its pious Members, that begat this ſudden and amazing Zeal for her; but a Combination of the Enemies to the Revolution, of the rigid cruel Eccleſiaſticks and their Tools, of diſappointed Stateſmen, and ignorant bigotted Academicians and Ruſticks, who rejected all Terms of Union with our Proteſtant Brethren; and continuing with various Views their Oppoſition to the Government, under the various Appellations of Jacobites, Tories, Grumblers, High-Church, Flying-Squadron, Country-Party, did all center in one Reſolution, which they erected into a Principle, to perplex and diſtreſs the King and his Miniſters, let what will be the Conſequence of it; let King James or King Lewis with Iriſh or French Maſſacrers be at the end of it: this Government that had juſt ſav'd them muſt be deſtroy'd, and the Name of that Church, which had been juſt deliver'd, like Prey out of the Paw of the Lion, muſt be the Means to effect it. It was neceſſary to premiſe this, that when we are to ſpeak of this diſaffected Party, we may know what the Men were, and what their Purpoſes. 'Tis true, ſome Perſons of better Diſpoſition, with reſpect to Religion and Liberty, were ſometimes deceiv'd by falſe Lights, and ſometimes excited by a prevailing Paſſion to be with them, on both Negative and Affirmative, and great were the Difficulties and Dangers we were brought into by it. A Leſſon to thoſe that come after them, to beware of the Deluſion of factious Malecontents, whatever their Pretences may be, either as to Church or State.

The Riſe of the Factions ſince the Revolution.

The Addreſs of April the 19th before-mention'd, "gave his Majeſty hearty Thanks for his repeated "Aſſurances of maintaining the Church of England, "which he had with the Hazard of his Royal Per- "ſon, recover'd from the dangerous Conſpiracy, "laid for its Deſtruction. It was added,

"That the Doctrine and Practice of the Church "of England, had evinced their Loyalty beyond "the Contradiction of the moſt malicious Enemies; "and, that the Misfortunes of former Princes could "be attributed to nothing more than their Endea- "vours to ſubvert and diſable the Members thereof

A.D.1689 " from contributing to their Support and Defence. " Wherefore they pray'd his Majeſty to continue " his Care for the Preſervation of the ſame, whereby " he would effectually eſtabliſh his Throne, by ſe- " curing the Hearts of his Subjects within his Do- " minions, who could no way better ſhew their " Zeal for his Service than by a firm Adherence to " that Church, whoſe Conſtitution was beſt ſuited " to the Support of that Monarchy. They farther Addreſs for a Convocation. " pray'd, that according to the ancient Practice " and Uſage of the Kingdom, in Time of Par- " liament, his Majeſty would be pleaſed to iſſue " out his Writ for calling a Convocation of the " Clergy of the Kingdom, to be adviſed in Eccle- " ſiaſtical Matters; aſſuring his Majeſty, that it was " their Intention forthwith to proceed to the Con- " ſideration of giving Eaſe to Proteſtant Diſſenters."

The Marks of haſte in this Addreſs are ſo viſible, and the Exceptions that might juſtly be taken at it are ſo obvious, that 'tis needleſs to point to them; and his Majeſty did not forbear giving to underſtand in his Anſwer, that he thought he had already given them ſufficient Aſſurances of his Intentions to ſupport the Church. The Earl of Nottingham brought this Anſwer, That tho' his Majeſty had had many Occaſions of aſſuring them he wou'd maintain the Church of England, as by Law eſtabliſh'd; yet he was well pleas'd with repeating theſe Promiſes, which he was reſolved to perform, by ſupporting that Church, whoſe Loyalty he doubted not, wou'd make him to anſwer their juſt Expectations: That as his Deſign of coming over was to reſcue them from the Miſeries they labour'd under, ſo it was a great Satisfaction to him, that by the Succeſs God had given him, he was in a Station of defending that Church, which had effectually ſhewn her Zeal againſt Popery, and ſhou'd be always his peculiar Care; and he hoped the Eaſe they deſign'd to Diſſenters, wou'd contribute very much to the Eſtabliſhment of the Church; and therefore he earneſtly recommended to them, that the Occaſions of Differences and mutual Animoſities might be remov'd, and that as ſoon as might be he wou'd ſummon a Convocation.

The King's Anſwer.

This Deſire of a Convocation proceeded from a Notion, that a Comprehenſion Bill, in favour of Diſſenters, might paſs without calling in the Help of the Clergy; and truly there ſeems to be no ſuch Neceſſity of Convocation Help in framing a Law for the Peace and Welfare of the Community. As to Church Intereſts, if ſhe has any other real Intereſts, beſides Piety and Purity of Life, and the Good of Souls, there were Biſhops enough in the Houſe of Peers to guard againſt any Diminution of them.

Acts paſt. On the 24th of April, his Majeſty gave his Royal Aſſent to the Acts for ſuſpending the Habeas Corpus Act, for taking away Hearth-Money, for the new Oaths, for removing Papiſts from the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, &c.

Addreſs againſt the Dutcheſs of Mazarine. In the Debate about the Removing of Papiſts, there happen'd a pleaſant Incident, which was an Addreſs to the King, to order the poor Dutcheſs of Mazarine to depart the Kingdom. Col. Birch, who was one of the oldeſt Parliament-Men in the Houſe, preſented this Addreſs; to which his Majeſty anſwer'd, He would take it into Conſideration. However, this Buſineſs did not paſs without Oppoſition. Several Members took the Dutcheſs's part; M. Odyck, one of the Dutch Ambaſſadors, made uſe of all his Intereſt in her Behalf, at the Deſire of the eminent M. de St. Evremont, who had that Lady's Intereſts very much at heart, as appears by his Writings. M. Odyck engaged his Brother Monſ. d'Auverquerque to interceed for her, and theſe Gentlemen repreſented the Aſſemblies at her Houſe, which were thought by ſome to be ſo many Popiſh Cabals, to be only Meetings for Gaming, by which at leaſt that Dutcheſs chiefly ſubſiſted, and Diverſions. The Marquis de Seiſſac ſpoke for her to the King, ſaying, She wou'd ſtarve in any other Country. The Biſhop of Salisbury made a Motion in the Houſe of Lords for ſuch an Addreſs as the Commons was; but it not being carried, the Dutcheſs was admitted to play at Ombre, or Hazard, in England by Connivance. A.D.1689

Addreſs for a War with France. About the middle of April, Mr. Hampden made a Motion in the Houſe of Commons, for an Addreſs to his Majeſty for a War with France, which the French had already begun by ſeveral Acts of Hoſtility at Sea, and in Ireland. Sir Thomas Clarges ſeconded Mr. Hampden's Motion, and another Member ſpoke thus;

Mr. Speaker,

I Bear all the Reſpect that I owe to crown'd Heads, but I cannot help ſaying, That it is of abſolute Neceſſity to declare War with the moſt Chriſtian Turk, who ravages all Chriſtendom, and makes War more barbarouſly than the Turks themſelves.

The French King the moſt Chriſtian Turk.

The Addreſs was voted nemine contradicente, 350 Members in the Houſe. It was preſented by them in a Body at Whitehall, April 26, and his Majeſty gave them a moſt gracious Reception and Anſwer. The Declaration of War was ſaid to be drawn up by Mr. Somers, and is not unequal to his extraordinary Talents in both Reaſon and Eloquence; it bears date at Hampton-Court, 7th of May 1689, and has been too often publiſhed to need a Place here. The Lords had before this unanimouſly reſolv'd to aſſiſt his Majeſty therein to the utmoſt of their Power: Indeed it was high time to declare War with the common Enemy of Liberty and Right, Lewis XIV. who had taken upon him the Protection of a King forefaulted, as the Scots call'd the late K. James. For a Week before this Declaration, the French Fleet, to the Number of 44 Sail, landed Forces and Supplies of warlike Stores in Ireland. Admiral Herbert, upon intelligence that Monſieur Chateaurenaud, who commanded that Fleet, was in Bautry Bay, made thither with the Squadron of Engliſh Ships under his Command, in all but 23 Men of War, leſs in Rate, and worſe provided than the French; who ſeeing the Engliſh bore down upon them, hung out the Signal of Battle, and began it May 1. By the Account of this Fight ſent from on board the Elizabeth Man of War, it ended thus; " We made " ſeveral Boards to gain the Wind, or at leaſt to " engage them cloſer; but finding that way of " Working very diſadvantageous, Admiral Herbert " ſtood off to Sea, as well to have got our Ships " into a Line, as to have gain'd the Wind of the " Enemy, but found them ſo cautious in bearing " down, that we could never get an Opportunity " to do it; ſo continued Battering upon a Stretch " 'till five in the Afternoon, when the French Ad- " miral tacked from us, and ſtood farther off into " the Bay. Admiral Herbert's Ship, and ſome of " the reſt being diſabled, we cou'd not follow " them, &c." Bautry-Bay Fight.

This is plainly one of thoſe Accounts of Battles, which are drawn up to conceal Diſgraces. It was not likely that 23 ſmaller Ships wou'd purſue 44 larger. The Superiority of the French in Number, and Strength of Ships and Men, was a ſufficient Teſtimony of the Bravery of the Engliſh, who diſengag'd themſelves with ſo ſmall a Loſs as 90 Men kill'd, and 250 wounded. In this Action Captain Aylmer of the Portland, and one Lieutenant, were kill'd. What the Loſs of the French was, can be only conjectur'd by the Number of their Men, and the Fierceneſs of the Engagement while it laſted.

His Majeſty hearing that Admiral Herbert was return'd to Portſmouth, went thither, both to haſten the refitting of the Fleet, and to diſtribute Rewards to thoſe Officers and Soldiers, who had diſtinguiſhed themſelves in the Fight; Admiral Herbert was declar'd, and ſoon after created Earl of Torrington;

A.D. 1689 Captain John Aſhby, and Captain Cloudeſly Shovel receiv'd the Honour of Knighthood, and each Seaman had ten Shillings Gratuity. 'Tis reported, that when King William receiv'd the News of this Sea-Fight, he ſaid, ſuch an Action was neceſſary in the Beginning of a War, but it would be raſh in the Courſe of it.

King William's Saying of it.

We muſt obſerve here, that the Engliſh had at that time a very unaccountable Contempt for the French, grounded, one may ſuppoſe, on the Tradition of our Victories in France under Edward III. and Henry V. which ought not to have been conſider'd ſeparately from our Diſgraces there in the Reign of Henry VI. when we loſt our Conqueſts as ſhamefully as we got them glorioufly. 'Tis hardly to be imagin'd, that Admiral Herbert and Captain Aſhby, who had been long in Sea-Service, had any ſuch Conceit of Engliſh Valour as a Match for French Numbers, whatever Captain Shovel might have imagin'd; but it is moſt ſure, that at the breaking out of this French War, the Engliſh, eſpecially in London, were ſo ſanguine, that Odds were laid in many hundred Wagers, that King William would be at Paris before Chriſtmas. That Wager might have been laid on the Duke of Marlborough's Head in the Year 1711, had not the Confederacy, whoſe victorious Armies he commanded, been betray'd by thoſe ill Men, who then caus'd the Change of the Miniſtry in England, and ſet a-foot the odious Treaty of Utrecht.

The Engliſh vain Contempt of the French.

The Declaration of War with France was follow'd by an Invitation of the Proteſtants of that Nation to take Refuge in England; which his Majeſty not only promis'd them, but all ſorts of Aſſiſtance and Succour to put them in a condition to live comfortably. The Cruelties of the French King towards them, were inſerted as an Article of the War in the abovemention'd Declaration.

King William's Kindneſs to the French Proteſtants.

The Proceedings in the Courts of Juſtice having been at a ſtand, for want of filling up the Vacancies in them, his Majeſty in the beginning of May appointed ſuch Lawyers as were moſt eminent for Learning, Abilities, and Integrity, to be Judges.

The Houſe of Commons having paſs'd a Poll-Bill, the Lords added a Clauſe to it, for Peers to name Commiſſioners to rate and tax themſelves; to which the Commons diſagreeing, that Bill was drop'd, and another paſs'd inſtead of it for Twelve-pence in the Pound Land-Tax. Many Friends to the then Government were ſo hearty in their Affections to it, that when this Pound-Tax came to be levied, they gave in to the Aſſeſſors the Value of their Eſtates to the full, expecting to have the Buſineſs over in a Year or two; but that Value was continued in all future Aſſeſſments during both the French Wars, except where the Proprietors ſwore it off by the falling of the Rents. And thus thoſe of King William's Subjects, who were moſt zealous for his Service, were continual Sufferers by their too forward Zeal, while the Diſaffected ſwore off and ſhuffled off their Payments in a great meaſure, throughout the whole Kingdom.

The 12 d. in the Pound Tax.

King William's Friends Sufferers their haſty Zeal.

The Malecontents began ſo early as this Tax, to complain of Taxes, and inſtead of being thankful for the Suppreſſion of Hearth-money, they caus'd a grumbling at paying the Twelve-pence in the Pound, which indeed brought in more Money, but was only temporary, whereas the other was hereditary. There was a dull Jeſt ſpread about by them, put into the Mouth of a Country Fellow, who having paid this Pound-Tax with no good Will, the Tax-gatherer put him in mind of Chimney-money, Ah, quoth the Ruſtick, What have we got by the Swap? which was meant of the two Kings, and not of the two Taxes.

The Tories begin to complain of Taxes.

On the 11th of May, the King paſs'd ſeveral Bills, particularly one for annulling and making void the Attainder of Algernon Sidney, Eſq; whoſe Death was declar'd to be a Murder: the truth is, he was talk'd to Death, as the learned Sir John Hawles, Sollicitor-General, ſays in his Remarks on his Trial. The Names of the Judges, Council, and Jury, being for their Infamy recorded in the Reigns of the Stuarts, we ſhall ſay no more of them here, but leave them with the Guilt of this noble Blood on their Heads, to the Sentence that will paſs at the laſt Tribunal, on all thoſe that have given unjuſt Jugdment, and die, as thoſe wicked Men did, in Impenitence.

Colonel Sidney's Death declar'd a Murder.

On the 9th of May, the Commons ſent up a Bill to the Lords, for declaring the Rights and Liberties of the SUBJECT, and ſettling the Succeſſion of the Crown; which their Lordſhips having conſidered, they thought the latter Part of it defective, no mention being made in it of her Electoral Highneſs the Princeſs Sophia, Dutcheſs of Hanover, and added a Clauſe in her Highneſs's favour. The Bill thus amended was return'd to the Commons, May 25th, where, to uſe Biſhop Kennet's Words, a certain Party was ſo prevalent, that the Houſe diſagreed to that Clauſe. Another Hiſtorian ſets a Mark on that Party by naming the Heads of them, Sir Edward Seymour and Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave; and no ſooner was there an Attempt made by good Engliſhmen in favour of the Houſe of Hanover, than the ſame Men, who were for addreſſing King William to keep the Church out of Danger, who were for ſettling the Revenue on him for three Years only, and who oppos'd the much-deſir'd Union with Proteſtant Diſſenters, ſhew'd their Hatred to that Serene Houſe, and did what they could to hinder its ſucceeding to the Crown. His Majeſty was ſo earneſt to have the Succeſſion-Bill paſs, as the Lords had amended it, that he declared in Council, That his Queen, and both the Prince and Princeſs of Denmark, deſir'd it as well as himſelf. This ſignified nothing with the Party; ſuch was their Averſion to our preſent Royal Family, that they matter'd not even the Deſire of the late Queen Anne, to have their Succeſ-

Bill of Rights and Succeſſion.

A Clauſe in favour of the Houſe of Hanover.

Oppos'd by the Tories.

Deſir'd by the King, Queen, Prince, and Princeſs of Denmark.

ſion

A.D. 1689 ſion by Name in the Bill, which hung two Months in both Houſes, notwithſtanding there had been ſeveral Conferences about it, and probably that Bill would have had ſome worſe Affront put upon it, had it not been dropt on the Birth of the Duke of Glouceſter, Son of the Prince and Princeſs of Denmark, born the 27th of July, and chriſten'd William, his Majeſty King William, and the Earl of Dorſet ſtanding for the King of Denmark, being Godfathers, and the Marchioneſs of Hallifax, Godmother. The Houſe of Commons appointed a Committee to make an Eſtimate of Forfeitures, Ground-Rents, and Additional Exciſe, to raiſe farther Aids to carry on the War. Mr. Papillon Chairman of that Committee, reported, May 15, that it was the Opinion of the Committee, the Forfeitures would amount to 348000 Pounds, without including thoſe in Bedfordſhire, Lincolnſhire, and Cardiganſhire, from whence they had no Liſts; that the Additional Exciſe, at nine pence a Barrel on Ale and Beer, would produce 120000 l. a-year; but of the Ground-Rents they could yet make no Eſtimate.

The Committee of Privileges appointed by the Peers took into Conſideration the Caſe of the Earl of Devonſhire; who in the late King's Time had been fin'd 30000 l. for ſtriking Colonel Culpepyr in Whitehall upon a very great Provocation, notwithſtanding his Plea of Peerage: and they reporting to the Houſe the Circumſtances of the illegal Proceſs, their Lordſhips order'd the late Chief Juſtice Wright, Judge Holloway, and others, to attend their Houſe, where Sir Robert Wright and Sir Richard Holloway attending accordingly, they begg'd the Earl of Devonſhire's Pardon, and ſubmitted to their Lordſhips, who reſolv'd that the Proceſs was a Breach of Privilege, and the Fine exceſſive, exorbitant, and againſt Magna Charta; but ſuch was the Lenity of thoſe Times, that none of thoſe arbitrary Judges were made Examples of national Juſtice, as was expected by all who wiſh'd well to the Publick.

The Earl of Devonſhire's Caſe and Fine remitted.

Toleration Act paſs'd. His Majeſty coming to the Houſe of Peers May the 24th, paſs'd the Toleration Act, exempting Proteſtant Diſſenters from thoſe Penal Laws which were made againſt Papiſts. For my part, I do not ſee wherein the extraordinary Grace did ſo much conſiſt, as to ſilence the Complaints of thoſe Diſſenters in other Caſes. The Liberty of their Conſcience was their natural Right, the depriving them of it was Tyranny, and the Perſecution of their Enemies equally fooliſh, wicked, and cruel. At the ſame time an Act for reverſing the Attainder of Alicia Liſle, Widow, commonly call'd Lady Liſle, had the Royal Aſſent. 'Tis to be noted, that the Lady's Husband John Liſle, Eſq; once Commiſſioner of the Great Seal, was aſſaſſinated in Swiſſerland by Ruffians ſet to work by the ſame ſort of Men who murder'd his Widow in King James's Reign. That it was a Murder, is prov'd in my former Hiſtory, and that Proof is confirm'd by this Statute of Repeal; the Judge who condemn'd her againſt Three Verdicts of the Jury, Not Guilty, was the execrable Jefferies. A Week after, the Judgments of Dr. Oates, the Illegality, as well as Cruelty of which, I have ſpoken of in my abovemention'd Hiſtory, came into debate in the Houſe of Lords: It muſt be added here, that their Lordſhips, after hearing Council at the Bar, did order and adjudge, as the Biſhop of Peterborough tells us, that the Judgment given againſt the ſaid OATES ſhould be Revers'd; and accordingly a Bill of Reverſal, which had paſs'd the Commons, was read twice in the Houſe of Lords, who made ſeveral Amendments, and inſerted a Proviſo, declaring, That until the Matters for which Titus Oates was committed for Perjury, were heard and determin'd in Parliament, the ſaid OATES ſhould not be receiv'd in any Court or Cauſe whatſoever to be a Witneſs; a Proviſo liable to ſo many Exceptions, that People were under no ſurprize to find a Proteſtation enter'd againſt it by Lady Liſle's Attainder revers'd.

I ſhall here enter no farther into Oates's Character than to ſay, that the Perjury for which he ſuffer'd, was afterwards by other Evidence prov'd to be no Perjury, (ſee the Reigns of the Stuarts) and the general Clamour againſt him was the Effect of the indefatigable Efforts of the Papiſts to blacken him, and ruin the Credit of his Evidence; which they did ſo effectually, that the rigid Eccleſiaſticks and their Followers us'd Oates's Name as a Bye-Word for a Raſcal. I knew the Man in my younger Years, and could perceive even then that he wanted both Senſe and Modeſty. As to Conſcience, I believe it might alſo be wanting; but what ſignifies that againſt Teſtimony confirm'd by Coleman's Letters, by other Witneſſes and corroborating Circumſtances? The Popiſh Plot was a villanous Act, none but Villains could poſſibly be concern'd in it, all ſuch Acts are ſuſceptible of no other Evidence but that of Villains, and did any Men in their Wits imagine that Oates was a better Saint than thoſe he worſhip'd at St. Omers and Salamanca? The Commons having diſagreed to the Lords Amendment, it occaſion'd a memorable Conference between the two Houſes, July the 29th, and that occaſion'd great Heats, and ſeem'd to threaten ſtill greater, if the Parliament had not been ſuddenly adjourn'd. However the Lords, at the common Deſire, had ſix Weeks before addreſs'd the King to grant Oates his Pardon. They alſo ordered that he ſhould be diſcharg'd from his Confinement, and his Majeſty was pleas'd to allow him a Penſion of three Pounds a-week, which, ſay certain ſupercilious Writers, occaſion'd various Reflections. I could have aſſur'd thoſe Writers, that not a few of theſe Reflections were on the Scantineſs of the Proviſion made for him, Oates having really ſuffer'd more by the Cruelty of the Papiſts than any other Mortal ever endur'd with Life.

Lords Addreſs the King to pardon Oates.

Compl. Hiſt.

On the 15th of June, the Lords having in a Committee conſider'd the State of the Nation, reſolv'd to addreſs the King, "To put the Iſle of Wight, "Jerſey, Guernſey, Scilly, Dover Caſtle, and other "Places, into a Poſture of Defence; that Papiſts "might be diſarm'd, their Horſes taken from them, "and they not be permitted to travel above five "Miles from their Houſes, &c." At the ſame time their Lordſhips impower'd the Committee to look into the Miſcarriages in Ireland, which we ſhall ſpeak of more particularly when we treat of the Affairs of that Kingdom. The Lords Committees acquainted the Houſe, that they could not come to a full Diſcovery of the Miſcarriages in Ireland without a ſight of the Minute Books of the Committee for Iriſh Affairs to the firſt of May laſt. Their Lordſhips then order'd another Addreſs to the King, that the ſaid Minute Book might be communicated to the Committee; to which his Majeſty's Anſwer was, I will conſider of it. One may by this perceive, that the Enemies to the Revolution did not labour in vain. Not that the Addreſs to the King came from that Quarter, but the Party were very buſy in both Houſes in creating Miſunderſtandings and Diviſions, ſometimes ſiding with one ſort of Men, and ſometimes with another, according as their Weight could produce a Majority to put Spokes in the Wheels of the Government. The truth is, there was too much Reaſon for Complaint of Miſcarriages in the Management of the Relief of Ireland, and it will be found that thoſe who complain'd loudeſt, were the Perſons who would not have it reliev'd at all, but flatter'd themſelves that the King they had abdicated, would King's cold Anſwer to an Addreſs about Ireland.

The Craft of the Tories.

A.D. 1689 would come with an Army from thence to deliver them from their Deliverer.

The laſt Anſwer of the King's was the firſt that was not agreeable to the two Houſes. The Commons voted, that thoſe Perſons who had adviſ'd his Majeſty to defer the giving leave to ſome Members of the Houſe of Peers, to inſpect the Minute Books of the Committee for Iriſh Affairs were Enemies to the King, and Kingdom. They alſo debated an Addreſs to the King, to remove the Marquiſſes of Halifax and Carmarthen from his Council.

Motion for an Addreſs againſt the Marquiſſes of Carmarthen and Halifax.

The former had been very warm in oppoſition to the Bill for Reverſing the Judgments againſt Oates; and indeed had dip'd too deeply in the arbitrary and cruel Adminiſtration after the Diſſolution of the Oxford Parliament, to be look'd upon as a hearty Friend to the Government, which employ'd him, notwithſtanding he was ſo hearty in the Vote of the Vacancy of the Throne. 'Tis to be noted that Mr. John How, Member for Cirenceſter and Vice-chamberlain to the Queen, did now, while he had ſo honourable a Place at Court, appear among thoſe who affected a more than ordinary Zeal for the Good of the Country, and Anxiety for its being well ſerv'd by the Courtiers; which Zeal of his ſpread itſelf into the Concerns of the Church, after he had the Gold Key taken from him, which was ſaid to be for laying the Scene of his Gallantries too near that of his Employment. The Lord Clarendon and Mr. Echard, in their Hiſtories, have on all occaſions imputed the Conduct of the greateſt Patriots againſt the Court, in the Reigns of the Stuarts, to Diſappointment and Diſguſt, that there may remain; no doubt with the Reader, of ill Meaſures in their Adminiſtration, and this Foible of theirs is ſo obvious, and indeed ridiculous, that I am diſcourag'd from the like Practice. But I cannot help remembring a Report, then current with the former, concerning Mr. How, that a certain great Builder apply'd to him for his Intereſt, to obtain a Grant of the waſte Ground, where afterwards the Streets were built now call'd the Seven Dials, near St. Giles's. Some other ſuch Undertaker had before that apply'd to the Lord Portland, for a like Grant by his Intereſt, and the Value of the waſte ground being enquir'd into by that Lord, he repreſented it fairly to the King as worth 8 or 10000 l. Mr. How coming with his Sollicitation ſoon after, and inſiſting pretty earneſtly upon it, his Majeſty ask'd, What it might be worth? Mr. Vice-chamberlain reply'd, about a Thouſand Pounds; the King ſaid, is that all? you ſhall have 1000 l. without ſo much Trouble, or Words to that purpoſe. Whether he had the Thouſand Pounds or not, was not known; but every one knew, that immediately after the loſs of his Employment, he ſet up for one of the Heads, firſt of the Country Party, and afterwards of the Church Party, and as ſuch was a violent Stickler againſt the Government, during all the Reign of King William. It was this Mr. How who mov'd for the Addreſs to the King, to remove from his Council and Preſence all ſuch as had been impeach'd in Parliament and had betray'd the Liberties of their Country. This was aim'd particularly againſt the Marquiſs of Carmarthen, who, when he was Earl of Danby, had been impeach'd of High-Treaſon in King Charles's IId's Reign, as is largely related in my former Hiſtory. The Houſe of Commons dividing upon the Queſtion concerning the Marquiſs of Halifax, there were 76 for an Addreſs, and 90 againſt it. But it was thought proper to permit him to reſign his Offices as Speaker of the Houſe of Lords and Privy Seal not long after, which ſettled that Lord entirely in the Church and Country Party for the reſt of his Life. There was no Addreſs againſt the Marquiſs of Carmarthen, and the Perſons who were like to be Sufferers by that which Mr. How mov'd for, had Intereſt enough to render all Attempts of that kind abortive, to the great Detriment of King William's Affairs, and the great Uneaſineſs of all the Well-affected in his Reign. The A.D. 1689 putting off the Inſpection of the Minute-Books as above-mention'd, gave a Handle to the Enemies of the Government, to inſinuate that Matters were not much mended by the Revolution, and that the preſent Courtiers were no better Friends to the Nation than others had been. 'Tis eaſy to conceive, that well-meaning Men might be impos'd upon by ſuch Inſinuations, and ready to vote and act in concurrence with thoſe who declaim'd ſo loudly againſt Grievances, and for Redreſs of them. Thus the Anti-Court Party grew numerous, by the Addition not only of ſuch Men as Mr. How, but even of ſuch Men as Mr. Garraway, who behav'd ſo well in the Affair of the Excluſion Bill in the Weſtminſter and Oxford Parliaments.

Grumbling begins.

To palliate the Matter of the Minute-Book, the Earl of Nottingham acquainted the Lords, and Mr. Comptroller Wharton the Commons, July 16. That his Majeſty gave leave that a Committe of the Upper Houſe might inſpect the Book according to their deſire; but the Minutes did not anſwer Expectation, and made little Diſcovery of the Miſcarriages in Ireland: Upon which, the Lords order'd the Earls of Shrewsbury and Nottingham, the two principal Secretaries of State, to addreſs the King, that the Minutes relating to Ireland, ſince his Majeſty's taking the Adminiſtration of the GOVERNMENT upon him, to the Time the Council-Books began, might be communicated to their Committee. The King's Anſwer was, That there were no Minutes of the Iriſh Affairs in the time mention'd by their Lordſhips.

The King coming to the Houſe of Lords June 22, gave the Royal Aſſent to the Twelve-pence in the Pound Tax, an Act for reverſing the Attainder of Henry Corniſh, Eſq; late Alderman of the City of London, and other Acts. Another Murder is by the laſt Act charg'd upon the infamous Judges, Council, and Juries in thoſe Tyrannous and Bloody Times preceding the Revolution. Having ſaid ſo much of Alderman Corniſh's Trial in another Place, I ſhall only add now, that Rumſey, the chief Evidence againſt him, ſwore, in the Lord Ruſſel's Trial, he had nam'd all the Perſons at the Meeting he had ſpoken of, and had never till now nam'd Mr. Corniſh: being tax'd with it in Mr. Corniſh's Trial, he excus'd his Perjury with Compaſſion to the Priſoner, which, ſays Sir John Hawles, Sollicitor-General, was fooliſh, mean, and contradictory; he perjur'd himſelf to ſave the Priſoner, and then ſwore to hang him. The Reader will obſerve in what a deplorable condition a Nation muſt be, when in the hands of ſuch implacable, unjuſt, and blood-thirſty Men, as in the Reign of King James II.

Alderman Corniſh's Attainder revers'd.

Mr. Powle, the Speaker, made a very handſome Speech to his Majeſty upon preſenting the Money-Bill, ſetting forth the Burthens the French King had laid upon our Manufactures, his Attempts againſt our Religion and Liberties, by his Correſpondence with Traytors in this Kingdom, and his Devaſtations in the Countries of his Majeſty's Allies. Several Letters from King James, ſome of them written with his own hand, and directed to ſeveral Perſons at London, being intercepted at Liverpool and ſent to Court, his Majeſty communicated them to the Parliament; and becauſe among the enigmatical Expreſſions, mention was made in them of Contraband Goods ready to be ſhipp'd off, in order to be run into ſuch Places, where they might not be ſeiz'd by the Cuſtom-Houſe Officers, which ſufficiently diſcover'd the Deſign of an Invaſion; Mr. Hampden the Father, Chairman of the Committee of the whole Houſe, repreſented the imminent Danger that threaten'd the Kingdom, and what Difficulties his Majeſty lay under to prevent it, for want of Money, and therefore mov'd for a farther Supply. This Motion was not very regular, the Money-Bills were paſs'd, and the Houſe was about to adjourn; the Member who mov'd it, was a Privy Counſellor,

The Speaker's Speech to the King.

A.D. 1689 and no other Member ſeconding him, it occaſion'd ſome ſharp Reflections. Mr. Hampden, among the Dangers to which the Nation was expos'd, having nam'd that of falling into the hands of the French and Iriſh; one Mr. S—— mov'd to add the Dutch. The Stupidity and Ingratitude of this muſt needs be very ſhocking to reaſonable and generous Minds, that very Man had not been ſix Months delivered out of worſe than Egyptian Bondage by the friendly Aſſiſtance of thoſe Dutch at all ventures, when thus he turns upon his Benefactors without Reaſon or Modeſty. How little does it agree with the Senſe of the Britiſh Nation, expreſs'd by Mr. Speaker Powle in his Speech, when he preſented the Bill for paying the Dutch what they had expended on our Account, ſeven or eight Months before?

A Reflection on the Dutch, Stupid and Ungrateful.

The Speaker's Speech in their Praiſe.

The Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, taking into conſideration the great Aſſiſtance that was given by the States of the UNITED PROVINCES to your Majeſty, in your glorious Deſign of reſtoring theſe Kingdoms to their ancient RIGHTS and LIBERTIES, and how for that end they entruſted their Army and Fleet to your Majeſty's Diſpoſal, at a Time when they had War declar'd, and an Invaſion threatned by the French King, merely to divert them; they do here humbly preſent, &c. And ſince it was the Policy of thoſe that labour'd our Deſtruction to divide us, it ought to be the Endeavour of all true Lovers of their Country to keep us firmly united, in order to our Preſervation.

Speeches againſt the Miniſtry.

Mr. Garraway, upon Mr. Hampden's Motion for a farther Aid, ſaid, "We have given Money enough "for this Year, and if we had thought there had been "occaſion for more, we would have prevented the "King's Demands. It is not the want of Money, "but the ill Conduct of Thoſe that have the Manage-"ment or Affairs, that cauſes the Difficulties the "Government lies under. The Miſcarriages in "not aſſiſting the Proteſtants of Ireland, have been "of ſo ill Conſequence, that, if not ſpeedily re-"medied, the Houſe will be oblig'd to take notice "of them." Then Mr. How ſpoke, The preſent Dangers proceed from our not addreſſing the King to remove his evil Counſellors. However, the Houſe having taken the intercepted Letters into Conſideration, order'd an Addreſs to his Majeſty for ſecuring and diſarming Papiſts, and ſeizing their Horſes. The Enemies of the Government, ever ſince the Revolution, have made uſe of all their Cunning, and all their Wit, to diſcredit the Belief of any of their Plots, when they have been diſcover'd, and to turn the Diſcovery of them into Ridicule, in hopes of throwing People off of their guard againſt them, and of their Plots ſucceeding by it one time or other.

Sarsfield, the Iriſh Colonel, continu'd in London after his Maſter King James was gone, and it was ſaid, he offer'd his Service to King William, if employ'd againſt any Prince but the late King. Whether that be true or not, it is certain, a noble Lord acquainted his Majeſty, that Sarsfield, a deſperate daring Soldier, remain'd ſtill in London, and took a great deal of Liberty with his Tongue, propoſing to have him apprehended, for fear he might aſſaſſinate his Royal Perſon; the King, far enough from fearing the Bravo, only anſwer'd, Let him do it if he dares.

King William's Saying of Sarsfield.

About the ſame time, his Majeſty receiv'd Advice from Germany and Holland, and even from France, that ſeveral Perſons were landed in England, with a Reſolution to aſſaſſinate him. The Information was given by a French Proteſtant, who inſinuated himſelf into the Favour and Confidence of the Conſpirators, by pretending to be engaged in the ſame Deſign. The Informer declar'd, he was hinder'd by ſeveral Accidents from giving ſuch timely notice to the Court, that the Aſſaſſines might be ſeiz'd, but he communicated their damnable Deſign, not only to ſome Perſons of Note in Holland, but to the Lord Viſcount Sidney in England. The Conſpirators diſpers'd all on a ſudden, finding no opportunity to perpetrate the Parricide. A.D. 1689

Plots againſt the King.

A Bill for attainting ſeveral Peſorns in Rebellion againſt their Majeſties, was order'd to be brought into the Houſe of Commons; and the City of London, to whom his Majeſty caus'd the intercepted traitorous Letters to be communicated, preſented a very loyal and affectionate Addreſs to the King on that occaſion. The Houſe of Lords alſo ordered an Addreſs to his Majeſty, that all French Papiſts might be oblig'd to depart the Kingdom; but the King, in his Anſwer, intimating it might be prejudicial to Trade, and that he had promis'd them Protection, while they liv'd peaceably here, their Lordſhips did not move farther in that Affair, many of them having heard his Majeſty often declare, He came to deliver the Proteſtants, and not to perſecute the Romaniſts; their Religion being that of moſt of his powerful Allies, whoſe Aſſiſtance was neceſſary to him in the Preſervation of the Liberties of Europe, againſt the French King their common Enemy.

The City of London's Addreſs againſt them.

King's Anſwer about French Papiſts in England, and other Papiſts.

Articles of High-Treaſon were drawn up in the Houſe of Commons againſt Sir Adam Blaire, Captain Henry Vaughan, Captain Frederick Mole, Dr. John Elliot, and Dr. Robert Gray, for diſperſing King James's Declaration publiſh'd in Ireland; but the greateſt Puniſhment they met with, was lying in Priſon till the next Seſſions of Parliament.

On the 28th of June, King William made a healing Speech to both Houſes, with a view of allaying the frequent Heats and Animoſities between them, the Effects of the Intrigues of thoſe, who under various Pretexts were, as has been hinted, clogging the Wheels of the Government, ſome for the Intereſt of the late King, and more for their own Intereſt, in gratifying their Avarice, Ambition, or Reſentment. At the cloſe of this Speech, his Majeſty ſaid, I will add no more but to recommend earneſtly to you, to avoid all Occaſions of Diſpute or Delay at a Time that requires UNION and VIGOUR in your Counſels, upon which the Preſervation of all that is dear to us, doth ſo much depend. And I do promiſe, that nothing ſhall ever be wanting on my part, which may contribute towards it.

The King's healing Speech.

King William's fatherly Care of his People, in ſoothing their Frowardneſs, and leading them by his Example to Prudence and Moderation in their Counſels, was ſo unuſual a Step in the laſt Race of Kings, that it cou'd not but have ſome effect upon them, tho' not ſo great as was neceſſary for quickning their Proceedings in Parliament, by healing thoſe Diviſions between the two Houſes, which occaſion'd the Delays in their Reſolutions and Acts.

Both Lords and Commons return'd his Majeſty Thanks for this gracious Speech; and it was obſervable that they were a little more expeditious in paſſing their Bills afterwards. That for an Additional Exciſe being ready for the Royal Aſſent, his Majeſty came to the Houſe of Peers and gave it, July 25, not only to that Act, but to an Act concerning the Oath to be taken by Commiſſion and Warrant Officers; an Act for Aboliſhing the Court of the Marches of Wales, a moſt vexatious and tyrannical Court, which had been an intolerable Grievance to Wales, and the Borders at all Times, but more eſpecially in the laſt Reigns, when a New Convert Family were at the head of it; nor cou'd the Earl of Macclesfield, the laſt Lord-Preſident of Wales, whoſe Court of Marches was kept at Ludlow, reduce it to ſuch Order, as to ceaſe to be a Grievance, ſo it was diſſolv'd by this Act. His Majeſty at the ſame time gave the Royal Aſſent to an Act to veſt in the Univerſities the Preſentations belonging to Papiſts; and to Acts for erecting Courts of Conſcience in Briſtol, Glouceſter, and Newcaſtle, which have been much to the Benefit and Eaſe of the Inhabitants of thoſe Places.

A.D.1689 The Bill for laying Duties on Coffee, Tea, and Chocolate, was the Occaſion of another Difference between the two Houſes; the Lords when it came to their Houſe from the Commons, added a Clauſe for a Drawback on Exportation, which the Commons did not agree to in this Seſſion, but it paſs'd in the next.

When we come to the Affairs of Ireland it will appear, that it was not without good Reaſon that the Houſe of Commons voted, That the Relief of Ireland had been delay'd, and that an Addreſs be preſented to the King to order Col. Lundy, who had been treacherous or negligent in that Service, to be ſent to Londonderry, and there try'd for High-Treaſon, where doubtleſs he wou'd have met with his Reward. In the Debate of theſe Matters, the Marquiſs of Hallifax did not eſcape without Cenſure.

Col. Lundy a Traytor.

A Bill being brought into the Houſe of Lords to enjoin the wearing the Woollen Manufacture at certain Times of the Year, the Silk-Weavers of London and Canterbury preſented a Petition againſt it, and came down to the Parliament-Houſe in great Multitudes, proceeding in a mutinous Manner, ſeveral Thouſands at a time, from Spittle-fields, through White-Chappel, Leadenhall-Street, Cornhill, and the other Streets to Weſtminſter. The Lords order'd the Marquiſs of Hallifax their Speaker, to tell the Petitioners, That their Lordſhips did not then think fit to give an Anſwer, becauſe they obſerv'd, there was an unuſual Manner of Application; that the Bailiffs, Wardens, and Aſſiſtants of the Silk-Weavers Company, ſhou'd have directed their Members better. Their Lordſhips requir'd them to diſperſe, and they needed not doubt of having Juſtice done them. This riotous Aſſembly was ſuppos'd to be ſet on by the Enemies to the Government, who cou'd not conceal the Pleaſure it was to them, but expreſt it both in their Words and Looks, in expectation of ſome advantage to them by every thing that was diſadvantageous to the Publick. I was a Witneſs of this Mutiny, and of their Behaviour upon it, which had a quick turn by the wiſe Precautions of the Houſe of Lords, who deſir'd his Majeſty to command ſome of the Horſe and Foot-Guards to aſſiſt the Civil Powers. They order'd the Lord Lucas, Governor of the Tower, to take care to prevent any unlawful Concourſe of People in his Hamlets, which his Lordſhip did accordingly, and poſted the Militia of thoſe Hamlets, all along from the Entrance into the Minories to Whitechappel Church, well lining both ſides of the way. Sir Thomas Pilkington, Lord-Mayor of London, rais'd the City Train'd-Bands, who were poſted from Aldgate to Cornhill; and the Lieutenancy of Middleſex took the ſame Care to preſerve the Peace in the City and Liberties of Weſtminſter; by all which the Weavers were ſo aw'd, that they remain'd quiet in their Houſes.

Perſons attainted. The Bill of Attainder cou'd not make its way through both Houſes; the Commons paſt it, and ſent it to the Lords for their Concurrence; their Lordſhips deſir'd to hear the evidence given in the lower Houſe againſt the attainted Perſons. Accordingly William Watts, Matthew Guy, Bazil Purefoy, and William Dalton, were heard at the Bar; but their Evidence did not ſatisfy, and they ſtruck the Lord Thomas Howard, the Earl of Dover, the Lord Hunſdon, Sir Roger Strickland, Sir Edward Herbert, Sir William Jennings, and Col. Hugh Sutherland, out of the Bill, on account of the Deficiency of the Evidence againſt them. Several other Alterations were made in it, and we may ſuppoſe that was the Reaſon that the Bill itſelf dropp'd.

The Bill dropp'd.

It was high time for his Majeſty and his Miniſters to procure Satisfaction to the States-General of the United Provinces, for the Debt accruing to them by their Expence in the Prince of Orange's Expedition. The Diſaffected had already infus'd into weak Minds, a Notion of the Dutch being our Enemies in point of Commerce, and that we ought to be as jealous of them as of the French. The Dutch were frequently cry'd out againſt in Coffee-Houſes and Taverns, and ſeldom mention'd but with Grimace by the Friends to the late King, and their Abettors, now again jumbled together in one Faction, under two Denominations, thoſe of Jacobites and Tories. I am ſenſible that Party-Names are below the Dignity of Hiſtory, and I have affected to avoid them, but in ſome Caſes they are unavoidable, and we cannot without them deſign whom we mean, when we mention thoſe Men that ſo violently oppos'd King William's Meaſures. When the Bill for Payment of the States-General the 600,000 Pounds, that was due to them, came to the Lords, a Motion was made that ſeveral Members of the Houſe, and ſeveral Servants of King Charles II. had Securities appropriated out of the Duties made liable to that Payment, which however did not hinder the paſſing of the Bill; but their Lordſhips ordered an Addreſs to the King, in behalf of theſe Lords, and the other Servants to King Charles II. which being preſented by the Marquiſs of Hallifax, as yet Speaker to that moſt honourable Houſe, his Majeſty was pleaſed to ſay, in reſpect to thoſe particular Lords, I am ſenſible of their Behaviour towards me on this Occaſion, and will not forget it. He gave his Royal Aſſent to the Dutch Bill, as it was call'd, the 20th of Auguſt; and ſeveral ſupercilious Writers copying after one another, and ſpeaking of Mr. Powle's Speech at preſenting of that Bill, ſay, He very artfully reminded the Dutch of their former Obligations to the Engliſh; which was ſo far from being artful, that it was neither decent nor ſeaſonable. For beſides that twitting a Perſon oblig'd with the good Office done him, does in the general Opinion very much leſſen the Obligation; that Reminding pleas'd no body but the Malecontents and Murmurers, and was given to the Humour of a Party, that found too much Countenance in Court as well as Parliament.

A.D.1689

Jacobites and Tories make one Faction.

The Faction too much countenanc'd.

It cannot be thought too large a Digreſſion to remind the Reader of the generous, as well as wiſe Conduct of the States-General, which drew on them that Expence.

A Week before the Prince of Orange landed in England, the States-General caus'd this brave Reſolution of theirs to be made publick, That they aſſiſted the Prince, becauſe King James by ill Counſel, and guided by his Miniſters, attempted to ſubvert the Fundamental Laws and Religion of the Nation; and that being in a ſtrict Alliance with the French King, if he ſhould obtain an arbitrary Power over the People, thoſe two Kings wou'd then endeavour to ruin Holland, as well as England, out of Intereſt, and Hatred to the Proteſtant Religion. They order'd Monſ. Roſeboom to deliver this Reſolution of theirs to all the Foreign Miniſters then reſiding at the Hague; and there ſeems no manner of Reaſon, why Mr. Powle ſhou'd go ſo far back for old things, when the Subject of his Speech related only to things that were ſo new.

The Generoſity of the States-General.

His Majeſty then gave the Royal Aſſent to an Act for prohibiting all Trade with France, and to other Acts enumerated in the Statute Book, to which I refer. After which, the Lord Privy-Seal declar'd it was his Majeſty's Pleaſure there ſhou'd be an Adjournment, and accordingly the two Houſes adjourn'd 'till the 20th of September, and from thence to the 19th of October following.

We muſt now take a View of Affairs in Ireland, which were in a deſperate Condition, occaſion'd by the Delays in ſending Relief to the Proteſtants in that Kingdom, who at all hazards had declar'd their Readineſs to join with the Engliſh, in ſupporting the Prince of Orange's Enterprize for their Deliverance. I ſhou'd have mention'd in my former Hiſtory, that Londonderry, the chief City in the North of Ireland, ſhut

Affairs of Ireland.

A.D. 1689 ſhut the Gates, and took Arms the 9th of December, before the Prince had reach'd London; as did alſo Inniskilling, Sligo, Colerain, Kilmore, and ſome other Places of leſs Note. As ſoon as the Prince of Orange came to London, the Nobility and Gentry of Ireland, who were then there, met at the Duke of Ormond's Houſe in St. James's Square, and drew up an Addreſs to be preſented to his Highneſs, together with a Draught of the chief Ports of that Kingdom, humbly praying him to take them into his Protection, which the Lords and Commons of England had before deſir'd. The Negotiation with Col. Richard Hamilton, who undertook to prevail with the Deputy Tyrconnel to deliver up the Sword to ſuch Perſon as the Prince of Orange ſhou'd commiſſion to receive it, and the ill Advice of the Marquiſs of Hallifax, not to give that Commiſſion to the Earl of Clarendon, out of a Pique to that Lord, who wou'd doubtleſs have been moſt acceptable to the People of Ireland, were the two chief Obſtacles to their Relief. We have ſaid elſewhere, that Mr. Temple, Son to Sir William Temple, and at that time Secretary of War, adviſ'd the King to employ Hamilton, whoſe Treaſon afflicted him ſo much, that he flung himſelf into the River of Thames, under an Arch of the Bridge at low Water, and was drown'd. Hamilton, inſtead of perſuading Tyrconnel to ſubmit to the Prince of Orange, perſuaded him to ſtand out for King James, and accepted of the Command of his Army of Iriſh Papiſts under him.

Two chief Obſtacles to the Relief of Ireland.

By the Advices from Ireland, there was ſome reaſon to believe that Tyrconnel was not at firſt determin'd in that Reſolution: For the Day after the late King left Rocheſter, in order to leave England, which he cou'd not have heard of, he held an extraordinary Council in the Caſtle of Dublin, to conſult and adviſe upon the then cogent Affairs, which were debated at that Board. Keating, Lord Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, the only Proteſtant Judge in the Kingdom, made a wiſe and ſeaſonable Speech to this purpoſe:

" That it wou'd be in vain to contend with the " Forces the Prince of Orange brought to England, " which had maſter'd all Oppoſition, or rather had " met none in their March from the Weſt to Lon- " don, and they wou'd certainly find their Work " as eaſy in Ireland: That they ſhou'd call to mind " the Misfortunes they lay under by their laſt Re- " bellion, and the Conſequences that wou'd attend " another, the utter Forfeiture of all their Lands " and Eſtates. In the North the Proteſtants were " already in Arms, and wou'd readily join with any " other Proteſtants that ſhou'd be ſent to their Aſ- " ſiſtance. That the Government of England be- " ing in the Prince of Orange's hands, there was " no Succour to be expected from that Kingdom, " nor had they a Fund of Money to maintain a " War, the Revenue of Ireland not being ſuffici- " ent to diſcharge the preſent Publick Expence, " and it wou'd every day decreaſe." He added,

" Therefore as I am call'd to give my Ad- " vice on this extraordinary Occaſion, ſo I will " not be anſwerable for any of the Miſeries that " may enſue upon your Non-Compliance, but ex- " hort your Excellency to make a wiſe, timely, " and honourable Accommodation, which I doubt " not you may obtain for yourſelf and People. " May almighty God direct your Intentions for " the Good of the Publick."

Tyrconnel heard the Judge with Patience; he was ſeconded by ſome of the more moderate Papiſts, who were not willing to hazard their All on too ſlender a Foundation. But, in fine, the Deputy mov'd in the Council, that if they wou'd ſtand by and declare for the King and the Proteſtant Religion, he wou'd immediately make the Earl of Granard, Preſident of the Council, Lieutenant-General; and the Lord Mountjoy, Major-General of the Army of that Kingdom: which the Earl of Granard declining, the Lord Tyrconnel thruſt back his Chair, and left the Council abruptly, without coming to any Reſolution. Being afterwards preſt again to follow the Fate of England, and ſubmit to that Government, he reply'd haſtily, What wou'd you have me fling the Sword over the Caſtle-Walls? Nay, he ſeem'd to comply ſo far with the moderate Men, that it was agreed by him and them to ſend Perſons to King James in France, to repreſent the Impoſſibility of holding out the Kingdom of Ireland, and to deſire Permiſſion to treat. The two Perſons ſent were Baron Rice, a rank Papiſt, and the Lord Mountjoy a Proteſtant: but a French Engineer, landing at that Time with a Meſſage for the Deputy, other Meaſures were ſoon taken. Thus did Tyrconnel diſguiſe his real Intentions, if then he really intended, to enter into a War for reſtoring King James. Hamilton above-mention'd carry'd the Letter of Summons, which he pretended to wait for, and in which alſo the Prince of Orange aſſur'd him the Roman Catholicks ſhould enjoy the ſame Liberty, as they did in King Charles the Second's Time. But as ſoon as that Traytor came to Dublin, and repreſented to him the Likelihood of Things taking another Turn in England, in favour of King James; all Hopes of Accommodation vaniſh'd, and the Time which he improv'd by encreaſing his Army, and other Preparations for War was loſt to the Proteſtants, who were in Arms for their Defence. Tyrconnel ſecur'd the moſt important Places in the Kingdom, and not only diſarm'd and plunder'd the Proteſtants, but threw the chiefeſt of them into Priſon. After which he ſent an earneſt Invitation to King James to come over with Forces and Money from France. As ſoon as the Lord Mountjoy and Baron Rice arriv'd at Paris, the latter was committed to the Baſtile, for inſiſting on Conditions favourable to the Proteſtants before he wou'd undertake the Voyage: And that Prince embark'd at Breſt, accompany'd with Monſ. Roſe, Monſ. Maumon, the Marquiſs de Puſignan, Monſ. Lery, Monſ. Boiſeleau, and other experienc'd French Officers, who had with them 1500 of their Maſter's Troops, as alſo Arms, Ammunition, and Money. The Count d'Avaux attended him in quality of Ambaſſador from Lewis XIV. but in truth was a Spy upon him, or rather Governor over him. His two natural Sons the Duke of Berwick and Mr. Fitz-James, with ſeveral Iriſh Papiſts that had ſerv'd in the French Armies, came with him to Ireland, as did alſo Dr. Thomas Cartwright Biſhop of Cheſter, who having been a furious Preacher againſt King Charles II. in the Rump and Oliver's Time, became afterwards as furious a Preacher againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters, and the Liberties of England, one of King James's Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion, and one of the Delegates for outing the Fellows of Magdalen-College. For all which, King James, after he had loſt his Kingdoms, gave him the Biſhoprick of Salisbury, vacant by the Death of Seth Ward, another of Oliver and the Rump's favourite Preachers, and made him a Privy-Counſellor in Ireland, where that King landed the 12th of March at Kinſale. From thence he went to Cork, and was welcom'd by Tyrconnel with an Execution, for he commanded to hang up one of the Magiſtrates of that City, who had declar'd for the Prince of Orange. Moſt of the chief Popiſh Nobility and Gentry, and Officers of the Iriſh Army, went to meet their King, and attend him to Dublin, where he arriv'd the 24th of March in a ſort of triumphant Manner; tho' I think he never triumph'd over any thing, ſo much as over the Religion, Laws and Liberties of his Subjects. The next Day he call'd a Council, and turn'd out the Earl of Granard, Judge Keating, Sir Thomas Newcomen, Sir John Davis, and Col. Ruſſel out of the Council and all other Offices, to make room for that rare Proteſtant Biſhop Cartwright, the Count d'Avaux the French Ambaſſador, Col. Dorrington an Iriſh Papiſt, on whom he beſtow'd the Royal Regiment,

Tyrconnel's Treachery and Craft.

King James lands in Ireland.

A.D. 1689 Regiment, 'till then commanded by the Duke of Ormond, and others of the ſame Nation and Religion. He alſo made the Earl of Tyrconnel a Duke, and ſummon'd a Parliament to meet at Dublin the 7th of May.

King James turns the Proteſtants out of the Council.

Theſe Proceedings of his were not only the natural Effects of his blind Zeal for Popery, but alſo of the Advice of Biſhop Tyrrel, Dr. Moor, and other Popiſh Biſhops and Prieſts, who upon his Arrival at Dublin, waited on him with their Congratulations, and deſir'd him to conſider his Catholick Subjects of that Kingdom for all their Sufferings, and to reſtore them to the Poſſeſſions uſurp'd from them by the Engliſh. Monſ. d'Avaux alſo in his Speech at his firſt formal Audience, deſir'd him in the Name of his good Friend and Confederate the French King, to ſhew diſtinguiſhing Marks of his Favour to his Catholick Subjects. Immediately all the Proteſtants were turn'd out of Employments, and their Arms taken from them. They had liv'd lately like a conquer'd People, expos'd to all the Violence of Soldiers and Robbers; and they now hop'd King James wou'd have ſo much Diſcretion, if he had not Clemency nor Humanity, as to protect them againſt the Rage and Rapine of their cruel and beggarly Enemies; he told them indeed he wou'd do what he cou'd for them, but they receiv'd neither Satisfaction nor Juſtice. The Lord Galmoy, who commanded a Body of his Troops in the North, cut off a Gentleman's Head, and made the Son carry it on a Pike before him and his Regiment. Complaint of this was made to that King James, whom ſo many pretended Proteſtants in England labour'd to reſtore; he ſeem'd to be diſpleas'd at ſo barbarous a Murder and Inſult; yet the very next Day after the Complaint, the Lord Galmoy carry'd the Sword before him to Maſs.

The Tyranny of Tyrconnel.

An Iriſh Lord's Cruelty.

Encourag'd by King James.

When the Biſhop of Meath, with other Clergymen, waited on him, and made this Speech:

Biſhop of Meath's Speech to him.

May it pleaſe your Majeſty,

THE Clergy of the City of Dublin, with ſeveral of the Rural Clergy that are retir'd from this Country for Safety, attend your Majeſty to congratulate your Arrival in this Kingdom; and do humbly implore your Royal Protection to them, their Church, and Religion; deſiring that from time to time they may be admitted to make juſt Complaints of thoſe Injuries they have receiv'd.

His Anſwer.

His Anſwer was,

I Will protect all Men in their Religion and Properties; and as for the Wrongs that have lately been ſuffer'd by ſeveral, it is impoſſible in theſe Times of Commotion but ſuch will happen; but I ſhall, as far as I can, prevent and redreſs them: However, if I am invaded in this Kingdom, as I have been in England, I muſt ſecure myſelf as well as I can.

Theſe Proteſtants, Biſhop and Clergy, had comply'd with the Popiſh Government to the full Extent of paſſive Obedience, and did not reſiſt 'till they deſpair'd of any Redreſs of their Grievances, and ſaw nothing but Ruin and Death before them. Nay, the Earl of Granard, Sir Thomas Newcomen, and other Proteſtants went ſo far as to ſign a Proclamation ſoon after King James landed in Ireland, to pardon thoſe of Sligo, who laid down their Arms and ſubmitted to the Traytor Hamilton, who was marching Northward with the Iriſh Army; but theſe brave Proteſtant Lords and Gentlemen were excepted, the Lord Viſcount Maſſareen, the Lord Kingſton, Clotworthy Sherington Eſq; Sir Robert Colvil, Sir Arthur Rawdon, Sir John Magil, &c. King James publiſhed a Proclamation, for calling home his Subjects of Ireland to remain upon the Premiſes, otherwiſe their Eſtates to be ſequeſter'd. We ſhall ſee with what View this Proclamation was publiſh'd. The next Day after his coming to Dublin another Proclamation came out, For the advancing the Coin to pay his Army. Such a hopeful Buſineſs had Tyrconnel and his deſperate Accomplices made of it, in bringing ſo poor and helpleſs a Prince among them. For though he had ſome Help from France, it came ſo ſparingly, and was ſo precarious, that if their Underſtandings had been ever ſo little better than their Wills, they wou'd no more have had any Thing to do with him.

One of the Clergymen, who waited on the King with the Biſhop of Meath, talking with an Iriſh Lord, who came lately from France, and was a Man of the beſt Senſe among them, ſaid, "I hope now "the King's come, he will protect his Proteſtants, "and redreſs them in thoſe Injuries which they "have of late groan'd under; and not only ſo, but "that his Majeſty will be more than ordinary kind "and favourable to them, in letting them ſhare "with his other Subjects the Employments both "Civil and Military, that being the moſt probable Method for gaining on his Proteſtants of England, by whoſe Means he muſt expect, if ever, "to be reſettled on his Throne."

The Lord reply'd, His Majeſty will, as far as he can, prevent all Injuries to any of his Subjects. But as to doing this with the Deſign you mention, or for truſting his Proteſtants, I aſſure you 'tis far from his Thoughts. Both he and we had rather he ſhou'd hazard and loſe Forty Crowns than be oblig'd to his Proteſtants for the Poſſeſſion of his Kingdom. He can never expect to come in by thoſe Means, unleſs ty'd and fetter'd with Conditions, which he cannot, nor ſhall not obſerve to them. 'Tis by the Arms of his good Catholicks, and the Aſſiſtance of France, that he deſigns to regain his Dominions, and then he comes in free and boundleſs, like an abſolute Conqueror, and ſhall afterwards do what he pleaſes. This cannot but be comfortable News to thoſe Men, who continue the Affection which their Party bore him, to his pretended Son, bred up in Popiſh, French, and Iriſh Principles and Practices; and what Leſſons his pretended Father and thoſe that follow'd him taught him, may be ſeen by the Spirit of K. James's Proclamation againſt the Scots Convention, about a Month after he came to Dublin. It wills and requires all his good Subjects, to the uttermoſt of their Power, to riſe in Arms, aſſault and attack, and deſtroy thoſe Presbyterians, their Aſſiſtors and Abettors, and to take and apprehend them, and bring them to condign Puniſhment; their Eſtates, Goods, and Poſſeſſions, to ſeize and employ for him, or their Subſiſtence in his Service; and for whatever ſhall happen in Proſecution of this his WILL and Pleaſure, this ſhall be to them, and to all others concern'd, a ſufficient Warrant, Authority, and Command; and for all Bloodſhed, Slaughter, Mutilation, Fire-raiſing, or other Damage.

His Deſign to tyrannize over the Proteſtants.

His Proclamation to deſtroy the Scots.

It wou'd be too tedious to enter into the Detail of the horrid Cruelties and Ravages committed on the Proteſtants of Ireland after King James came thither, neither his Royal Word, nor the Protections they got from his Generals, were ſufficient Security. The Iriſh murder'd and deſtroy'd at pleaſure, and the Credulity of ſuch as truſted to Popiſh Promiſes, was a jeſt to the Papiſts; to inſtance in Hamilton the Traytor, who in his March towards Londonderry, granted the following Protection, we may ſuppoſe, for a valuable Conſideration.

I Richard Hamilton, Lieutenant-General of his Majeſty's Forces in Ulſter, do hereby receive into his Majeſty's Protection, the Body and Goods of James Hunter, of Ballynenagh in the County of Antrim, Yeoman, and do promiſe and oblige my ſelf, that none of the Army ſhall moleſt or hurt him, or take any thing from him.

Given under my Hand,
March 27, 1689.

RICHARD HAMILTON.

*A.D.*1689

The Traytor Hamilton's Conduct.

The poor protected Man, thinking himself safe in this Paper, returns to his House which he had left, and follows his Labour; but presently down came the Irish upon him, and swept all before them. Hunter addresses to his Protector, and receives this cold Answer, I promis'd to protect you from the Army, that none of them shou'd offer you any Violence, but I have no power to restrain the Rabble. Father Orleans speaks very honourably of this Hamilton, who had deserv'd his good Word, only by being guilty of the basest Act of Treachery, which a wicked Man cou'd commit. It may be objected these were Things that could not be help'd. They were not of King James's doing, it is true; but they durst not have been done, had it not been with his good Liking. And to shew that what he did himself, was as bad as any of his Irish Officers cou'd do, we need only relate the Story of Monsr. Rousset, a Person of great Fame for his Learning and Integrity, who being Minister of Montpellier in France, when by the French King's Edict that Christian Church was demolish'd, was from a Principle of Zeal for his Religion, and at the Desire of his People, persuaded to preach in the Night-time upon the Ruins of his Church, to some Thousands of wretched Protestants, his late Flock; for which he was, in his Absence, condemn'd by the Intendant of Languedoc to be broke alive upon the Wheel; and because he cou'd not come at him, he order'd that he should be hang'd in effigie. After a thousand hazards in his Escape, this learned Divine got out of France, and became Pastor of the French Church in Dublin. While King James was in England, he affected a charitable Disposition towards the French Refugees, knowing it wou'd be popular; but being got into Ireland among his French and Irish Counsellors, he had no longer any Temptation to disguise his natural Temper, and his Hatred of the Reform'd Religion, which render'd him guilty of an Action his Friends cou'd not excuse from the Imputation of the greatest Cruelty and Breach of Honour; for instead of protecting a Stranger, that had fled his own Country for doing his Duty, and discharging his Conscience, and upon the Security of Law had settled himself in another; he deliver'd up this Reverend Exile, who liv'd peaceably under his Government, to the Count d'Avaux, who sent him in Chains to France, to suffer the terrible Punishment, to which he was adjudg'd by his inhumane Persecutors.

The Irish Parliament.

Let us see, in the next place, whether he behav'd better in his Legislative than in his Governing Capacity. On the 7th of May his Parliament met, and he made a Speech to them, wherein he told them things that wou'd scarce be believ'd by Posterity, were they not on Record, That He had always been for Liberty of Conscience, and against invading any Man's Right. What a face must this have to all those, that know any thing of his Conduct in Scotland? and particularly the severe Act he past against Presbytery in the year 1681, and his turning the Fellows of Magdalen-College out of their Freeholds.

King James's surprizing Speech against Truth.

But let us go on and see what an excellent Prince it was the Jacobites and others would have restor'd to us, if they cou'd. It was the Liberty of Conscience I gave, which my Enemies both at home and abroad dreaded; that is, the Dutch and the Dissenters dreaded the Toleration, but nothing shall ever persuade me to change my Mind, in which I have always had that Saying of Holy Writ, Do as you would be done by, &c. In the close he highly extoll'd the French King's Kindness to him; and the House of Commons, after having chosen Sir Richard Neagle their Speaker, thank one King, James for his gracious Speech, and the other King, Lewis for his generous Assistance. There were not above five or six Protestant Members in the House of Commons, and not many more in the House of Lords, the few Bishops, that sat there excepted.

His Declaration to the English.

Then they recogniz'd their King James by a particular Bill, in which they abhorr'd the Prince of Orange's Usurpation, and the Defection of the English. The next Day he publish'd a Declaration to all his Loving Subjects in the Kingdom of England, promising a full Pardon, if in 24 Days after his Appearance among them, they return'd to their Obedience; concluding thus, If after all this our gracious Condescension, they shall yet continue to assist our Enemies and Rebels, a mighty Word with the Princes of this Race, we do before God charge all the Blood, which shall be afterwards shed, upon them and all their Adherents; and we doubt not by the Blessing of God upon our Arms, upon Irish and French Massacrers and Robbers, to force the most obstinate to their Duty; tho', as we have made appear in reducing our Rebellious Subjects in this Kingdom, we desire to use no other than Lenity and Mercy. And to shew his Sincerity, as well as his Clemency, a few Days after he past an Act to attaint

Above 2000 Lords, Ladies, and Gentlemen, and Merchants attainted by him.

Two Archbishops and one Duke,
Seventeen Earls, seven Countesses,
Twenty Eight Viscounts, two Viscountesses,
Seven Bishops, Eighteen Barons,
Thirty-three Baronets, Fifty-one Knights, and Eighty-three Divines,
Two Thousand, one Hundred, and Eighty-two Esquires and Gentlemen;

Who were all at once condemn'd unheard; the Lords and Gentlemen to be hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd, and the Ladies to be burnt, which the Act term'd to suffer the Pains of Death, and Forfeiture of Estates. This Instance of his Lenity and Mercy will not admit of Reflection; the Scene is too full of Blood and Horror to be kept open for the Delight of those, who continu'd their traitorous Machinations to restore him to England, and put him in a Condition to pack such another Parliament there, and pass such another Act, which like the Wish of the Roman Tyrant, might cut off the head of the whole Nation at a blow. The Bishop of Peterborough shews how much this infamous Act exceeded the Butchery of the Triumvirate's Proscription at Rome; but it is too brutal, as well as barbarous, to stand in comparison with the Acts of any Prince, or People, above the Character of Cannibals. The Irish having thus given us a Specimen of their and their King's Humanity, we shall in the next place see what his and their Justice was.

His and his Irishmen's Injustice.

Nugent, Lord Chief Justice of K. James's Bench in Ireland, was the Son of an Irish Massacrer in the old Rebellion; and, as Archbishop King writes, being a Man of no Figure, was pitch'd upon to judge whether the Outlawries against his Father and Fellow-Rebels ought to be revers'd, and whether the Settlements, that were made in Ireland upon these Outlawries, ought to stand good. This was the Man, who, May 12th, brought a Bill into this venerable Senate, for repealing the Act of Settlement, the only Title which the greater part of the Protestants in Ireland held their Estates by. It was thrice read without any Opposition, and sent to the Upper House, where Dr. Anthony Dopping, the learned and worthy Bishop of Meath, argued thus against it; "No Pe"nalty is provided on such as enter'd Estates with-
"out Injunctions, nor Considerations for Improve-
"ments." Mr. Trenchard, and the Commissioners for the forfeited Estates in Ireland, ten Years after this made no Considerations for Improvements in the Valuation of those Forfeitures: The Bishop added, "Here is no saving for Remainders, nor Time
"given to Tenants and Possessors to remove their "Stock and Corn. No Provision for Protestant
"Widows. It allows only Reprizals for original
"Purchase-Money, which is hard to make out,
"and is an Injury to the second or third Purchaser."
But says Bishop Kennet, notwithstanding the Validity of these Reasons, back'd by an Address to King James by Judge Keating, in behalf of the Purcha-

The Act of Settlement repeal'd.

sers

A.D.1689 fers under the Act of Settlement, and notwithſtanding that abdicated Monarch's Anſwer, I will not do Evil that Good might come of it; yet Chancellor Fitton's Arguments prevail'd with him, and he ſign'd the Bill. As to this Fitton, ſee what ſort of a Man he was to have the Cuſtody of any other Conſcience but this King's. The late Prelates, Dr. King Archbiſhop of Dublin, and Dr. Kennet Biſhop of Peterborough, write of him thus; "He was convicted of Forgery, not only at Weſtminſter and at Cheſter, but fin'd for it by the Lords in Parliament. He was taken out of Jail to diſcharge the Truſt of Lord High Chancellor, and had no other Qualities to recommend him beſides his being a Convert to the Romiſh Church, and a Renegado to his Religion and Country." Such was the Prime Miniſter in King James's Iriſh Reign, at the ſame time that the Nonjuring Clergy and Laity in England, and their Abettors, concealing their Malignity under colour of a Zeal for the Church, were plotting and cabalting to bring back that King and his Train of Renegadoes and Fugitives to treat the Engliſh, both in their Perſons and Fortunes, as the Proteſtants in Ireland were treated as long as he durſt ſtay in that Kingdom.

The Piety, Wiſdom, and Moderation of this King and his Miniſtry appear further in the following Acts of this pretended Parliament.

Wicked Acts paſs'd in King James's Iriſh Parliament.

An Act for taking off Valuation Money, and other Rights from the Clergy.

From the very Set of Men who were ſo impatient to have him among them again in England.

An Act for taking off Penal Laws and Teſts.

An Act for taking off all Writs of Error and Appeals to England.

An Act for repealing Poyning's Act, the Magna Charta of the Engliſh in Ireland.

An Act for the Independency of Ireland upon England.

By all which the Engliſh Conſtitution in Ireland was entirely ſubverted, and as by the laſt Act he put it into the power of the Iriſh to give themſelves to whom they pleas'd, himſelf or his Likeneſs, his Succeſſors conſenting; why is it reckon'd ſo monſtrous to give credit to the ſeventh Article of the Private Treaty he is ſaid to have made with King Lewis before he went to Ireland?

"That in regard of the Situation of the Iriſh Ports, and their Conveniency for the French Fleets; as alſo in conſideration of the Agreement of the Iriſh with the People of France in Religion, he ſhall, after his full Reſtoration to the Kingdoms of England and Scotland, be oblig'd to aſſign Ireland over to his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, &c."

Having ſpoken of his Treatment of the whole Body of the Proteſtants of Ireland, let us examine his Conduct a little with regard to particular Communities and Perſons.

Before King James came to Ireland, Tyrconnel had ſtopp'd the Maintenance of the Univerſity of Dublin; but upon his Arrival, the Vice-Preſident, Fellows, and Scholars, were proceeded againſt and turn'd out, their Furniture, Library, and Communion Plate ſeiz'd, and every thing that belong'd to the College, and to the private Fellows and Scholars, taken away. We have ſeen how this Prince valu'd himſelf on his being the Guardian of the Rights and Properties of thoſe he call'd his Subjects, even after he abdicated his Kingdoms; and it was uſual with him to take the Character of a King of his Word. Another Inſtance of which, is the Caſe of this Univerſity, who waited upon him at his firſt coming to Dublin, and he promis'd ſolemnly to protect them; I will, ſays he, preſerve you in your Liberties and Properties, and rather augment than diminiſh thoſe Privileges and Immunities, which have been granted you by my Predeceſſors. It will not be improper for the Members of our own Univerſities to conſider how he made his Word good with their Proteſtant Brethren in Ireland. His Soldiers preſently after ſeiz'd the College, put a Garriſon into it, and turn'd the Chappel into a Magazine, and the Chambers into Priſons for Proteſtants. One Moor, a Popiſh Prieſt, was made Proveſt; one Maccartey, another Prieſt, Library-Keeper; and the whole deſign'd for them and their Fraternity. A.D.1689

King James's Tyranny in Ireland.

We will now take a Progreſs into this Country, which King William ſaid, was worth fighting for, and ſee how the Proteſtants far'd under King James and Tyrconnel.

We have mention'd the ſhutting the Gates of Londonderry the 9th of December, which early Step was taken upon the general Report of a Maſſacre intended to be put in execution that Day. Whether the Letter ſent to the Earl of Mount-Alexander, to give him notice of ſuch a Deſign, was only feign'd to excite the Proteſtants to be upon their guard, or the real Effects of ſome good Will borne him by a Papiſt in the Secret, I will not diſcuſs; the Letter was receiv'd and communicated to the Proteſtants all over the Kingdom, who were thrown into the moſt terrible Conſternation, and in many Places, as well as Derry, took Arms to defend themſelves, but were ſoon ſuppreſs'd every where, except in the North, where they maintain'd themſelves till their and our Deliverer King William came to their Relief.

It was reported, that the firſt Account of the Prince of Orange's intended Expedition came from Tyrconnel himſelf to King James. A Friend of the Deputy's at Amſterdam ſent him Advice by a Ship from thence bound to Dublin, that the Prince's Deſign was againſt England. Tyrconnel tranſmitted the Letter to the Earl of Sunderland, who ſhew'd it to the King, who made no more uſe of it than to turn the Deputy's Information to a Jeſt, as appear'd by what the Lord Sunderland wrote him upon it. The Jeſt laſted not long, and every Mail afterwards brought News to Ireland of the Prince of Orange's Preparations and Progreſs, at which the Iriſh ſeem'd at firſt to rejoice, not doubting but his Highneſs and his Adherents would have the Fate of the Duke of Monmouth and his Followers: but when the Prince's Succeſs awaken'd their Fears, they appear'd as abject as before they had been inſolent; for the Chief Juſtice Nugent had ſaid on the Bench, ſpeaking of the Prince of Orange, The States of Holland were weary of him, and ſent him over to be dreſs'd as Monmouth was; but that's too good for him: I doubt not before a Month paſſes, to hear the Rebels are hanging up all over England in Bunches like Ropes of Onions. And ſome of the Iriſh Soldiers, whom Tyrconnel ſent to King James's Aſſiſtance, threaten'd, before they were put on board Ship, they would ſtick the Prince's Head on a Pole, and carry it round the Kingdom. Which falſe Spirit of theirs ſunk immediately at the Report of King James's not being able to make head againſt the Prince; and then it was, that Tyrconnel appear'd to be perplex'd and in doubt, whether to ſubmit to, or ſtand out againſt the Prince of Orange. How he took the latter Reſolution, has been hinted already, and after that the Proteſtants of Ireland ſuffer'd whatever the Cruelty and Rapine of ravenous and barbarous Robbers, Beggars, and Bigots cou'd invent, without downright and general Maſſacre and Devaſtation.

Tyrconnel gave out threatning Speeches, if the Prince offer'd to ſend any Forces to Ireland, he would raiſe and arm all the Iriſh from 16 to 60, and leave all the Proteſtants to their Mercy; which, tho' it daunted the Proteſtants in other Provinces of the Kingdom, did animate thoſe in Ulſter, to which Province many out of the others retreated, with what Arms they could get, and together form'd a Body which Tyrconnel had not Strength enough to ſuppreſs, and therefore amus'd them with Articles of ſeeming Mildneſs and Moderation. 1. That no more Forces ſhould be rais'd, nor no more Arms deliver'd out of the Stores. 2. That the new Levies ſhould be diſmiſs'd. 3. That no Forces ſhould be ſent into Ulster. 4. That no Nobleman's or Gentleman's Houſe ſhould be made a Garriſon. He ſwore to theſe Articles, and back'd his Oath with many dreadful Imprecations, at the ſame time that he ſecretly gave out Commiſſions for raiſing thirty Regiments of Horſe, Foot, and Dragoons, without any other Warrant than a bare Letter from the King. He empty'd all the Stores and Magazines, and furniſh'd the Soldiers with competent Arms, encouraging the Women and Boys, and the whole Rabble of People to provide Skeens and Half-Pikes, and to live on the Plunder of the Proteſtants, who, under the Security of thoſe Articles, and Terror of the Number of their Enemies, forbore or delay'd to take Arms in their Defence; which had they done in univerſal Concert, and all at once at the ſame time, as Londonderry did, they would, in the opinion of both Papiſts and Proteſtants, have prevented the Rebellion under the abdicated King, and the Expence of ſo much Blood and Treaſure as it coſt England to ſuppreſs it. The Proteſtants in Ireland gave good Reaſons why that Attempt was not made, better Reaſons than could be given in England, for delaying the Succours that were order'd for them by Parliament; but ſince neither the one nor the other was done, and our Buſineſs is rather Narration than Argument, we ſhall leave the Fact as we found it.

He diſarms the Proteſtants.

To prevent any ſuch Attempts afterwards, Tyrconnel order'd the Proteſtants throughout the Kingdom to be diſarm'd in one Day I ſhall ſay nothing of the Riſings in Kilkenny and the Queen's County, of the Lord Kingſton's in Connaught, nor Sir Arthur Rawdon's in the North. All the Forces, which the Proteſtants had in the Field, were routed by Hamilton near Drummore, and the reſt ſhut themſelves up in the Town, where they were Maſters; to reduce which, King James went to the North, and commanded Hamilton's Army in Perſon, which was now encreas'd to near 40000 Men, who laid Siege to Londonderry, which Place was ſav'd out of the hands of the Enemy with ſingular Marks of Divine Providence.

The Iriſh Garriſon had been drawn out but a few Days, in order to be tranſported to England, when the Inhabitants receiv'd a Copy of the Earl of Mount-Alexander's Letter about the Maſſacre; and the ſame Day, Decemb. 7, they had Intelligence, that the Earl of Antrim, with a numerous Party of Highlanders and Iriſh, was on his March to poſſeſs himſelf of, and command in that Place; which the Citizens taking as a Confirmation of the Contents of that Letter, they reſolv'd to ſhut their Gates againſt him, and declar'd for the Prince of Orange, by the Advice of the Gentlemen of the Neighbourhood, whoſe Counſel and Conduct were uſeful to them in the Defence of the City, till a Proteſtant Garriſon was ſettled in it. They diſpatch'd an Agent to England, to deſire Aſſiſtance, and if they had it not as ſoon as might have been expected, it may reaſonably be imputed to the clandeſtine Practices of ſome of the late King's Friends, who remain'd ſtill at Court, and had the Prince's, and after the King's Ear too much. The firſt Succours that were ſent them by King William, was convey'd by Captain James Hamilton, and the Government of the Place was given to Colonel Lundy, who had been an Officer in King Charles's Troops, and in thoſe of his Brother King James, whoſe Intereſt he deſerted not, tho' he had taken King William's Commiſſion.

King James's Friends too much encourag'd in England.

Mr. Walker the Miniſter comes to Londonderry.

April 13, Mr. George Walker, Rector of Donaghmore in the County of Tyrone, where he was born of Engliſh Parents, who had rais'd a Regiment for Defence of the diſtreſs'd Proteſtants, receiving Intelligence that King James had taken Coleraine, after a ſtout Reſiſtance, and was advancing towards Derry, haſten'd thither to give Lundy an Acccount of it. The Governor at firſt believ'd it only a falſe Alarm, but was convinc'd of the contrary, upon Advice that the Iriſh Army was come to Cledgford. Mr. Walker return'd to Lyfford, where he join'd Colonel Crofton, and afterwards, according to Lundy's Directions, took Poſt at the Long Cawſey, which he vigorouſly maintain'd a whole Night; but being overpower'd by the Enemy's Numbers, he retreated to Londonderry, where he vainly endeavour'd to perſuade Lundy to take the Field, which he might have done with great Probability of Succeſs, before the late King's Army was fully form'd, by the coming up of the Troops in Connaught and Munſter; for Sir Arthur Rawdon had 2 or 300 Horſe well mounted, and the Lord Kingſton 1000 Horſe and 2500 Foot, ready to have join'd him, had he appointed any Place of Rendevouz without the Walls of Derry, where 5 or 6000 Men were coop'd up, and upon King James's Approach, as many of the other Proteſtants as could get into the Town; which, tho' well enough provided for the Inhabitants, and a ſtrong Garriſon, had not Proviſions enough for an Army, as one might term the whole Number of Men above 7000, who were within it when the Iriſh firſt laid Siege to it. A.D. 1689

About the middle of April, Colonel Cunningham and Colonel Richards arriv'd with their Regiments in the River of Derry, and aſſiſted at a Council of War which Lundy held there April 17th. This Council was pack'd by the Governor, and conſiſted of Perſons who were either diſaffected or ignorant of the Condition of the Place; and they concluded, That there was no Proviſion in the Town of Londonderry for the preſent Garriſon, and the two Regiments aboard, for above a Week; that the Place was not tenable againſt a well-appointed Army, therefore it was not convenient to land the two Regiments; but on the contrary, conſidering the Enemy would ſoon be Maſters of the Town, the principal Officers ſhould privately withdraw themſelves, as well for their own Preſervation, as in hopes the Inhabitants, by a timely Capitulation, might make the better Terms. A Paper, purſuant to this Reſolution, was drawn up to be ſign'd by the Gentlemen and chief Citizens, and to be ſent to King James, who was now come as far as St. John's Town. Captain White was order'd to attend the King and receive his Propoſals, and General Hamilton was to halt with the Army within three Miles of Derry, while the Treaty went forward. But ſo ſure was the late King of having the Town deliver'd up to him, which doubtleſs was the Motive to his advancing ſo near it, that, contrary to the Terms White propos'd to him, he came in Perſon before the Walls the very next Day, at the Head of his Army, which had ſo warm a Reception, that both he and they retir'd in Diſorder to St. John's Town. In the mean time, Mr. Muckeridge, Town-Clerk of Londonderry, gave the People, who had heen kept in the dark, ſome Intimation of the Proceedings of the Council of War; which ſo enrag'd them againſt Lundy and his Council, that they thought it their ſafeſt way to make their eſcape, which the Governor could not ſo eaſily do, but kept his Chamber, as not daring to appear. Mr. Walker, Major Baker, and Major Mitchelburn procur'd a Council to be held there, and they endeavour'd to perſuade him to continue his Government, but he poſitively refus'd it; ſo out of reſpect to his Commiſſion, they ſuffer'd him to diſguiſe himſelf and to paſs in a Sally for Relief of Kilmore, with a Load of Match on his Back. From thence he went to Scotland, was there ſeiz'd and ſent Priſoner to London, to anſwer for his Miſcarriages. After he was gone, Major Baker and the other Officers deſir'd Colonel Cunningham to take the Government, which he declin'd, under Pretext that his Orders oblig'd him to obey Colonel Lundy. The Miniſter Mr. Walker and Mr. Baker bravely undertook that dangerous and difficult Charge, form'd eight Regiments

A.D.1689 ments of the Men in the Town, under themſelves, Colonel Mitchelburn, five other Colonels, and 333 inferiour Officers.

I have mention'd Colonel Mitchelburn becauſe I have ſeen his Memorial, wherein he complain'd of the Injuſtice done him, both by Colonel Baker and Mr. Walker, in aſſuming all the Honour of that reſolute and gallant Defence, and taking little or no notice of him, who, according to that Memorial, was from the firſt to the laſt of the Siege as forward and as ſerviceable, and particularly in advancing conſiderable Sums of Money for the uſe of the Garriſon, which they were not ſo well able to do; and which he himſelf wanted afterwards ſo much, that in Mr. Harley's Miniſtry he lay in the Fleet Priſon, for a Debt contracted while he was ſolliciting the Payment of the Arrears coming to him; which were paid at laſt, but in a manner far ſhort of the Merit of ſo gallant an Action as the Defence of Londonderry.

King James had enough of the Siege in the firſt Day's Work, and never came ſo near the Walls again afterwards, but in leſs than ten Days return'd to Dublin, to meet his venerable Senate beforemention'd; leaving the Management to Hamilton the Iriſh, and Roſe the French General. The Beſieg'd ſent Mr. Bennet to England to lay before King William their diſtreſs'd Condition, and to implore ſpeedy Relief; but the Party, who rais'd ſo many Difficulties in every thing that was for the Service of his Government, found means to put off that Relief from time to time, till the Town was reduc'd to ſuch Extremities, that one would think People could not poſſibly ſubſiſt under them. When the Thoughts of all wiſe and good Engliſhmen were, or ſhould have been taken up with conſidering the deplorable State of the Proteſtants in Derry, and means for relieving them; the Party poſtpon'd that Conſideration, and inſtead of it, fell into that of Church, as is ſeen by the Petition in the preceding Pages. Londonderry was moſt certainly in unſpeakable Danger, and the Church in the greateſt Safety; and why the Care of that ſhould in ſuch Circumſtances have defer'd any Care for the Good of the State, is very unintelligible in a ſober way of Thinking. That King William and his Miniſters, thoſe of them I mean, who had never been in any other Intereſt but that of their Country, were not to blame for the Delays in the Relief of Londonderry, and other Proteſtants in Ireland, will be ſeen by what a Gentleman of that Country wrote at that very Juncture.

King William's care of the Proteſtants in Ireland.

" All I here ſay is Matter of Fact, and how par-
" tially ſoever his Majeſty's preſent Management
" may be miſ-interpreted by ſome, yet 'tis certain
" that his wonderful Conduct in the Proviſion for
" the diſtreſs'd Proteſtants of Ireland, ought to be
" engraven in Golden Characters, and not defac'd
" by any unreaſonable Clamours, &c." About ſix Weeks after King James had left the Siege, Major-General Kirk, infamous for his Cruelties in the Weſt of England, came into the Lough of Derry with a Squadron of Ships, having on board three Regiments of Soldiers, his own, Sir John Hanmer's, and Brigadier Stewart's, with Proviſions and Arms. No body lik'd the employing Kirk in that Service. Tho' he had deſerted King James, it was fear'd he was ſo conſcious of his wicked and bloody Actions againſt the Engliſh Proteſtants, after the Defeat at Sedgemore, that as they would never be reconcil'd to him, ſo he muſt therefore do ſomething to regain the Good-will of their Enemies. Be that as it will, he lay ſix Weeks in the Lough, without attempting to relieve the Garriſon, who were all that while feeding on Offal, Horſe-Fleſh, Dogs, Cats, Rats and Mice, Tallow, Starch, dry'd and ſalted Hides; and in the midſt of that Neceſſity, receiv'd plauſible Offers from Hamilton to tempt them to ſurrender; which, rather than do, they unanimouſly reſolv'd to eat the Iriſh, and then one another; and ſent this Anſwer to the Traitor Hamilton: We much wonder you ſhould expect we ſhould place any Confidence in you, who ſo unworthily broke your Faith with King William our Sovereign. You were once generouſly truſted, tho' an Enemy, and yet betray'd your Truſt; and we cannot believe you have learn'd more Sincerity in an Iriſh Camp. Monſieur Roſe, the French General, was ſo enrag'd at this bold Anſwer, that he ſent this threatning Meſſage to the Governors and Garriſon: If you do not deliver the Town to me by the Firſt of July, I will diſpatch my Orders as far as Bali-Shannon, Charlemont, Belfaſt, and the Barony of Imſhoven, to plunder all Proteſtants that are either related to your Garriſon, or of your Faction, and then drive them under the Walls of your Town, where they ſhall be ſuffer'd to ſtarve. But the Beſieged receiv'd this Letter with the ſame Contempt and Indignation as they had done Hamilton's Offers. News of this dreadful Threat being brought to Dublin, the Biſhop of Meath humbly apply'd to the late King, for whom the malecontent Biſhops and Clergy in England were putting up daily Prayers to Heaven, to prevent the Execution of the Frenchman's cruel Order; which the King ſaid, he had heard of before, and had countermanded it; but General Roſe was a Foreigner, and had been us'd to ſuch Proceedings as were ſtrange to us: he added, if he had been my own Subject, I would have call'd him to account for it. Which it is very plain he would not have done, for he hinder'd not the Iriſh Soldiers driving 7000 poor Proteſtants under the Walls of Londonderry, where they muſt have famiſh'd, if the Garriſon had not erected a Gallows in view of the Beſiegers, threatning to hang all the Priſoners they had taken during the Siege, by way of Repriſal. The Sight of the Gallows, and an importunate Letter from the Priſoners, who were to ſuffer, brought Hamilton to Reaſon; and on the 4th of July theſe half-ſtarv'd Proteſtants had leave to return home. The Garriſon too had ſome Benefit by this Iriſh Stratagem, for they crouded 500 of their own uſeleſs People among thoſe naked Proteſtants under the Walls, who paſs'd undiſtinguiſh'd with them, and in exchange they got ſome able Men out of the Seven Thouſand Men, Women and Children, who were driven thither by the Iriſh. In the depth of their Miſery, Mr. Walker the Governor preach'd to the Garriſon in the Cathedral, and reminded them of the many Inſtances of the Divine Providence ſhewn to them from the beginning of the Siege, and admoniſhing them to place their Confidence in God, he endeavour'd to aſſure them, that after ſuch a miraculous Preſervation, God would not ſuffer them to fall into the hands of their Enemies; and if they had Faith and Courage, they need not doubt a ſpeedy Deliverance. A Diſcourſe which ſeem'd to come, not only from a Chriſtian Zeal, but, as Biſhop Kennet adds, from a Spirit of Prophecy; for about an Hour after Sermon, the Garriſon diſcover'd three Ships, which Major-General Kirk, after long and fruitleſs Expectation from him, had ſent to their Relief: The Mountjoy of Derry, commanded by Captain Browning; the Phœnix of Coleraine, by Captain Dowglaſs, under Convoy of the Dartmouth Man-of-War. The two Merchant-Ships were loaden with Proviſions, and bore the furious Fire of the Enemy from Culmore Fort, and both ſides the River, a-croſs which the Iriſh had thrown a Boom, to hinder Ships paſſing. This was broken by the Mountjoy, which running a-ground, the Iriſh made ſure of her, and were ready to board her; but Captain Browning firing a Broadſide, the Shock ſo looſen'd the Ship, that ſhe got clear and paſs'd the Boom. Captain Dowglaſs was in the mean time engag'd with the Iriſh, who fir'd at him from Shore: The Dartmouth gave them ſeveral Broadſides, and at length all three got up to the City, to the inconceivable joy of the Garriſon, who had nothing left but nine lean Horſes, and a Pint of Meal to each Man, hardly

The deſperate Condition of the Proteſtants in Derry.

London-derry reliev'd.

A.D. 1689 enough to ſubſiſt them two Days, after that miſerable way of Subſiſtence. The Enemy knowing Relief was come to the Town, rais'd the Siege in the Night-time with great Confuſion, and made dreadful waſte of the Country in their Retreat. Major-General Kirk coming to Londonderry, a Council of War was held, and they agreed that Mr. Walker the Miniſter, who had acted as one of the Governors, and as Colonel of a Regiment, ſhould carry an Addreſs of Thanks from the Garriſon and Inhabitants to their Majeſties King William and Queen Mary, by whom he was graciouſly receiv'd and bountifully rewarded. The Houſe of Commons order'd him their Thanks, and deſir'd him, in the Name of the Houſe, to thank all thoſe who had ſerv'd under him in the Defence of Londonderry. They alſo addreſs'd the King, that Ten Thouſand Pounds might be diſtributed among the Widows and Orphans of ſuch as were ſlain or died in that Siege. The Univerſity of Oxford preſented Dr. Walker with a Doctor's Degree. The City of London treated him; and there being a Talk of tranſlating Dr. Hopkins from the See of Londonderry to that of Chicheſter, it was generally thought Dr. Walker would be promoted to the Biſhoprick of Londonderry.

Brave Defence of Inniſkillin.

Inniskillin, another Town in the North of Ireland, would not receive an Iriſh Garriſon, but rais'd a Regiment of twelve Companies, under the Command of Guſtavus Hamilton, and ſtood on their Defence. Colonel Hamilton was choſen Governor, and the Place was never reduc'd to ſo great Streights as was Londonderry. On the 11th of March they proclaim'd King William and Queen Mary, and Tyrconnel ſent the Lord Galmoy with a conſiderable Force to reduce them. This Man of Blood was ſo hateful to them, that it made them the more reſolute; and having rejected his Summons with Diſdain, they prepar'd to receive him with Vigour. Galmoy brought all his Troops before Crom, a Caſtle 16 Miles from Inniskillin, the taking of which would have much ſtreightned the Garriſon, who being Maſters of ſo much of the open Country, ſupplied themſelves pretty well with Proviſions, till Maccarty came againſt them with a ſmall Army. Galmoy failing in his Attempt upon Crom, retir'd to Belturbet, and the Garriſon of Inniskillin being encreas'd to near 3000 Men, made frequent and ſucceſsful Sallies. The moſt glorious one was on the ſame Day that Derry was reliev'd, when hearing Maccarty with 6000 Iriſh was advancing againſt them, they reſolv'd to meet him, and about Two Thouſand of them, under the Command of Colonel Lloyd, coming up with him at Newton-Butler, 20 Miles off, they attack'd, routed, and took him, and kill'd and drown'd about 3000 of his Men, with the loſs of 20 Men only kill'd, and 50 wounded.

Regiments rais'd in England.

During theſe Tranſactions in Ireland, King William iſſu'd out Commiſſions for raiſing 18 Regiments of Foot, and 5 Regiments of Horſe; and the Levies went on ſo ſucceſsfully, that the Regiments were all compleat in about ſix Weeks time; but there was not the like Diſpatch in providing Tranſports, a Train of Artillery, and Proviſions. The latter eſpecially, was not only long in getting ready, but bad when they were got; and it was the leſs wonder'd at, becauſe Sir John Parſons was at that time at the head of the Victualling-Office. Mr. Harbord, Pay-maſter of the Forces intended for Ireland, had alſo the Purveyor's Office; and the Fault, both as to Expedition and Goodneſs of the Stores, was laid to him.

100000 l. given Duke Schomberg.

Duke Schomberg, to whom King William had given the Command of the Army to be tranſported to Ireland, had a Preſent of 100000 l. from the Commons, and having obtain'd leave of the Lords, he return'd them Thanks July 16. and preſently after began his Journey for Cheſter. He was very uneaſy at the dilatory Proceedings of the Managers of both Shipping and Proviſions, and propos'd that the Forces ſhould march over Land to Scotland, and embark at Port-Patrick, from whence it was a ſhort Paſſage over to Ireland, and it wou'd have ſav'd two or three Months time. This was oppos'd, as was every other Meaſure that tended to the Suppreſſion of King James's Party, by thoſe who had deſerted him in his Diſtreſs, and pretended a great Zeal for King William's Intereſt and Honour. A.D. 1689

King William betray'd by K. James's Friends.

Captain Hopſon in the Bonaventure, with other Men-of-War and Tranſports, being come to Highlake near Cheſter, the Troops, in all near 10000 Men, were put aboard; and on the 12th of Auguſt, the Duke himſelf embark'd, and on the 18th landed in the Bay of Carrickfergus in Ireland, on Bangor ſide, without Oppoſition. 'Tis amazing to conſider, that the late King James had been ſix Months in that Kingdom, before ſo ſmall an Army as 10000 Men could be ſent againſt him from England, where the Diſtreſſes of the Proteſtants in Ireland were well known, and the whole Body of the Nation were impatient to have them reliev'd. A modern Hiſtorian imputes the Delays, and the Miſcarriages in the Proceedings towards it, to the traitorous Contrivances of thoſe falſe Friends to the then Government, who had by their fair Speeches and Promiſes crept into Employment: His Expreſſions are, The main Reaſon why the Faction was for delaying things, was out of Affection to King Lewis, as well as King James; for the French King depended ſo entirely on the Friendſhip of King Charles and King James, that he was not at all prepar'd for a War with England, &c.

Duke Schomberg lands in Ireland.

Duke Schomberg, after ſending out ſome Parties for Intelligence, march'd his Forces to Belfaſt, where he arriv'd the 20th of Auguſt, the Enemy having quitted the Place, and was there join'd by many Proteſtants in the Neighbourhood, who durſt not declare before. The next Day, he ſent ſeveral Regiments towards Carrickfergus, with ſome Cannon and Mortars, who taking poſt near the Town, the Enemy beat a Parley, and ſent out Propoſals, which the Duke rejected; and carrying on the Siege very vigorouſly, the Garriſon, after four Days Reſiſtance, accepted of the Terms he was pleas'd to offer, to march out with ſome Baggage, and to be conducted to Newry. The Articles were ſcarce agreed on, when Maccarty Moor, the Governor, was got into the Duke's Kitchin in the Camp, which made the Duke ſmile and forbear inviting him to Dinner, ſaying, If he had ſtaid like a Soldier with his Men, he would have ſent to him; but if he would go and eat with Servants in a Kitchin, let him be doing.

On the 28th of Auguſt, Duke Schomberg march'd to Belfaſt; and two Days after, his own Regiment of French Horſe, conſiſting of 500 Men, join'd the Army, which was muſter'd three Days after, and conſiſted of,

A.D.1689 The Artillery-Horſes were moſt of them ſtill at Cheſter, which caus'd the ſhipping off the greateſt Part of the Train, which the Duke order'd to Carlingford-Bay; while he himſelf march'd with the Army beyond Lisburne, and ſo on to Hilsborough. He encamp'd at Drummore, and continuing his March the next Day to Loughbrittan; he was there join'd by the Inniskillin Horſe and Dragoons, who chearfully offer'd to be the Van-Guard to his Army. The Iriſh upon their Approach abandon'd the Newry, a very ſtrong Place, having firſt fir'd the Town; which the General no ſooner heard of, but he ſent a Trumpet to the Duke of Berwick who commanded them, to let him know, If he went on burning in that barbarous Manner, he wou'd give no Quarter. This Meſſage put a ſtop to the Incendiaries, and the Iriſh quitted Dundalk without firing it. The Duke march'd thither, and encamp'd on a low moiſt Ground, having the Town and River to the Weſt; between him and the Enemy, the Sea to the South; the Newry Mountains to the Eaſt; and Hills and Bogs intermix'd to the North. Duke Schomberg intended to have continu'd his Progreſs, but the Ships with the Train of Artillery, not coming up in time to Carlingford, according to his Directions, he was oblig'd to ſtay in that Camp, to his great Diſappointment and Grief, till the 20th of September; when he receiv'd Advice that King James, having gather'd all his Forces near Drogheda, was advancing towards him, and the next Day they appear'd in Order of Battle. A great Party of their Horſe came up to the Engliſh Trenches, and ſeveral Officers in the Camp were for an immediate Engagement. But the Duke ſaid coolly, Let them alone, we ſhall ſee what they will do; and tho' he ſaw them advance within Cannon-ſhot, he ſtill ſaid, I cannot believe they deſign to fight. However, ſeeing them one Day draw their Army into two Lines; he ſent Orders by Lieutenant-General Douglas, for the Foot to ſtand to their Arms, and his Horſe, which were Foraging, to return to the Camp on a certain Signal. The Soldiers notwithſtanding they were in a languiſhing Condition, receiv'd theſe Orders with the greateſt Chearfulneſs; but in a little time the Iriſh drew off and march'd away, at which the Engliſh ſeem'd much diſſatisfy'd, not doubting but to have given a good Account of them, had there been an Engagement. General Schomberg wiſely conſider'd, that the Enemy was much ſuperior in Number, being at leaſt 20000, eſpecially in Horſe; that his own Men were new Levies, and not yet well-diſciplin'd; that they were weaken'd with Hunger and Sickneſs, and the other Army in Health and good Plight; that the loſs of a Battle might be attended with the loſs of Ireland. And beſides, he diſcover'd a dangerous Conſpiracy in his own Camp, carry'd on by ſome French Papiſts, who had liſted in the Proteſtant Regiments of that Nation. A Captain of one of thoſe Regiments, being inform'd that four of his Soldiers and a Drummer, who were Papiſts, deſign'd to deſert, he ſeiz'd them, and found Letters to Monſieur d'Avaux, about one of them; and on a ſtricter Examination, the Party confeſs'd he receiv'd the Letters from one du Pleſſis a Papiſt, who had been a Captain of Horſe in France, from whence he fled for Murder, and was now a private Soldier in one of the French Regiments. Du Pleſſis being ſeiz'd, ingenuouſly confeſt he had written to King James and the French Ambaſſador, to inform them that there were ſeveral Papiſts in thoſe Regiments, whom he promis'd to bring over to the Iriſh Army, if he might have the Command of them, and his Pardon from the King of France; upon this he and his five Accomplices were brought to their Trial, condemn'd and executed. After which the French Colonels made ſtrict Inquiry, what Papiſts there were in their Regiments, and found in all about 250, who were ſecur'd by Duke Schomberg's Order, ſent Priſoners to England, and from thence to Holland, where they were ſet at liberty. A.D.1689

While Duke Schomberg lay in his Camp at Dundalk, the Inniskillinners under Col. Lloyd, routed a Body of Iriſh, that were marching towards Sligo, conſiſting of above 4000 Men, themſelves ſcarce 1000; they kill'd 700 of the Rebels, took O-Kelly their General, and 40 other Officers Priſoners, with very little loſs on their ſide. The Duke was ſo well pleas'd with the News, that having ordered all the Inniskillin Horſe and Foot in his Army to draw out; he rode along their Line with his Hat off, and caus'd the Dutch Guards and Inniskillin Foot to make three running Fires, which were anſwered by the Inniskillin Horſe, and by the Cannon on the Works; as alſo by the Ships which lay at the mouth of the Harbour.

The Joy for this Succeſs, was not long after much abated, by the Iriſh taking Sligo and James-Town. Col. Sarsfield marching that way, with a great Detachment from their Army, the ſmall Garriſon in James-Town abandon'd the Place, as not tenable, and marching to Sligo, was follow'd by Sarsfield; upon which, Col. Ruſſel retir'd to Baly-Shanon with the few Horſe that were there; and adviſ'd the Foot alſo to quit the Town. But St. Saveur, a brave French Captain in Melionere's Regiment, with his own Company of Grenadiers, and Col. Lloyd with ſome Inniskillin Men ſtaid behind; and on Sarsfield's Approach, retreated to the two Forts. Lloyd having no ſubſiſtence for his Men, drew off in the Night with the loſs of ſome of them; but the French Captain having carry'd in more Proviſion with him into his Fort, where he found Ammunition, reſolv'd to hold out.

The Nights were dark, and being apprehenſive the Iriſh might come upon him unſeen, he got Deal-Boards, and dipping the ends of them in Tar, they gave ſuch a Light when ſet on fire, and hung over the Fort-Wall, that he diſcovered the Enemy advancing towards them, with an Engine they call'd the Sow; but St. Saveur's Men having kill'd the Engineer, and two or three Iriſh Soldiers, the reſt retreated, leaving their Engine behind them, which he burnt. On Appearance of Day-light, the Iriſh were forc'd to quit a ſmall Field-Piece they had planted in the Street, and loſt many of their Men in a Sally. But Proviſions growing ſhort, and Water failing, St. Saveur ſurrender'd on honourable Terms. As his Men march'd over the Bridge, Sarsfield ſtood at the end of it, with a Purſe of Gold to tempt thoſe brave Fellows to ſerve his Maſter, the abdicated King of England; but they told him, They would not fight for Papiſts. One of them did accept three or four Guineas out of his Purſe, and was mounted and armed for a Trooper; but the next Day he carry'd Money, Horſe and Arms off with him to Dundalk; where the Engliſh Army ſuffer'd extremely from the Diſtemper of the Country, a violent Flux attended with Gripes, occaſion'd by the Dampneſs of the Ground they were encamp'd on, bad Weather, and bad Proviſions; which ſwept away a great Number of brave Officers, beſides private Centinels; as Sir Thomas Beaumont Nephew to Col. Beaumont, and elder Brother to the Admiral of that Name; Sir Edward Deering a gallant Gentleman, who had contributed as much as any Man in the County of Kent, towards bringing about the happy Revolution; Col. Henry Wharton, a Brother to the late Marquiſs, and as much Kindred to him in Spirit and good Engliſh Principles, as in Blood; happy in this his Fate, inaſmuch as it ſav'd him the inexpreſſible Affliction it muſt have been to him, to have known the Diſhonour of his noble Name, by the defection of his Nephew the late Duke of Wharton, from all good Principles of Religion, Virtue

A.D.1689 Virtue and Polity; at Dundalk died alſo Sir Thomas Gower and Col. Hungerford two other Field-Officers in Duke Schomberg's Army. Above 2000 Soldiers of that Army periſh'd in the Camp; and as many Sick were ſhipp'd off to be tranſported to Belfaſt, where the Hoſpitals were, but of them not above 1100 came a-ſhore, the reſt dying at Sea. The Mortality ſeiz'd the Seamen as well as Landmen; ſeveral Ships loſt all their Crew, and ſome Thouſands dy'd in the Hoſpitals, ſince the Duke landed in Ireland, and in the Winter following; ſo that upon a modeſt Computation, there was not half of the Army he carry'd over, living, and fit for Service the next Year: Which made him renew his Inſtances, for the ſpeedy tranſporting thither, the 7000 Danes, that were contracted for, in Auguſt this Summer; which paſt thus in inaction, to the general Regret of all good Proteſtants both in England and Ireland.

There is no writing the Hiſtory of Three Kingdoms in one Thread of Narration, and preſerving at the ſame time Chronological Order; or indeed keeping Things clear and without confuſion So we are now to purſue the Steps of the Revolution in Scotland, from where we left off at the end of the Reigns of the Stuarts, to its Settlement. It cannot be expected, that we ſhould give the Detail of all Occurrences, or enlarge on the Hiſtory of Scotland and Ireland, as much as on that of England; it being ſufficient for our Deſign, that we mention thoſe Facts only, which are eſſential to the general Hiſtory of Great-Britain.

Affairs of Scotland.

We have ſpoken elſewhere of the Earl of Arran's, late Duke Hamilton, telling King William he wou'd not have waited upon him, had not King James been gone; and of the Addreſs of the Scots Lords and Gentlemen to the Prince of Orange, before the Convention met in England. Theſe Lords and Gentlemen aſſembled at the Inſtance of the Prince; who told them, he had deſir'd them to meet, to have their Advice, for ſecuring the Proteſtant Religion, reſtoring their Laws and Liberties, and anſwering the Ends of his Declaration. They went from his Highneſs to the Council-Chamber at Whitehall, and choſe the Duke of Hamilton their Preſident; whoſe Son the Earl of Arran, inſtead of an Addreſs, propos'd that King James ſhou'd be deſired to return. And truly it muſt be ſaid for him, that, however he might afterwards prevaricate with his Party, he remain'd ſteady to the Cauſe, and did to the laſt ſhew a Readineſs to reſtore the Popiſh and Tyrannical Government, under that King's pretended Son; which both Nations had been delivered from, by getting rid of the Father. Sir Patrick Hume, who had been a Sufferer for the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty in the two former Reigns; ask'd if there were any one there, who wou'd ſecond the Earl of Arran, but none appearing to do it, he ſaid, What the Earl had propos'd, was evidently oppoſite and injurious to his Highneſs the Prince of Orange's Undertaking, his Declaration, and the good Intention of preſerving the Proteſtant Religion, and of reſtoring their Laws and Liberties. The Lord Cardroſs who had been ſo perſecuted for his Zeal for the Reformed Religion, that he went, or was about going to Carolina, with many hundred Scots Proteſtants in the former Reign; ſeconded Sir Patrick Hume, and Duke Hamilton, who was highly diſpleas'd with his Son's raſh Propoſal, urg'd that it was quaſh'd by not being ſeconded, and the Earl of Sutherland ſpeaking to the ſame purpoſe, the Addreſs was voted unanimouſly; in which, after having return'd his Highneſs their humble and hearty Thanks for his Pious and Generous Undertaking, they adviſe and deſire him, to take upon him the Adminiſtration of Affairs, Civil and Military, and to convene the States of Scotland, to deliberate and reſolve, what ſhould be done for ſecuring the Proteſtant Religion, and reſtoring the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom. The Duke of Hamilton preſented this Addreſs the 14th of January, attended by above 30 Lords and 80 Gentlemen, to his Highneſs the Prince of Orange, who anſwered as follows: A.D.1689

My Lords and Gentlemen,

IN purſuance of your Advice, I will, until the meeting of the States in March next, give ſuch Orders concerning the Affairs of Scotland, as are neceſſary concerning the calling of the ſaid Meeting, for the preſerving of the Peace, the applying of the Publick Revenue to the moſt preſſing Uſes; and putting the Fortreſſes into the Hands of Perſons, in whom the Nation can have juſt Confidence. And I do further aſſure you, that you will always find me ready to concur with you, in every Thing that may be found neceſſary for ſecuring the Proteſtant Religion, and reſtoring the Laws and Liberties of the Nation.

The Earl of Crawford, and the Earl of Lothian coming to London, after the Addreſs was preſented, deſir'd his Highneſs that they might have an Opportunity to ſubſcribe it; which was done accordingly. The Prince ordered General Mackay with ſome Troops to Scotland; where the People began to be in Motion, eſpecially in the Weſt, where the Provocations they had met with from the Epiſcopalians, occaſioned ſome Acts of Violence againſt them, which made more noiſe than they did hurt. The Earl of Perth, Lord-Chancellor, had reſign'd the Great Seal on the News of King James's withdrawing; but he had been too buſy an Inſtrument in the late Reign, to paſs without Animadverſion. So he was put under Confinement, being fear'd for his Virtue, ſays the Jeſuit Orleans. The Earl of Lauderdale and others were alſo confin'd, but that was all the Puniſhment they met with, whatever they had deſerv'd for betraying the Religion and Liberty of their Country.

On the 14th of March, the Convention met at Edinburgh, and after Prayers perform'd by the Biſhop of Edinburgh, one of the Prelates that ſign'd the Letter of Curſes againſt the Prince of Orange, ſpoken of in the Reigns of the Stuarts, they proceeded to the Choice of a Preſident.

The Marquiſs of Athol was propos'd by the Biſhops, and the Party which adher'd to the Old King; but the Duke of Hamilton was ſet up in Competition by the Friends of King William, and carry'd it by near 40 Voices. The firſt Thing they took into Conſideration, was the reducing the Caſtle of Edinburgh, where the Duke of Gordon a Papiſt commanded. He offer'd to ſurrender it, if ſuch an Indemnity was granted him as he approved. The Earls of Tweedale and Lothian were ſent to him, with a Pardon in Writing for himſelf and Garriſon; but he would not accept it. So by Order of the Convention, the Heralds proclaim'd him a Traytor and Rebel at the Market-Croſs. The Aſſembly order'd a Guard for themſelves, conſiſting of the Cameronians, who had taken Arms, and were come up to Edinburgh at their own Charge, to offer their Service to the Convention, whom they declar'd they wou'd defend againſt any Attempt of the Duke of Gordon, and againſt all of any Denomination, who ſhould dare to moleſt them. They were zealous Presbyterians, and able to have form'd a conſiderable Army, had due Encouragement been given them; which would probably have hinder'd Dundee's Party getting to a Head, and doing the Miſchief they did afterwards. There had been ſuch a ſort of Alarm in Scotland, as that of Duke Schomberg's in England, only it was not ſo general. The Town of Kircudbright was ſaid to be burnt by the late King's Emiſſaries. Upon which, they immediately gather'd into a Body, and were

*A.D.*1689 were ready to have march'd to any Part of the Kingdom, againſt the Popiſh and Prelatical Party, they being one and the ſame Thing in Scotland. The Viſcount Dundee, who had ſtaid about Whitehall, after his Maſter King James was gone, and ſome thought, to offer his Service to the Prince of Orange, whom he had ſerv'd under abroad, poſted to Edinburgh, and having had a private Conference with the Duke of Gordon, made his Eſcape from that City with about 30 or 40 Horſe, and retir'd to Linlithgo.

The Convention had a Letter from King James, deliver'd to them two days after they met, by one Crane, one of his Queen's Servants; and the Earl of Leven brought them another Letter from King William. It was then debated which Letter ſhould be read firſt, and 'twas carry'd for King William's by a great Majority. His Majeſty in this Letter, having ſpoken of his Expedition for their Deliverance, and his accepting the Adminiſtration of Affairs, at the Deſire of the Scots Nobility and Gentry then in London, tells them, Now it lies in you to enter into ſuch Conſultations as are moſt probable to ſettle you on ſure and laſting Foundations; which we hope you will ſet about with all convenient ſpeed, with regard to the Publick Good, and the General Intereſt, and Inclinations of the People. We ſhall ſee preſently that this was a Hint relating to the Settlement of Church-Government there, as it was ſoon after ſettled. He alſo recommended to them the Union of the two Nations, as of the greateſt Advantage to both, They living in the ſame Iſland, having the ſame Language, and the ſame Common Intereſt of Religion and Liberty, &c. After reading this Letter, a Committee was order'd to draw up an Anſwer, in the moſt Thankful and Dutiful Manner; and then before they would ſuffer King James's Letter to be open'd, they paſt an Act for aſſerting and maintaining the Lawfulneſs of that Convention. King James's Letter has been mention'd already, the Contents were chiefly Terrible Threatnings, if they did not immediately return to their Obedience, and an Offer of Pardon if they did. Both which they alike deſpis'd, and order'd Crane his Meſſenger to be ſeiz'd, and after a ſhort Detention diſmiſt as a worthleſs Fellow, which was all the Anſwer he had to carry back to his Maſter, then in Ireland. And Duke Gordon on News of his Arrival there, fir'd the Cannon round the Caſtle, but firſt ſent Notice of his Intention ſo to do, to the Magiſtrates of Edinburgh, who acquainting the Convention with the Meſſage, they gave Orders for blocking up the Caſtle, and appointed the Earl of Leven Captain of their Guards. A Party of Horſe was ſent after Dundee, and indeed 'tis ſurprizing, that Mackay, who had near 3000 Regular Troops with him, cou'd not hinder that Rebel's forming an Army out of the Highlanders and other Papiſts and Prelatiſts of that Nation. The Cameronians rais'd a Regiment in one Day, without Beat of Drum or Expence of Levy-Money; the Command of which was given to the Earl of Angus, whoſe Lieutenant was the brave Col. Cleeland, who is characteriz'd to have been a Gallant Gentleman and Chriſtian Soldier. 'Twas thought Dundee had a Deſign upon Sterling-Caſtle, but the Troops that were ſent after him prevented it, and 'twas in truth all the good they did at that time. The Convention appointed Sir Patrick Hume, who came over with the Prince of Orange to England, to command the Militia Horſe of his County, notwithſtanding his Attainder for the late Earl of Argyle's Buſineſs was not taken off. They made Major-General Mackay, Commander in Chief of all the Forces, Regular or Militia; and having receiv'd Letters from ſeveral Lords and Gentlemen in Ireland, craving Aſſiſtance; they order'd 2000 Muſkets and 20 Barrels of Powder to be immediately ſent them. *A.D.*1689

King William recommends the Union to the Scots.

On the 23d of March, the Convention's Anſwer to the King of England's Letter, was ſign'd in a Meeting of the whole Houſe, very few excepted; and the Lord Roſs went Poſt with it for London. In it, they congratulated his Majeſty, on the Succeſs of his Undertakings for their Deliverance, and the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion; They thank'd him for taking upon him the Adminiſtration of Publick Affairs, aſſur'd him they wou'd come ſpeedily to ſuch Reſolutions as might be acceptable to him, and eſtabliſh the Government, Laws and Liberties upon ſolid Foundations; and, as himſelf had hinted in his Letter, agreeable to the general Good, and Inclinations of the People. And as to the Union, they doubted not his Majeſty would ſo diſpoſe that Matter, that there might be an equal readineſs in England, &c. Which ſhews that the Scots were very cautious of appearing too forward in that Affair, and very delicate in what ſo nearly concern'd the Honour of their Nation.

I ſhall ſay no more of the Reſolutions of this Convention, preparatory to the Revolution in Scotland.

The Convention declar'd, That King James having in ſeveral Points VIOLATED and infring'd the Fundamental Conſtitution of this Kingdom, had thereby FORFEITED his Right to the Crown, and that the Throne was become VACANT; and immediatly ſettled the Crown upon the Prince and Princeſs of Orange during their Lives, and the Heirs of their Bodies; which failing, upon Princeſs Anne, and the Heirs of her Body, as it is contain'd at large in the Inſtrument of Government, fram'd by them, and call'd the Claim of Right: to which I refer, being printed at large in various Collections; and in its place ſhall inſert Part of the Addreſs of the Cameronians before-mention'd, to the Convention, as follows:

The Scots declare K. James had Forfeited the Crown.

The Cameronians Addreſs to the Convention.

To the Meeting of the Eſtates of the Kingdom of Scotland, viz. The Noblemen, Barons and Burgeſſes, (lawfully called and choſen,) now aſſembled at Edinburgh, for eſtabliſhing the Government, reſtoring and ſecuring the true Religion, Laws and Liberties of the ſaid Kingdom;

" The Humble Petition of the poor People, " who have ſuffer'd grievous Perſecution for their " Religion, and for their Revolt from, and diſ- " owning the Authority of King James VII. plead- " ing for devolving the Government upon the " Prince of Orange, now King of England.

Here they make a long Recital of the Sufferings of Scotland, under the Reign and Tyranny of King James VII. and then go on thus;

" We proſtrate ourſelves yet under the ſorrow- " ing ſmart of our ſtill bleeding Wounds, at your " Honours Feet, who have at Call a Capacity, and " we hope a Heart to heal us. And we offer this " our Petition enforc'd, and conjuring your Ho- " nours to hearken to us, by all the formerly felt, " preſently ſeen, and for the future fear'd Effects, " and Efforts of Popery and Tyranny; by the Cry " of the Blood of our murther'd Brethren; by the " Sufferings of the baniſh'd freeborn Subjects of this " Realm, now groaning in Servitude, being ſold in- " to Slavery in the Engliſh Plantations of Ameri- " ca; by the Miſeries, that many Thouſands, for- " feited, diſinherited, harraſs'd and waſted Houſes " and Families, have been reduc'd to; by all the " Sufferings of Faithful People, for adhering to the " ancient covenanted Eſtabliſhment, of Religion " and Liberty; and by all the Arguments of Ju- " ſtice, Neceſſity and Mercy, that even could join " together to begin Communication, among Men of " Wiſdom, Piety and Virtue. Humbly beſeeching,

A.D.1689 " requeſting and craving of your Honours, NOW, " when God hath given you this Opportunity to " act for his Glory, the Good of the Church, of " the Nation, your own Honour, and the Hap- " pineſs of Poſterity: NOW, when this Kingdom, " and all the Nations of Europe, have their Eyes " upon you, expecting you will acquit yourſelves " like the Repreſentatives of a Free Nation, in " redeeming it from Slavery, otherwiſe inevitable; " following the Example of your renowned An- " ceſtors, and the Pattern of the preſent Conven- " tion and Parliament in England; that you will " proceed without any Delay, to declare the late " WICKED Government diſſolv'd, the Crown " and Throne VACANT; and JAMES VIIth, " whom we never have own'd, and reſolv'd in " Conjunction with many Thouſands of our " Countrymen, never again to own, to have " REALLY FORFEITED, and rightly to be " aepriv'd of all Right and Title he ever had, or " could ever pretend to have thereto. And to " provide that it may never be in the Power of " any ſucceeding Ruler to aſpire unto, or ariſe to " ſuch a capacity of Tyrannizing. Moreover, ſince " Anarchy and Tyranny are equally to be deteſt- " ed, and the Nation cannot ſubſiſt without a " Righteous Governor, as alſo that none can have " a nearer Right and fitter Qualifications than his " Illuſtrious Highneſs the Prince of Orange, whom " the moſt High has ſingularly own'd and ho- " nour'd, to be our Deliverer from Popery and " Slavery: We cry therefore to your Honours, " and crave that King William, now proclaim'd " King of England, may be CHOSEN and pro- " claim'd King of Scotland, &c."

Theſe Cameronians have been always repreſented by the Scots Prelatiſts, as Enthuſiaſts and Madmen; but this Petition of theirs, the firſt that was preſented the States, to place the Crown on King William's Head, does not want for good Senſe, ſober Expreſſion, and at the ſame time a Spirit, which muſt be terrible to their Enemies who had ſo wickedly provoked them. And my Author makes the following Reflections.

" From this time forward till the Union, we " ſcarce ever heard of the Cameronians. Their " Separation before was evident from juſt Rea- " ſons, their not complying with indulg'd Liber- " ty, accepting that from their Enemies which " was their native Right, and by which they muſt " recognize the Right and Superiority of Epiſco- " pal Juriſdiction, which they abhor'd. This was " all founded on Conſcience, and in juſt Excep- " tions; but when upon the Revolution, and upon Their Character. " King William's eſtabliſhing their ancient Liber- " ty, and that Epiſcopacy was depos'd, as we ſhall " ſee preſently, they appear'd to be all one united " Body of Presbyterians, one Church, under one " Religious Government and Adminiſtration, " the ſame in Opinion, the ſame in Doctrine, " Diſcipline, Worſhip and Government, having " fewer Breaches, fewer Diviſions, fewer fallings " off to a differing Opinion, than any Proteſtant " Church in the World."

By the ſame Act which ſettled the Crown on King William and Queen Mary; the Scots Convention abrogated the Oath of Allegiance, and ſubſtituted this in its Place. I A. B. do ſincerely promiſe and SWEAR, That I will be FAITHFUL and bear true ALLEGIANCE to their Majeſties King William and Queen Mary. Then the Convention appointed Commiſſioners to carry their Letter, (the Claim of Right, and Addreſs for turning the Convention into a Parliament) to London. Theſe Commiſſioners were the Earl of Argyle, Sir John Dalrymple, and Sir James Montgomery; the latter deſerted this good Cauſe afterwards, went to King James at St. Germains, wrote Libels for him, and died however in Poverty and Neglect, as he well deſerv'd for his Deſertion.

Scots Commiſſioners bring the Convention's Letter to King William and Queen Mary.

The King gave theſe Commiſſioners a moſt gracious Reception in the Banquetting-Houſe at Whitehall, where he and his Queen were plac'd on a Throne, under a rich Canopy. His Majeſty made a ſhort Speech, referring to his Declaration, as deſign'd for Scotland as well as England, and aſſuring them of his Willingneſs to aſſiſt them in every Thing that concern'd the Weal and Intereſt of that Kingdom. Then the Earl of Argyle ſpoke the Coronation-Oath very diſtinctly, Word by Word, and the King and Queen repeated it after him, holding their Right-Hands up, after the Manner of taking Oaths in Scotland. The Commiſſioners by the Authority of the States, repreſented to his Majeſty, " That the Clauſe of the Oath, " in relation to the rooting out of Hereticks, did " not import the deſtroying of Hereticks; and that " by the Law of Scotland, no Man was to be per- " ſecuted for his private Opinion; and even ob- " ſtinate and convicted Hereticks, were only to " be denounc'd Rebels or Outlaws, whereby their " moveable Eſtates are confiſcated." And when the King repeated that Clauſe in the Oath, he declar'd, He did not mean by theſe Words that he was under any Obligation to become a Perſecutor. To which the Commiſſioners anſwer'd, Neither the Meaning of the Oath, nor the Law of Scotland did import it. His Majeſty reply'd, I take the Oath in that Senſe, and he call'd the Commiſſioners and others there preſent, to be Witneſſes of his ſo doing.

How King William took it.

King William and Queen Mary, were proclaim'd in Scotland, April the 11th, the very Day on which they were crown'd in England; but the Settlement did not paſs the Scots Convention without ſome Oppoſition. The Biſhop of Edinburgh who ſat in it, after ſeveral other Biſhops had left them, repreſented that King James was charg'd with many unlawful Acts, of which he was not guilty, becauſe done by his Miniſters; and ſuppoſing him to be guilty, they were not competent Judges of his Miſdemeanors, as being illegally convened, and their beſt way was to deſire and favour his Majeſty to return to his Dominions, who, ſaid this wiſe Prelate, will out of Gratitude not fail to redreſs all Grievances. His Speech was anſwer'd, by one of the Members, with equal Boldneſs and Truth; and in the cloſe of it, referring to thoſe that deſir'd the return of the forefaulted Monarch, he ſaid, Biſhop of Edinburgh ſpeaks for King James. Anſwer'd.

" I beſeech you to conſider what Perſons they " were, who would inſtil this Poiſon in you. " Firſt, Thoſe, who poſtponing the Common " Good of the Nation, are wholly acted by Self- " Intereſt, conſidering that in a Government, where " Juſtice and Mercy equally flouriſh, Vertue and " Merit, not Villany will be rewarded. Secondly, " They who are ignorant of the Nature of Go- " vernment, and were never at the pains to in- " form themſelves what Meaſures the Law of " Nature and Nations have ſet to Men's Obedi- " ence; but are angry at every Thing that thwarts " their wild Notions, and will admit of nothing, " tho' never ſo reaſonable and convincing, if their " dull Capacities cannot reach it. The Third ſort, " are ſuch as have been Inſtrumental in enſlaving " their Country, and are afraid if they be call'd to " account, that they may be brought to ſuffer con- " dign Puniſhment; if ſuch cannot ſucceed in their " Deſign, they at leaſt hope to be over-look'd in " a general Confuſion, ſo they leave nothing un- " eſſay'd, that may tend to their own Safety; and " if Heaven fail them, they ſummon Hell to their " Aid. Not that Love to their Prince, but meer " Ambition and Intereſt, drew theſe Criminals to " ſuch Attempts; neither are they much to blame " if they are at ſuch pains to ſow Diviſions among " us;

A.D.1689 " us; but no Perſon of Wit and Judgment, nor " any good Man that is truly Proteſtant, and minds " the Good of his Country, will ſuffer himſelf to " be ſo groſſly impos'd on by ſuch Firebrands, who " would build their future imaginary Greatneſs " on the Ruins of our Religion, Laws and Li- " berties."

Epiſcopacy in a falling condition.

It was apparent that Prelacy was on its laſt Legs in Scotland; the Behaviour of the Biſhops and Epiſcopal Clergy gave general Diſguſt, as well in England, where it was known, as Scotland. When the Convention nam'd the Committee for ſettling the Government, they left the Prelates out of it, tho' they were wont to be nam'd with the Lords, Barons and Boroughs. Five of the Biſhops abſented themſelves at the opening of the Seſſion, as did alſo the Earls of Hume, Dumferling, Callendar, Berly, and Viſcount Stormont, ſome of King James's Inſtruments mention'd in the Speech above cited. The Convention ſent the Mace to require their Attendance; but being ſpirited by News of that King's landing in Ireland, they conceiv'd vain Hopes of his being reſtor'd to the Throne he had abdicated in England, and forfeited in Scotland; a Term that was much better lik'd, by the Friends to the Revolution, than abdicated was. The Scots Claim of Right was ſaid to be drawn up with a greater Regard to Liberty than the Engliſh Declaration of Right; for beſides that Article, Jacobite Peers.

Scots Claim of Right better drawn than the Engliſh.

That Prelates, and Superiority of any Office in the Church above Presbyters, is, and has been a great and inſupportable Burden to this Nation, and contrary to the Inclinations of the Generality of the the People, ever ſince the Reformation, they having reform'd Popery by Presbytery, and therefore ought to be aboliſh'd;

There were theſe Articles following, which were not in the Engliſh Declaration;

" That no Papiſt can be King or Queen of the " Realm, nor bear any Office therein.

" That no Proteſtant Succeſſor can exerciſe the " regal Power till they take the Coronation Oath.

" That it is the Right and Privilege of the Sub- " ject to proteſt, for Remedy of Law, to the King " and Parliament, againſt Sentences pronounced by " the Courts of Juſtice, and to petition the King, " and that all Proſecutions and Impriſonments for " ſuch Petitioning are, and were contrary to Law, " &c."

To this let me add the Vote of the Scots, which, tho' it did not paſs into an Act, does however ſhew the Senſe of that Nation, who complain'd that it miſcarry'd, out of an Apprehenſion, that ſuch an Act at Edinburgh might be drawn into Precedent at Weſtminſter. The Vote was,

" The King and Queen's Majeſties, conſidering " that the Eſtates of this Kingdom have, by their " Votes, declared their Senſe and Opinion, that " ſuch as have, in the former evil Government, " been grievous to the Nation, or have ſhew'd Diſ- " affection to the happy Change, by the Bleſſing of " God now brought about, or have been Retarders " and Obſtructers of the good Deſigns of the ſaid " Eſtates in their Meeting, are not fit to be em- " ploy'd in the Management of the Affairs of this " Kingdom; do, with the Advice and Conſent of " the Eſtates of Parliament now aſſembled, ſtatute " and ordain, that no Perſons of whatſoever Rank " or Degree, who in the former evil Government " have been grievous to the Nation, by acting in " the Encroachments mention'd in the Articles of " the Claim of Right, which are declar'd to be con- " trary to Law, or who have ſhew'd Diſaffection " to the happy Change, by the Bleſſing of God now " brought about, by acting in oppoſition thereunto, " &c. be allow'd to poſſeſs, or be admitted in- " to any publick Truſt, Place, or Employment, " &c." Happy had it been, if this Vote had paſs'd into an Act in both Kingdoms; and happy will it be for them, if the Senſe of the Scots Convention be the Rule of the future Government, and no Truſt or Emolument be given to thoſe who have at any time been in an Intereſt oppoſite to that of the Publick.

Scots Vote againſt employing the late King's ill Agents.

A.D.1689

While the States of Scotland were proceeding in this wiſe and regular manner, the Duke of Gordon ſtill held out the Caſtle of Edinburgh, and Dundee encreas'd in Strength, notwithſtanding the Marquiſs of Athol had rais'd his Servants and Vaſſals to oppoſe him, in conjunction with the Forces of the State; who had ſeveral Skirmiſhes with Dundee's Men, in one of which, Dundee being worſted, he betook himſelf to the Hills, to which he retreated always, when he was like to be beaten and broken. It will not be improper to look a little back into the Hiſtory of this Dundee, who was the Subject of the Panegyricks of the Enemies to the Revolution, both in England and Scotland. Dryden wrote Verſes upon him, and their ſmaller Poets wrote Ballads, which are ſtill ſung by Sacheverel's Rabble. The Author of the Memoirs of Scotland writes thus;

P. 249. Dundee's vile Character.

" Graham of Claverhouſe, the ſame who was af- " terwards Viſcount Dundee, was a moſt furious " Perſecutor of the Kirk-Men. It was his Rage, " in falling upon one of their Field-meetings, where " he met with a Repulſe, which occaſion'd the " Riſing at Bothwel. He is ſaid to have kill'd " above 100 Men in this kind of cold-blood " Cruelty, making his Buſineſs to follow the poor " perſecuted Chriſtians thro' the whole Country, at " the head of a Crew of Savages, Highlanders, and " Dragoons. His Sport was Murther, and his Di- " verſion to have innocent Men out of their " Houſes, and then give them to his Followers to " be maſſacred. His Companion in this Work was " Colonel James Douglas, ſince call'd Lieutenant- " General Douglas, &c." And it muſt be own'd to be the greateſt Blemiſh of the Revolution, that this Douglas and Kirk, and other ſuch ſanguinary Soldiers, were employ'd and prefer'd afterwards.

The Duke of Gordon having ſpent moſt of his Ammunition, and the Troops that inveſted the Caſtle, having by their Fire deſtroy'd his Houſe there, and made great Breaches in the Walls, he deſir'd to capitulate; and June 13th, deliver'd up that important Fortreſs to Sir John Lanier, ſurrendring himſelf and Garriſon entirely to King William's Diſcretion, on condition of having their Lives, Liberties, and Fortunes ſav'd; an odd way of ſurrendring at Diſcretion, as Biſhop Kennet terms it.

Duke of Gordon ſurrenders Edinburgh-Caſtle.

The Scots Convention being to be turn'd into a Parliament, King William made Duke Hamilton Commiſſioner; and in his Inſtructions, ſign'd May 31, it is ſaid, You are to paſs an Act for turning the meeting of Eſtates into a Parliament.

You are to paſs an Act for recognizing our and the Queen's Royal Authority, &c.

You are to paſs an Act, eſtabliſhing that Church-Government, which is moſt agreeable to the Inclination of the People, reſcinding the Act of Parliament 1669, and all other Acts inconſiſtent therewith.

Here we may obſerve, that the Act which ſuppreſs'd Presbytery, was but twenty Years old; and that the Phraſe, agreeable to the Inclination of the People, came from England: which I take notice of, becauſe the vile Author of the Memoirs ſaid to be Lockhart's, but in truth the villainous Work of a Nonjuring Prieſt, who was four or five times within an Inch of the Gallows, ſays, the Convention did not pretend that Presbytery was agreeable to the Word of God, but ſuited to the Inclination of the People. And it is no wonder they did not ſet forth in the Act for aboliſhing Epiſcopacy, that it was the Goſpel-Inſtitution; it was never a Queſtion in Scotland, but among Papiſts and their Abettors, whom the Convention did not think worth further Satisfaction. In the Memoirs of Scotland, we read thus of that Act:

Lockhart's Memoirs written by a Nonjuring Prieſt.

A.D. 1689 Episcopacy aboliſh'd.

" The firſt Act of Parliament (after that for " turning the Convention into a Parliament, and ano- " ther to recognize the King's Authority) was the " Act for aboliſhing Epiſcopacy. This makes it abun- " dantly clear, that the general Bent and Inclination " of the People was for Presbytery, and that Epiſ- " copacy was their Averſion; for that the very firſt " Act, after conſtituting the Civil Government, " was this of aboliſhing the Eccleſiaſtick Govern- " ment.

" I ſay the firſt, becauſe as there were but two " Acts which paſs'd before it, one for turning the " Meeting into a Parliament, the other for recogni- " zing the King's Authority; 'tis evident, without theſe " they could not have acted at all, and therefore " the Act for aboliſhing Prelacy may be ſaid to be " the firſt Act they made, after their Power of acting " was confirm'd."

The Act for aboliſhing Epiſcopacy paſs'd the 22d of July, to the general Joy of the Scots Nation; for nothing can be more untrue, than the Suggeſtion of their Prelates, that the Majority was for Biſhops. I have more than once heard it aſſerted by ſome of them, particularly one of the Name and Kin of that Arch-Traytor Ferguſon; whoſe Character would have made me ſuſpect it, if I had not known it to be falſe by this fair State of the Caſe, which I had lately read in the Memoirs.

P. 299.

" It being left to the Nation by the Prince of " Orange, to ſettle Religion in ſuch manner as was " moſt deſir'd by the People, there was not a Mouth " open to give a Vote for Epiſcopacy." Nor was it ſo much as nam'd to King William as a Queſtion, whether the Inclination of the People was for Episcopacy or Presbytery; inſomuch, that his Majeſty was often heard to ſay, I much wonder what is become of the Epiſcopal Party, ſeeing no Man at the Revolution ſo much as nam'd the Word Epiſcopacy to me; " nor had the Party any one to ſpeak for them, " or one Word to ſpeak for themſelves." The Author proceeds thus:

Epiſcopacy not nam'd to King William.

" How they could, ſince that, at the time of the " Schiſm Bill and Occaſional Bill, and the condemn'd " Doctor in England, have the face to ſay, eſpecially " as they often did to the late Queen, that they " were ſuperior in number to the Presbyterians, and " that if the People of Scotland were left free to " vote, they would carry it for Epiſcopacy; I ſay, " how they could ſay thus, would be ſtrange to any " that did not know how that Party have, on all oc- " caſions, made ſuch things their Refuge, and the " Refuge of their Hierarchy. And the Author of " theſe Memoirs is thankful, that even at the time " they did ſo, he had the Honour, in behalf of the " Church of Scotland, to let her late Majeſty know " how untrue that Suggeſtion was, and to convince " her Miniſters how groſſly theſe Men endeavour'd " to impoſe upon England in that Caſe, as they did " at the ſame time in their Boaſt of the People's re- " ceiving the Engliſh Service-Book with Willingneſs " in Scotland; which her Majeſty was afterwards " fully ſatisfied was a Cheat, and done only to amuſe " the Engliſh Clergy, and get Money out of them."

Scots Epiſcopalians deceive Q. Anne.

In the mean time, Dundee having gather'd all his Strength together, and regimented his Men under Whacup and Canon, and other Officers ſent him by King James from Ireland, with 300 of his beſt Soldiers, came into the Low-lands with 6000 Foot and 100 Horſe, to meet Major-General Mackay, who with Sir Thomas Levingſton, Colonel of Dragoons, Colonel Ramſey, Colonel Balfour, the Lord Strathnaver, the Lairds Grant, and Colonel Whitoſch were advancing againſt him with 4000 Foot and 200 Horſe and Dragoons. The two ſmall Armies engag'd the 16th of July, two Miles on this ſide the Blair of Athol. The Fight was very obſtinate, and laſted from five in the Afternoon till Night. When Mackay made his Retreat, and loſt the Field by the Deſertion of the Athol Men. He got in ſome Diſorder with the Remains of his Forces to Sterling, where he ſtaid for Recruits. But Dundee being kill'd in the Engagement, the Rebels had little Reaſon to boaſt of their Victory; for he was the Life of their Party, and the Reſiſtance they made afterwards was very inconſiderable, tho' Colonel Canon put himſelf at their Head, and had ſome Skirmiſhes with the Scots Forces, in which his Men were worſted, particularly at St. John's Town, where the Earl of Angus's ſingle Regiment, under the Command of Lieutenant-Colonel Cleeland, gave ſo entire a Defeat to the Rebels, near 4000 in number, that they never after could appear in any conſiderable Body; and Canon finding he could do no good amongſt them, retir'd into Ireland, from whence King James ſome time before had ſent two Frigats laden with Clothes, Arms, and Ammunition on board, of which were Colonel Buchan and Whacup, and about 40 Commiſſion Officers, who all got ſafe into the Iſle of Mull, and the Rebels choſe Sir Hugh Cameron to be their Leader after Colonel Canon left them. A.D. 1689 Reſiſts Mackay.

It ſhould have been ſaid, that King William ſent a Body of Troops over to Holland, as well Engliſh as Dutch, to the Aſſiſtance of the States. The Engliſh were commanded by the Earl of Marlborough; but nothing of moment happen'd in the Netherlands, excepting the Diſgrace of the French in their Attempt upon the Town of Walcourt, where they were beaten off with the loſs of 2000 Men, and part of their Artillery. In this Action, Colonel Hodges and Colonel Hales, Engliſh Officers, ſignaliz'd themſelves, and Colonel Grimes was kill'd, Auguſt 15. Earl of Marlborough commands in Flanders.

The Parliament of England, which was to have ſate in September, being adjourn'd to the 19th of October, King William went to the Races at Newmarket; and being in the Neighbourhood of Cambridge, Dr. Covel Vice-Chancellor of that Univerſity, with the Heads of the Colleges, and other principal Members waited on his Majeſty, being introdue'd by the Duke of Somerſet their Chancellor. The Doctor made a Speech in a quite different ſtrain from that of Dr. Gower, his Predeceſſor, to King Charles II. The latter charg'd the Puritans with a Deſign to plunder the Univerſities; but Dr. Covel turn'd the edge of his Reflections againſt K. James and his Papiſts. He congratulated the glorious Succeſſes the King had been bleſt with in his Endeavours to relieve the Church and State from the imminent Dangers that had threatned both, which were more particularly level'd againſt the Univerſities, &c. His Majeſty was pleas'd to anſwer, As God has bleſſed me in the Undertaking, ſo I will faithfully diſcharge my Truſt, in preſerving the Church of England, and giving all Protection and Favour to the Univerſities. The Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge's Speech to the King.

About the ſame time died Dr. Lake Biſhop of Chicheſter, who declar'd on his Death-Bed for the Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance and Paſſive-Obedience, which was no manner of Argument for its being true; a weak Head ſeldom grows ſtronger by Sickneſs, nor does the Approach of Death generally enlarge the Mind, and clear it of Doubts and Scruples. This good Biſhop, who had been impriſon'd for reſiſting King James's Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, would needs have his own Declaration againſt Revolution-Principles, formally ſign'd and deliver'd by him in the Preſence of Dr. Green the Pariſh Miniſter, Dr. Hicks Dean of Worceſter, whoſe Brother Mr. Hicks, the Diſſenting Miniſter, was hang'd at Glaſtenbury in Somerſetſhire, in the late K. James's time; Mr. Jenkin his Chaplain, Mr. Powel his Secretary, and Mr. Wilſon his Amanuenſis, who all communicated with him. And this ſeem'd to lay the Foundation for that Schiſm in the Church, which broke out afterwards, and ſtill ſubſiſts. This Biſhop Lake was under Suſpenſion for not taking the Oaths to their Majeſties, and would have been depriv'd when the Time for taking them expir'd. Bishops made by King William.

Bishops suspended

13th of October, Dr. Simon Patrick, Dean of Peterborough, was consecrated Bishop of Chichester; Dr. Edward Stillingfleet, Dean of St. Paul's, Bishop of Worcester; Dr. Gilbert Ironside, late Warden of Wadham-College, Oxon, Bishop of Bristol; were at the same time consecrated in Fulham Chapel by the Bishops of London, St. Asaph, and Rochester. Now also William, Archbishop of Canterbury; Robert, Bishop of Glouceſter; Francis, Bishop of Ely; Thomas, Bishop of Peterborough; were suspended ab Officio, pursuant to the Act of Parliament, enjoining the abovemention'd Oaths to be taken in a certain Time, under Penalty of Deprivation. Many of the Church of England follow'd their Example; and it would be uncharitable to believe every one of them were guided by the Passions of Hope and Fear, and none of them by Conscience. Certainly there were many well-meaning Men among them, who at first deny'd to give King William and Queen Mary a Test of the Allegiance they ow'd them, thinking themselves under the Obligation of a prior Oath to the abdicated King; but most of these added afterwards Guilt to their Weakness, and by private Preaching and Praying, if not Caballing and Plotting against their rightful and lawful Sovereigns, fell into Schism, the very Sin which they had been always charging the Nonconformists with, in Decrees, Addresses, Sermons and Invectives.

I must confess, I thought the worse of the Nonjuring Bishops Conduct on this occasion, by that of the most devotional of them, Dr. Thomas Ken Bishop of Bath and Wells, who was at Wells when the Act for the new Oaths took place; and several of his Clergy waited on him to have his Advice how they should behave in that Affair: To whom he was pleas'd to say, in Words to this effect, That he conceiv'd they might safely take the Oaths to King William and Queen Mary, as he intended to do himself as soon as he came to London. Among these Clergymen was Mr. Crofts, Rector of Hutton in that Diocese, who told me this several times; and that when he, and most of his Brethren, had taken the Oaths, pursuant to their Bishop's Advice, they were under great Concern at his refusing them; and enquiring into the Reason of it, he was inform'd, that Bishop Ken, at his coming up to Town, was desir'd to attend Archbishop Sancroft at Lambeth, where were then several other Bishops and Clergy, who, after debating the Matter, resolv'd not to take the Oaths; and Dr. Ken was by their Reasons determin'd also in the Negative: tho' it is believ'd, that the News of King James's having a great Army of French and Irish Papists in Ireland, and threatning to invade England, was the most weighty of those Reasons.

Bishop Ken intends to take the Oaths.

On the 19th of October, the Parliament met, and his Majesty made this gracious Speech to them; which I insert at large, because it was his own making, and not the Work of his Council.

King William makes his Speech to the Parliament himself.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" THO' the last Sitting continued so long, " that perhaps it might have been more a- " greeable to you, in relation to your private Con- " cerns, not to have met again so soon; yet the " Interest of the Publick lays an indispensable Obli- " gation upon me to call you together at this time.

" In your last Meeting, you gave me so many Tes- " timonies of your Affection, as well as Confidence " in me, that I do not at all question, but in this I " shall receive fresh Proofs of both.

" I esteem it one of the greatest Misfortunes can " befall me, that in the Beginning of my Reign, I " am forc'd to ask such large Supplies; tho' I have " this Satisfaction, that they are desir'd for no other " Purposes, but the carrying on those Wars, into " which I enter'd with your Advice, and Assurance " of your Assistance. Nor can I doubt of the Blessing " of God upon an Undertaking, wherein I did not " engage out of a vain Ambition, but from the Ne- " cessity of opposing those, who have so visibly dis- " cover'd their Designs of destroying our Religion " and Liberties.

A.D.1689

" It is well known how far I have expos'd myself " to rescue this Nation from the Dangers that " threaten'd, not only your Liberty, but the Pro- " testant Religion in general, of which the Church " of England is one of the greatest Supports, and " for the Defence whereof, I am ready again to " venture my Life.

King William's Care of the Church.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" That which I have to ask of you at present, is, " that what you think fit to give towards the Charges " of the War for the next Year, may be done with- " out Delay: And there is one Reason, which more " particularly obliges me to press you to a speedy " Determination in this Matter, because this next " Month there is appointed, at the Hague, a Gene- " ral Meeting, of all the Princes and States con- " cern'd in this War against France, in order to con- " cert Measures for the next Campaign. And till " I know your Intentions, I shall not only be un- " certain myself, what Resolutions to take, but our " Allies will be under the same Doubts, unless they " see me supported by your Assistance. Besides, " if I know not in time what you will do, I cannot " make such Provisions as will be requisite, but shall " be expos'd to the same Inconveniences, which " were the Cause that the Preparations for this were " neither so effectual nor expeditious as was neces- " sary: The Charge will also be considerably les- " sen'd, by giving time to provide Things in their " proper Season, and without Confusion.

" I have no other Aim in this, but to be in a " Condition to attack our Enemies in so vigorous " a manner, as by the Help of God, in a little time " may bring us to a lasting and honourable Peace, " by which my Subjects may be freed from the ex- " traordinary Expences of a lingering War; and " that I can have no greater Satisfaction, than in " contributing to their Ease, I hope I have already " given Proof.

" That you may be satisfy'd how the Money has " been laid out, which you have already given, I " have directed the Accounts to be laid before you, " whenever you think fit to call for them.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I have one thing more to recommend to you, " which is, the Dispatch of a Bill of Indemnity; " that the Minds of my good Subjects being quieted, " we may all unanimously concur to promote the " Welfare and Honour of the Kingdom."

The Parliament, after a short Prorogation, met the 23d of October, when his Majesty only reminded them of his Speech, and desir'd them again to be speedy in their Resolutions. It is remarkable, that this Speech, which met with universal Applause, was, as we have observ'd, compos'd by the King himself, who on the 18th of October, produc'd it to the Council, written with his own Hand in French, at which time he was pleas'd to say,

I know most of my Predecessors were us'd to commit the drawing of such SPEECHES to their Ministers, who generally had their private Aims and Interests in view; to prevent which, I have thought fit to write it myself in French, because I am not so great a Master of the English Tongue: Therefore I desire you to look it over, and change what you find amiss, that it may be translated into English.

The Privy-Council applauded it highly, only the Earl of Monmouth objected to that Expression, L'Eglise Anglicane étoit le principal Apuy de la Religion Protestant; saying, it did not sound so well in English, The Anglican Church is the principal Support of the Protestant Religion. Whether his Lordship's Objection refer'd to the Anglican Church, or the Principal Support, is not known; but 'tis well known,

A.D. 1689 it was alter'd to The Church of England is one of the greateſt Supports of the Proteſtant Religion; which is a more meek Expreſſion than what is us'd in like Caſes by the rigid Clergy, who always leave out one of, and ſay the greateſt Bulwark; that is, greater than all the Proteſtants all over the Empire of Germany; the Kingdoms of Sweden, Denmark and Pruſſia, Hungary and Poland; than all the Proteſtants in the United Provinces, Swiſſerland, &c. In this Sentiment Sir Thomas Clarges objected to the Expreſſion, Church of England, in the Houſe of Commons, for fear it ſhould be underſtood to make the Diſſenters a part of the Bulwark, and therefore he would have had, as by Law eſtabliſh'd added to it.

Sir Thomas Clarges's notable Objection to it.

Both Houſes return'd his Majeſty Thanks for his Speech, and the Commons reſolv'd to ſupport him, in reducing Ireland, and in joining with his Allies in a vigorous Proſecution of the War againſt France.

The Marquiſs of Halifax having declar'd in Council, That for ſeveral Reaſons, which he forbore to mention, he muſt deſire to be excus'd from doing the Office of Speaker in the Houſe of Lords, it was readily granted him; and Sir Robert Atkins, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, ſupply'd his Place.

Before the Meeting of the Parliament, there was a general Expectation that ſomething would be then done towards a Union between the Church of England and the Diſſenters; and had it been left entirely to them, there probably had been ſuch a Union. But when there was a Talk of calling a Convocation in order to it, I remember well, that all who ſincerely deſir'd, began to deſpair of its ſucceeding. Dr. Nichols tells us, this Convocation was call'd by the Perſuaſion of Dr. Tillotſon, afterwards Archbiſhop of Canterbury; but the Reaſon he gives for it, cou'd be none to a Prince of King William's Diſcernment, Becauſe the Papiſts caſt a Jeſt upon the Reformation, as being owing to a Parliamentary Authority; as if an Eſtabliſhment founded on the Conſtitution, was not the moſt ſolid that could be. I rather think Dr. Tillotſon, one of the greateſt Men of his Age, contented himſelf, as Dr. Nichols ſays afterwards, with adviſing the King by his Letters-Patents to authorize a ſelect Number of learned Divines to meet together, and debate and conſult about the propereſt Methods of healing the Wounds of the Church, and fixing a durable Peace; that ſo what they had agreed upon, might have Parliamentary Sanction. All which ſeems to be right, and worthy the Wiſdom of that illuſtrious Prelate. But there was little Reaſon to hope, that the whole Body of the Clergy, collected in Convocation, who, three or four Years before, were every where, a few Places only excepted, anathematizing and perſecuting the Nonconformiſts, wou'd ſo ſoon let that Storm ſubſide into a Calm; and not only be at Peace, but in Communion with thoſe whom till then they had treated as Lunaticks and Schiſmaticks. One cannot eaſily conceive, that Archbiſhop Tillotſon ſhould perſuade King William to accompliſh an Union he had ſo much at heart, by a Decree of thoſe Men, who had ſign'd that at Oxford ſix Years before. Be that as it will, the King iſſu'd out ſuch a Commiſſion as is above ſpoken of, to ſeveral learned Divines of Merit, equal to their great Work, to prepare Matters proper to be debated eſpecially in reference to an intended Comprehenſion. The Commiſſioners were

All whom were afterwards Biſhops, except Aldrich, Jane, Beaumont, Mountague, Goodman, Batteley, Alſton, and Scot. The latter had doubtleſs been promoted to the ſame Dignity, had he not been taken off by Death three or four Years after. 'Tis ſaid in the Athenæ Oxonienſes, he might ſoon have been a Biſhop, had it not been from ſome Scruples; intimating, according to the Malignity of that Writer, he had ſome Doubts as to the Legality of King William's Title; and yet the very line before he told us, he accepted of a Canonſhip at Windſor in the room of Dr. Fitzwilliams, outed for refuſing the Oaths.

We ſhall ſee in a Page or two, what theſe Commiſſioners did. In the mean time, the Parliament proceeded in their Buſineſs to the great liking of the People in general, who would however have lik'd it much better, if they had accompliſh'd what they began.

They reſolv'd to impeach Henry Mordaunt Earl of Peterborough, James Cecil Earl of Salisbury, Sir Edward Hales, and Obadiah Walker, of High-Treaſon, for being perverted to Popery contrary to Law. They recommitted the Earl of Caſtlemain to the Tower for the ſame Reaſon. They reſolv'd, that a Bill be brought in for the Forfeiture of the Eſtate and Honour of the late Lord Jefferies; and it was recommended to Colonel Tipping to take care of it. If it had been ſaid, after Jefferies's bloody Weſtern Campaign, that a Word would have been ſpoken in a Parliament of Engliſhmen in favour of his Honour and his Eſtate, it would not have been credible; but ſo it was, the ſame Perſons who were for King James, were for Jefferies; and his Eſtate and Honour deſcended to his Son, who held both but a few Years, and there's nothing remaining of him but the Stench of his Character, which is enough to defile all Hiſtory.

Jefferies to forfeit Honour and Eſtate.

For a farther Terror to all the late Inſtruments of Popery and arbitrary Power, the Houſe of Commons agreed, that the pecuniary Penalties incurr'd by all Privy-Counſellors, Lords-Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, Militia-Officers, Juſtices of the Peace, and by any Perſons who had accepted and exercis'd any Office, or Place of Profit, either military or civil, (other than ſuch as are now Officers in their Majeſties Army or Fleet) contrary to the Laws againſt Popiſh Recuſants, ſhould be ſpeedily levied and apply'd to the Publick Service.

They appointed a Committee to examine, Who were the Adviſers and Proſecutors of the Murders of the Lord Ruſſel, Colonel Sidney, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Mr. Corniſh, and others. It did not ſeem very difficult to find out ſome of the Offenders, eſpecially thoſe whoſe Names can never be enough diſtinguiſh'd by the Marks they deſerve.

Charles Feltham.

Aldermen, Sheriffs, and Common Council-Men of London; who, after the Revolution, were ſo far from being puniſh'd as they deſerv'd, that ſome of them were made Aldermen, as Bedingfield, Withers and Floyer, and one of them choſen to repreſent the City, as Pritchard. The eleven Judges who declar'd for the diſpenſing Power, which was High-Treaſon in the Opinion of good Lawyers, were alive, and might eaſily have been come at; Sir Thomas Jenner, as worthleſs a one as ever diſgrac'd a Court of Juſtice, was in Cuſtody, and cou'd have been prov'd to have been a main Inſtrument in the ſeizing the City Charter, by a Thouſand Witneſſes. But the Proſecution of the Matter languiſh'd very ſoon, and at laſt ſicken'd and died. And inſtead of looking back on the real Dangers the Nation had been deliver'd from, to guard againſt running into the like, by truſting ſuch wicked and unworthy Men in Publick Offices; a new Danger was thrown in their way, to blind their Underſtandings, and pervert their Wills. And all theſe Criminals ſheltring themſelves under the Name of Church, found means to render all Attempts for their Puniſhment in effectual, as well in England, as in Scotland; where Engliſh Counſels, or rather the Counſels of the Engliſh, had in this Caſe too much Influence. The Well-affected to our Conſtitution, have ſuffer'd ſo much by this fatal Forbearance with its Enemies in more Junctures than that we are treating of, that this Digreſſion cannot be thought needleſs or tedious. Some few Men who had got into Employment, and behav'd in it as might have been expected, from thoſe that had fallen in chearfully with all the ill Meaſures in King James's Time, were made Examples; Sir John Parſons, Alderman Sturt, and Mr. Nicholas Fenn, Victuallers of the Fleet, were order'd into Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms, to anſwer Complaints againſt them; and were all turn'd out, to make room for Men of more Worth and Honour, as Thomas Papillon Eſq; Simon Maine Eſq; John Agar Eſq; Humphrey Ayles Eſq; and James Howe Eſq; the latter Brother to Mr. Howe the eminent Presbyterian Miniſter.

A.D. 168

Mr. Walker, Colonel and Miniſter in Londonderry, had given Information, that the Miſcarriages in Ireland, were owing chiefly to the Neglect of Mr. Shales, Purveyor-General to the Army, by whoſe Default, Duke Schomberg had waited for Artillery, Horſes and Carriages above a Month; that the Soldiers had all along wanted Bread, the Horſes, Shoes and Provender, and the Surgeons proper Medicines for the Sick. Upon which the Parliament addreſs'd the King, that the ſaid Shales be forth with taken into Cuſtody, and all his Acconnts, Papers and Stores ſecur'd. His Majeſty's Anſwer was reported the next Day, Nov. 20. by Major Wildman, That he had ſome time ſince taken Order therein, being inform'd of Capt. Shales's Miſdemeanors in his Employment, and had written to the Duke of Schomberg for that Purpoſe; and he verily believ'd, what was deſir'd was already effectually done, tho' the Wind being contrary he had not yet receiv'd any Account of it from Ireland. The Duke put him under Arreſt, and there was an end of it. For it is too remarkable, that whatever Perſon was in Employment, by Recommendation of thoſe who had been ill Inſtruments in the late Reigns, and behav'd in it as might have been expected from ſuch Recommendation; as often as they were call'd to Account, they were ſcreen'd by their Patrons, and the Party that befriended them within Doors and without. Among whom was, and will always be found, the Member who mov'd for an Addreſs to apprehend Lieutenant-General Ludlow, one of King Charles Iſt's Judges, who had not been long in England, before Sir Edward Seymour heard of it, and immediately took the Alarm. For the Houſe he liv'd in at Maiden-Bradley in Wiltſhire, and the Eſtate he liv'd upon there, was General Ludlow's, who was there born; and came to Seymour by a Grant, which among all the Reſumptions he pleaded for ſo furiouſly in Parliament, was never once mentioned. Tho' that General's coming to England, while there was an Act of Attainder in force againſt him, was an unadvis'd Action, and he cou'd not reaſonably expect that ſuch a Statute wou'd in any wiſe be diſpens'd with; yet Sir Edward Seymour's buſying himſelf to have him ſeiz'd and ſent to Tyburn, was generally thought indecent, if not worſe: inſomuch that in almoſt every Account that was then given of this Addreſs, and the Man that mov'd for it, 'twas ſaid, He had a great deal of Reaſon to do it, as well for Ludlow's Crime, as his Eſtate. The leaſt Delicacy in Honour or Juſtice

A falſe Step.

*A.D.*1689 Juſtice would have oblig'd him to aſſign that Motion to ſome other Member: but this Knight, was not contented with making the Motion for an Addreſs, but got himſelf appointed to be the Perſon who was to deliver it to the King; which he did Nov. 7th. It was taken Notice of, that the Proclamation iſſu'd in purſuance of that Addreſs, was not publiſh'd till a Week after; when, as Biſhop Kennet writes, it was known Ludlow was ſafe in Holland; whither he went with the Dutch Ambaſſadors, Meſſieurs N. Witſen, Odycke, Van Cittars, and De Weede. From Holland, General Ludlow return'd to his Retirement at Vevay, a ſmall Town in the Country of Vauſe in Swiſſerland; where he liv'd to a great Age, 78; and left behind him thoſe Memoirs, which, as the Biſhop adds, apparently ſhew him to be one of the pure Republicans, and as much an Enemy to Cromwell, as to the King, upon whom he ſat in Judgment.

King William's great Condeſcenſion.

On Nov. 30. Mr. Comptroller Wharton deliver'd a Meſſage from the King to the Houſe of Commons in Writing, importing his Deſire that they wou'd recommend Perſons to him, for his Commiſſion [to take Care of the Proviſions and Stores in Ireland; and others to take an Account of the Number and Condition of the Army there. A Condeſcenſion which never King of England before his Majeſty, had voluntarily made to his Parliament; who took it as became them, and humbly left both to his Majeſty's great Wiſdom. But to their Addreſs, to know who recommended Shales, and adviſ'd his being employ'd; Mr. Dolben reported the King's Anſwer, 'Tis impoſſible for me to give an Anſwer to this Queſtion. The Speaker attending his Majeſty at the Banquetting-Houſe, with the Thanks of the Commons for his moſt gracious Meſſage by Mr. Comptroller, the King was pleas'd to ſay, Gentlemen, I ſhall take all the Care that may be, to carry on the War in Ireland with Vigour, and to employ ſuch Perſons as may be moſt proper for the Service; and I doubt not but that I ſhall have the aſſiſtance of the HOUSE OF COMMONS, to carry it on in ſuch a Manner, as may be according to your Deſires and my Intentions. This did not hinder an Addreſs, Dec. 14. againſt Miſmanagement in the Affairs of both Army and Fleet; and it is not to be doubted but his Majeſty did all that cou'd be done by him, to prevent Another Ill Step.

Occaſions of future Complaint: yet the ſame Perſons remaining ſtill about him, the ſame Counſels prevail'd, and his good Intentions had not the Effect, which he and his Friends hop'd for from them.

On the 16th of Dec. his Majeſty gave the Royal Aſſent to the Two Shillings in the Pound Land-Tax, and to an Act, Declaring the Rights of the Subject, and ſettling the Succeſſion of the Crown. There was this memorable Clauſe in the latter, That the Kings and Queens of England, ſhould be oblig'd at their coming to the Crown, to take the Teſt in the firſt Parliament, that ſhould be call'd at the beginning of their Reign; and that if any King or Queen of ENGLAND, ſhou'd embrace the Romiſh

Act againſt the King of England's marrying a Papiſt.

Religion, or marry with a Roman Catholick Prince or Princeſs, their Subjects ſhou'd be abſolv'd of their Allegiance; and that the Crown and Government of theſe Realms, ſhould from Time to Time deſcend to, and be enjoy'd by ſuch Perſon, being PROTESTANTS, as ſhould have inherited the ſame in Caſe the ſaid Perſons ſo reconcil'd to the Church of Rome, or marrying a Papiſt, as aforeſaid, was naturally dead. Mr. Powle, the Speaker, made a Speech to the King, when theſe Bills were preſented to him; the Purport of it was, that the Parliament had given Two Millions, which they deſired him to accept graciouſly, and to give Life to the Bill of Rights by the Royal Aſſent.

Lord Griffin prevaricates with the Houſe of Peers.

About a fortnight before King James abſconded, he made Edward Griffin Eſq; Treaſurer of his Chamber, a Lord; and this Title giving him a *A.D.*168 Claim to a Seat in the Houſe of Peers, their Lordſhips requir'd his Attendance; but he ſtill refuſing to appear, they preſented an Addreſs to the King, to iſſue out his Royal Proclamation of Summons to him, to ſurrender himſelf to the Houſe of Lords, or to one of the Secretaries of State. He obey'd this Summons, ſurrender'd himſelf to the Earl of Nottingham, and appearing before the Houſe of Peers, the Speaker told him, He knew what he had to do before his ſitting in that Houſe. The Lord Griffin deſired Time to conſider of taking the Oaths, he not being prepar'd for it, which was granted; and ſoon after a Packet was diſcover'd, which ſhew'd that another Houſe was fitter for him than that of the Peers. He had caus'd a large Pewter Bottle to be made, with a double Bottom, and order'd his Cook at an unſeaſonable Time of the Night to get the falſe Bottom ſodder'd. The Pewterer finding a Packet between the two Bottoms of the Bottle, began to ſuſpect ſomething; and the Cook not giving him a ſatisfactory Anſwer about its Contents, he made bold to open it. The Superſcription of ſeveral Letters, directed to King James, the Duke of Berwick, &c. juſtify'd the Pewterer's Suſpicion, who immediately laid hold on the Cook, and carry'd him to one of the Secretraries of State. But he was gone to Bed, and his Servants refuſing to admit the Pewterer to their Maſter's Preſence; the Lord Griffin, who by this time began to apprehend what had befal'n his Meſſenger, took this Opportunity to make his Eſcape. Beſides the Letters, there were in the Packet an Account of ſome Private Reſolutions, and an exact Liſt of all the Land and Sea-Forces of England. Upon this my Lord Griffin's Houſe and Papers were ſearch'd, his Lady committed to the Tower, and the Cuſtom-houſe Officers order'd to ſtop all unknown Perſons; ſeveral others were taken up on Suſpicion, and the Lord Griffin meeting with great difficulty in his Attempt to get out of the Kingdom, at laſt ſurrender'd himſelf to the Earl of Shrewsbury, Secretary of State, by whom after Examination he was committed to the Cuſtody of a Meſſenger, and afterwards ſent to the Tower. The Commons appointed a Committee, to enquire how the Lord Griffin came to know a Reſolution, which the King had communicated to four Perſons only. The Lords examin'd the Papers, intercepted in the Lord Griffin's Pewter Bottle: And becauſe ſome few Days before, it had been Reſolv'd, That Col. Algernon Sidney was unjuſtly condemn'd, nothing but Writings being found in his Cloſet, having been produc'd againſt him; the Earl of Rocheſter, ſays Biſhop Kennet, argu'd from a Parity of Reaſon in favour of the Lord Griffin; who after ſeveral warm Debates, was ſet at liberty upon Bail. One cannot fail of gueſſing Right, of what Party the Members were, who debated for him: But as to the pretended Parity of Reaſon, was Col. Sidney's keeping a Writing in his Cloſet, a Writing in Anſwer to a Libel againſt the Conſtitution of England; the very ſame Thing with writing Treaſonable Letters, and betraying the Counſels of the King, to his and the Nation's Enemies? And becauſe Col. Sidney was murder'd illegally, therefore muſt not Lord Griffin be puniſh'd at all? We ſhall find a great deal of ſuch ſort of Reaſoning, from the diſaffected in King William's Reign. At the ſame time the late Lord Preſton's Caſe was taken into Conſideration; he was properly only Sir Richard Graham in England, but a Viſcount in Scotland, and had been much in the good Graces of the two Popiſh Brethren, King Charles and King James II. The latter made him a Baron of England, Jan. 21. by a Patent dated in the French King's Palace at Verſailles, and their Lordſhips voted him guilty of High-Treaſon. The Lord Preſton

*A.D.*1689 urg'd that his Patent being dated one Day before the Throne was voted Vacant, it was valid: But the Vacancy being ſuppos'd to begin from the Moment King James left the Kingdom, that Pretence of his was Invalid. However the Judges thought the Lord Preſton, was only Guilty of a High Miſdemeanor, for which he begg'd Pardon, in a Petition rejected by the Lords, becauſe he ſign'd it as Viſcount Preſton, without adding Scotland; which he mended in another Petition; and it being alledg'd in his behalf, that he accepted of King James's Patent not to affront King William, but to keep himſelf out of Priſon, for a Debt due to the Earl of Montague, he was diſcharg'd.

The Lords acquainted the Commons, that they had appointed a Committee to inquire who had adviſ'd the iſſuing of Quo Warranto's; and who were the Promoters of the Murders of the Lord Ruſſel, Col. Algernon Sidney, Sir Thomas Armſtrong and Alderman Corniſh; and deſir'd that John Hampden Eſq; and John Trenchard Eſq; two of their Members, might attend the Committee, to inform them what they knew in theſe Matters. Biſhop Kennet ſays, Mr. Hampden knew a great deal, having been deeply engag'd in the Presbyterian Plot, which, as the Lord Ruſſel ſaid, was only the Subject of a little indiſcreet Talk of the Feaſibleneſs of diſperſing the Guards, had there been a Deſign to take the King by Force out of the Hands of his Evil Counſellors, which Deſign was never form'd; and as to the Affair of the Rye, the murder'd Gentlemen were never charg'd with it, even by the Witneſſes the Sollicitors for the Court had ſuborn'd. The Biſhop adds, "This Inquiry was "not intended ſo much againſt Mr. Hampden, as "againſt the Marquiſs of Hallifax, who had en-"deavour'd Mr. Hampden's Ruin, by procuring a "Note from the Duke of Monmouth, which made "Hampden the Chief Accomplice with the Lord "Ruſſel" If my Lord Ruſſel had not been a Member of, and conſtant Communicant with the Church of England, we ſhou'd not have wonder'd to hear his Pious Memory attack'd with ſuch odious Inſinuations. His Lordſhip's dying Words will have more Weight with all Poſterity, than whatever will be left them by all the Convocations ſince the Reſtoration; and let us remember what they were, as Biſhop Burnet tells us, he told him the Night before he was murder'd, There was nothing but the Embryo's of Things that were never like to have any Effect. This is the Guilt, in which Biſhop Kennet charges Mr. Hampden with being an Accomplice, with that Pious and Generous Nobleman and Patriot. What follows in that Biſhop's Hiſtory, is taken from unfaithful Memoirs; where 'tis ſaid Mr. Hampden, "Rather aim'd at "recommending himſelf, than of diſcovering the "Authors and Promoters of the Execution of his "late Friends; he extoll'd his Services to the Pre-"ſent Government, and plainly inſinuated that "the whole Intrigue of inviting over the Prince "of Orange, had been manag'd by himſelf and "Mr. Johnſton, &c." Which not being true, cannot juſtly be ſuppos'd to have been ſaid by Mr. Hampden, who was indeed very ſerviceable in promoting the Revolution, but was not let into the Depth of the Secret, as Mr. Johnſton was; who had no Communication with any one concerning it, but with Mr. Sidney afterwards Lord Romney; whom his Highneſs the Prince of Orange, order'd Mr. Johnſton, then his Secretary, and afterwards Secretary of State, and Lord Regiſter in Scotland, to act in concert with. Therefore Mr. Hampden could not ſay, he manag'd the inviting over the Prince of Orange, in Conjunction with Mr. Johnſton, who had the Secret and the Cypher of that Correſpondence, which Mr. Hampden had not. Biſhop Kennet goes on, Mr. Hampden was apt to over-value his own Services and Abilities, and therefore made ſeveral Offers at being Secretary of State, but the King thought him of too warm a Temper, for a Place that requires a Sedate, Judicious Man. Does he mean ſuch as Mr. Henry St. John, in the late Mr. Harley's Miniſtry, or ſuch as the Lord D----, or Mr. B----- his Contemporaries. Mr. Hampden was repreſented by ſome, who probably hated the Name, for the Figure it makes in all good Engliſh Hiſtory, as a Man too hot and raſh for ſo great an Officer of State; as Mr. Samuel Johnſon was characteriz'd as a Madman by the ſame ſort of People, when the Earl of Macclesfield propos'd him to the King for a Deanery. The late Biſhop of Peterborough goes on thus; "One Day Mr. Hampden, with Deſign "to remind the King of his own Merits, repre-"ſented to his Majeſty, that thoſe of Mr. John-"ſton were ſtill unrewarded, to which the King "reply'd, I have not forgot either Mr. Hampden, "or Mr Johnſton." Which has no more Appearance of Truth in it, than what went before. Every Body knows Mr. Johnſton had as free Acceſs to the King as any Man at Court; and tho' there was ſome about him, who perhaps diſlik'd Mr. Johnſton on the ſame Account, as they diſlik'd his Friend Mr. Hampden; the Zeal of his Family for the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty; yet that Gentleman's Character does not make it credible, that he ſhould give his Maſter King William the leaſt uneaſineſs on his Account: and Mr. Hampden knew this too well, to be ſo over-officious. However, it is ſtill farther ſaid, in the Compleat Hiſtory, upon very ſlender Foundation; "Neither of 'em "had much Reaſon to complain, the King ha-"ving nam'd the firſt to be his Envoy into Spain, "and the other into Switzerland, which they both "refus'd." This Prelate has not ſhewn himſelf equal to the Work he had in Hand; to weigh the Merrit of theſe two Gentlemen, and ballance it with the Rewards, that he ſays were offer'd them. He thought himſelf oblig'd to own both Mr. Hampden and Mr. Johnſton, were Chief-Managers in the great Buſineſs of the Revolution; and then tells us, King William ſufficiently rewarded them, in propoſing to ſend one to Spain, and the other to Switzerland To ſay nothing of few Perſons being enrich'd by Embaſſies; we cannot underſtand, how he cou'd imagine that the Embaſſy to the Swiſs Cantons was an Equivalent for the Service the Gentleman, to whom he ſays it was offer'd, did both King and Country, before, at, and after the Revolution. He cloſes theſe Anecdotes of his, with telling us, that Mr. Cocks was ſent to the Swiſs Cantons upon Mr. Hampden's Recommendation; which ſhews that Mr. Hampden was neither out of Humour with the King, nor the King with him; and ſuch is the Sum of all this fine Story. Mr. Stanhope, Brother to the Earl of Cheſterfield, and Father to the late Earl Stanhope, was ſent Envoy into Spain. The Lord Paget to Vienna, and the Lord Durſley to Holland, to relieve the Earl of Pembroke, who was ſoon after made firſt Commiſſioner of the Admiralty, in the room of the Earl of Torrington, who reſign'd.

A.D. 1689

Biſhop Kennet wrong about Mr. Johnſton and Mr. Hampden.

Mr. Hampden's Share in the Revolution.

Towards the beginning of December, a Queſtion was put in the Houſe of Commons, Whether a Perſon having a Place at Court, or any dependance upon the King, ſhould be a Member of that Houſe? This occaſion'd a warm Debate, wherein ſome diſguſted Revolutioners, fell in with the Enemies to the Revolution, and thoſe that cou'd not get into Places themſelves, were very earneſt to have others kept out of them. This unnatural mixture of Enemies and Apoſtate Friends to the then Government, begat the Party which has ever ſince uſurp'd the Title of Country Party, and have always conſiſted of the Inſtruments of Perſecution and Tyranny, and Men of looſe Principles in Politicks, or Morals, or both; who in Reſentment for

The Riſe of the pretended Country-Party.

*A.D.*1689 for miſſing or loſing Employments, have more than once ſtarted this Queſtion; which Biſhop Kennet tells us, " Was carry'd in the Affirmative, it ha- " ving been rightly urg'd, that if the Negative " prevail'd, the fitteſt Perſons for Publick Em- " ployments would remain excluded, and be de- " barr'd the Opportunity of ſerving either the King " or their Country."

About the ſame Time the Commons being in a Committee upon the State of the Nation; ſeveral Members made grievous Complaints of the late Miſcarriages, and caſt them directly on the Preſent Miniſtry. Mr. Hampden before-mention'd ſaid, I cannot but wonder to ſee thoſe very Perſons in the Miniſtry, whom the late King James had employ'd, even when his Affairs were moſt Deſperate, to treat with the then Prince of Orange; whoſe great Grandfather William I. never made uſe of the Duke of Alva's Miniſters; nor did Henry IV. of France, ever employ thoſe of his Competitor the Duke of Mayenne. To theſe Examples he added others, and mov'd for an Addreſs to remove ſeveral of the Miniſtry, from his Majeſty's Preſence and Councils. The Compleat Hiſtorian intimates, that his Speech would have made greater Impreſſion, if he had not complain'd of the employing Commonwealth's Men, which occaſioned a Laugh. The Author could not but know, that the Laugh is ſometimes ſubſtituted in the room of Argument; in this Caſe he ſays, it was becauſe, He, his Father, and their Predeceſſors had been reputed of the Republican-Party, which is not true, they were reputed of the Puritan, but never of the Republican-Party; unleſs it was by thoſe ſtupid ones, who confounded Parliamentarians and Republicans; Oliverians and Republicans: whereas the Parliamentarians were as much for Monarchy, and the Oliverians for Tyranny, as were the Laudæans and Straffordians. As ſoon as the Commons had recover'd their Gravity, continues the Right Reverend Hiſtorian, ſeveral Members ſtood up in Defence of thoſe Illuſtrious Perſons, on whom Mr. Hampden had reflected; one of which Illuſtrious Perſons, the Earl of Danby, had been impeach'd by them for corrupt Practices with the French King; and another of them, the Marquiſs of Hallifax, had been addreſs'd againſt before, for the Share he had in the Evil Counſels in K. Charles II's time; and a third, the Earl of Nottingham, was one of the moſt zealous Oppoſers of the Prince of Orange's being made King. But we are told by the ſame Hiſtorian, Mr. Hampden's Principal Aim, was thought to be againſt the Earl of Nottingham; that upon his Removal, he might himſelf get into his Place of Secretary of State. I meet with this way of Reaſoning very often in the Eccleſiaſtical Writers of Civil Hiſtory, when any of their Favourites are in Queſtion; all that oppoſe them or their Cauſe, do it out of private Pique, Prejudice, and Reſentment, there being ſo much Truth in that Cauſe of theirs, Spiritual Pomps, Dignities and Powers, and ſo much Honeſty in their Perſons, that no Argument or Objection cou'd reaſonably be rais'd againſt them. This runs through Clarendon's Hiſtory as well as theirs, and all upon the ſame Footing. The employing of thoſe and ſuch like Men, gave general Offence to the Well-affected; and it was no laughing Matter without Doors, whatever it was within. That Mr. Hampden was neglected and diſguſted is true enough, and that he carry'd his Reſentment too far; tho' I have not heard worſe of him, from thoſe who knew him intimately, than that he ſhould ſay, I think I deſerve to have ſomething offer'd me at leaſt; which ſhews that he expected to be ask'd, and that what he would accept of muſt be Something. We ſhall ſee preſently, that this Gentleman had not himſelf ſo much in view, as the Reverend Hiſtorian repreſeents it.

Mr. Hampden's Speech againſt employing Tories.

Mr. Hampden's ſaying of neglecting him.

A Motion being made for ſettling a Part of the Publick Revenue on the Princeſs Anne of Denmark; it divided the Houſe into three Parts. The Lord Eland, Son to the Marquiſs of Hallifax, Mr. Finch and Mr. Godolphin, who ſpoke in Favour of the Princeſs, inſiſted that 70000 l. per Ann. was as little as could be allow'd her; others, who conſider'd the Publick Neceſſities, wou'd have that Sum reduc'd to 50000 l. and others again, who thought it was more for the King's Intereſt and Honour, to have that Allowance flow from himſelf, were for leaving that Matter wholly to his Majeſty; and herein Mr. Hampden the Son, join'd with thoſe that voted with the Court, and pleaded the Danger of ſettling a Revenue on a Princeſs who had ſo near a Claim to the Crown, independently of the King, whoſe Title was diſputed by many Malecontents; and ſupported his Arguments by the Example of the Queen, on whom it had lately been propos'd to ſettle 100000 l. a Year; but it was thought improper, and therefore rejected, though her Majeſty had no ſeparate Intereſt from that of her Royal Conſort. This Debate being adjourn'd to the next Day, the King, who was unwilling to have ſo delicate an Affair canvaſs'd farther in Parliament, ſent the Earl of Shrewsbury and Mr. Wharton to the Princeſs, to perſuade her to rely on his Generoſity. A ſtep which ſeems to have been taken too haſtily, unleſs his Majeſty had been aſſur'd of having a more agreeable Anſwer from her Royal Higneſs, who reply'd, Since the Affair is before the Commons, it muſt e'en take its Courſe, and be concluded by that wiſe Body. And here we may obſerve, that the Princeſs of Denmark had taken ſome diſtaſte at her Reception at Court, inſpir'd into her by ſome of that Party, who were leaſt affected to the Government; and thoſe of her Servants, who had Seats in Parliament, were obſerv'd to be very well with thoſe, whom the Court had leaſt Reaſon to be fond of. At laſt, the Commons addreſs'd the King, to ſettle 50000 l. a Year, on the Prince and Princeſs of Denmark, to which his Majeſty anſwer'd, Gentlemen, Whatſoever comes from the Houſe of Commons is ſo agreeable to me, and particularly this Addreſs, that I ſhall do what you deſire of me. The ſame Day, Dec. 23. the King gave the Royal Aſſent to the Mutiny and Deſertion Act, and to a private Bill or two. Before the Chriſtmas Holidays, Mr. Hampden the Younger, brought into the Houſe by Order, an Addreſs, to lay before his Majeſty the Ill-Conduct and Succeſs of Affairs; and to find out the Authors of thoſe Miſcarriages, who wou'd have been found among that Set of Men, who promoted the Addreſs for taking Care of the Church. Mr. Hampden's Addreſs was thought by ſome too long, by others too ſhort; Mr. Hampden the Father ſpoke againſt it, as entring too far into the Detail of Miſcarriages and Misfortunes, which too many of that Aſſembly did not care to hear enumerated, not in hopes of having, but for fear, Things ſhould be amended. In theſe Debates it was very odd to ſee Mr. Hampden and Sir Edward Seymour, Sir John Guiſe and Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave, Sir Francis Winnington and Mr. Francis Gwin, on the ſame ſide of Queſtion, Whether Mr. Hampden was four'd by miſſing the Secretary's Place or not, I ſhall not farther inquire. It is more certain, Sir John Guiſe was not pleas'd in being diſappointed about the Government of Portſmouth; and I am credibly inform'd, that Mr. Robert Harley's Defection from the Good Old Cauſe, was for that a Troop of Horſe, which was rais'd for him to meet the Prince of Orange, was not turn'd into a Regiment, and he made Colonel of it. Be that as it will, the Enemies to the true Proteſtant Religion and Liberty, made their Advantage of the Apoſtacy of the late Friends to both, encreas'd their Party by it, caus'd perpetual Debates about the Princeſs Anne's Revenue.

Theſe were the Men, who, when the Corporation-Act was brought into the Houſe, got the Clauſe, To incapacitate ſuch as any ways acted in the Surrender of Charters, rejected; but they could not keep one of their Party from being ſent to the Tower, Francis Cholmondeley, Eſq; Burgeſs for Newton in Lancaſhire, refuſing to take the Oaths appointed to be taken by Members of Parliament, was committed Priſoner by the Speaker's Warrant. This Gentleman was Uncle to the late Arthur Manwaring, Eſq; who, on account of his Relation to him, was unjuſtly charg'd with having been of his Principles, which no Man aborr'd more than Mr. Manwaring did.

When the Bill for Annulling the Attainder of Sir Thomas Armſtrong came into debate, and Inquiry was made, who were his Proſecutors, Mrs. Matthews, Sir Thomas Armſtrong's Daughter, and Mother to Commodore Matthews, nam'd Sir Robert Sawyer, Member of Parliament for the Univerſity of Cambridge, as one of her Father's greateſt Adverſaries. Upon which it was reſolv'd, That Sir Robert Sawyer's Name be put into the Bill, as one of the Proſecutors of Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and that he be expell'd the Houſe for the ſame; a very ſlight Puniſhment for ſo great an Offence. Three Days after, January 23, the Commons proceeding upon the Act of Indemnity, agreed that Perſons might be excepted out of it for the following Crimes; 1. The aſſerting, adviſing, and promoting the DISPENSING POWER: This took in all the Judges except Baron Street, and all the Court Lawyers in the late King's time. 2. The Commitment and Proſecution of the SEVEN BISHOPS: This included John late Duke of Buckinghamſhire, Sir Richard Graham, Viſcount Preſton, Henry Earl of Peterborough, Henry Lord Dover, William Marquiſs of Powis, Henry Lord Arundel of Warder, Theophilus Earl of Huntingdon, Roger Earl of Caſtlemain, William Earl of Craven, George Lord Dartmouth, Sir John Ernle, Sir Edward Herbert, and two others every way infamous, Sir Nicholas Butler and Jefferies the Chancellor; who ſign'd the Warrant for committing the Biſhops, as did alſo the Lord Godolphin, who ſufficiently atton'd afterwards for this falſe Step, by his many great Services to his Country; to theſe we muſt add Wright the Chief Juſtice, Allybone a Popiſh Judge, Sir Thomas Powis, Sir Bartholomew Shower, Sir William Williams, who will be heard of again hereafter for their Zeal for ſuch good Churchmen as themſelves. 3. The adviſing, promoting, and executing the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion: This would have thrown out of Indemnity, Laurence Hyde Earl of Rocheſter, John Sheffield Earl of Mulgrave, afterwards Duke of Buckinghamſhire, Nathaniel Crew Biſhop of Durham, Thomas Sprat Biſhop of Rocheſter, Thomas Cartwright Biſhop of Cheſter, Herbert and Wright the two Chief Juſtices, and that poor Wretch Jenner, who was made Recorder of London when their Charter was taken away. 4. The adviſing and levying Money by pretence of Prerogative: This excepted from Pardon Sir Humphry Mackworth, that pious Advocate for Sacheverel; and thoſe Barriſters and Students of the Middle Temple, who preſented an Addreſs of Thanks to King James, for taking the Cuſtoms before the Parliament had given them to him. 5. The adviſing, raiſing, and keeping up a Standing Army in the Time of Peace: This would have excepted Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave in particular, who ſaid in the Houſe of Commons, It was a deplorable thing that the King had no more Forces, than about 20000 Men, after the Duke of Monmouth's Buſineſs. 6. The adviſing and acting in the Surrender of Charters: This would have excluded from Pardon, not only Burton and Graham, Brent of the Temple, and other corrupt Lawyers and Solicitors, but many Lords-Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, Mayors, and Aldermen of Cities and Towns, ſuch as thoſe moſt worſhipful Perſons the Mayor, Aldermen, Bailiffs, &c. of Newcaſtle Under-Line, who, in an Addreſs to King James, render'd him their hearty Thanks for regulating their Corporation, for which, both their Town and the Country about it were under a Tranſport of Joy. Were ſuch Men as theſe fit to be continu'd in the Magiſtracy; and was it likely that any thing better ſhould come from them, than the Choice they have generally made ſince, when they have had occaſion to chuſe Repreſentatives. 7. Undue Conſtruction of Laws, and the undue and illegal Proſecutions and Proceedings in Capital Caſes: This would have excepted out of Pardon almoſt all the Judges, Attorneys and Sollicitors-General, King's Council, &c. and would have clear'd the Courts of Juſtice of thoſe Vermin, which had been bred in the Corruption of them. But all theſe good and juſt Exceptions were evaded by the Craft and Diligence of thoſe that were afraid of them, on account of themſelves or their Friends; the Effect of which, we ſhall find in Fenwick's Bill, in the Partition-Treaty, in the Grants and Reſumptions, in the Hindrance of the ſecond French War, in the Schiſm and Occaſional Bills, in Sacheverel's Riots, in the Utrecht Peace, and the Rebellions both in England and Scotland.

Sir Robert Sawyer expell'd the Houſe.

Ill Inſtruments in K. James's Reign.

The ill Effects of the Indemnity Bill without more Exceptions.

The King came to the Houſe of Peers January 27, and gave the Royal Aſſent to the Poll Bill, to the Bill to prevent vexatious Suits againſt ſuch as acted in order to the bringing in their Majeſties; and other Acts: for which, I refer to the Statute-Books. After which he made the following Speech;

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I Am ſo ſenſible of the Readineſs you have ſhew'd to ſupply me with Money for the carrying on the Wars I am engag'd in, that I am glad of this occaſion to give you Thanks for your chearful Diſpatch, which was abſolutely neceſſary for the common Safety. The beſt Return I can make to your Kindneſs, is, to aſſure you, that as far as it will go, it ſhall all be employ'd to the Purpoſes it was given.

It is a very ſenſible Affliction to me, to ſee my good People burthen'd with heavy TAXES; but ſince the ſpeedy Recovering of Ireland, is, in my Opinion, the only means to eaſe them, and to preſerve the Peace and Honour of the Nation, I am reſolv'd to go thither in Perſon, and with the Bleſſing of God Almighty, endeavour to reduce that Kingdom, that it may no longer be a Charge to them.

And as I have already ventur'd my Life for the Preſervation of the Religion, Laws, and Liberties of this Nation, ſo I am now willing again to expoſe it, to ſecure you the quiet Enjoyment of them.

The Spring draws on, and it being requiſite I ſhould be early in the Field, I muſt immediately apply my Thoughts to the giving Orders for the neceſſary Preparations; which, that I may have the more leiſure to do, I have thought convenient now to put an end to this Seſſion.

And then the Lord Chief Baron Atkyns prorogu'd the Parliament to the ſecond of April.

There was a Clauſe inſerted in a Bill in this laſt Seſſion of Parliament, to incapacitate all Surrenderers of Charters, viz. Be it enacted by the Authority aforeſaid, that every Mayor, Recorder, Sheriff, Common-Council-Man, Town-Clerk, Magiſtrate, or Officer, who did take upon him to conſent to, or join in any ſuch Surrender, or Inſtrument purporting ſuch Surrender, as aforeſaid, or did ſollicit, procure, proſecute, or did pay or contribute to the Charge of proſecuting any Scire Facias, Quo Warranto, or Information in the Nature of Quo Warranto, by this Act declar'd unlawful, ſhall be, and is declar'd, adjudg'd, and enacted to be, for the Space of ſeven Years, incapable and diſabled to all Intents and Purpoſes, to bear

A.D.1689 bear or execute any Office, Imployment, or Place of Truſt, as a Member of ſuch reſpective Body Corporate, or in, or for ſuch reſpective City, Town, Burrough, or Cinque-Port, whereof, or wherein he was a Member at, or before the time of making ſuch Surrender, or Inſtrument purporting ſuch Surrender, or the ſuing out, or proſecuting ſuch Scire facias, Quo Warranto, or Information in nature of Quo Warranto, any thing in this Act contain'd, or any other Caſe, Statute, or any Ordinance, Charter, Cuſtom, or any thing to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding.

We ſhall have frequent occaſion to take notice of the want of Senſe and Judgment in the Tories, as well as the want of Moderation and Charity; and they were now ſo very weak, as to print a Liſt of the Members who voted for this Clauſe, which was brought into the ' ouſe by that eminent Patriot William Sacheverel, Eſq; The Party were ſo weak as to imagine, that thoſe Gentlemen would loſe their Intereſt with the Electors for the next Parliament, by voting for this juſt and neceſſary Clauſe; but they were ſhamefully miſtaken, which is no rare thing with them; and what they intended as an Affront to them, did them Honour, and the Gentlemen took it ſo accordingly. The truth is, the publiſhing of ſuch ſort of Liſts ſeldom or never offended the Whigs; whereas the Tories ſeldom or never fail'd of crying out againſt them, and when they had Power, were ſure to proſecute all that were concern'd in it with the utmoſt Severity.

The

A.D. 1689 The City of London, in gratitude for the Care his Majeſty took of their Liberties, paid all Honour and Reſpect to him; and Sir Thomas Pilkington being continu'd Lord-Mayor for the Year 1690, in the Name of the City, invited the King and Queen, the Prince and Princeſs of Denmark, and both Houſes of Parliament, to Dinner at Guildhall, on the Lord-Mayor's Day, October 29; when their Majeſties, attended by their Royal Highneſſes, and a numerous Train of Nobility and Gentry, went firſt to a Balcony prepar'd for them at the Angel in Cheapſide to ſee the Show, which, for the great number of Livery men, the full Appearance of the Militia and Artillery Company, the rich Adornments of the Pageants, and the ſplendid and good Order of the whole Proceeding, out-did all that had been ſeen before upon that occaſion; and what deſerv'd to be particularly mention'd, ſays a Reverend Hiſtorian, was a Royal Regiment of Volunteer Horſe, made up of the chief Citizens, who being gallantly mounted and richly accoutred, were led by the Earl of Monmouth, now Earl of Peterborough, and attended their Majeſties from Whitehall. Among theſe Troopers, who were for the moſt part Diſſenters, was Daniel Foe, at that time a Hoſier in Freeman's Yard, Cornhill; the ſame who afterwards was Pillory'd for writing an ironical Invective againſt the Church, and did after that liſt in the Service of Mr. Robert Harley, and thoſe Brethren of his, who paſt the Schiſm and Occaſional Bills, broke the Confederacy, and made a ſhameful and ruinous Peace with France. The Cavalcade being paſs'd by, the King and Queen were conducted by the two Sheriffs, Sir Chriſtopher Lethulier and Sir John Houblon, to Guildhall, where he was pleas'd to confer the Honour of Knighthood on Edward Clarke and Francis Child, Eſq; two of the Aldermen: what Returns the latter made him for that Honour, are hardly worth a Place in Hiſtory. Not many Days after, ſome felonious Malecontents offer'd an Indignity to his Majeſty's Picture in Guildhall, and the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen promis'd a Reward of 500 Pounds to any that ſhould diſcover the Criminals. And the Company of Grocers having by Permiſſion choſen the King Sovereign Maſter of that Corporation, the Wardens, with ſome of the principal Members, preſented him with a Copy of that Election, and the Inſtrument of his Freedom of their Company in a gold Box; at which Time, his Majeſty thank'd them, and knighted Ralph Box, Eſq; their chief Warden, the ſame who refus'd to be Sheriff with Rich, when he was forcibly put upon the City in King Charles II's Reign.

King William and Queen Mary dine with the Lord Mayor.

Honours and Promotions. Other Honours and Promotions were confer'd by his Majeſty within the firſt Year of his Reign, Richard Lord Coote of Ireland was made Earl of Bellamont. The Privy-Seal was put into Commiſſion, and William Cheney Eſq; Sir John Knatchbull, and Sir William Pulteney, were appointed Commiſſioners; a Kinſman of the latter, Mr. Henry Guy, was made a Commiſſioner of the Cuſtoms; Thomas Pelham Eſq; afterwards Lord Pelham, was put into the Commiſſion of the Treaſury; Sir Henry Goodrich, Lieutenant-General of the Ordnance, was ſworn of the Privy-Council.

I have not defer'd ſpeaking of the State of Religion, as Biſhop Kennet calls it, till now, in imitation of his manner, which is incorrect enough.

The Subject we are entring upon is very ungrateful, and the more ſo, becauſe we are ſenſible it will have no effect upon thoſe who have any thing to learn from it.

We have ſpoken of the pinning down the Sacramental Teſt on all Officers Eccleſiaſtical, Civil, and Military, Colonels of Dragoons, and Captains of Bomb-Ships, as well as Juſtices of the Peace and Vicars: As alſo of the rejecting the two Clauſes for taking the Teſt in any Proteſtant Congregation, and for the Indifferency of the Poſture. The Reaſon of which was determin'd by the Vote, and muſt therefore ſtand good, as long as the Statute. We have mention'd the Toleration Act, and ſhall enlarge no farther upon it; for good Engliſhmen looking on it as an Act of Right, and not of Indulgence, do rather wonder how it became neceſſary, than how it paſs'd in our Engliſh Parliament. Biſhop Kennet ſays very juſtly, "Tho' the Body of Diſſenters were "contented with this Liberty, yet the more mo- "derate and wiſer part of them would be glad to "be taken into the National Eſtabliſhment, and "there was a Bill of Union ſtill depending in Par- "liament, which paſs'd the Houſe of Loras; and "when it came down to the Houſe of Commons, "they deſir'd his Majeſty to ſummon a Convoca- "tion." Much the ſame, as if when a Cauſe was to be try'd, the Defendant ſhould be appointed Judge for the Plaintiff. This has ſuch a Face, that one cannot ſee the leaſt Likeneſs of Archbiſhop Tillotſon in it. A Reverend Doctor, ſpeaking of that Archbiſhop's adviſing the calling a Convocation, in order to an Union, writes, I doubt he afterwards ſaw occaſion to repent of this Advice: And am well aſſur'd, that it is the Wiſh of many, not to ſay it was afterwards his, that when the next Opportunity arrives for ſuch an healing Attempt (the proper Method for which, is plain enough, whenever Perſons are really willing to purſue it) it may be taken with more Vigour and leſs Formality. The Reformation had never been brought about, had it been left to a Convocation; nor will our Breaches be ever heal'd, but by a true Engliſh Parliament. The Doctor cannot mean by a true Engliſh Parliament, ſuch a one as paſs'd the Occaſional and Schiſm Bills; but ſuch a one as paſs'd the Bill for eaſe to Diſſenters in King Charles the Second's Time, which that King ſuffer'd to be ſtolen out of the Houſe of Lords, to prevent his refuſing to give it the Royal Aſſent.

A.D 1689

Bill of Union with Diſſenters paſs'd by the Houſe of Lords.

Dr. C. part 1. p. 446.

We proceed now to the Commiſſion granted by King William to the Biſhops and Doctors already nam'd, to review the Liturgy. The Preamble to that Commiſſion, which the Biſhop of Peterborough terms in his Hiſtory, moſt legal and reaſonable, would be of great uſe to many of the inferior Clergy in the Country, if they would read it with Attention, and conſider it with Temper.

The Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion in order to it.

Whereas the particular Forms of Divine Worſhip, and the Rites and Ceremonies appointed to be uſed therein, are Things in their own nature indifferent and alterable, and ſo acknowledg'd; It is but reaſonable upon weighty and important Conſiderations, ſuch Changes and Alterations ſhould be made, as to thoſe that are in Place and Authority, ſhould from Time to Time ſeem either neceſſary or expedient, &c.

Ceremonies Things indifferent and alterable.

No body doubts but this Commiſſion was drawn up by Archbiſhop Tillotſon himſelf, or at leaſt with his Approbation, and that the Biſhop of London, and moſt of the Biſhops and Divines mention'd in the Commiſſion, had a Sight of it, and approv'd it before it was iſſu'd. I make uſe of Biſhop Kennet in what follows.

"The Commiſſioners often met, and drew up ſe- "veral Alterations to make Conformity the more "eaſy and acceptable to all manner of conſcientious "Perſons; but ſome that were nam'd in the Com- "miſſion," and let me name them here, Biſhop Mew, Biſhop Sprat, Dr. Aldrich, Dr. Jane, Dr. Beaumont, Dr. Montague, Dr. Goodman, Dr. Beveridge, Dr. Alſton, "did either not appear, or did "ſoon deſert their other Brethren, upon a high No- "tion, that either no Alteration ought to be made, "or at leaſt, which was whimſical enough, that this "was not a ſeaſonable Time." As if it was not always a ſeaſonable Time for People to be as good as their Word, and this eſpecially the moſt ſeaſonable of all, when Union was ſo earneſtly recommended from the Throne; and the moſt Reverend and Illuſtrious of the Fathers of our Church did ſo earneſtly deſire and labour it. The Biſhop adds,

Thoſe that oppos'd the Union among Proteſtants.

Earneſtly deſir'd by good Biſhops.

A.D.1689 " Of this number were Dr. Jane, Regius Profeſſor, " and ſome others; but the better and much greater " Majority apply'd themſelves to the Buſineſs of " Accommodation with great Induſtry and Prudence; " That Point which created the greateſt Difficulty, " was about the admitting Diſſenting Miniſters to " officiate in the Churches, &c." Which I really believe to be true, and not ſo much out of Exception to their Ordination by Presbyters, as out of a Conſideration that there would probably be then 1000 or 1500 Miniſters, who would be every way qualified for Preferment; and that there were in the two Univerſities, twice that number breeding up, in expectation of that Preferment; and as many in the Church already, who might be apprehenſive that ſuch Diſſenting Miniſters would have the Preference in the better Benefices, to which they could not but have an Eye. As to the Ordination of Preſbyters, it will do the inferior Clergy abovemention'd no harm to know, that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in Queen Elizabeth's Reign, granted a Licence to one John Morriſon, a Scotchman, to preach and adminiſter the Sacraments throughout the Province of Canterbury, tho' this John Morriſon, as the Licence takes notice, was only Ordain'd in Scotland, in the way of the Presbyterians, which ſort of Ordination is expreſſly approv'd in the Licence; but beſides, as the whole Church of Scotland, and all the Reform'd Churches in Chriſtendom, have no other Ordination, except the Lutherans are reckon'd in the number of Reform'd Churches, it is methinks, a little too aſſuming, to pretend that Ordination is valid no where but in England, Popery being out of this Queſtion; for it was never requir'd of Popiſh Prieſts to be re-ordain'd when they conform'd to the Church of England.

Abp Gr. Life by Strype, Append. N°. 17.

Presbyterian Ordination valid.

The following Account of the Proceedings of the Commiſſioners we are ſpeaking of, is taken out of Dr. Calamy's Abridgment, as he took it from one who was well inſtructed in thoſe Affairs.

P. 452, & ſeq.

The Committee being met in the Jeruſalem Chamber, a Diſpute aroſe about the Authority and Legality of the Commiſſion; and the Pleaſantry of it was, that the Biſhop of Rocheſter, who had ſo lately acted in King James's illegal Commiſſion with Jefferies, and others little better than him, was one of thoſe that queſtion'd it: But whatever Reaſons were urg'd for their ſitting and acting, in the way of Advice and Counſel only, it did not hinder the Biſhop's deſerting, and his Example was follow'd by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Dr. Jane, Dr. Aldrich, &c. as before mention'd. The other Biſhops and Divines, after a Liſt of all that ſeem'd fit to be chang'd was read over, proceeded very unanimouſly, and without any Heats, in determining as follows, each Article, as ſoon as agreed on, being ſign'd by the Biſhop of London: and let me add, that the Reverend Prelates and Doctors, who proceeded in the Execution of that Commiſſion, were ſome of the moſt learned, pious, wiſe, and worthy, that ever the Chriſtian Church was bleſs'd with.

Alterations in the Church-Service made by the Biſhops and Doctors in the Commiſſion.

That the Chaunting of Divine Service in Cathedral Churches, ſhall be laid aſide, that the whole may be render'd intelligible to the common People.

That beſides the Pſalms in their courſe, ſome proper and devout ones be ſelected for Sundays.

That the Apocryphal Leſſons, and thoſe of the Old Teſtament, which are too Natural, be thrown out, and others appointed in their ſtead by a new Calendar, which is already fully ſettled, and out of which, are omitted all the Legendary Saints Days, and others not directly refer'd to in the Service-Book.

That a Rubrick be made, ſetting forth the Uſefulneſs of the Croſs in Baptiſm, not as an eſſential Part of that Sacrament, but only a fit and decent Ceremony. However, if any do after all, in Conſcience ſcruple it, it may be omitted by the Prieſt.

If any refuſe to receive the Sacrament kneeling, it may be adminiſtred to them in their Pews.

That a Rubrick be made, declaring the Intention of the Lent-Faſts to conſiſt only in extraordinary Acts of Devotion, not in Diſtinction of Meats. And another to ſtate the Meaning of Rogation Sundays and Ember Weeks. A.D.1689

That the Rubrick, which obliges the Miniſters to read or hear Common-Prayer, publickly or privately every day, be chang'd to an Exhortation to the People to frequent thoſe Prayers.

That the Abſolution in Morning and Evening Prayer, be read by a Deacon, the Word Prieſt in the Rubrick being chang'd into Miniſter, and thoſe Words, and Remiſſion, be put out as not very intelligible.

That the Gloria Patri ſhall not be repeated at the end of every Pſalm, but of all, appointed for Morning and Evening Prayer.

That thoſe Words in the Te Deum, Thine honourable, true and only Son, be thus turn'd, Thine only begotten Son. Honourable being only a Civil Term, and no where us'd in Sacris.

The Benedicite ſhall be chang'd into the 128th Pſalm, and other Pſalms likewiſe appointed for the Benedictus and Nunc dimittis. The Verſicle after the Lord's Prayer, &c. ſhall be read kneeling, to avoid the Trouble and Inconveniencies of ſo often varying Poſtures in the Worſhip. And after theſe Words, Give Peace in our Time, O Lord, ſhall follow an Anſwer, promiſſory of ſomewhat on the People's Part, of keeping God's Law, or the like; the old Reſponſe being founded on the Predeſtinating Doctrine, taken in too ſtrict an Acceptation.

All high Titles or Appellations of the King, Queen, &c. ſhall be left out of the Prayers, ſuch as Moſt Illuſtrious, Religious, Mighty, &c. and only the Word Sovereign retain'd for the King and Queen; and thoſe Words in the Prayer for the King, Grant that he may vanquiſh and overcome all his Enemies, are of too large an Extent; if the King engage in an unjuſt War, ſhall be turn'd thus, Proſper all his Righteous Undertakings againſt thy Enemies, or after ſome ſuch manner.

Thoſe Words in the Prayer for the Clergy, Who alone workeſt great Marvels, as ſubject to be ill interpreted by Perſons vainly diſpos'd, ſhall be thus, Who alone art the Author of all good Gifts; and thoſe Words, The healthful Spirit of thy Grace, ſhall be, The Holy Spirit of thy Grace, healthful being an obſolete Word.

A Prayer in the Service not genuine.

The Prayer which begins, O God, whoſe Nature and Property, ſhall be thrown out, as full of ſtrange and impertinent Expreſſions; and beſides, not in the Original, but foiſted in ſince by another Hand.

Dr. Patrick.

The Collects, for the moſt part, are to be chang'd for thoſe the Biſhop of Chicheſter has prepar'd, being a Review of the old ones, with Enlargements, to render them more ſenſible and affecting, and what Expreſſions are needful, ſo to be retrench'd.

If any Miniſter refuſe the Surplice, the Biſhop, if the People deſire it, and the Living will bear it, may ſubſtitute one in his Place, that will officiate in it; but the whole Thing is left to the Diſcretion of the Biſhops.

If any deſire to have Godfathers and Godmothers omitted, and their Children preſented in their own Names to Baptiſm, it may be granted.

About the Athanaſian Creed, they came at laſt to this Concluſion, That leſt the whole rejecting it ſhould by unreaſonable Perſons be imputed to them as Socinianiſm, a Rubrick ſhall be made, ſetting forth, or declaring the Curſes denounc'd therein, not to be reſtrain'd to every particular Article, but intended againſt thoſe that deny the Subſtance of the Chriſtian Religion in general.

Theſe Alterations, drawn up with ſo much Judgment, Prudence, and Caution, could not be digeſted by Dr. Aldrich and Dr. Jane of Oxford. They were, it ſeems, for keeping in Chaunting inſtead of Reading the Holy Scriptures, the Apocryphal Leſſons, the Legendary Saints Days, Fiſh-Diet in Lent, Thine Honourable

A.D.1689 Honourable Son, and moſt Religious King Charles and King James II. the Athanaſian Creed to the full, and the Surplice unalterably. But it is eaſily perceiv'd that they did not therein conſult ſo much the Peace as the Pale of the Church; and having little to ſay againſt the Opinion of the wiſeſt and beſt of their Brethren, they withdrew, that they might bear their Teſtimony, ſuch as it was, againſt it.

There was very little likelihood that the Union wou'd come to any Thing from the day of the Meeting of the Cconvocation, Nov. 21. The Choice of their Prolocutor ſhew'd plainly enough, that they were not Men who were in any manner of Diſpoſition to heal the Breaches in the Church. Thoſe who cou'd prefer Dr. Jane to Dr. Tillotſon, muſt certainly take more pleaſure in Perſecution than Charity, and be wanting in Judgment as much as in Temper. The Reverend Author tells us in his Compleat Hiſtory,

The Biſhop of London, moſt of his Brethren, and the ſober Part of the Clergy, were for Dr. Tillotſon, who the King had lately made Clerk of the Cloſet. It was probably the loſs of ſome Votes for him, that his Majeſty had been heard to ſay, Dr. Tillotſon is the honeſteſt Man and the beſt Friend I ever had in my Life; and it was probably the gain of ſome for Dr. Jane, that in the Decree Time, and all ſuch other Times at Oxford; he was one of the foremoſt in every Thing that tended to the Oppreſſion and Defamation of Proteſtant Diſſenters. The Choice falling on Dr. Jane, he was preſented as Prolocutor to the Biſhop of London, who preſided in that Synod in the Abſence of Dr. Sancroft, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by Dr. Aldrich, Dean of Chriſt-Church, Oxon. Jane made a Cuſtomary Speech in Latin, wherein he extoll'd the Excellency of the Church of England, as by Law Eſtabliſh'd, above all Chriſtian Communities; which granting it be true, and what Archbiſhop Leighton ſaid of it not to be ſo, wou'd have been more decent in the Mouth of a Profeſſor at Geneva, or Leyden, or Leipſich, or Frankfort, or any where than in his, who as the prejudic'd might be apt to ſay, was well enough paid for his Complement. Biſhop K---- adds, It ended with the Application of this Sentence by way of Triumph, Nolumus Leges Angliæ mutari; as if there cou'd be greater Nonſenſe either in Spirituals or Temporals. If the Laws had not been alter'd ten Years before, by repealing the Statute de Hæretico Comburendo, the Doctor might have been burnt, if he had not chang'd, when the pretended De jure King came back again. The Biſhop of London, to whom the Prolocutor had been Chaplain, and preach'd his Conſecration Sermon when he was made Biſhop of Oxford, anſwer'd his Speech in Latin, and ſaid with great Moderation and Candour; You ought to endeavour a Temper in thoſe Things, that are not eſſential in Religion, thereby to open a Door of Salvation, to a multitude of ſtraying Chriſtians. It muſt needs be your Duty to ſhew the ſame Indulgence and Charity to the Diſſenters, under King William, which ſome of the Biſhops and Clergy had promiſed them in Addreſſes to King James. This Reverend and Noble Prelate being ſenſible that the Majority of the Convocation were reſolv'd to oppoſe the intended Union with the Diſſenters, he acquainted them, that having conſulted an Eminent Civilian, he had found a defect in the Commiſſion impowering them to ſit, the Great Seal not being put: ſo he prorogu'd them till that was procur'd, in hopes of bringing ſome of the Enemies to the Union over in that Interval, in which there was but little Succeſs. I do not repeat all the Objections made to this Union, becauſe they are really not worthy of it, this being the moſt weighty. That it would derogate from the Dignity of the Church of England, becauſe the Diſſenters had not made the firſt ſtep. Whereas the Diſſenters were more Wiſe and Modeſt than to propoſe Terms to Perſons, from whom they knew they muſt receive them, or to direct thoſe who were to give the Law. The New Commiſſion was brought to both Houſes of Convocation, aſſembled together in Henry VIIth's Chapel, by the Earl of Nottingham, who brought alſo a Meſſage in Writing from his Majeſty, intimating that he ſummon'd them not only becauſe it was uſual upon holding of a Parliament, but out of a pure Zeal to do every Thing that might tend to the beſt Eſtabliſhment of the Church of England, &c. and that he expected that the Things he propos'd ſhould be calmly and impartially conſidered; he intending to offer nothing but what ſhou'd be for the Honour, Peace and Advantage both of the Proteſtant Religion in general, and particularly of the Church of England. My Lord Nottingham at the ſame time made an Eloquent Speech to the Aſſembly, wherein he exhorted them to lay aſide all partial Prepoſſeſſions and Animoſities in their Proceedings. But the Oxford Men, Jane, Aldrich and others, were come with a fix'd Reſolution, rather to foment than forget thoſe Animoſities and Prepoſſeſſions; and to that Party is intirely owing the loſs of this bleſſed Opportunity of reconciling all Proteſtants in the Proteſtant Church of England, and ſuppreſſing the perſecuting Spirit and Faction for ever. This Meſſage being read, the Biſhops went to the Jeruſalem Chamber, from whence they ſent a Copy of it to the Lower-Houſe of Convocation, whoſe profeſs'd Buſineſs, ſays Biſhop Kennet, was to do nothing. With that Copy, the Biſhops ſent them the Form of an Addreſs to his Majeſty, to which they deſir'd their Concurrence. But they were too ſturdy to accept of any Thing that came firſt from their Spiritual Fathers, and therefore inſiſted on the Form they ſhou'd think fit. They diſliked this Expreſſion in that of the Biſhops, wherein they thank'd his Majeſty for his Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion in general, and the Church of England in particular. They were for confining themſelves to what concern'd the Church of England, and were therefore very zealous for amending that Clauſe, if they might not draw up a new Form of their own. Upon which a Conference was deſir'd, manag'd chiefly by the Biſhop of Salisbury and the Prolocutor. The Biſhop's Reaſons for keeping to the Terms of the Addreſs were, 1. Becauſe the Proteſtant Religion in general, is the known Denomination of the Common Doctrine of the Weſtern Part of Chriſtendom, in Oppoſition to the Errors and Corruptions of the Church of Rome. 2. Becauſe the leaving out this may have ill Conſequences, and be liable to ſtrange Conſtructions both at Home and Abroad, among Proteſtants as well as Papiſts. 3. Becauſe it agrees with the General Reaſons, offer'd by the Clergy for their Amendments, ſince this is expreſly mention'd in the King's Meſſage, and in this the Church of England being ſo much concern'd, the Biſhops think it ought to ſtand full in the Addreſs. To Men of honeſt Minds and plain Underſtandings, the Biſhop's Reaſons are unanſwerable; ſomething indeed may be urg'd on the ſide of the Prolocutor and his Party, that they did not ſo well underſtand what is meant by the Common Doctrine of the Weſtern Part of Chriſtendom, nor much matter'd what Conſtructions their Proceedings might be liable to abroad; they very well knew what was the Common Doctrine in the Weſt of England, and determin'd that no Conſtructions ſhou'd be put upon their Actions, which might prejudice any one in Favour of Chriſtian Union and Charity; they therefore wou'd have Proteſtant Religion thrown out, and inits Place put Proteſtant Churches. The Biſhops deſired a Reaſon for that Alteration, which was return'd to them in theſe Words, We being the Repreſentative of a form'd Eſtabliſh'd Church, do not think fit

Burnet of his Times.

A.D.1689 fit to mention the Word Religion, as if by the way it had been a Thing different from it, any farther than it is the Religion of ſome form'd Eſtabliſh'd Church; as if a Church, be it in Scotland, Holland, Geneva, Switzerland, or any where elſe, which was form'd and eſtabliſh'd by the Goſpel, was not of equal Dignity, with one form'd and eſtabliſh'd by an Act of Parliament. Yet on this very Reaſon, was the Convocation's Oppoſition to the Biſhops built. They fear'd, ſays Biſhop Kennet, it was a Diminution to the Church of England, to join it with Foreign Proteſtant Churches. Methinks it has too much Vanity in it to be told ſeriouſly, and I ſhall have done with their Proceedings for now and for always, unleſs ſomething extraordinary happens.

At laſt a Sort of an Addreſs was preſented, in which there was no Expreſſion of Tenderneſs to Proteſtant Diſſenters, and but a cold Regard to other Proteſtant Churches; which his Majeſty well underſtood the meaning of, yet he was pleas'd to give it this gracious Anſwer, addreſſing to the Biſhops: My Lords, I take this Addreſs very kindly from the Convocation, you may depend upon it, that all I have promis'd and all I can do for the Service of the Church of England, I will do; and I give you this new Aſſurance, that I will improve all Occaſions and Opportunities for its Service. I am aſham'd to repeat what we read in the Compleat Hiſtory, That the Majority of the Lower Houſe of Convocation, had a Kindneſs for the Nonjuring Biſhops and Clergy, and one of them made a zealous Speech for their Sitting and Voting in that moſt Excellent Synod; which after this cou'd not expect to be long together. But before they broke up they addreſs'd the Upper-Houſe, to know how they might ſafely fall upon ſome Perſons that had offended them, with the whole Weight of the Canons. The Lord Biſhop of London, the Preſident, ſaid, That upon Enquiry he could not receive any Satisfaction, how far the Convocation might proceed in that Affair, but he would as far as lay in him take farther Order about it. Dr. Jane the Prolocutor, in his Speech to the Biſhops about this Matter ſaid, There were ſeveral Books publiſh'd of very dangerous Conſequence to the Chriſtian Religion, particularly againſt Athanaſius's Creed, and the preſent Convocation; the Conſequence of which muſt needs be very dangerous to that Doctor, and to him alſo, who ſpoke ſo zealouſly for the Nonjuring Biſhops, and to all thoſe whoſe Frame of Spirit favour'd of the ſame Wiſdom, Piety and Meekneſs. I ſhall conclude this diſagreeable Part of my Hiſtory, in the Words of the late Biſhop of Peterborough. "When the Preſident and his Brethren ſaw the "Diſpoſition of the Lower-Houſe, they found it "was to no purpoſe to communicate any Propo- "ſals to them, and therefore the Convocation was "prorogu'd." After which they ſate no more, and the People of England, would have had no great Reaſon to complain, if, &c.

But tho' near half of thoſe Members, who in the laſt Parliament voted againſt making the Prince of Orange King, were not return'd for the New Parliament; yet by the falling off of Others who voted for it, the Government found Oppoſition enough in this Aſſembly: nor did it bode very well, that Sir John Trevor, who had been Speaker of King James's Parliament, was choſen Speaker of this alſo. His Majeſty coming to the Houſe of Lords, and the Commons being ſent for, he told them, that King's Speech to the New Parliament.

Finding his Preſence in Ireland abſolutely neceſſary, for the more ſpeedy reducing that Kingdom, he continued his Reſolution of going thither as ſoon as might be; and he had now called them together for their Aſſiſtance, to enable him to proſecute the War with Speed and Vigour. Then having deſir'd them to make a Settlement of the Revenue, and expreſs'd how earneſt he was to extinguiſh, or at leaſt to compoſe all Differences amongſt his Subjects; he ſaid, he intended to ſend them an Act of Grace, with Exceptions of ſome few Perſons only, but ſuch as might be ſufficient to ſhew his great diſlike of their Crimes, and at the ſame Time his readineſs to extend Protection to all his other Subjects; who would thereby ſee, that they could recommend themſelves to him by no other Methods than what the Laws preſcrib'd. He deſir'd them to take into their Conſideration an Union with Scotland; and concluded

A.D.1690 with telling them, He thought it moſt convenient to leave the Adminiſtration of the Government, in the Hands of the Queen during his Abſence; and that the Seaſon of the Year, and his Journey to Ireland, would admit but of a very ſhort Seſſion, which made Diſpatch ſtill the more neceſſary.

This Speech had a good Influence on both Houſes, and the Commons proceeded immediately to ſettle a Revenue for the Maintenance of the Civil Liſt; upon which occaſion Sir Charles Sidley made a Speech, that was much applauded by thoſe, who for want of room in the Court-Party, liſted themſelves in that which was very improperly call'd the Country: becauſe the Country had no Intereſt diſtinct from that of their Deliverer King William, nor the King any Intereſt diſtinct from the Country he deliver'd. True, he had Servants to do his Buſineſs, and he paid them for their Service; which this Knight, and other Knights and Squires have thought a moſt unreaſonable Thing, or at leaſt that their Pay was not what they were pleas'd to deal to them; or rather, for that was then, and has always been ever ſince the real Cauſe of the Clamour, that Part of the Money did not come into their own Pockets. This Speech hinder'd not the Commons from granting to King William and Queen Mary, all the Revenues King James enjoy'd the 20*th of* December 1688, excepting Chimney-Money; and their being Encouragement to lend Money upon them, Private Perſons advanc'd great Sums for the preſent Expedition. They declar'd guilty of High-Treaſon, all thoſe that were actually in King James's Service in Ireland; and confirm'd all the Acts of the Convention Parliament, by which their Majeſties William and Mary, were acknowledg'd to be lawful King and Queen of England.

The Acts of the Convention Parliament confirm'd.

The Bill of Indemnity, ſo earneſtly recommended by the King, did after many long and warm Debates, paſs both Houſes. Biſhop Kennet ſays, The Clemency of the King, and the Generoſity of the Parliament were very great. And truly ſo very great, that all the Diſturbances, Riots, Inſurrections and Rebellions, that this Nation has ſuffer'd by ever ſince, were in a great meaſure owing to that ſame Oblivion, by means of which the Enemies to the Revolution, eſcap'd the Puniſhments they could not but expect from National Juſtice, and were embolden'd by Impunity to continue their open and ſecret Practices againſt the Government, under various Names and Diſguiſes. Sir Roger L'Eſtrange and George Lord Jefferies.

It was thought if Jefferies had not died in Priſon, he wou'd have come off as well as the other Criminals; L'Eſtrange was ſaid to have deſerv'd hanging, in the Houſe of Lords, ten Years before; Butler who had been an Anabaptiſt Preacher, a A.D.1690 Quack, a Plot-maker, a Suborner of Evidence, a Commiſſioner of the Cuſtoms, and at laſt a Privy-Counſellor, made no Scruple of taking Bribes publickly, nor of committing any Crime, which deſerv'd Exception out of Pardon. Brent the Lawyer, took Bribes of the poor Sufferers in the Weſt, after the Defeat of the Duke of Monmouth, in which Work he employ'd one Crane of Bridgwater as his Agent. Brent did not ſpare the young Girls of Taunton, who had given the Duke Colours, and were forc'd to pay for their Pardons more Money perhaps, than all the Criminals above-mentioned paid for theirs. Wythens, Lutwyche, Jenner, Holloway, Heath, were corrupt Judges, and no doubt had nothing ſo much as Treſilian in their Heads, till they found that this Exception was Vox & præterea Nihil. Beſides the Indemnity Bill, his Majeſty at the cloſe of this ſhort Seſſion, gave the Royal Aſſent to an Act, For the Queen's Exerciſe of the Government in the King's Abſence. To an Act for reverſing the Quo Warranto againſt the City of London: and to other Acts moſt of them Private; for which I refer to the Compleat Hiſtory. His Majeſty's Speech at the Prorogation of the Parliament, May 23. was very ſhort, chiefly recommending, The Diſcharge of their Duties in their reſpective Counties, that the Peace of the Nation might be ſecur'd by their Vigilance and Care in their ſeveral Stations.

Before he ſet out for Ireland, he was pleas'd to conſtitute Richard Pyne Eſq; Sir Richard Reeves and Robert Rochford Eſq; Commiſſioners of the Great Seal in Ireland; and Sir John Trevor, Sir William Rawlinſon and Sir George Hutchins, Commiſſioners of the Great Seal of England. A Proclamation was iſſu'd for apprehending ſeveral diſaffected Perſons; and the Deputy-Lieutenants were impower'd to raiſe the Militia, upon any Exigence in the King's Abſence. Honours and Preferments.

On the 4th of June, his Majeſty proceeded on his Expedition to Ireland; he din'd at Tring in Hertfordſhire, the Seat of Henry Guy Eſq; and lay that Night at Northampton; the next at Litchfield; the third at Whitchurch; and the fourth at Col. Whitley's between Cheſter and Highlake. The next Day being Sunday, the King went to the Cathedral Church at Cheſter, the Mayor of the City carrying the Sword before him; Dr. Stratford the Biſhop preach'd, and after Divine Service the King went to Gayton, the Houſe of Mr. Gleg; where he was met by Sir Cloudeſly Shovel, and the Sea-Commanders. On Wedneſday, June the 11th, his Majeſty embark'd at Highlake, and ſet Sail about Noon with a fair Wind; his Convoy were ſix Men of War, commanded by Sir Cloudeſly Shovel, who had with him above 300 Tranſports, beſides ſix Yachts for his Majeſty and his Retinue. Early on Saturday Morning, the King arriv'd in the Bay of Carrickfergus, where he landed, and went in Duke Schomberg's Coach eight Miles to Belfaſt; where he was met by the Duke of Schomberg, the Prince of Wirtemberg, Major-General Kirk, and other General Officers: being attended from England by Prince George of Denmark; the Duke of Ormond; the Earl of Oxford; the Earl of Scarborough; the Earl of Mancheſter; Mr. Boyle, and many other Perſons of Note. King lands in Ireland.

Let us now take a ſhort View of Affairs in Ireland, before his Majeſty's Arrival in that Kingdom; and after the encamping at Dundalk, which was Affairs in that Kingdom.

A.D.1690 not the only Place that prov'd fatal to the Engliſh, for they died in great Numbers both Officers and Soldiers, after they got into Quarters. Among the former, Col. Langſton departed this Life at Lisburn; the Earl of Roſcommon, and the Lord Hewet, were tranſported to Cheſter, ſick as they were, and there died. The Mortality was ſo great, that about the beginning of the New Year, ſeveral Regiments were broke into others, and the Officers continued at Half-Pay till they were otherwiſe provided for. The difficulties Duke Schomberg labour'd under, hinder'd not the Diſaffected, who were probably the Occaſion of them, from caſting Reflections on that great Captain, whoſe Conduct and Courage were known to and admir'd by all Europe; as if he might have given King James Battle, and have put an end to the War in Ireland. The Duke hearing what was ſo unjuſtly and raſhly ſaid of him, acquainted the King with his Reaſons for not ſtirring from Dundalk on the approach of the Iriſh Army. That his own Army had never exceeded 12000 effective Men, moſt of them new-rais'd, and little better than thoſe of the late King, who had double that Number; that he had waited for Artillery, Horſes and Carriages above a Month; that the Army had all along wanted Bread, and both the Men and Horſes Shoes, and the Surgeons and Apothecaries proper Medicines for the Sick. Information had been given in Time of theſe Miſcarriages; and it was confirm'd by Col. Lumley and Count Solms, which though it ſuppreſs'd all Suggeſtions of Neglect with reſpect to Duke Schomberg, yet it encreas'd the Suſpicion of Treachery in thoſe, that had the Management of thoſe Affairs committed to them.

The Army Ill-provided before the King's coming.

About the beginning of February, the Forces in Ireland began to recover and to be fit for Action. And the Duke having Notice that the Enemy was drawing together towards Dundalk, and had laid up great ſtore of Corn, Hay, and other Proviſions, with a deſign to moleſt his Frontier Garriſons; he march'd with a good Body of Troops towards Drummore, to obſerve them. But their Deſign at that time lay another way, their Intention being to fall upon Belturbet, in order to which they advanc'd as far as Cavan with a ſtrong Party, of which Col. Woolſley having Intelligence, he march'd diligently with 700 Foot and 300 Horſe from Belturbet, intending to ſurprize them next Morning; but indeed was ſurpriz'd himſelf, finding there 9000 Iriſh, in a Poſture to receive him. It not being eaſy for him to retreat, he made a ſhort encouraging Speech to his Men, fell upon the Enemy, and defeated them with conſiderable Loſs; purſuing them as far as Cavan, where they had a little Fort, he ſet the Town on fire, and in his return to Belturbet, took the Caſtle of Balliſhandry with a good Booty of Cattle. In the mean time Sir John Lanier with 1000 Horſe, Foot and Dragoons, made an Attempt upon Dundalk, took Bedloe Caſtle and about 1500 head of black Cattle. The Enſign who commanded there, was carry'd to Lisburn, and being brought to the General, he ask'd him ſeveral Queſtions. Among other Things he ſaid, You have a Commiſſion, and for that Reaſon, if not otherwiſe, you are a Gentleman; this obliges you to ſpeak Truth, which if you do not, I can know it by examining other Perſons, and then I ſhall have no good Opinion of you. The Iriſhman, it ſeems, did not much matter that, for the Duke cou'd get nothing material out of him.

On Good Friday, Sir Cloudeſly Shovel took the only Frigate the late King had, in his very ſight in the Bay of Dublin, maugre all the Oppoſition Sir Cloudeſly met with from the Shore, as well as by Sea. But what more ſenſibly touch'd King James, was the loſs of Charlemont Caſtle; the Garriſon of which Place had for ſome time been block'd up by the French Regiments of La Calimote and Cambon, and being ſtreighten'd for want of Proviſions, the late King ſent a ſtrong Detachment under Mac-Mallon to relieve it. Duke Schomberg being inform'd of it, order'd the Blockade to let them paſs after a ſlight Reſiſtance, but to keep in all that wou'd return out of the Caſtle. The Garriſon by the Addition of theſe new Gueſts, who brought but ſlender Relief with them, were ſoon reduc'd to greater Extremities than before, and on the 12th of May were forc'd to capitulate. The next Day they march'd out, to the Number of 800 Men. The Duke, who was come to review them, ſeeing ſo many Women and Children among them, ask'd the Reaſon of it, conſidering they could not but deſtroy their Proviſions; he was anſwer'd, the Iriſh were Hoſpitable, and they all far'd alike; but the truth of it was, the Soldiers would not be without their Women. Upon which the Duke ſaid, There is more Love than Policy in it. The ſame Day that Charlemont ſurrender'd, Col. Woolſley, who had been reinforc'd with a Party of Danes, made himſelf Maſter of the ſtrong Caſtle of Balingargy, near Cavan, which made the Iriſh quit and burn ſeveral Caſtles on that Side, and prepare to abandon Dundalk, Ardee, Blaney-Caſtle, and Chichmach-Croſs, probably to reinforce their Army, on News of King William's being landed. The next day after which, being Sunday, Dr. Royſe, afterwards Doctor and Head of Oriel College Oxon, preach'd before his Majeſty on that Text, Through Faith they have ſubdu'd Kingdoms; upon which Occaſion his Majeſty ſaid, My Chaplain has begun the Campaign. It was not long after the King's Arrival in Ireland, that obſerving a Young Officer wear a Patch upon his Face, his Majeſty ask'd a Field-Officer who he was, and the occaſion of his having that Patch: being told his Name was Jones, and that he was wounded in the Face in the Battle of Gillicranky againſt Dundee, and the Patch was to cover the Scar, his Majeſty ſaid, 'Tis more honourable in a Soldier to wear a Scar than a Patch. This Jones was the Brother of Mr. Jones near the Lands-end in Cornwall. He afterwards was Colonel in Spain, and diſtinguiſh'd himſelf under the Earl of Peterborough. Two or three Days after, the King went to Liſburn, where was the General's Head-Quarters, and from thence to Hilsborough, where having ſome cautious Meaſures propos'd by the General Officers, he ſaid, I do not come here to let Graſs grow under my Feet, but will purſue the War with the utmoſt Vigour. He therefore order'd the Army to march into the Field, and encamp at Loughbritland, where he arriv'd June the 22d, and taking a particular View of the Forces, he found them to conſiſt of 36000 Men in Heart and Condition. From thence they march'd to Newry, and from thence June 27th to Dundalk. The King was ſo well pleas'd with the Proſpect of the Country as he rode along, that he ſaid to thoſe about him, It is worth fighting for. From Dundalk the King immediately directed his March to Ardee, where we muſt leave him for a little while, and ſay ſomething of the Abdicated Monarch, who kept up the Appearance of a Court at Dublin, but behav'd with ſo little Regard to Decency, as well as Policy; that one cou'd impute the Willingneſs of his Party in England, to ſee him there again, to nothing but Madneſs and Stupidity.

He was ſo much govern'd by the Count d'Avaux, the French Miniſter, that ſome of his beſt Friends Engliſh and Iriſh took it ill, but there was no Help for it. His Maſter had ſent King James 6000 of his beſt Veteran Troops, under the Command of the Count de Lauzun and the Marquſs de la Hoguette; which, with thoſe that were in Ireland before, made up a Body of 8 or 10000 Men, and theſe in conjunction with the Iriſh, form'd an Army almoſt

King James's Tyranny in Ireland.

A.D. 1690 almoſt equal in Number to King William's. An Order was publiſh'd by Lutterel, Governor of Dublin, to forbid the Proteſtants meeting together, above five at one Time and Place, on Pain of Death; and Application being made to him, to know whether Churches were meant, Ay, ſays the brutal Iriſhman, Churches as well as other Places. Thus were the Proteſtants at once depriv'd of all Opportunities of Publick Worſhip, and no Redreſs could be obtain'd of this King of the Nonjurors, who in England had the Impudence to call themſelves Church-of-England-Men. In his Declaration, ſoon after his coming to Ireland, he ſuffer'd his Penman to tell this notorious Untruth, That ſince his Arrival in that Kingdom, the Defence of his Proteſtant Subjects, their Religion, Rights, and Properties, had been his eſpecial Care. The contrary of which, was known to, and felt by every Man, Woman, and Child of that Religion; to ſay no more of his bloody Proſcription, he caus'd their Eſtates to be ſeiz'd, to the Value of four Millions, and fill'd every Place, Civil and Military, with the moſt cruel and implacable of their Enemies.

Prepares for Flight. As ſoon as he was inform'd of King William's Landing, he agreed to the neceſſity of meeting him in the Field; and therefore the next Day ſet out from Dublin, leaving that Ruffian Lutterel Governor, with a Body of Militia inſtead of the regular Troops, which he took with him; and foreboding ſome new Diſgrace preparing for him, he thought it his wiſeſt way to ſecure a Retreat betimes, and ſent Sir Patrick Trant, a Commiſſioner of his Iriſh Revenue, to prepare him Ships at Waterford, that after Flight, he might get back again to France. Coming up to the reſt of his Forces, which now amounted to almoſt an equal number with thoſe of King William, beſides 15000, which remain'd in Garriſons; he held a Council of War, wherein it was thought fit to repaſs the River Boyne, and to weary out the Engliſh by Marches and Counter-marches along that River, which they thought impoſſible for them to paſs, while they could defend the oppoſite Banks at ſuch great advantage.

King William being inform'd, that the Enemy had repaſs'd the Boyne, June 30, order'd his whole Army to march by Break of Day, in three Lines, towards the River, then about three Miles diſtant from them. Upon this, the advanc'd Guard of Horſe, commanded by Sir John Lanier, mov'd in very good Order, and by nine of the Clock got within two Miles of Drogheda. The King, who march'd in the Front, rode nearer to view the Enemy's Camp, which he found to be all along the River in two Lines. Upon this Proſpect, his Majeſty held a Council, at which aſſiſted the Prince of Denmark, Duke Schomberg, Duke of Ormond, Count Solms, Major-General Scravenmore, the Prince of Wirtemberg, the Lord Sidney, and other great Officers. Among the reſt, Scravenmore ſeem'd to deſpiſe the Enemy, ſaying they were, Un petit Armée, for they could not reckon above forty-ſix Regiments; but the King anſwer'd wiſely, They might have a great many Men in the Town, and that there was alſo a Hill to the South-weſt, beyond which, Part of their Army might lie: "But however, ſays his Majeſty, "we ſhall ſoon be better acquainted with their "Numbers." The King rode on to the Paſs of the Old-Bridge, and ſtood on the ſide of the Bank within Muſquet-ſhot of the Ford, there to take a nearer View of the Enemy's Poſture; and ſome time after, rid about 200 Paces up the River, in full View of the Iriſh Army, with an intrepid Bravery, and a fix'd Reſolution to engage them. While his Army was marching on, he alighted from his Horſe, and ſat down upon a riſing Ground, where he refreſh'd himſelf for about an Hour, during which time, an Iriſh Party of forty Horſe advancing very ſlowly, made a ſtop upon a plow'd Field over againſt the King, and brought two Field-Pieces with them, which they drop'd by a Hedge. His Majeſty was no ſooner mounted again, but the Iriſh fir'd at him, and with the firſt Shot kill'd a Man and two Horſes within an hundred Paces of him; this Bullet was preſently ſucceeded by another, which having firſt graz'd on the Bank of the River, did, on its riſing, ſlant upon the King's right Shoulder, took out a Piece of his Coat, and tore the Skin and Fleſh, and afterwards broke the Head of a Gentleman's Piſtol. My Lord Coningsby no ſooner ſaw his Majeſty wounded, but he rid up, and clap'd his Handkerchief on the ſore Place; while the King himſelf mounted again, and kept on his Pace, only ſaying, There was no neceſſity the Bullet ſhould have come nearer. The Enemy ſeeing ſome Diſorder among thoſe that attended King William, concluded preſently he was kill'd, and immediately ſet up a Shout all over their Camp, and drew down ſeveral Squadrons of their Horſe upon a Plain towards the River, as if they meant to paſs and purſue the Engliſh Army. Nay, the Report of King William's Death flew preſently to Dublin, and from thence ſpread as far as Paris, where the Populace were encourag'd to expreſs their impious Joy by Bonfires and Illuminations, of which the more civiliz'd French were aſham'd, tho' the Court ſhew'd no manner of diſlike to it.

A.D. 1690

He is wounded.

Count Buſſy de Rabutin, a Lieutenant-General in the French King's Armies, and one of the politeſt Writers of that Nation, being oblig'd to live out of the Kingdom, for ſome ſatirical Pieces on the Gallantries of that Court, wrote to the Abbot de Choiſy from the Hague, Auguſt 17, 1690, concerning King William, and the Report of his being kill'd at the Battle of the Boyne; The Gazettes aſſure us, that the Prince of Orange is not dead, and in ſuch caſe, that Prince is at the Height of Glory, in having gain'd a Battle, in having been wounded, and having known, by the extraordinary Joy at the Report of his Death, how much his Enemies were afraid of him. The Abbot de Choiſy in anſwer to it ſent him theſe four Verſes upon the Prince of Orange.

Qu'il ſoit mort, ou qu'il ſoit en vie,
Il eſt toujours digne d'Envie:
S'il eſt mort, il eſt glorieux;
S'il eſt vivant, il eſt heureuſe.

Let him be dead, let him be living,
He's worthy to be envy'd ſtill:
If dead, he's glorious;
If living, he's happy.

The Abbot de Choiſy's Verſes upon it.

Such were the juſt Sentiments even of King William's Enemies, Frenchmen and Papiſts; while a baſe Faction in England expreſs'd their deteſtable Joy at the Report of his being kill'd, in Words and Looks, and their inveterate Malice in Slander and Reproach, when that Report was contradicted.

King William continu'd on horſeback without the leaſt Concern, till four in the Afternoon, when he din'd in the Field; and in the Evening was on horſeback again, tho' he had been up from One in the Morning. About nine at Night, he call'd a Council of War, and declar'd his Reſolution to paſs the River the next day, which Duke Schomberg at firſt oppos'd, but finding the King poſitive, he adviſ'd, that Part of the Army, Horſe and Foot, ſhould be ſent that Night towards Slane-Bridge, in order to paſs the Boyne thereabouts, and ſo get between the Enemy and the Paſs at Dulech. This Advice ſeem'd at firſt to be well reliſh'd; and 'twas thought, if it had been follow'd, it would have ended the War in one Campaign: but tho' K. William was not betray'd in his Camp, ſo much as in his Cabinet, yet Duke Schomberg was not hearken'd to, and it was ſaid, the Dutch Generals, who probably might not be free from Envy or Jealouſy, were the occaſion of it. The Duke retir'd to his Tent, where, not long after, the Order of Battle was brought him, which he receiv'd with Diſcontent and Coldneſs, ſaying, it is the firſt that ever was ſent me. Lieutenant-General Douglaſs, with ſeveral Battalions, ſupported by the right Wing of Horſe, commanded by Count Meinard de Schomberg, was order'd to march towards Slane-Bridge, and other Fords up the River, to flank the Enemy, or get between their Camp and Drogheda, while in the mean time, a Body of Foot was to force their way by the Paſs at Old-Bridge. The Cannonading continu'd on both ſides till it was dark Night, when King William gave Orders that every Soldier ſhould be provided with a good Stock of Ammunition, and be ready to march at Break of Day, with every Man a green Bough or Sprig in his Hat, to diſtinguiſh him from the Enemy, who wore Pieces of white Paper in their Hats. The Word that Night was Weſtminſter, and about twelve a-clock his Majeſty rode in Perſon by Torch-light through the whole Army, and then retir'd to his Tent, impatient of the approaching Day, July the firſt; which being come,

The Battle of the Boyne.

Lieutenant-General Douglaſs march'd about ſix in the Morning towards the Right with ſome Foot, as did Count Schomberg with the Horſe; which being obſerv'd by the Enemy, they drew out their Horſe and Foot towards the left, to oppoſe them: and before we go farther, it would be cruel not to let King James have what little Share he had in the Buſineſs of the Field, at the Battle of the Boyne. He aſſiſted in Perſon at a Council of War, where Lieutenant-General Hamilton adviſ'd him to ſend a Party of Dragoons to the Ford below the Town of Drogheda, which the Engliſh either knew not, or did not regard, and all the reſt, being eight Regiments, towards the Bridge of Slane; but the abdicated Monarch ſaid, he would ſend fifty Dragoons up the River, at which Hamilton was in amaze, conſidering the Importance of the Place to be defended. The right Wing of the Engliſh were all order'd to paſs at Slane, but on better Information from Guides, ſeveral Regiments were commanded to go over at other Fords between the Camp and that Place; and when our Horſe approach'd the River, a Regiment of the Enemy's Dragoons fir'd upon them, and made a Show of oppoſing their Paſſage; but being ſoon forc'd to retire with Loſs, the Engliſh got over, and advanc'd towards the Enemy's main Body, which they found drawn up in two Lines. Upon this, Douglaſs drew up his Detachment in the ſame figure; but having ſix Battalions only of Foot to twenty-four Squadrons of Horſe and Dragoons, he ſent for more Foot to join him; and in the mean time he took my Lord Portland's Advice, of intermixing the Horſe and Foot for their Security. More Foot being come up, this Figure was immediately alter'd, and all the Horſe were drawn to the Right, while the Foot mov'd towards a Bog on the Left; which Motion ſo frighted the Iriſh, that they retreated in great haſte towards Duleck, but were vigorouſly purſu'd by Count Schomberg with the Horſe, who falling in among them, did conſiderable Execution.

The King not knowing what had paſt, ſuppos'd the right Wing might by this time be got over the River, and order'd three Attacks to be made to open the ſeveral Paſſes. The Dutch blue Guards of Foot, the ſame who were ſo ill treated afterwards by a prevailing Party in England, were the firſt that took the River at Old-Bridge, beating a March all the while, till they got upon the ſide of the Bank; and then the Drums ceaſing, in they went eight or ten a-breaſt, wading to the middle, and having gain'd the oppoſite Bank, they drew up amidſt the Enemy's Fire in two Files, and then fir'd upon the Iriſh behind the Hedges; who were ſo diſcourag'd, that they ran away, and ſcatter'd themſelves in the next Field. But before the Dutch could get themſelves into better Order, they were charg'd by a Squadron of Iriſh Horſe, whom they beat off, and maintain'd their Ground with great Bravery. The Regiments of Sir John Hanmer, Count Naſſau, and le Melionere, were paſſing at another part of the River, where a Squadron of Lieutenant-General Hamilton's Horſe rode briskly to the very Brink to ſtop their Paſſage; but being not able to oppoſe their Landing, they wheel'd away, and in their Retreat, fell upon the French Foot ſo furiouſly, that Part of them broke thro' Monſ. le Calimote's and Monſ. Cambon's Regiments, which wanted Pikes to keep them off. Then it was that Monſ. le Calimote receiv'd his mortal Wound; and as he was carried off by four Soldiers to the Engliſh Camp, he encourag'd thoſe that croſs'd the River by theſe Words, A la Gloire, mes Enfans, à la Gloire; To Glory, my Lads, to Glory: For by what we have ſeen yet of the Battle, the boaſted Bravery of the Iriſh has not kept them from flying every where before the Engliſh, as faſt as they came up to them. Monſ. Calimote's Words had their Effect, and were a ſort of Prediction; for the Iriſh Horſe being oblig'd to wheel to the left, and paſs thro' a Village to recover their own Men, they were intercepted by the Dutch and Inniskillin Foot, and moſt of them cut to-pieces. By this time the Dutch Guards being advanc'd as far as the Hedges, into the open Field, the Iriſh Horſe came down upon them again with greater Numbers and redoubled Fury; but were ſo warmly receiv'd, that they were forc'd to retire, tho' a freſh Squadron of Horſe advanc'd to ſupport them, but were vigorouſly repuls'd by the French Proteſtants and Inniskillin Men.

Valour of the Dutch blue Guards.

The Danes, in the mean time, came up to the left, but were ſo warmly attack'd in the Front by Hamilton's Horſe, that they were forc'd to give ground, and ſome of them ran croſs the River again. Duke Schomberg perceiving this Diſorder, and that the French Proteſtants were left expos'd without a Commander, immediately paſs'd the River in order to head them; and did it with ſo much hurry, that he would not be perſuaded by Monſ. Foubert, one of his Aids-de-Camp to put on his Armour. He was no ſooner got on the other ſide, but he call'd to the French Proteſtants in theſe brave Words, Allons, Meſſieurs, voila voſtre Perſecuteurs; Come on, Gentlemen, ſee there your Perſecutors; pointing to the French Papiſts in the Enemy's Camp. He had ſcarce ſaid it, when 15 or 16 of King James's Guards came up with him in their Retreat towards their main Body, the French Refugees having ſuffer'd them to paſs, as thinking they were King William's Men. They fell furiouſly on the Duke, and gave him two Wounds over the Head, which however were not mortal, and Cambon's Regiment firing upon the Enemy at the inſtant, the Duke, as it was believ'd, was ſhot thro' the Neck by them thro' a fatal Miſtake, of which he preſently dy'd. Dr. Walker, about the ſame time, and in the ſame Battle, receiv'd his Death's Wound in his Belly, but did not die on the Spot. He was carry'd thence to Drogheda, and there expir'd.

Duke Schomberg kill'd.

And Dr. Walker.

His Majeſty ſeems to have been himſelf in the moſt difficult and doubtful part of the Engagement. He paſs'd the River with the left Wing, accompany'd by the Prince of Denmark, but did it not without imminent Danger, for his Horſe was bogg'd on the other ſide, and himſelf forc'd to alight, till one of his Attendants help'd him to get his Horſe out and mount again. As ſoon as his Troops were over, and put in ſome order, his Majeſty drew his Sword, tho' the Wound he receiv'd the Day before, had made his Arm ſtiff and uneaſy, and march'd at the Head of them againſt the Enemy, who were again coming on in good Order towards the Engliſh Foot, who had now got over the Paſs, and were advancing bravely towards the Iriſh, tho' they were double their Number. When theſe two Bodies were got almoſt within Muſquet-ſhot of one another, the Enemy diſcover'd the left Wing of the Engliſh Houſe moving towards them; at which they made a ſudden Halt, fac'd fac'd about, and retreated up the Hill to a Village call'd Dunmore, about half a Mile from the Paſs; the Engliſh marching in good order, came up with them in this Village, when the Iriſh facing about, charg'd them ſo briskly, that they made the Engliſh Horſe give ground, tho' they had the King at the Head of them; who was ſo aſham'd of their Shrinking, that he rid off to the Inniskillinners, and ask'd them, what they would do for him? Their chief Officers told them, it was King William, who was doing them the Honour to head them. Upon this they boldly came forward, and, the King leading them, receiv'd the Enemy's Fire; but then his Majeſty wheeling to the left, to fetch up his own Men again, the Inniskillinners, thro' a Miſtake, retir'd after him above 100 Yards, which made the King move to the left, to put himſelf at the Head of ſome Dutch Troops that were advancing; while, in the mean time, the Inniskillinners growing ſenſible of their Error, went on and renew'd their Charge with good Succeſs. Thus, in this Part of the Action, his Majeſty was firſt bogg'd in paſſing the Ford; then left by the Engliſh Horſe, and then by the Inniskillinners, thro' a Miſtake, which threw him into more Perils than any one elſe had met with in the whole Courſe of the Fight. When he put himſelf at the Head of the Dutch Troops laſt mention'd, Duke Schomberg's Regiment of Horſe, made up of French Refugees, behav'd with undaunted Reſolution. At the ſame time, another Party, commanded by Lieut. Gen Ginkle, charg'd in a Lane to the left, but was ſoon overpower'd by the Iriſh, and forc'd to give ground; which being obſerv'd by a Party of Sir Albert Cunningham's Dragoons, and another of Colonel Leviſon's; the Officers order'd their Men to alight and line a Hedge, and alſo an old Houſe that flank'd the Lane, from whence they pour'd in their Shot upon the Enemy, and did great Service by protecting General Ginkle, who continu'd in the Rear of his Men, and labour'd ſtrenuouſly to make them ſtand their ground and give the Dutch Horſe an opportunity to rally; by which means, after half an Hour's ſharp Diſpute, the Iriſh were beaten back again with conſiderable loſs on their ſide.

Heads the Inniskillin Men.

Hamilton the Traitor behav'd that Day with a Gallantry that was much ſuperior to his Character, and finding his Foot did not anſwer his Expectation, he put himſelf at the Head of the Iriſh Horſe, which were alſo routed, and himſelf taken Priſoner: when he was brought to the King, his Majeſty ask'd him, Whether the Iriſh would fight any more? Yes, Sir, reply'd Hamilton, upon my Honour I believe they will. When he pronounc'd the Word Honour, the King look'd wiſtly upon him, and then turn'd about, repeating once or twice Your Honour; intimating that what he aſſur'd him upon his Honour, was not to be depended on, ſince he had forfeited that before by ſiding with Tyrconnel. In the mean time, Count Schomberg being inform'd of his Father's Death, purſu'd the Enemy with all the Fury that a noble and juſt Reſentment could inſpire, and drove the Iriſh ſeveral Miles beyond the Village of Duleck, with great Slaughter; nor did he deſiſt from ſacrificing Enemies to his Father's Ghoſt, till the Earl of Portland, by the King's expreſs Command, oblig'd him to return to the Place, where the Foot made a Halt, and lay upon their Arms all Night.

The Traytor Hamilton taken.

The King's Saying to him.

Count Schomberg revenges his Father's Death.

As ſoon as Lieutenant-General Hamilton was taken, the Fight ceas'd on the ſide of the Iriſh, and Count Lauzun making up to King James, who ſaw the whole Action from Dunmore-hill, ſoon perſuaded him to retreat with Sarsfield's Regiment towards Dublin, while Lauzun, Sheldon, and other Officers diſpos'd all things for the Retreat of their Army; which they made in the better Order, for that their Forces were not much diminiſh'd in the Battle. They had but 1500 Men kill'd, among whom were the Earl of Carlingford, the Lord Dungan, Sir Neal O-Neal, and the Chevalier d'Hocquincourt. Of the Engliſh, about 500 were ſlain; but the Death of Duke Schomberg was ſtill a much greater Loſs, and very much abated the Joy of the Engliſh for the glorious Victory their King and their Deliverer had obtain'd over his and their Enemies. His Majeſty receiv'd no manner of Hurt in the Battle, tho' he was in the hotteſt of it; only a Cannon-ball carry'd away a piece of his Boot. He did all the greateſt of Generals could do on this occaſion. He choſe the Field, he diſpos'd the Attacks, drew up his Army, charg'd the Enemy ſeveral times, ſupported his Forces when they began to ſhrink, and demean'd himſelf throughout with that Conduct, Courage, and Preſence of Mind, and was ſuch a Poize for inclining the Victory to his own ſide, that the Iriſh themſelves confeſt, If the Engliſh chang'd Kings with them, they would fight the Battle over again.

King William's gallant and wiſe Conduct in the Battle.

Father Orleans, in his Deſcription of this Fight, is ſo ſhamefully falſe and partial, that he is not to be read with Patience: he ſays, King William had 45000 Men, which is 9000 more than he had; and King James but 20000, which is 15000 leſs than he had; that King William had 60 Pieces of heavy Cannon, and King James but 12, a like Falſity in proportion; and that Lauzun and Sheldon made an orderly and honourable Retreat by the Confuſion the Engliſh were in upon their Victory. There's more Appearance of Truth in what he adds of the Blame laid to both King William and King James.

F. Orleans's Hiſtory falſe.

" Both Parties blame one another for not making " an Advantage, the one of their Victory, the other " of their Retreat.

" Thoſe who write for the Prince of Orange, " condemn the King for leaving Ireland too ſoon; " and thoſe that ſtaid behind, for having ill brought " together the Remains of a Rout, wherein they " had loſt but few Men."

What he ſays of Blame laid to King William and King James.

This Blame does not ſeem to be ſo well grounded as what follows; for the Duke of Berwick and the French Generals retreated to what Places they pleas'd, without farther Loſs, and by the next Campaign had as good an Army in the Field as King William's was.

" Thoſe on King James's ſide, continues the Je- " ſuit, charge the Prince with not purſuing his Vic- " tory; with coming late to Dublin, an open Place " without any Defence; and with giving the King's " Forces time to rally at Limerick, Galway, and " other ſtrong Towns, which they held out againſt " him, and protracted the War."

But to this may be ſaid, that beſides King William's certain Information of an Attempt intended from the French Fleet, which probably was diſappointed by an Aſſaſſin's miſſing his Blow on his Perſon; for what elſe can Orleans mean, where he ſays King James thought of a Diverſion which would have ſet the Prince of Orange hard, had not one only Circumſtance, whereon it depended, diſappointed it? King William had at heart the War in Flanders, and wanted to be in England to have it nearer at hand, his Majeſty not doubting but the Buſineſs of Ireland, after King James's Rout at the Boyne, might be as well done by his Generals as by himſelf in Perſon.

K. James ſees the Fight at a diſtance.

King James, after his Rout, poſted to Dublin, where he aſſembled the Magiſtrates and Town-Council, to whom he made a Speech, in which he complain'd, that his Engliſh Army were Traytors, and his Iriſh Army Cowards; that he would never venture himſelf among them any more, and tho' ſome were for firing the City, he could not conſent to it, and would have them neither burn nor plunder it.

K. James abuſes his Iriſh Army.

One would think ſuch Advice was not neceſſary for the Perſons he ſpoke to, the Citizens of Dublin, but he knew beſt what ſort of Creatures they were. He lay there one Night, and the next Morning, attended by the Duke of Berwick, Tyrconnel, Mr. Fitz-James, a French Marquiſs, and the Marquiſs of Powis, continu'd his Flight to Waterford, taking care to have the Bridges every where broken down behind him, for fear of being purſu'd. At Waterford he went aboard a French Ship, call'd the Count de Lauzun, which was ready to receive him. But the Sieur Foran, who commanded a Squadron, meeting him at Sea, deſir'd him to go on board one of his Frigates for a quicker and ſafer Paſſage, which he comply'd with, and got ſafely into France, where he fix'd his Reſidence once more at St. Germains.

As ſoon as King James was gone, all the conſiderable Papiſts fled from Dublin, and the Proteſtants being releas'd, poſſeſs'd themſelves of the Militia Arms, and with the Aſſiſtance of the Biſhops of Meath and Limerick, form'd a Committee to take care of Things, and ſent Letters to King William, to give him an Account of what had paſs'd, and humbly to pray his Majeſty to honour that City with his Preſence. The Duke of Ormond, and Monſ. Overkirk, that Duke's Uncle, were detach'd with nine Troops of Horſe to ſecure the City, three Days after the Battle. Drogheda ſurrender'd at Summons, on as good Conditions as the Garriſon could expect, leaving all their Arms and Stores behind them. On the 4th of July, his Majeſty, with the whole Army, encamp'd at Finglaſs, where he was inform'd that King James had got off by Shipping at Waterford, and that there were ſeveral French Ships arriv'd at Kinſale, to take as many of the Runaways aboard as could get to them; that Wexford had declar'd for him, 300 of the Swiſs in the French Service deſerted; and that the Remains of the Iriſh Army were gathering together about Athlone.

On the 6th of July, being Sunday, his Majeſty made his publick Entry into Dublin, and going directly to St. Patrick's Church, heard an excellent Sermon preach'd by Dr. King, late Archbiſhop of that See. The next Day he iſſued a Proclamation to aſſure all ſuch Iriſh, as ſubmitted, of his Protection, and threatening condign Puniſhment to all ſuch as ſtood out in their deſperate Rebellion.

The King decamp'd from Finglaſs, July 9, and divided his Army into two Bodies. Himſelf march'd with the greater to Grumlin, three Miles from Dublin; and the other, conſiſting of four Regiments of Horſe, two of Dragoons, and ten of Foot, was ſent towards Athlone, under the Command of Lieutenant-General Douglaſs, who ſummon'd that Place the 17th of July; but Colonel Grace, the Governor, one of the Wild-Iriſh, as they call them, fir'd a Piſtol at the Drummer, and ſaid, Theſe are the only Terms I am for. Upon this rude Anſwer, Douglaſs reſolv'd to make a general Aſſault, and had made ſome Progreſs towards it; when, having Information that Sarsfield was advancing with 15000 Men, to relieve the Place, and his Horſe wanting Forage, he broke up the Siege.

The King having left Brigadier Trelawney to command in Dublin, march'd with his Army towards Kilkenny, where he was ſplendidly entertain'd by the Duke of Ormond, then untainted in his Principles and Character. The Count de Lauzun had taken his Quarters in the Duke's Caſtle, and had ſpar'd both that and all things in it, which he intended to make uſe of himſelf. On the 21ſt of July, the Army march'd to Carrick, from whence Major-General Kirk, with his own Regiment, and Col. Brewer's, as alſo a Party of Horſe, was ſent towards Waterford, where were two Regiments in Garriſon, who ſurrender'd on honourable Terms. The Fort of Duncannon, which commanded Waterford River, ſurrender'd alſo. His Majeſty went to view the Town, July 25, and granted a particular Protection to the Lord Dover, who had before apply'd himſelf by Major-General Kirk, when the King was at Hilsborough, to deſire a Paſs for himſelf and Family to Flanders. The Lord George Howard did here alſo accept of his Majeſty's Mercy.

When the King was in thoſe Parts, and paſſing by the Neſs, he found a Soldier robbing a poor Woman; at which he was ſo enrag'd, that he beat him firſt with his Cane, and then commanded that both he and ſome others, who had been guilty of the like Crime, ſhould be hang'd the Monday following; the good Effect of which Severity ſhew'd the Baſeneſs and Ignorance of thoſe that cenſur'd it, for the Soldiers committed no farther Violence in that March. *A.D.*1690

The News of the Defeat of our Fleet in the Channel by the French, and ſome Apprehenſion of the ill Conſequences of it in England, were very probably the true Cauſe of the King's leaving the Camp the 27th of July, in order to embark for England; but on freſh Advices from thence, he ſoon return'd to form the Siege of Limerick. He came to the Army at Golden Bridge the 4th of Auguſt. From thence he march'd to Carrigallis within five Miles of Limerick, and was there join'd by Lieutenant-General Douglaſs. The next Morning, Auguſt 8, the Earl of Portland and Brigadier Stewart were detach'd with 900 Horſe and 1200 Foot towards the Town, and advanced within Cannon-ſhot with little Oppoſition. In the Evening, the King himſelf, attended by Prince George, Monſieur Auverquerque, Lieutenant-General Ginkle, and ſeveral other General Officers, with about 200 Horſe, went to view the Poſture of the Enemy. On the 9th, the whole Army decamp'd, and made their Approaches in excellent Order, driving the Enemy before them till they came to a narrow Paſs between two Boggs, within half a Mile of the Town, where the Iriſh Horſe made a Stand, and the Hedges were lin'd with Musketeers; but Colonel Erle led on his Foot with incredible Bravery, and continu'd this Hedge-Fight for two Hours, till he had driven the Iriſh under the very Walls of the Town, and poſſeſs'd himſelf of two advantageous Poſts, call'd Cromwel's Fort and the Old Chappel: which Action promis'd better Succeſs to the Siege than it met with, and was the moſt glorious one in the Progreſs of it. The Army being well poſted, the King ſent a Trumpeter with a Meſſage to the Town. A great many of the Garriſon were for capitulating; but Monſieur Boiſſeleau, the French Governor, the Duke of Berwick, and Colonel Sarsfield, warmly oppos'd it, ſaying, There is by this time an actual Inſurrection in England, the Dauphin is landed there with a great Army, and the Prince of Orange will be quickly oblig'd to withdraw his Forces. Upon which, Boiſſeleau ſent the Trumpeter back with a Letter, directed to Sir Robert Southwell Secretary of State, to avoid owning the Title of King, importing, That he was ſurpriz'd at the Summons, but he thought the beſt way of gaining the Prince of Orange*'s good Opinion, was, in a vigorous Defence of the Town, which his Maſter had committed to his Truſt.* Col. Erle's Bravery.

About eight in the Evening, the King went to his Camp a little Mile from the Town, having been on Horſeback from Five in the Morning, giving the neceſſary Orders, and expoſing himſelf amidſt the greateſt Dangers. Nor was he ſafe in his Tent, for ſeveral Deſerters having given the Enemy an Account of the Situation of it, they play'd ſo briskly that way, that his Majeſty was at laſt prevail'd with to remove. One of thoſe Deſerters was a Gunner, who inform'd the Iriſh, that the Engliſh Train, with ſtore of Powder, was on the Road from Kilkenney under a ſmall Guard.

On the 21ſt of Auguſt, Manus O-Brian, an honeſt Country Gentleman, came to the Camp, and gave notice that Sarsfield, with a Party of 5 or 600 Horſe and Dragoons, had in the Night paſs'd the Shannon nine Miles above Limerick, and deſign'd ſomething extraordinary; but there was little Heed given to what the Gentleman ſaid, tho' highly probable; and a certain great Officer, inſtead of inquiring more nicely into the Circumſtances of the Matter, interrogated O-Brian about a Booty of Cattle in the Neighbourhood, of which Manus afterwards

A.D.1690 wards complain'd and ſaid, He was ſorry to ſee General Officers mind Cattle more than the King's Honour. O-Brian being at length introduc'd to the King, his Majeſty order'd Sir John Lanier with 500 Horſe to march and meet the Train. Whatever was the occaſion of it, it was about two in the Morning before the Party ſet out, and even then advanc'd ſlowly, till ſeeing a Light in the Air, and hearing a great rumbling Noiſe, they juſtly conjectur'd the Train was blown up. For the Artillery having the Day before march'd beyond Cullen to the old ruinous Caſtle of Baltenedy about ſeven Miles from the Camp, Sarsfield lurk'd all that Day in the Mountains, and being inform'd how Things lay, he had Guides that directed him to the very Spot; where falling upon the Guard before they were aware, he cut ſeveral of them in pieces, with many of the Waggoners, and ſome Country People who were carrying Proviſions to the Camp. The Engliſh commanding Officer ſeeing how it was, made a fruitleſs Reſiſtance, moſt of the Men that endeavour'd to fetch their Horſes from grazing were ſlaughter'd, and the reſt ſhifted for themſelves as well as they could. The Convoy being totally routed, the Iriſh gather'd the Carriages and Waggons, with the Bread and Ammunition, and as many of the Guns as the ſhortneſs of the Time would allow, into one Heap, and having fill'd the Guns with Powder, and put their Mouths in the Ground that they might ſplit, they ſet fire to the Heap, which preſently blew up. An Engliſh Lieutenant of Erle's, being taken and ſtrip'd, was brought to Sarsfield, who us'd him civilly, and told him, If he had not ſucceeded in that Enterprize, he would have gone for France. And indeed nothing but this Ill-Accident cou'd in human probability have hinder'd the taking of Limerick, and conſequently the reducing of Ireland that Campaign. Sir John Lanier's Party came up in ſight of Sarsfield's Rear after the Buſineſs was done; but wheeling to the left, to intercept them in their Retreat over the Shannon, the Iriſh paſt another way, and got ſafe into Limerick.

Sarsfield ſurprizes and routs the Convoy, and deſtroys the Artillery and Stores.

The News of this Adventure was very unwelcome in the Camp, and occaſion'd Murmurings which were too well-grounded. For it is very plain, due Care was not taken of ſecuring the Train, notwithſtanding the Information given by O-Brian; and too much depended upon it, to risk any thing, if it could have been prevented. This was not more inglorious to the Engliſh, than it was glorious to Sarsfield, who got more Honour, and did his Maſter more Service by that Enterprize, than all the other Iriſh or French Generals did him in the courſe of that War. Duke Schomberg the Son, had ſome hot Words with the Earl of Portland and Count Solms, as if they had been negligent in not ſending a Detachment time enough to ſecure the Train.

Siege of Limerick. In the mean time the Siege went on, and the Trenches being open'd on the 17th, when ſome great Guns were brought from Waterford; a Battery was rais'd below the Fort to the right of the Trenches, which diſmounted ſome of the Enemies Cannon. The ſame Day the Duke of Wirtemberg, with the Major-Generals Kirk and Tetteau, and Brigadier Stewart, with ſeven Battallions enter'd the Trenches, advanc'd 300 Paces, and maſter'd two Redoubts.

On the 18th, the Trenches were reliev'd by Lieutenant-General Douglas, Count Naſſau and Brigadier Stewart, and the King himſelf riding in the thickeſt of the Enemy's Fire to Cromwell's Fort, as his Horſe was juſt entring into the Gap, he was ſtop'd by a Gentleman who came to ſpeak with him; when at the Inſtant a Cannon-Ball fell in that very Place, and did no other Harm than beating the Duſt all about the King; who took little Notice of it, but alighting, went and laid himſelf down on the Fort. On the 20th the Beſiegers attack'd a Redoubt of the Enemy's, and took it after an obſtinate Fight, putting 40 of them to the Sword. About half an Hour after, the Iriſh made a Sally with 2000 Horſe and Foot, but were vigorouſly repuls'd. All the Batteries being now finiſh'd, the Trenches advanc'd within 30 Paces of the Ditch, a Breach made in the Wall near St. John's Gate, and part of the Palliſadoes on the Counterſcarp beaten down; the King, on the 27th, commanded the Cover'd Way or Counterſcarp, which here was almoſt the ſame with the Ditch, and two Towers or Forts that were on each ſide of the Breach, and contiguous to the Wall, to be attack'd; and that the Men ſhould advance no farther, but make a Lodgment there. About half an Hour after three the Signal was given, and the Granadiers in the farthermoſt Angle of the Trenches, leap'd over and ran towards the Counterſcarp, firing their Pieces and throwing their Granadoes; which alarm'd the Iriſh, who now fir'd both great and ſmall Shot as faſt as they could. However Capt. Carliſle of the Earl of Drogheda's Regiment, ran on with his Granadiers to the Counterſcarp, and though he was twice wounded between that and the Trenches, he went bravely on, and was there ſlain. This Gentleman had been an Actor, and had alſo written for the Stage, but was not more fam'd for any of his Poetry, than for a Ballad he made and ſet to Muſick, beginning thus, King James with his rakehelly Rabble of Rogues, &c. which was ſung by almoſt every Officer and Soldier in the Army. His Lieutenant continuing to encourage the Men, boldly mounted the Counterſcarp, and all the reſt of the Granadiers doing the like, the Iriſh threw down their Arms and ran as faſt as they cou'd into the Town; which the Engliſh perceiving, they enter'd the Place pell-mell with them, and had certainly carry'd it, had not the Regiments who were to ſecond the Granadiers upon the Counterſcarp, ſtopp'd there, as indeed they were order'd to do. And this ſhews us that in Actions of War, the wiſeſt General cannot foreſee Things ſo well, but the regular keeping to the Letter of his Orders, will often be of fatal Conſequence. The Iriſh were all running from the Walls quite over into the Engliſh Town; but ſeeing ſo few of the Engliſh were enter'd, they rally'd again, fac'd the Aſſailants, and ply'd them ſo warmly, that ſeveral of them were kill'd, and many mortally wounded. The Enemy fluſh'd with this Succeſs, ventur'd on the Breach again; and ſo great was the Reſoluteneſs even of their Women, that they continually pelted the Engliſh with Stones, broken Bottles, and all the deſtructive Inſtruments that came next to their Hands. The Men on their part could not for ſhame be leſs Valiant, inſomuch that after three Hours unequal Fighting, the Engliſh were forc'd to retire to their Trenches. But this was not the only Misfortune, for during the heat of this Action, a Brandenburgh Regiment, having with much Bravery got upon the Enemies black Battery, when the Powder happen'd to take fire, it blew up a great many of them. Beſides, tho' Col. Cutts, who was commanded by the Duke of Wirtemberg to march towards the Spur at the South-Gate, beat in the Iriſh; yet he loſt ſeveral of his Men, and was himſelf wounded, for he boldly advanc'd within half Musket-ſhot of the Gate; all his Men being expos'd to the Enemy's fire, who lay ſafe within the Spur and the Walls. The French Refugees, Dutch and Danes, behav'd bravely during the whole Action, which laſted from three till ſeven, was very briſk in all Places, and coſt the Beſiegers 600 Men kill'd on the Spot, and about as many mortally wounded. A.D.1690

The King in great Danger.

The King, who ſtood nigh Cromwel's Fort, when the Buſineſs was over, return'd to the Camp very much concern'd at the Diſappointment, as indeed the whole Army was, where an Intermixture of Anger and Sorrow might be diſcern'd in ev'ry body's Countenance; which promiſing but ill if the

Siege

A. D. 1690 Siege rais'd.

Siege continu'd, it was thought fit to raiſe it the 30th of Auguſt. And his Majeſty having appointed the Lord Sidney and the Lord Conningsby, Lords Juſtices of Ireland; and entruſted the Command of the Army with Count Solms, who ſoon after reſign'd it to Lieutenant-General Ginkle; himſelf with the Prince of Denmark, and other Perſons of Quality, embark'd at Duncannon Fort on the 4th of September, and the next Day arriv'd in King's-Road near Briſtol. His Majeſty coming a-ſhoar, lay that Night at King's-Weſton, Sir Robert Southwell's Houſe; on Sunday he went to Bath, and lay at the Duke of Beaufort's at Badmiſter; the next Night at the Duke of Somerſet's at Marlborough; the next Night at Windſor, and the next Day about four in the Afternoon came to Kenſington; where he order'd a Commiſſion to be prepar'd for proroguing the Parliament to the 2d of October, and a Proclamation to give Notice, that on that Day he expected a full Attendance of the Lords and Commons.

Queen Mary's prudent and reſolute Conduct.

The Queen, who had the Adminiſtration in England, had more upon her hands than the King expected ſhe wou'd have had: for tho' he wanted not Information of the Deſigns of his Enemies in England, in concert with thoſe of France; yet he reaſonably hop'd that there wou'd be a ſufficient ſtrength at Sea to prevent the Execution of them. Four Days before he ſet out for Ireland, he publiſh'd a Proclamation for the apprehending ſeveral diſaffected Perſons, who by Information given upon Oath, had conſpir'd together to raiſe Rebellion, and for that Purpoſe had made Proviſion of Arms, and had liſted themſelves in ſeveral Regiments, Troops and Companies, under pretence of Commiſſions from the late King James. The Flag-Officers and other Officers of the Fleet, upon a Rumour that ſome of them had been practis'd upon by the Jacobites, ſent up a very Loyal Addreſs, acknowledging their Majeſties King William and Queen Mary, to be undoubted Rightful King and Queen, and promiſing with their Lives to defend and aſſiſt them againſt the late King James, his Adherents, and all their Enemies; which was very ſeaſonable and acceptable. As ſoon as her Majeſty heard the King was landed in Ireland, ſhe began to exerciſe the Power veſted in her by Parliament, and iſſu'd two Proclamations; the one commanding all Papiſts and reputed Papiſts, forthwith to depart the Cities of London and Weſtminſter: The other for confining them within five Miles of their reſpective Dwellings. For the Jacobites, ſo King William's Enemies began now to be denominated, had promis'd that while Part of the French Fleet bore up the Thames, they would make an Inſurrection, and ſeize the Queen and her Chief Miniſters. Upon which ſome of their Leaders were to aſſume the Government till the Return of the late King, who was to make what haſte he could to England. The other Part of the French Fleet having join'd their Gallies, was to have landed 8000 Men at Torbay, with Arms for a greater Number, with a View of being join'd by the diſaffected in the Weſt, whoſe Numbers had been lately increas'd by the Infuſions of their Clergy, who repreſented to them that the Proteſtant Church of England would be deſtroy'd, unleſs they call'd in French and Iriſh Papiſts to their Aſſiſtance. This being done, the Gallies and Men of War were to ſail into the Iriſh Sea, to hinder the Return of King William and his Forces; and the diſcontented Scots were to have revolted at the ſame time in ſeveral Parts of that Kingdom. But all theſe Dreams had a main Dependance on Jones the Aſſaſſin's Negotiations before ſpoken of.

The Plots againſt King William and Queen Mary in the Year 1690.

The French Fleet having, as before concerted, enter'd the Channel, hover'd ſome time about the Coaſt of England, expecting the Effect of the Conſpiracy, which was to have broke out the 18th of June.

This Conſpiracy was carried on by the ſame Party that took the Name of the Church, immediately upon the talk of performing the Biſhops and Clergy's Promiſes in favour of Proteſtant Diſſenters. 'Tis a miſerable Thing to write Hiſtory to a Nation that are not honeſt or wiſe enough to be pleas'd with Truth, if it is not in the Livery that pleaſes them: And what I am going to ſay will be another of thoſe Parts of mine, which theſe good Engliſhmen and good Criticks will call Partial, as well as it is circumſtantiated and prov'd.

A. D. 1690 Carry'd on by High Church.

A little before King William went for Ireland, the Nonjurors and Jacobites had a general Meeting, I will not ſay at Lambeth, as ſome Authors do, becauſe I don't think Archbiſhop Sancroft, then under Suſpenſion, wou'd buſy himſelf ſo far in ſuch Counſels; but in or near London, where ſeveral of their Clergy aſſiſted, and drew up a Form of Prayer to ſanctify their treaſonable Purpoſes. A large Account was given in a Treatiſe, publiſh'd at that very Time, entitul'd, A Modeſt Enquiry into the Cauſes of the Preſent Diſaſters in England; and who they are that brought the French Fleet into the Engliſh Channel, deſcrib'd. I ſhall content myſelf with an Abridgment of it.

They have a Treaſonable Meeting.

State-Tracts. Vol. II. p. 95.

The laſt Head of this Treatiſe, is the Behaviour of the French Faction, uſurping the Name of the True Church, towards King William and Queen Mary, their Plots againſt their Perſons and Government, in which will be ſeen how much theſe Men value the Safety of our Church, and the Peace of the Kingdom; how Conſcience was concern'd in their refuſing to take the Oaths to a Prince whom they wou'd baſely have murder'd: What a ſhare the Love of their Country had in their Conſpiracies, which tended all to betray it to France, where thoſe Conſpiracies were always either contriv'd or directed, that Court being ſo baſe as to engage in the moſt bloody of them, as will be ſhewn in the Sequel of this Hiſtory. As ſoon as the Throne was declar'd Vacant, and fill'd with King William, ſome of the greateſt Sticklers for the Revolution fell off from thoſe Principles, and eſpous'd thoſe that had occaſion'd it. When I mention the Clergy, tho' it be in general, I deſire to be underſtood to mean only the Nonjurors and their Abettors, ſuch as Sacheverel, Higgons, T—p, Hereditary-Right Bedford, Cook, Snat, and Collier, the Frantick Betty, and the Infamous Earbury. Theſe Men, or moſt of them, began their Oppoſition to the Government, by raiſing a fooliſh Diſtinction of De Facto and De Jure, by mocking God in their Pulpits, and praying for King James and his Queen Mary, uſing general Terms, the King and Queen; when the Law enjoin'd them, and moſt of them had ſworn to pray for King William and Queen Mary, by making an accurſed Schiſm in the Church, and forming a New Liturgy, in which among other ſuch Holy Collects is this: Reſtore us again the Publick Worſhip of thy Name, the Reverend Adminiſtration of thy Sacraments, raiſe up the former Government both in Church and State, that we may be no longer without King, without Prieſt, and without God in the World. I refer myſelf here to all thoſe that call me Partial, and demand of them to anſwer me ſeriouſly, whether they themſelves do not believe that Dr. Jane, Dr. Aldrich, and all thoſe Convocation-Men that fruſtrated King William, the Biſhops, and the more wiſe and pious Part of the Clergy's Deſigns for a Union among all Engliſh Proteſtants, would not have ſaid Amen to this Collect, notwithſtanding the Oaths they had taken.

Their Traitorous and Impious Practices.

Their Liturgy.

Their Prayer for King James, is of the ſame Spirit and Sanctity, and mingles theſe horrid Execrations with the Worſhip of the Church:

Their Blaſphemous Prayers.

Send forth thy Light and Truth, and let them preſerve us, protect and defend our Sovereign Lord the King. O prepare thy loving Mercy and Faithfulneſs,

A.D.1690 fulneſs, that they may preſerve him. Strengthen his Hands and the Hands of all that are put in Authority under him, with Judgment and Juſtice to cut off all ſuch Workers of Iniquity, as turn Religion into Rebellion, and Faith into Faction; the Jingle of the Tory Addreſſes to the two Popiſh Brothers, King Charles and King James II. That they may never prevail againſt us, or triumph in the Ruin of thy Church; to this end defend the King, bind up his Soul in the bundle of Life, and let no Weapon form'd againſt him proſper. Be unto him a Helmet of Salvation, and a ſtrong Tower of Defence againſt the Face of his Enemies. Let his Reign be proſperous and his Days many; and make him glad according to the Days wherein thou haſt afflicted him, and for the Years wherein thou haſt made him ſuffer Adverſity. Give him the Necks of his Enemies, and alſo every Day more and more the Hearts of his Subjects. As for thoſe that are implacable, cloath them with Shame, but upon himſelf and his Poſterity let the Crown flouriſh; wou'd not here too have been another Amen from the ſame Chorus? About 10000 of this New Liturgy were printed and diſpers'd by the Faction; it was us'd daily in their Fanatical Conventicles, and a great part of their Old Service, ſometimes all, laid aſide. By theſe and the like deteſtable Means, were unthinking Wretches ſet againſt the Government, which, as their Prieſts taught, was Uſurpation, and the Conſtitution a Rebellion. The hot Men amongſt them, were animated in carrying on Deſigns to deſtroy it, and a fair Opportunity was thought to have offer'd in the Year 1690. when the Conſpirators, Clergy and Laity, ſent a Memorial to the French King, to invite him to ſend a Fleet and Army to their Aſſiſtance. I ſhall only hint ſome remarkable Paſſages of it, and refer to the State-Tracts for the whole.

They invite the French to invade England.

They themſelves acknowledge the League between the French King and King James, where they tell King Lewis, It is in your Royal Arms and Bounty we propoſe our Hope and Confidence, and expect to ſee our lawful King, your ancient Friend and Ally, reſtor'd to the Rightful Throne of his Anceſtors, out of which wicked Men have thruſt him. They go on with their Inſtances, by telling him how happily ſuch an Enterprize would be then tim'd, and what he ſhou'd do to effect it. The Prince of Orange, ſay theſe Churchmen, as they call'd themſelves, is juſt now on his Journey to Ireland, and being once arriv'd in that Kingdom, if your Majeſty's Fleet were able to block up St. George's Channel, the Uſurper's Army would certainly be ſtarv'd. His Regiments in England, ſerve more out of Neceſſity and Fear than any Love to him; and thoſe Forces ſo few, they are ſcarce able to keep the uſual Guards. The Engliſh Fleet is ſo divided, that they cannot this Year make any conſiderable Figure. Killigrew is in the Straits; Shovel, in St. George's Channel; the Dutch Squadron not ready; the Engliſh Ships ill-mann'd, the Seamen diſcontented for want of Pay, &c. The Faction pretended this Memorial was not genuine. It is not worth enquiring whether the Memorial was the very ſame, Word for Word, which was deliver'd to the French King; but moſt certain it is, that at that Time, theſe ſtaunch Churchmen did invite the greateſt and moſt cruel Perſecutor of the true Chriſtian Religion, to invade this Proteſtant Kingdom. The Sum of this Memorial was, Panegyricks, on the French King's Victories by Sea and Land; there was ſcarce one of his Panegyriſts, but told him, His glorious and invincible Arms, (Where were ye then O Blenheim! O Ramelies! O Turin! O Oudenard! and other Fields, the Witneſſes of his future Routs and Diſgraces?) were the only Sanctuary of the oppreſs'd Engliſh; that his Royal Ear had been open to the Groans and Cries of that Nation, and he had now rais'd himſelf up to give them an Anſwer to their Prayers. Monſieur de Meſme, a Counſellor of State, and Nephew to the Count d'Avaux, ſays plainly, in an Oration pronounc'd before the French Academy, Even the Engliſh Hugonots themſelves, tho' they know the Averſion our Royal Monarch has to their Religion, have addreſs'd their Prayers to him, as the only Sanctuary of the oppreſs'd. And the Cardinal de Bouillon, in a Memorial he deliver'd to the Court of Rome, concerning his Maſter the French King's Proceedings with the Duke of Savoy, very frankly told the Pope, That Lewis the Great was neceſſitated to demand Securities from the Duke of Savoy, that he might not leave a Gap open to his Enemies on that Side, at a time when he was to ſend ſo great a Part of his Forces towards Britain; to which he was oblig'd, not only from the Alliance between him and his Britannick Majeſty, but likewiſe from the re-iterated Prayers of that King's Subjects of both Religions.

A.D.1690 Prov'd againſt them by the French themſelves.

King William's Enemies had ſome other Reaſon, for inviting the French over at that Juncture, they are ſpecify'd by a Modern Hiſtorian.

" The Jacobite Clergy knew how buſy they had been to buz into the Ears of all People they had any Intereſt with, Jealouſies of the Government, and the Reaſonableneſs of calling back a Prince, that was by an unalterable Divine Right their King; they knew how buſy they had been in every Corner, to whiſper the great and heavy Taxes the Kingdom lay under in this Reign, and how greatly Trade was decay'd; The very Cant of the Murmurers, now after above 40 Years vain uſe of it. They knew the Diſſenters had of late been diſoblig'd by continuing the Sacramental Teſt, and the 500*l.* Penalty, with ſome other Things that ſeem'd very hard, conſidering their hearty Affection to King William's Government. They knew that the Moderate Part of the Church of England, call'd Whiggs, had met with ſome Mortifications of late, in the Elections for Parliament, but more eſpecially in the Choice of the Lieutenancy of London; of which more preſently." And that conſequently the Zeal of thoſe Men in the Defence of a Government, by which they thought themſelves ill-us'd, muſt be much cool'd, and the Buſineſs of its Enemies made the more eaſy. S. H. E. p. 276.

Whigs had ſome Cauſe for Diſguſt.

Purſuant to the Invitation of theſe Traitors, the French Fleet being enter'd the Channel, made ſtreight for the Iſle of Wight, where the Engliſh Fleet were to rendezvous; and if it had arriv'd but ſome few Days before, there wou'd not have been 20 Engliſh Ships together at that Place. So near had the King and Kingdom's Enemies in England brought us to Ruin, that when our Fleet was become pretty ſtrong, yet if Heaven had not turn'd the Wind in a Moment, the Ships we had there, wou'd probably have been all burnt at Anchor. The French Fleet paſſing in ſight of Weymouth, the Mayor of that Town did very wiſely diſpatch two Expreſſes, one for the Queen, another for the Earl of Torrington the Admiral: But the Wind blowing a fair freſh Gale, the French Fleet of 84 Sail of ſtout Men of War, had certainly been admidſt the Engliſh, about half that Number, before the Weymouth Expreſs could poſſibly reach Portſmouth, if the Wind had continu'd fair a few Hours longer, as it was when they appear'd off Portland. The Engliſh Fleet's being in this imminent and almoſt inevitable Hazard, and the French within a few Leagues of them, the Wind in an Inſtant turn'd about, and put a ſtop to their deſign'd eaſy Victory, by obliging them to lie by.

The French Fleet on the Coaſts of England.

Her Majeſty having receiv'd Advice of the French Fleet's being in the Channel, ſent immediate Orders to Admiral Torrington, to fight them whereever he met them, that the Conſpirators might not be under Temptation to ſtir, by the ſight of the Enemy's hovering ſtill upon our Coaſt. Accordingly, on the 24th of June, the Admiral ſail'd from St. Hellens, the Wind at North-Eaſt, and ſtood

*A.D.*1690 towards the French Fleet, which was ſeen the Evening before off Freſh-Water-Gate in the Iſle of Wight; but the Wind taking him ſhort, he came to an Anchor near Dungeneſs, within five Leagues of the Enemy; who at eight next Morning were at Compton-Bay. In the Afternoon, ſeveral Dutch Men of War join'd the Engliſh Fleet, as did ſome other Engliſh Men of War, which had been cruiſing abroad. On the 30th of June, the Day before the Battle of the Boyne, the two Fleets appear'd off Beachy; which, by the way, obviates that Common Miſtake, that the King would not have hazarded a Battle, had he not had Advice in his Pocket of the beating of the Fleet, which he kept ſecret; the ſame falſe Story was told of him with reſpect to the Battle of Mons; that he had Advice in his Pocket of the Peace being concluded at Nimeguen, when he fought. The two Fleets prepar'd for Combat, notwithſtanding the Superiority of the French in Numbers. The Dutch having the Vanguard, about nine in the Morning began the Engagement, as did alſo ſome of the Engliſh; but being not ſeconded by the reſt of the Engliſh Fleet, which unexpectedly ſtood off, ſeveral of the Dutch Ships, after they had fought moſt gallantly, were either burnt, ſunk or diſabled, and the Engliſh far'd not much better; for ſuch as engag'd were very much ſhatter'd, particularly the Anne, Capt. Tyrrel, who behav'd with ſingular Bravery: and had all the Engliſh Captains done their Duty as well as Tyrrel, a good Account had been then given of the French Fleet. The Fight continu'd from Morning till Evening, the Dutch maintaining their Stations with wonderful Reſolution againſt the Enemy's whole Fleet, and had much ado to eſcape being all deſtroy'd.

Beachy Fight.

Among other Officers they loſt, in this unequal Fight, were Rear-Admiral Jan-Dick, Rear-Admiral Brackel, and Capt. Nordel. On the Engliſh ſide were kill'd Capt. Botham, Capt. Pomeroy, and two Captains of Marines. The Behaviour of ſo many other Engliſh Officers, and even of the Admiral himſelf, occaſion'd great Jealouſies and Murmurings. One cannot but clear the Admiral of being any way influenc'd by the Machinations of the Conſpirators, but the Conduct of thoſe Captains of the Engliſh Men of War, who ſtood away at the beginning of the Battle, ſmelt very much like it. 'Twas ſaid in their Excuſe, that a Calm took them, and hinder'd their keeping up with the Dutch, who engag'd with too much Precipitancy: the Fact of the Calm was much queſtion'd, and the Precipitancy of the Dutch, founded only on the Slowneſs or Negligence of the Engliſh. However it be, the Earl of Torrington to quiet the Minds of the People, was brought to a Trial, and pleading the ſuperior Strength of the French, and the Diſadvantage of the Wind, was acquitted by a Council of War. Indeed, when one conſiders that the Lord Torrington, under a Diſgrace, which he thought ſo injurious to his Character and Merit, liv'd above 20 Years after in a ſteady Attachment to Revolution Principles and Government; and that even in the very worſt of Times, the Miniſtry of Mr. Robert Harley, and his Aſſociates, after Sacheverel's Sedition; he made the Noble Earl of Lincoln his Heir, in Conſideration of his firm Adherence to the true Engliſh Intereſt, in Oppoſition to that prevailing Faction; one cannot think a Man of my Lord Torrington's Honour, and good Affection to King William, and the Cauſe which brought him hither, wou'd ſo baſely have betray'd both, in putting the only Victory, the French cou'd ever boaſt of over the Engliſh at Sea, into our Enemy's Hands. However he was remov'd, and Sir Richard Haddock, Henry Killigrew Eſq; and Sir John Aſhby, were appointed Joint-Admirals to command the Fleet. The News of which reaching London, caus'd a terrible and general Conſternation, every one expecting a Deſcent.

Earl of Torrington wrongfully accus'd.

Her Majeſty was not ignorant of the Danger, but did all that was poſſible to conceal her own Apprehenſions, and inſpire her Subjects with Valour and Reſolution. The Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Citizens of London were not wanting at this Critical Juncture, in expreſſing their Zeal and Affections for the Government. For attending her Majeſty in Council, they declar'd the Unanimous Reſolution of the City, to defend and preſerve their Majeſties and their Government, with the hazard of their Lives, and to the utmoſt of their Power; repreſenting to the Queen and Council, that the ſeveral Regiments of the City Militia, conſiſting of 9000 Men, were compleat in their Number, well-arm'd and appointed, and ready to proceed in their Majeſties Service. That the Lieutenancy alſo had reſolv'd, that ſix Regiments of Auxiliaries, making 6000 Men effective, ſhould be rais'd for the Service; and the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council, would alſo raiſe 1000 Dragoons, and maintain them for a Month or longer, if it was requiſite, praying her Majeſty that ſhe would be pleas'd to nominate Officers to command them: all which, her Majeſty moſt graciouſly accepted, and was pleas'd to thank them for their Readineſs, Loyalty, and Zeal on this Occaſion. And to the laſt Part ſhe added, I will conſider of it, and appoint Officers to command, according to your Deſire. *A.D.*1690

The Loyalty and Zeal of the Londoners.

This dutiful and generous Conduct of the City of London, put an end to all Apprehenſions from the French, or the Conſpirators. Thoſe who had the Story of the Battle of Newbury in their Mind, where the London New-rais'd Regiments beat the Old Cavalier Soldiers out of the Field, doubted not but 15000 London Foot, and 1000 Dragoons, would drive their Enemies, French and Jacobites, into the Sea, where they ſo lately boaſted a Triumph.

About the ſame time to ſuppreſs the Fears of a Revolt in the Weſt, an Addreſs was preſented to the Queen by Shadrach Vincent Eſq; from 10000 Tinners of the County of Cornwall; giving all Aſſurances of Fidelity and Obedience, and faithfully promiſing, notwithſtanding the Artifices and Ill Deſigns of diſaffected Men to withdraw them from their Loyalty, an unalterable Allegiance to their Majeſties; owning and acknowledging their Majeſties alone, to be their lawful and rightful King and Queen, and diſclaiming all Allegiance to the late King James, and to the pretended Prince of Wales after him. The Deputy-Lieutenants and Militia Officers of Middleſex and Weſtminſter, made a Solemn Addreſs and Declaration, That they perceiv'd there were many [miſchievous and dangerous Practices, Conſultations and Contrivances of Papiſts, and many others, diſaffected to their Majeſties, and their Government; and that it was moſt notorious that the French King, by Confederacy with the late King and his Adherents, had made a bold Invaſion of their Majeſties Dominion of the Narrow Seas, deſigning to deſtroy their Royal Fleet, and in Conſequence, to bring the Proteſtants of this Kingdom under his Tyranny and cruel Yoke of Bondage; and therefore they hold themſelves bound in Duty, to declare upon this Occaſion, their deep Senſe, Hatred and Abhorrence of the vile Ingratitude of thoſe Papiſts and profeſs'd Proteſtants, who, notwithſtanding their Majeſties pardoning and protecting them, had by Conſpiracies with the late King's Adherents, or by their Murmurings againſt their Majeſties and the preſent Government, or by their refuſal of the Oaths of Fidelity and Obedience to their Majeſties encourag'd, aſſiſted, or abetted the late King, in his Claims and Pretences of any Right and Title to the Government of theſe Realms, &c. Thus it is apparent, that the whole Nation were ſenſible of the Truth of what I have ſuggeſted, that the Faction made up of Non-ſwearing and Falſe-ſwearing Prieſts, and their deluded Followers, had invited the French to

And the Tinners of Cornwall.

High-Church Cauſe and of the intended French Invaſion.

A.D.1690 to invade theſe Kingdoms, and deſtroy the Proteſtants with Sword and Fire, the ſure Effects of French Invaſions.

In the mean time, her Majeſty forgot nothing that the moſt active Prudence could ſuggeſt, as fit to be done without hurry, or a too viſible Concern: She publiſh'd a Proclamation, requiring all Seamen and Mariners to render themſelves to their Majeſties Service, with ſuitable Rewards for coming in, and Penalties for abſenting. She gave out Commiſſions to put the Standing Forces in a condition to oppoſe the Enemy, and order'd the Militia of the Weſtern and Southern Counties to be in a Readineſs to defend the Coaſts and aſſiſt the Army. And now it was, that every one ſaw the miſchievous Conſequence of employing thoſe Perſons, who in the late Reigns had been Addreſſers, Abhorrers, Perſecutors of Diſſenters, Quo-Warranto-Men, and the like: It will be cry'd out againſt as partial, if I call them Tories or High-Church. Let the Reader give them what Name he pleaſes, theſe are the Men I mean; and it was one of theſe, a Deputy-Lieutenant of the County of Suſſex, who was ſuſpected of having been aboard the French Fleet, when he ſhould have been raiſing his Militia to oppoſe the threaten'd Deſcent.

Proof of the Danger of truſting them.

True it is, the People in the Weſt ſhew'd their Readineſs to oppoſe theſe pretended Invaders, which ſoon quaſh'd all the Hopes of the Government's Enemies, and ſtruck them with Terror and Confuſion; there was nothing ſeen in Hampſhire, Dorſet, and Devon, but Troops of Volunteer Horſe marching to the Coaſts, to give the French, if they came, ſuch a Reception, as ſhould have made them pay dearly for their much-bragg'd-of Victory off Beachy. They ſaw nothing on the South, and other Downs, but the Movements of Horſe and Foot, who were on the watch for them; and they ſail'd along the Coaſts, as if they had rather come to view them than to inſult them. They ſent two or three ſmall Craft a-ſhoar, not far from Lime; but the Coaſts thereabouts being well lin'd, they ſheer'd off again, without doing any Miſchief. What they did, was at Tinmouth, a poor Village of Fiſhermen, eaſtward of Torbay, where they ſent ſome Boats aſhoar, and burn'd twenty or thirty thatch'd Houſes, as alſo the Church Bible, and what elſe they thought worthy of their Valour and their Fury; but upon News that the Militia was coming, they ran away to their Boats, made off to their Fleet, as their Fleet made off to Sea, and was no more ſeen but to their Deſtruction two Years after. A Brief being granted to the Fiſhers of Tinmouth, the People throughout England contributed ſo largely to their Loſſes, that if they had not been cheated by the Brief-men, 'tis thought they would have made ten times more of their Brief than their Town was worth; and, as it was, they were far from being Loſers by it. I was a Witneſs of moſt of what is here related of this Appearance of the French off our Coaſts, and am therefore the larger in my Relation.

To check the Inſolence of the Conſpirators, her Majeſty publiſh'd a Proclamation for apprehending Edward Henry Earl of Litchfield, Thomas Earl of Aylesbury, Richard Viſcount Preſton, Sir Robert Thorold, Sir Theophilus Oglethorp, Colonel Edward Sackville, ſtaunch Men all in the new Church Senſe; William Lord Montgomery, Roger Earl of Caſtlemain, Henry Lord Bellaſis, Sir Edward Hales, Sir Robert Hamilton, Lieutenant-Colonel William Richardſon, Major Thomas Soaper, Captain David Lloyd, William Penn, Eſq; Edmund Elliot, Eſq; Marmaduke Langdale, Eſq; and Edward Rutter, Eſq; a horrid Mixture of Papiſts and high-flown Proteſtants, all, as the Proclamation ſays, in a Conſpiracy for an Invaſion from France.

The Queen having put Things into a very good Poſture at home, ſent Mr. Harbord into Holland, to declare to the States how much ſhe was concern'd at the Misfortune, which had befallen their Squadron in the late Engagement, and at their not having been ſeconded as they ought to have been, which Matter her Majeſty had directed to be examin'd into, in order to recompenſe thoſe who had done their Duty, and to puniſh ſuch as ſhould been found to have deſerted it; that ſhe had given Orders for refitting the Dutch Ships, that were diſabled, at her own Charge; and commanded that all poſſible Care ſhould be taken of the Sick and Wounded Seamen; and that Rewards ſhould be given to the Widows of thoſe, that were kill'd, behaving themſelves bravely in the Fight. Such were not only her Majeſty's pious Sentiments, but the Sentiments of all good Proteſtants in the Nation but the Faction; It is partial, it ſeems, to ſay Tories or Jacobites, who, however, are the Men I mean, and were ſo ſtupid, ſo ungrateful and inſolent, as to take pleaſure in the Report of the Loſſes the Dutch ſuffer'd at Sea in Beachy Fight; and one of them, a Lawyer too, whoſe Clients ſure, could not be much the better for either his Underſtanding or Honeſty, had the Impudence to ſay of them on the Royal Exchange, They were well paid off for the Preſent they had ſent us ſome twenty Months ago. Mr. Harbord was order'd to acquaint the States farther, that her Majeſty had given Orders for fitting out forthwith twelve great Ships; and ſhe hop'd the States, on their part, would likewiſe do their utmoſt to reinforce their Fleet in that Conjuncture. And laſtly, ſhe acquainted them with the happy Succeſs of his Majeſty's Arms in Ireland. The States were exceedingly pleas'd with the Meſſage, and unanimouſly reſolv'd to fit out thirteen capital Ships, and ſix Frigats, without Delay; nor was it long before the united Fleets of England and Holland, refitted and reinforc'd, were ready to appear in the Channel, and ſcour thoſe Seas, of which, the French were no longer Maſters than the Time it took to ſail through them in their Return to their Ports, where they thought themſelves ſafe, and therefore ſtaid in them the reſt of the Year, excepting the Cruizers which they ſent out for Plunder.

State Tr. vol. II. p. 103.

At the latter end of Auguſt, the Engliſh Fleet being about to ſet ſail, and having ſome Troops aboard, the French, who had been ſo lately Gaſconading it on the Coaſts of England, were now afraid of their own, and ſo continu'd to be to the end of the War; a long Period of Pain at home, for about three Month's Pleaſure in the Channel; and that too more in Show than Subſtance. The Troops juſt mention'd, were commanded by the Earl of Marborough, and conſiſted of about 4000 Men, with which the Earl landed in Cork Harbour in Ireland the 21ſt of September. The next day 5 or 600 Seamen, and near as many Marines, were employ'd to draw the Cannon along, and to mount them before the Town, which they did with great Chearfulneſs and Bravery, having the Duke of Grafton at their head; tho' two Troops of Dragoons, and a Body of Foot, appear'd without the Town, who, upon the Engliſh firing ſome Field-Pieces, preſently retir'd. My Lord Marborough, immediately after his Landing, ſent Expreſſes, with Advice of it, to the Duke of Wirtemberg, and Major-General Scravenmore, who were order'd to act with the Forces under their Command in concert with his Lordſhip. There being a Battery of eight Guns rais'd, to oppoſe his Entry into the Harbour, the Earl ſent three Boats aſhoar, mann'd with ſome ſtout Fellows, who by their quick Firing, oblig'd the Iriſh to quit their Guns.

Earl of Marlborough's Expedition to Cork.

The Duke of Wirtemberg, and Major-General Scravenmore having join'd the Forces from England with 4000 Foot, there happen'd a warm Diſpute between the Duke and the Earl, about the chief Command; the Duke of Wirtemberg laying Claim to it, becauſe he was a Prince; the Earl of Marlborough, with more Temper, inſiſted upon his Right, both as eldeſt Officer, and what ſeems to be unanſwerable

His Diſpute with the Duke of Wirtemberg.

A.D.1690 ſwerable, becauſe he led the Troops of his own Nation; whereas the Duke of Wirtemberg only commanded Auxiliaries, and thoſe not of his own, but another Nation, being Danes. The prudent Monſieur le Melioniere interpoſing, the Earl of Marlborough was contented to ſhare the Command with the Duke of Wirtemberg, leſt his inſiſting on his full Right, ſhould have retarded his Majeſty's Service. Accordingly, the Earl commanded the firſt Day, and gave the Word Wirtemberg; and the Duke of Wirtemberg commanded the next, and gave the Word Marlborough.

In the beginning of the Enterprize againſt Cork, Major-General Tetteau, with 1000 Men, having drawn down ſome Cannon to Fair-hill, reſolv'd to attack one or both of the new Forts, and New Shannon Caſtle; but the Iriſh no ſooner obſerv'd his Men poſted in order to that Deſign, than they ſet fire to the Suburbs between him and them, and ſo deſerting both the Forts and the Caſtle, retir'd in great haſte into the Town. Tetteau's Men immediately poſſeſs'd themſelves of Shannon Caſtle, and having planted ſome Guns upon it, play'd briskly on the Town. Major-General Scravenmore's Quarters were at Kell-Abbey; the Duke of Wirtemberg's, on the North ſide of the Town, with the Danes and Dutch under his Command. The Iriſh deſerted their Works at Cat-Fort, without ſtriking one Blow; and the Engliſh having planted a Battery upon it, threw Bombs into the City, and plac'd their Guns on the Fort from Friers-Garden. Another Battery rais'd by Red-Abbey, plaid againſt the City-Wall; and having made a Breach therein, brought the Beſieg'd to deſire a Parley. But not liking the Conditions, the Cannon plaid furiouſly the next Day, and made a conſiderable Breach.

The ſame Day, the Danes from the North, and four Regiments of Engliſh from the South, under Brigadier Churchil, paſs'd the River up to the Armpit in the Eaſt-Marſh, in order to ſtorm that Breach.

The Granading under my Lord Colcheſter, afterwards Earl Rivers, led the Van, and march'd reſolutely on, tho' all the while expos'd to the Enemy's Fire. With them alſo march'd the Duke of Grafton, Lord O-Brian, Colonel Granville, and other gallant Lords and Gentlemen Volunteers in that Action. The Van quickly poſted themſelves under the Bank of the Marſh, which ſerv'd for a Counterſcarp to the City-Wall. In this Approach, the Duke of Grafton receiv'd a mortal Wound with a Shot, which broke two of his Ribbs, of which he died nine or ten Days after, to the great Loſs and Grief of all good Britons. The Salamander, and another Ship came up with the Tide, and lay at the end of the Marſh, directly before the City-Wall; from whence they plaid with their Cannon on the Breach, and threw Bombs into the City: Upon which, the Beſieg'd again beat a Parley, and ſent out the Earl of Tyrone and Colonel Rycaut to treat, who agreed that the Garriſon, conſiſting of 4000 Men, ſhould be Priſoners of War; that all the Arms, as well of the Soldiers as the Inhabitants, ſhould be ſecur'd; and an exact Account taken of the Stores. The City and Forts being deliver'd up, and all the Articles executed, the Earl of Marlborough ſent a Detachment of Horſe and Foot, under Brigadier Villiers, to ſummon the Town and Fort of Kingſale; upon whoſe Approach, the Iriſh being ready to ſet the Town on fire, were happily prevented, and driven by the Engliſh into their old and new Forts. My Lord Marlborough came to Five-Mile-Bridge the firſt of October, and the next Day before Kingſale, where he gave Directions to make Approaches towards the new Fort; while General Tetteau was order'd to attack the old. That Officer having paſs'd the River in Boats, early the next Morning made a Feint of ſtorming the Fort in the weakeſt Place, where moſt of the Beſieg'd were ready to receive him. But in the mean time, another Detachment made a vigorous Aſſault in another Place, where the Iriſh did not expect them, and ſoon became Maſters of a Baſtion. Several Barrels of Powder happening to take fire, near forty of the Iriſh were blown up, and the reſt retir'd into the old Caſtle, and ſurrender'd themſelves Priſoners of War, having loſt 200 Men out of 550. This done, the General ſummon'd the new Fort to ſurrender; to which, Sir Edward Scot, the Governor, return'd Anſwer, It would be time enough to capitulate a Month hence: Upon which, the Trenches were open'd, and by the 9th of October, were advanc'd to the Counterſcarp; and ſix Days after, the Garriſon ſurrender'd, and march'd out, to the number of 1100 Men. A.D.1690

Duke of Grafton kill'd.

By ſubduing Cork and Kingſale, an effectual Stop was put to all Supplies from France, at leaſt on the Southern Coaſts; and the Iriſh were almoſt confin'd to the Province of Ulſter, where it was harder to ſubſiſt than in any other Parts of Ireland.

Tyrconnel leaves Ireland.

On the firſt News of the Engliſh Fleet's ſailing towards that Kingdom, Count Lauzun, afraid of being block'd up at Galloway, went off from thence, and took Tyrconnel with him, who began to conſider what would be the end of him, if he ſhould fall into the Hands of the Proteſtants, to whom he had been ſuch a Tyrant and Villain. He return'd next Year to Ireland, and got into Limerick. Lauzun took alſo with him Monſ. Boiſſeleau, and the miſerable Remains of his French Troops, leaving the Command of the Iriſh Forces to the Duke of Berwick, which was afterwards given to Monſ. St. Ruth.

The Earl of Marlborough having perform'd this glorious Expedition in thirty-ſeven Days, as little Time as, conſidering the Seaſon of the Year, the Voyage itſelf requir'd, embark'd again, and arriv'd at Kenſington the 28th of October, where he was very favourably receiv'd by his Majeſty, who had juſtly a high Eſteem of his Courage and Conduct, and was heard to ſay, I know no Man ſo fit for a General, who had ſeen ſo few Campaigns.

King William's Saying of the Earl of Marlborough.

Aboard the Ships, which came back with him, were brought Priſoners, the Earl of Clencarty, the Earl of Tyrone, the Lord Carne, Colonel Mc Ellicut, and other Officers of Note.

Tho' the Jeſuit Orleans is ſo ridiculouſly vain, as to ſay of Limerick, the keeping it might have been a means of the retrieving King James's Affairs; yet we in England had no other Pain about it, than as it would coſt the Lives of Men and Money to reduce it. We had always a Contempt for that King's Party every where, unleſs when their horrid Aſſaſſination-Plots made us tremble for the Life of our Glorious Sovereign; and then too, we alike fear'd and deteſted them. The King's Victory at the the Boyne, the Towns taken after it, and the Earl of Marlborough's Conqueſts in the Southern Parts of Ireland, had ſo far reduc'd that Kingdom, that it became his Majeſty's great Wiſdom to provide for its Civil and Military Government. Accordingly he nam'd his Privy-Council there, conſiſting of the great Officers and Miniſters of State, to whom he was pleas'd to add James Duke of Ormond, Edward Earl of Meath, Henry Earl of Drogheda, Francis Earl of Longford, Richard Earl of Ranelagh, Arthur Earl of Granard, Adam Viſcount Lisburn, the Biſhop of Meath for the Time being, Robert Fitzgerald, Eſq; Sir Henry Fane, and William Hill, Eſq; He at the ſame time appointed theſe Judges.

His Speech to the Parliament.

That he had us'd his beſt Endeavours to reauce Ireland into ſuch a Condition, that it might be no longer a Charge to England; and God had bleſs'd his Endeavours with ſuch Succeſs, that he doubted not he ſhould have been fully poſſeſs'd of that Kingdom by this time, had he been enabled to have gone into the Field, as ſoon as he ſhould have done, and as it was more eſpecially neceſſary in Ireland, where the Rains are ſo great, and begin ſo early. He then extoll'd the Bravery of the Army; and having ſaid, he had ask'd no Revenue for himſelf, but what he had readily ſubjected to be charg'd to the Uſes of the War, he would command all the Publick Accounts to be laid before the Houſe of Commons; by which they would ſee, that the real Want of what was neceſſary beyond the Funds given, and the not getting, in due time, that for which Funds were aſſign'd, had been the principal Cauſe why the Army had been in ſo much Arrear of their Pay, and the Stores, both for the Navy and the Ordnance, not ſupply'd as they ought to be.

That it was too plain, by what the French had let them ſee lately, that if the preſent War was not proſecuted with Vigour, no Nation in the World was expos'd to greater Danger: That he would lay before the Commons the State of what would be neceſſary for the Support of the Fleet and Armies. He recommended to their Care, the Clearing of his Revenue, ſo as to enable him to ſubſiſt, and to maintain the Charge of the Civil Liſt; that the whole Support of the Confederacy abroad, would abſolutely depend upon the Speed and Vigour of their Proceedings. Then, having taken notice of the Fidelity and Affection of his People, he could not conclude, without taking notice alſo, how much the Honour of the Nation had been expos'd by the ill Conduct of the Fleet. He hop'd they would agree with him in this Concluſion, That whoever goes about to divert, or obſtruct their Application to theſe Matters, preferably to all others, can neither be his Friend, nor the Kingdom's.

The Lords firſt, and then the Commons, preſented their Majeſties Addreſſes of Thanks, full of Expreſſions of Duty and Affection, and particularly with Regard to the Queen's prudent Adminiſtration in the King's Abſence.

The Queen's Adminiſtration applauded.

The ſame Day, theſe Addreſſes were preſented, the Commons voted the Supply; and the next Day, October the 10th, granted 1791695 l. for the Navy and building of Ships. They granted alſo 2294560 l. for maintaining an Army of 69636 Men. The Funds given for raiſing this Money, falling ſhort of the Sums granted, a Motion was made for an Addreſs to the King, that an Account of the Forfeited Eſtates in Ireland ſhould be tranſmitted to the Houſe of Commons, to make thoſe Forfeitures an additional Fund for Deficiencies. This Addreſs was drawn up and reported, October the 22d, by Sir Thomas Clargis; but upon the Queſtion, it paſs'd in the Negative. Sir Thomas was one of thoſe that were for addreſſing King William to take care of the Church, juſt after he had, at all Hazards, taken more care of Iriſh *for*her, than all the Kings and Queens that ever reign'd *feited E*in England, ſince ſhe was by Law Eſtabliſh'd. *ſtates re*And let the Enemies to the Revolution ſay I am par-jected. tial, or what elſe they pleaſe of me, I will obſerve, that this Sir Thomas Clargis did, by that Addreſs, liſt himſelf in the number of thoſe who went about to divert, or obſtruct the Parliament's Application to the Matters his Majeſty recommended to them; and conſequently, as he was pleas'd to ſay himſelf, could be neither his Friend, nor the Kingdom's. The Affirmatives in this Queſtion, were the ſame Men as thoſe in that of the Church; and I wiſh the Reader would from thence, ſo fix an Idea of them in his Head, that I might have no Reaſon to defile Hiſtory with factious Denominations, ſuch as High-Church, Tories and Jacobites.

*A.D.*1690 A Motion about the

Upon the dropping of this Addreſs, a Bill was brought into the Houſe, to attaint thoſe Perſons that had been in Rebellion in England or Ireland, to confiſcate their Eſtates, and apply the Produce to the Charge of the War. It paſs'd the Commons, and was ſent to the Lords for their Concurrence; but their Lordſhips notwithſtanding ſeveral Meſſages from the Lower Houſe, to quicken its Paſſage, laid it by; not only for the Reaſon Biſhop Kennet gives, that the Court did under-hand oppoſe it, becauſe the King deſign'd to recompenſe the Services of ſeveral Perſons with part of the Forfeitures; but becauſe False Cal-culation of the Fund was by no means likely to raiſe a Million, *the For-*as was propos'd by it. And therefore this was cer-feitures. tainly another ſtep to divert and obſtruct: but the wiſer Counſels prevail'd, and the Parliament was ſo forward in promoting the neceſſary Supplies, that, by the 25th of November, moſt of the Money-Bills were ready for the Royal Aſſent, which his Majeſty having given, made the following Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I Take this Occaſion with great Willingneſs to aſſure you, that I am extremely ſenſible of the Zeal and Chearfulneſs of your Proceedings in this Seſſion of Parliament, and of the Readineſs which you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, have ſhewn, in granting ſuch large Supplies towards the preſſing Occaſions of the Army and Navy.

And I do farther aſſure you, that I ſhall not be wanting on my part, to ſee them carefully apply'd to thoſe Uſes for which you intend them.

At the ſame time, I muſt obſerve to you, that the Poſture of Affairs abroad does neceſſarily require my Preſence at the Hague, before the end of the Year; and by conſequence, I muſt deſire you to loſe no time, in the diſpatching and perfecting ſuch farther Supplies, as are ſtill neceſſary for the Navy and Army. And not for them alone; but it is high time alſo to put you in mind of making ſome Proviſion for the Expence of the Civil Government, which has no Funds for its Support, ſince the Exciſe, which was deſign'd for that Service; and alſo the other Branches of the Revenue, have been apply'd to other publick Uſes: and therefore I earneſtly recommend it to your ſpeedy Conſideration.

About this time, an Incident happen'd, which made a great Noiſe: Capt. James Campbel, Brother to the Earl of Argyle, aſſiſted by Archibald Montgomery and Sir John Johnſon, forcibly ſeiz'd on Mrs. Mary Wharton, Daughter and Heireſs of Sir George Wharton, a Fortune of 50000 l. as the Report was. Capt. Campbel taking her, then about 13 Years old, from her Rela ions in Great Queen-ſtreet, marry'd her againſt her Will, ſays Biſhop Kennet; but he does not add what the Fact was, that ſhe bedded too againſt her Will one long night, and again ano-

Captain Campbel carries off Miſs Wharton.

A.D. 1690 ther long Night, againſt her Will; and that Capt. Campbel ceas'd to trouble her, as ſhe was pleas'd to call it in Court, upon hearing that a Proclamation was iſſued for apprehending him. Sir John Johnſon's Crime was, aſſiſting his Friend and Countryman in carrying off the young Lady, an Act of Gallantry, which a brave young Fellow could not think to be a Hanging-Matter; but ſo it prov'd to him, for he was executed at Tyburn, notwithſtanding the great Application that was made to the King, and to the Relations of the forc'd Bride, to prevent his Execution: which was the more reflected upon, becauſe it appear'd at his Trial, that Miſs Wharton had given evident Proofs, that the Violence Capt. Campbel us'd towards her, was not ſo much againſt her Will, as her Lawyers made it. The Marriage between her and Capt. Campbel being made void by Act of Parliament, ſhe marry'd Colonel Bierly, who had a Regiment of Horſe in King William's Service.

In the Beginning of November, a new Commiſſion of Treaſury paſs'd the Great Seal, conſtituting Sidney Lord Godolphin, Sir John Lowther, of Lowther, Richard Hampden Eſq; Sir Stephen Fox, and Thomas Pelham Eſq; Commiſſioners; Colonel Cutts was made Lord Cutts, of Gowran in Ireland. The noble Order of the Garter was ſent to his Highneſs the Duke of Zell. Sir John Trevor, Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, was ſworn of the Privy-Council; and one Godfry Croſs, an Inn-keeper of Lydd in the County of Kent, who went on board the French Fleet, while it lay on that Coaſt, as did other Jacobites, to give Intelligence, and bring back Inſtructions, was try'd at the King's-Bench Bar, and found guilty of High-Treaſon, for which he was hang'd in Southwark. King James ſo highly reſented the Death of this Traytor, his good Friend, that he excepted the Judges, the Jury, the Sheriffs, nay, Hangman that turn'd Croſs off the Ladder, out of his moſt beneficent Pardon. All that had any hand in the Death of this Kentiſh Inn-keeper, were to go the ſame way as Croſs did, if ever he was ſo lucky as to recover his three Kingdoms: But he was not one of the lucky ones; ſo he was forc'd to do as well as he could without them.

Croſs hang'd for Treaſon.

On Saturday the 20th of December, the King came to the Houſe of Lords, and paſs'd another Money-Bill, for a Duty upon all Eaſt-India Goods, and all wrought Silks imported. His Majeſty, at the ſame time, acquainted both Houſes, how ſenſible he was of their good Affections towards him, and of their ſincere Endeavours to promote the true Intereſt of their Country, in continuing to provide further Supplies towards defraying the Charge of the War, which he would take care to ſee diligently and ſtrictly apply'd to the Uſes for which they gave them. He added, he had lately acquainted them, that the Poſture of Affairs abroad, would not admit of deferring his Journey to the Hague, much beyond that Time; and that he put them in mind of it now, in hopes that Conſideration would prevail with them to uſe all poſſible Diſpatch of what ſtill remain'd to be done, for the more vigorous Proſecution of the War. And concluded with telling the Commons, That if ſome annual Proviſion could be made for augmenting the Navy, and building ſome new MEN-OF-WAR, it would be a very neceſſary Care at that Time.

Commiſſioners of Publick Accounts.

Four Days after, the Commons unanimouſly reſolv'd, that 570000 l. be given to their Majeſties for building ſeventeen Third-Rate Men-of-War of 60 Guns each; which Sum was rais'd by an additional Exciſe. A Bill, appointing Commiſſioners for publick Accounts, being paſs'd, the Commons choſe Nine of their own Members for that Commiſſion, who were Sir Robert Rich, Sir Thomas Clargis, Paul Foley Eſq; Robert Auſtin Eſq; Sir Matthew Andrews, Sir Benjamin Newland, Sir Samuel Barnardiſton, Sir Peter Colliton, and Robert Harley, Eſq; The latter had not yet loſt all his original Brightneſs, as Milton ſays of the Fallen Angel. He had not yet quite apoſtatiz'd from his Presbyterian Education, and the Good Old Cauſe, ſo ſtrenuouſly aſſerted by Sir Robert Harley and Sir Edward Harley, his Father and Grandfather. He was yet ſo orthodox in Politicks, that this Year he gave his Vote in Parliament for turning out of the Magiſtracy and Offices, all thoſe that had been Betrayers of Corporations, by ſurrendring of their Charters. But this Accompting Place being not equal to his Ambition, as well as to his Craft, it was far from ſetting Bounds to his Proſpects.

1691. The King being impatient to be at the Congreſs in Holland, came to the Houſe of Lords, January the 5th, and having paſs'd all the Bills, publick and private, that were ready, He thank'd them for the Largeneſs and Diſpatch of the Supplies; he aſſur'd them he ſhould not make any Grant of the Forfeited Eſtates in England and Ireland, till there was another Opportunity of ſettling that Matter in Parliament, in ſuch manner as ſhould be thought moſt expedient. Then expreſſing his Satisfaction, with the Proofs they had given him of their good Affection, he told them, Every Day produc'd freſh Inſtances of the Reſtleſſneſs of their Enemies, both at home and abroad, in deſigning againſt the Proſperity of this Nation, and the Government eſtabliſh'd: But he doubted not but the Union and good Correſpondence between him and his Parliament, and his earneſt and conſtant Endeavours for their Preſervation, on the one hand, join'd with the Continuance of their Zeal and Affection to ſupport him on the Throne, would, by the Bleſſing of God, at all times be too ſtrong for the utmoſt Malice and Contrivance of their common Enemies. Then the Lord Chief-Baron Atkyns, by the King's Command, declar'd to both Houſes, It was his Majeſty's Pleaſure, that they ſhould adjourn themſelves until the 31*ſt of* March; and they ſhould have timely Notice, if there was to be a Seſſion then. We muſt not part with this Seſſion, without remembring that ſeveral Acts were left unfiniſh'd, as, An Act to regulate Trials in Caſes of High-Treaſon, which was much talk'd of in the Houſe of Commons, as a great Defence of their Liberties and Lives; yet it was put off from time to time.

An Act relating to the African Trade, in which Mr. Robert Harley buſied himſelf very much, being ſometimes for the Free Trade, and ſometimes for the Excluſive. An Act to charge the Eſtate of the late Lord Jefferies in Leiceſterſhire, with the 14760 l. and Intereſt, to Edmund Prideaux Eſq; of Ford-Abbey, on the Edge of Devonſhire and Somerſetſhire; which Sum that Monſter of Cruelty and Injuſtice, had taken from Mr. Prideaux, to prevent his being proceeded againſt for High-Treaſon, when he was in his Weſtern Butchery. The Daughter of this Mr. Prideaux, marry'd Francis Gwin Eſq; who was a Member of the Penſion Parliament, diſſolv'd in 1678, or he is wrong'd, his Name being Printed in the Liſt of thoſe Penſioners. We ſhall not ſtay long upon Affairs abroad, our Concern in them at this Time, being not ſo much, nor ſo grateful as it was in the next Reign, as long at leaſt as the Adminiſtration was in good Hands.

The French Army in Flanders, was commanded by the Mareſchal Luxemburgh, and was ſo early in the Field, that they came up with the Dutch and Spaniſh Troops under Prince Waldeck, before the Brandenburghers and Hanoverians had join'd them, and attack'd them in the Plains of Flerus, the ſame Day that the King paſt the Boyne. The French being almoſt double the Number of the Confederates, obtain'd a Victory by their Superiority, and the haſty Retreat of the Dutch Horſe; but the Dutch Infantry behav'd ſo gallantly, that Luxemburgh himſelf cou'd not help ſpeaking in Praiſe of them, ſaying, Prince Waldeck ought ever to remember the French Horſe, and myſelf never to forget the Dutch Foot. Prince

War in Flanders.

Battle of Flerus.

Luxemburgh's ſaying of the Dutch Foot.

A.D.1691 Prince Waldeck being ſoon re-inforc'd with five Engliſh Regiments, 8000 Hanoverians, and 10000 Brandenburghers and Liegois, march'd to Genap, to draw the French to a ſecond Engagement; but Luxemburgh contenting himſelf with the Victory he had obtain'd at Flerus, kept within his Trenches, and there was no attacking him without great diſadvantage. Thus ended the Campaign in Flanders, where the Confederates loſt 3 or 4000 Men more than the French; which in Military Calculations, amount to about 20000 l. for Levy-Money, and Lewis XIV. the Immortal and Invincible, as the French Academy call'd him, had conſequently 20000 l. worth of Glory to be added to his Credit. However, he thought fit this very Year, to court the Emperor and German Princes to a Treaty, by the Mediation of the Venetians, who were put upon it by the Pope, then in pretty good Terms with France about the Franchiſes. His Offers were

Offers of France for a Treaty.

To reſtore to the Emperor, the Towns of Friburgh and Philipsburgh, with all their Dependencies.

To reſtore to the Elector of Brandenburgh, all France had taken in the Dutchy of Juliers.

To reſtore to the Archbiſhop of Treves, the City of Treves, and all the Territories belonging to that Archbiſhoprick.

To reſtore to the Elector Palatine, and all other Princes and States of the Empire, all Towns and Countries taken from them, ſince the beginning of the War.

S. H. E. Vol. II. p. 173.

To theſe Articles let us add others, which concern'd England and the other Confederates, and are ſo genuine that they were Printed at Paris with the King's Privilege; and 'tis worth obſerving, that theſe Offers were made by France, a Year or two after Lewis XIV. had been ſo ſtout as to declare, He wou'd never ſheath his Sword till he had plac'd King James upon the Throne again. Yet he did now, in the Year 1690, offer to abandon King James's Intereſt, and leave King William in the peaceable Poſſeſſion of the three Kingdoms of England, Scotland and Ireland, and all the Countries and Iſlands in America, thereto belonging. And King William ſhall be acknowledged to be lawful King thereof, by the Crown of France, and the Allies of the French King.

France ſhall keep the Town of Orange, but ſhall in lieu thereof give to the King of England, Lands to the equivalent in the County of Wavre, or otherwiſe there ſhall be certain Lands in the County of Juliers or Cleves, annex'd to the County of Meurs, which ſhall be erected by the Emperor into a Dutchy, and ſhall bear the Name of the Dutchy of Naſſau.

France ſhall reſtore to the King of Sweden the Dutchy of Deux-Ponts.

France ſhall give entire Satiſaction to the Hollanders, both as to their Trade to the Eaſt-Indies, and the Towns in Flanders that are troubleſome to them.

France ſhall reſtore Catalonia to the King of Spain; Caſal to the Duke of Mantua, and Pignerol and Montferrat to the Duke of Savoy.

Theſe Offers were made now, when the French King was in the height of his Deification by his Flatterers, and of his Power by Arms; yet he knew better than any one, that the Powers in Confederacy had inexhauſtible Reſources for Men, and for Money at leaſt, in as great a Degree as himſelf had; that the Advantage of being Maſter of his own Counſels, and having his Provinces contiguous and his Strength connected, enabled him to get the Start of the Confederates in the Field, to ſurprize their Armies and Towns, and gain him cheap Conqueſts; but ſuch Advantage wou'd not always laſt, when by dear-bought Experience they had thought of Meaſures to provide againſt it. That the Frotreſſes with which he had increas'd his Frontiers, wou'd not always be a Defence, when the Allies had put the Courſe of the War into a right Channel; and that his Victories wou'd be his Ruin, and the War a continual Drain both of Men and Money, till his Kingdom was exhauſted, and he get nothing by them, but what flow'd out of the Mouths, and from the Pens of his hireling Orators and Poets. 'Tis no Wonder then that he offer'd ſuch honourable Conditions to King William and his Allies, in the midſt of his Succeſſes; for he knew King William and his Miniſters wou'd hearken to nothing that was not honourable. Nor is it any Wonder that he offer'd ſuch diſhonourable Terms before, and at the Treaty of Utrecht, for he knew the Miniſters who then rul'd in England, would not let him give either England or any other Ally Terms more honourable, than he himſelf was willing to give them; and to theſe Terms in 1690, was added an Article in favour of the French Proteſtants, which thoſe Miniſters themſelves wou'd have been the firſt to reject.

The King cannot, for his Honour, make void the Revocation of the Edict of Nantz, or ratify the Edict itſelf, which he had in the open View of the World, and with the Conſent of the Parliament of Paris condemn'd. Yet to ſatisfy their Majeſties of Great-Britain, and other Proteſtant Princes and States, the moſt Chriſtian King would be willing by a particular Article of the Treaty, to grant to the Proteſtants of France, (that either are in their own Country already, or that ſhall return Home) the ſame kind of Liberty for the Exerciſe of their Religion, and Enjoyment of their Eſtates, as the Roman Catholicks are poſſeſs'd of in the United Provinces.

People that never ſaw any Thing Hiſtorical but Gazettes and Mercuries, and will not beſtow their Faith upon any Thing of State-Matters which is not ſign'd by a Secretary, may be ſcrupulous in giving Credit to theſe Offers, and queſtion their being genuine. I am willing to grant them, that theſe Offers were never formally made by a Plenipotentiary, and that they were thrown into the World, to feel the Pulſe of the Confederates, by a Private Gentleman, employ'd by the Court of France. Monſieur Jurieu, the famous French Miniſter in Holland, charg'd Monſieur Bayle, Author of the great Dictionary, as the Author of them, which Monſieur Bayle deny'd, and the Controverſy about it between them was brought before the Magiſtrates of Rotterdam; but 'tis allow'd by all, that this Project of Peace was given by a Gentleman at Geneva, to the Reſident of France in that City, who ſent it to Madam de Maintenon, and ſhe return'd it to the Reſident corrected. The Reſident ſent it to Holland to be printed; as alſo to Lauſanne in Switzerland, and Copies of it were immediately handed up and down in thoſe Countries. All which, and the Royal Licence for Printing theſe Offers at Paris, are ſufficient Proofs that they were approv'd by the Court of France, and that the King himſelf was then in thoſe Sentiments.

How thoſe Offers came to be known.

By theſe Offers we ſee the Duke of Savoy was come into the Confederacy, and had loſt Suza, immediately after the loſs of the Battle of Saluzzes in the Year 1690; and finding there was little Dependance to be made upon the Emperor or King of Spain, he reſolv'd to apply himſelf to the King of England, and the States-General, which he did by the Count de la Tour, Preſident of his Finances in Savoy, Intendant of his Houſhold, &c. who coming to England, made the following Speech to his Majeſty at his firſt Publick Audience.

The Savoy Ambaſſador's Speech to King William.

The King being impatient to be at the Congreſs in Holland, came to the Houſe of Lords, January the 5th, and having paſs'd all the Bills, publick and private, that were ready, He thank'd them for the Largeneſs and Diſpatch of the Supplies; he aſſur'd them he ſhould not make any Grant of the Forfeited Eſtates in England and Ireland, till there was another Opportunity of ſettling that Matter in Parliament, in ſuch manner as ſhould be thought moſt expedient. Then expreſſing his Satisfaction, with the Proofs they had given him of their good Affection, he told them, Every Day produc'd freſh Inſtances of the Reſtleſſneſs of their Enemies, both at home and abroad, in deſigning againſt the Proſperity of this Nation, and the Government eſtabliſh'd: But he doubted not but the Union and good Correſpondence between him and his Parliament, and his earneſt and conſtant Endeavours for their Preſervation, on the one hand, join'd with the Continuance of their Zeal and Affection to ſupport him on the Throne, would, by the Bleſſing of God, at all times be too ſtrong for the utmoſt Malice and Contrivance of their common Enemies. Then the Lord Chief-Baron Atkyns, by the King's Command, declar'd to both Houſes, It was his Majeſty's Pleaſure, that they ſhould adjourn themſelves until the 31*ſt of* March; and they ſhould have timely Notice, if there was to be a Seſſion then. We muſt not part with this Seſſion, without remembring that ſeveral Acts were left unfiniſh'd, as, An Act to regulate Trials in Caſes of High-Treaſon, which was much talk'd of in the Houſe of Commons, as a great Defence of their Liberties and Lives; yet it was put off from time to time.

An Act relating to the African Trade, in which Mr. Robert Harley buſied himſelf very much, being ſometimes for the Free Trade, and ſometimes for the Excluſive. An Act to charge the Eſtate of the late Lord Jefferies in Leiceſterſhire, with the 14760 l. and Intereſt, to Edmund Prideaux Eſq; of Ford-Abbey, on the Edge of Devonſhire and Somerſetſhire; which Sum that Monſter of Cruelty and Injuſtice, had taken from Mr. Prideaux, to prevent his being proceeded againſt for High-Treaſon, when he was in his Weſtern Butchery. The Daughter of this Mr. Prideaux, marry'd Francis Gwin Eſq; who was a Member of the Penſion Parliament, diſſolv'd in 1678, or he is wrong'd, his Name being Printed in the Liſt of thoſe Penſioners. We ſhall not ſtay long upon Affairs abroad, our Concern in them at this Time, being not ſo much, nor ſo grateful as it was in the next Reign, as long at leaſt as the Adminiſtration was in good Hands.

The French Army in Flanders, was commanded by the Mareſchal Luxemburgh, and was ſo early in the Field, that they came up with the Dutch and Spaniſh Troops under Prince Waldeck, before the Brandenburghers and Hanoverians had join'd them, and attack'd them in the Plains of Flerus, the ſame Day that the King paſt the Boyne. The French being almoſt double the Number of the Confederates, obtain'd a Victory by their Superiority, and the haſty Retreat of the Dutch Horſe; but the Dutch Infantry behav'd ſo gallantly, that Luxemburgh himſelf cou'd not help ſpeaking in Praiſe of them, ſaying, Prince Waldeck ought ever to remember the French Horſe, and myſelf never to forget the Dutch Foot. Prince

War in Flanders.

Battle of Flerus.

Luxemburgh's ſaying of the Dutch Foot.

A.D.1691 Prince Waldeck being ſoon re-inforc'd with five Engliſh Regiments, 8000 Hanoverians, and 10000 Brandenburghers and Liegois, march'd to Genap, to draw the French to a ſecond Engagement; but Luxemburgh contenting himſelf with the Victory he had obtain'd at Flerus, kept within his Trenches, and there was no attacking him without great diſadvantage. Thus ended the Campaign in Flanders, where the Confederates loſt 3 or 4000 Men more than the French; which in Military Calculations, amount to about 20000 l. for Levy-Money, and Lewis XIV. the Immortal and Invincible, as the French Academy call'd him, had conſequently 20000 l. worth of Glory to be added to his Credit. However, he thought fit this very Year, to court the Emperor and German Princes to a Treaty, by the Mediation of the Venetians, who were put upon it by the Pope, then in pretty good Terms with France about the Franchiſes. His Offers were

Offers of France for a Treaty.

To reſtore to the Emperor, the Towns of Friburgh and Philipsburgh, with all their Dependencies.

To reſtore to the Elector of Brandenburgh, all France had taken in the Dutchy of Juliers.

To reſtore to the Archbiſhop of Treves, the City of Treves, and all the Territories belonging to that Archbiſhoprick.

To reſtore to the Elector Palatine, and all other Princes and States of the Empire, all Towns and Countries taken from them, ſince the beginning of the War.

S. H. E. Vol. II. p. 173. To theſe Articles let us add others, which concern'd England and the other Confederates, and are ſo genuine that they were Printed at Paris with the King's Privilege; and 'tis worth obſerving, that theſe Offers were made by France, a Year or two after Lewis XIV. had been ſo ſtout as to declare, He wou'd never ſheath his Sword till he had plac'd King James upon the Throne again. Yet he did now, in the Year 1690, offer to abandon King James's Intereſt, and leave King William in the peaceable Poſſeſſion of the three Kingdoms of England, Scotland and Ireland, and all the Countries and Iſlands in America, thereto belonging. And King William ſhall be acknowledged to be lawful King thereof, by the Crown of France, and the Allies of the French King.

France ſhall keep the Town of Orange, but ſhall in lieu thereof give to the King of England, Lands to the equivalent in the County of Wavre, or otherwiſe there ſhall be certain Lands in the County of Juliers or Cleves, annex'd to the County of Meurs, which ſhall be erected by the Emperor into a Dutchy, and ſhall bear the Name of the Dutchy of Naſſau.

France ſhall give up to the Swiſs Cantons the Fortreſs of Huninghen demoliſh'd.

France ſhall reſtore to the King of Sweden the Dutchy of Deux-Ponts.

France ſhall give entire Satiſaction to the Hollanders, both as to their Trade to the Eaſt-Indies, and the Towns in Flanders that are troubleſome to them.

France ſhall reſtore Catalonia to the King of Spain; Caſal to the Duke of Mantua, and Pignerol and Montferrat to the Duke of Savoy.

Theſe Offers were made now, when the French King was in the height of his Deification by his Flatterers, and of his Power by Arms; yet he knew better than any one, that the Powers in Confederacy had inexhauſtible Reſources for Men, and for Money at leaſt, in as great a Degree as himſelf had; that the Advantage of being Maſter of his own Counſels, and having his Provinces contiguous and his Strength connected, enabled him to get the Start of the Confederates in the Field, to ſurprize their Armies and Towns, and gain him cheap Conqueſts; but ſuch Advantage wou'd not always laſt, when by dear-bought Experience they had thought of Meaſures to provide againſt it. That the Frotreſſes with which he had increas'd his Frontiers, wou'd not always be a Defence, when the Allies had put the Courſe of the War into a right Channel; and that his Victories wou'd be his Ruin, and the War a continual Drain both of Men and Money, till his Kingdom was exhauſted, and he get nothing by them, but what flow'd out of the Mouths, and from the Pens of his hireling Orators and Poets. 'Tis no Wonder then that he offer'd ſuch honourable Conditions to King William and his Allies, in the midſt of his Succeſſes; for he knew King William and his Miniſters wou'd hearken to nothing that was not honourable. Nor is it any Wonder that he offer'd ſuch diſhonourable Terms before, and at the Treaty of Utrecht, for he knew the Miniſters who then rul'd in England, would not let him give either England or any other Ally Terms more honourable, than he himſelf was willing to give them; and to theſe Terms in 1690, was added an Article in favour of the French Proteſtants, which thoſe Miniſters themſelves wou'd have been the firſt to reject.

The King cannot, for his Honour, make void the Revocation of the Edict of Nantz, or ratify the Edict itſelf, which he had in the open View of the World, and with the Conſent of the Parliament of Paris condemn'd. Yet to ſatisfy their Majeſties of Great-Britain, and other Proteſtant Princes and States, the moſt Chriſtian King would be willing by a particular Article of the Treaty, to grant to the Proteſtants of France, (that either are in their own Country already, or that ſhall return Home) the ſame kind of Liberty for the Exerciſe of their Religion, and Enjoyment of their Eſtates, as the Roman Catholicks are poſſeſs'd of in the United Provinces.

People that never ſaw any Thing Hiſtorical but Gazettes and Mercuries, and will not beſtow their Faith upon any Thing of State-Matters which is not ſign'd by a Secretary, may be ſcrupulous in giving Credit to theſe Offers, and queſtion their being genuine. I am willing to grant them, that theſe Offers were never formally made by a Plenipotentiary, and that they were thrown into the World, to feel the Pulſe of the Confederates, by a Private Gentleman, employ'd by the Court of France. Monſieur Jurieu, the famous French Miniſter in Holland, charg'd Monſieur Bayle, Author of the great Dictionary, as the Author of them, which Monſieur Bayle deny'd, and the Controverſy about it between them was brought before the Magiſtrates of Rotterdam; but 'tis allow'd by all, that this Project of Peace was given by a Gentleman at Geneva, to the Reſident of France in that City, who ſent it to Madam de Maintenon, and ſhe return'd it to the Reſident corrected. The Reſident ſent it to Holland to be printed; as alſo to Lauſanne in Switzerland, and Copies of it were immediately handed up and down in thoſe Countries. All which, and the Royal Licence for Printing theſe Offers at Paris, are ſufficient Proofs that they were approv'd by the Court of France, and that the King himſelf was then in thoſe Sentiments.

How thoſe Offers came to be known.

By theſe Offers we ſee the Duke of Savoy was come into the Confederacy, and had loſt Suza, immediately after the loſs of the Battle of Saluzzes in the Year 1690; and finding there was little Dependance to be made upon the Emperor or King of Spain, he reſolv'd to apply himſelf to the King of England, and the States-General, which he did by the Count de la Tour, Preſident of his Finances in Savoy, Intendant of his Houſhold, &c. who coming to England, made the following Speech to his Majeſty at his firſt Publick Audience.

The Savoy Ambaſſador's Speech to King William.

SIR,

HIS Royal Highneſs my Maſter, does by me, congratulate your Sacred Majeſty's glorious Acceſſion to the Crown. It is due to your Birth, and deſerv'd by your Virtue, and is maintain'd by your Valour; Providence had deſign'd it for your Sacred Head,

A.D. 1691 Head, for the Accompliſhment of its Eternal Decrees, which after long Patience, do always tend to raiſe up Choſen Souls, to repreſs Violence and promote Juſtice. The wonderful Beginnings of your Reign, are moſt certain Preſages of the Bleſſings, which Heaven prepares for the Righteouſneſs of your Intentions; which have no other Scope than to reſtore this flouriſhing Kingdom to its firſt Greatneſs, and break the Chains which Europe groans under. This Magnaminous Deſign, worthy the Hero of our Age, fill'd his Royal Highneſs with unexpected Joy: But he was conſtrain'd to conceal it in the ſecret of his Heart, and if at laſt he has been free to own it, he is oblig'd to the very Name of your Majeſty, that alone has made him conceive ſome hopes of Liberty, after ſo many Years of Servitude.

My Words and the Treaty, which I have ſign'd at the Hague with your Majeſty's Miniſters, do but faintly expreſs the Paſſion which my Maſter has to unite himſelf by the moſt indiſſolvable Ties to your Service. The Honour, SIR, which he has to be related to you, has ty'd the firſt Knot of this Union; the Infinite Reſpect which he has for your Sacred Perſon, has as it were knit them faſter; and the generous Protection which you are pleas'd to grant him, will without doubt make them indiſſoluble. Theſe are the ſincere Sentiments of his Royal Highneſs, to which I dare not add any Thing of mine. For how ardent ſoever my Zeal may be, and how profound the Veneration which I bear to your glorious Atchievements, I think I cannot better expreſs either, than by a Silence full of Admiration.

This Miniſter, the Count de la Tour, was one of thoſe that attended at the Hague, to aſſiſt at the Congreſs there, in the Name of their Maſters.

The King embark'd at Graveſend the 16th of January, and ſail'd for Holland, under Convoy of Rear-Admiral Rook, with 12 Men of War; when with ſome Trouble they came on the Coaſt of Holland, the Froſt had been ſo ſevere, and the Ice near the Shoar ſo great, that it appear'd to be extremely dangerous to attempt landing: But the King, with whom the Sea did not agree, and whoſe Buſineſs requir'd haſte, went into a Shallop and order'd the Seamen to put off. The Seamen themſelves were afraid, and all the Perſons of Quality about the King, would have diſſuaded him from it, by repreſenting the prodigious Peril to which his Royal Perſon would be expos'd. But the King being reſolv'd, they put away from the Fleet, and quickly loſt ſight of them; Night came on and his Majeſty remain'd 18 Hours together expos'd to the Injuries of the Air and Cold, to the Mercy of the Sea, and the Chace of the Privateers, having nothing but his Cloak to cover him; and the Sea ran ſo high, that he and all the Company were daſh'd and waſh'd with Waves. At laſt by break of Day the Shallop came near the Iſle of Goree, where the King went aſhoar, and got a little Refreſhment in a Fiſherman's Cottage. In how many hundred Panegyricks is Julius Cæſar flatter'd with his venturing out to Sea againſt the Opinion of the Pilot, when the Weather was rude, and his Enemies Fleet Maſters there? To all Cæſar's Dangers and Fatigues, in which King William equals him, muſt be added, That of the moſt bitter Froſt and intolerable Cold, and a Conſtitution abhorrent of the Sea, for which, and Storms of all kinds, was Cæſar's form'd by Nature.

The King in danger on the Coaſt of Holland.

Greater than Cæſar.

His Majeſty having ſtaid a few Moments in the Fiſherman's Cottage, went into his Boat again, and happily landed at Orange-Polder, from whence he went to Hounſlerdyke; where he was met by the Deputies of the States, accompany'd by Count Berka, Envoy-Extraordinary from the Emperor; Count Colonna the Spaniſh Ambaſſador; the Prince of Naſſau, Stadtholder of Frieſland; the Prince of Naſſau-Sarburg, and Count Hara; who conducted him to the Hague by ſix that Evening. This being the firſt time he came to Holland ſince his Acceſſion to the Crown; the States and their Subjects receiv'd him with all the Tokens of Reſpect, Duty and Love. They erected a great many rich Triumphal Arches for him; and at the deſire of the People, he was pleas'd on the 14th of February to make a Publick Entry into the Hague; where nothing was heard but one continual Shout and Cry, Long live the King! The Town was at Night illuminated from one End to the other, in a Manner never before ſeen. A.D. 1691

His Entry into the Hague.

But what excels all Painting of Imagination and Words, was the glorious Concourſe of Princes and Illuſtrious Lords, who came thither to have Conference with his Majeſty. An Appearance which the French King cou'd never boaſt of at Verſailles, where in Pictures, Poems and Speeches, he had led ſo many Captive Kings in Triumph.

King William's Speech to them.

His Majeſty at this Famous Congreſs repreſented to them, "That the imminent Dangers in "which they found themſelves, ſufficiently diſcovered the Errors that had been committed, ſo "that he had no need to uſe many Arguments, "to ſhew them the Neceſſity of taking juſter "and better Meaſures; that in the Circumſtances "they were in, it was not time to deliberate, but "to act. That the Enemy was Maſter of all the "Chief Fortreſſes, which were the Barrier of the "Common Liberty; and that he would quickly "poſſeſs himſelf of all the reſt, if a Spirit of Diviſion, Slowneſs and particular Intereſt continu'd "amongſt them. That every one ought to remain "perſuaded, that their reſpective particular Intereſts were compriz'd in the general one. That "the Enemy's Forces were very ſtrong, and would "carry things like a Torrent before them; "that it was in vain to oppoſe fruitleſs Clamours "and Complaints, or unprofitable Proteſtations a-"gainſt Injuſtice; that it was neither the Reſolution of a barren Diet, nor the Hopes of ſome "Men of Fortune, ariſing from frivolous Foun-"dations; but Soldiers, ſtrong Armies, and a "prompt and ſincere Union between all the Forces "of the Allies, that muſt do the Work: And "that theſe muſt be brought to oppoſe the Enemy "without delay, if they would put a ſtop to his "Conqueſts, and ſnatch out of his Hands the Li-"berty of Europe, which he held already under a "heavy Yoke. Then drawing to a Cloſure, he "proteſted as to himſelf, he would neither ſpare "his Credit, Forces nor Perſon, to concur with "them in ſo juſt and neceſſary a Deſign, and that "he wou'd come in the Spring at the Head of his "Troops, faithfully to make good his Royal Word, "which he had ſolemnly engag'd to them."

The Princes and all who aſſiſted at the Congreſs, were very much affected by this Speech; but ſtill their particular Intereſts were ſo much in moſt of their Heads and Hearts, that their Counſels wanted to be quicken'd; and a Gentleman who was preſent, a Companion of Mr. Wharton's, aſſur'd me, that the moſt vigorous Reſolution was taken after an Entertainment his Majeſty made for all of them, where Mirth and Pleaſantry mix'd with the Converſation as well as Politicks; and where it happen'd that Mr. Baron Bradbury's Health was drunk by an Engliſhman, miſtaking it for the Elector of Brandenburgh's, at which there was a Laugh; and the Elector obſerving it, inquir'd why it was ſo when his Health was drunk, and being inform'd that a Gentleman had miſtaken Baron Bradbury's Name for his Electoral Highneſs's; the Elector laugh'd in his turn, call'd for a Glaſs of Wine, and drank to Mr. Baron's Health, which went round among all the Princes and Miniſters. A.D.1691

The Reſolution I ſpoke of, was to employ 220000 Men againſt France, of which King William was to furniſh 20000; but he found afterwards that Number wou'd not do, and the Princes of Germany were both backward and deficient in furniſhing the Quota's then ſtipulated.

Articles ſaid to be agreed on by them.

The following Reſolutions were generally ſaid, to have been agreed upon at that time, but ſome of the Articles are juſtly ſuſpected. They oblig'd themſelves to make no Peace with Lewis XIV.

1. "Till he has made Reparation to the Pope "for what he has acted againſt him, and made "void all thoſe Infamous Proceedings againſt Inno-"cent XI.

2. "Till he has reſtor'd to each Party concern'd, "what he has taken ſince the Peace of Munſter, "and till he has demoliſh'd Briſac, and deliver'd "up the County of Cray to the Canton of Berne.

3. "Till he has reſtor'd to the Proteſtants all "their Poſſeſſions and Goods, and till there be an "entire Liberty of Conſcience throughout the "whole Extent of the French Dominions.

4. "Till the Eſtates of the Kingdom be re-eſta-"bliſh'd in their ancient Liberties, ſo that the Clergy, "the Nobility, and the third Eſtate, may enjoy "their ancient and lawful Privileges. And till the "Kings for the future ſhall be oblig'd to call to-"gether the ſaid Eſtates when they ſhall deſire "any Supply; without the conſent of whom they "ſhall not raiſe any Money, after any Manner, for "any Pretence whatſoever.

5. "Till the Tax upon Salt, that upon the Third "Eſtate, and an Infinite Number of other un-"reaſonable Taxes and Impoſitions be aboliſh'd for "ever.

6. "Till he has reſtor'd to the Parliament, their "ancient and rightful Authority, that ſo they might "be enabled to diſtribute to every one Juſtice free-"ly and without Reſtraint, according to their "Conſcience.

7. "Till all the Towns of the Kingdom be re-"eſtabliſh'd in their ancient Privileges, and till their "Revenues be reſtor'd, which had been taken from "them with ſuch Violence and Injuſtice."

One would think by theſe Articles, that the Allies were making War for the French, and not for themſelves, but this Policy anſwer'd not their End. The People of France had been ſo long us'd to Slavery, that like other Habits it was become natural to them, and the Glory of their Monarch ſtun'd and dazzl'd them ſo much, that they cou'd neither ſee nor feel the Miſery they liv'd in.

While the Confederates were buſy in Counſel, the French King was ſo in Action, and having got two Armies in the Field, with one of them he took Nice from the Duke of Savoy; with the other he beſieg'd Mons, and it was a ſure Sign that it wou'd be a Conqueſt, by his coming before it in Perſon, accompanied by the Dauphin, the Duke of Orleans, and the Duke of Chartres his Son, as alſo with ſeveral Lords and Ladies of the Court. It was always obſerv'd, that whenever this Invincible Hero went to the War in Perſon, the Buſineſs was done before-hand, by good Intelligence with thoſe he was to make War with. Accordingly when the

*A.D.*1691 Prince of Bergue, Governor of Mons, ſhew'd a Diſpoſition to defend the Town, till the Confederate Army, with which King William was advancing to relieve it, got up. The Burghers, ſet on by the Prieſts, forc'd him to capitulate, by ſending a Drum of their own to deſire a Parley, and threatning to open the Gates to the Enemy. Upon which the Prince accepted of the Honourable Terms the French King offer'd him; and his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty return'd with his Royal and Gallant Retinue to Verſailles, to ſurfeit his Ears with the moſt fulſome Flattery, that even the moſt abject Minds pen'd to fortunate Power.

The Burghers of Mons deliver it up to the French King.

King William having in vain attempted the Relief of Mons, and there being as yet no farther Operation in the Field, return'd to England and arriv'd at Whitehall the 13th of April. In the mean time the Jacobites and the French King were deluding one another; the Jacobites deluded him with falſe Repreſentations of their Numbers and Strength. The French King deluded them with Promiſes of Aſſiſtance which they never had; however it encourag'd them to keep Plots on foot ſtill, in which the Nonjuring Clergy and their Flocks, were the Tools and Bubbles of the Tories; who never miſt any Opportunity of ſhewing their Averſion to the King's Perſon and Government, when they cou'd do it to purpoſe, tho' they had ſworn Fidelity and Allegiance to him, and had many of them crept into his Service. While he was in Holland, the Conſpirators, who had their Nocturnal and Treaſonable Meetings in Covent-Garden, and were call'd the Royal-Club, agreed to ſend three of the Plotters, the Lord Preſton, Major Aſhton, and Col. Elliot to France, to haſten the Invaſion from thence. Theſe three hir'd a Veſſel of Mrs. Jane Prat of Barking in Eſſex, at the latter end of laſt Year, and went on board her near Battle-Bridge; but the whole Plot being diſcover'd, the Government order'd Capt. Billop to attend their Motion, who accordingly ſuffer'd them to ſail by Graveſend, and then boarded and took them. In Mr. Aſhton's Boſom was found a Packet of Papers and Letters, by which it abundantly appear'd they were going to France, to procure Aſſiſtance for the Deſtruction of the Government; and this being prov'd upon Preſton and Aſhton at their Trials, they were condemn'd to be hang'd, drawn and quarter'd; but the Evidence not being plain againſt Elliot, he got off. Aſhton was executed the 28th of January, and at Tyburn deliver'd a Paper to Sir Francis Child, then Sheriff of London, which he pretended was his own Writing, tho' it had viſible Marks of a more able Hand, and contain'd Things which we ought to hope, he had ſtill time enough to repent of, as being without Truth and Charity. It was anſwer'd by an Anonymous Author, who however was ſaid to be Dr. Fowler Biſhop of Gloceſter. This Aſhton had been Treaſurer to King James's Queen Mary; Aſhton's Paper was, a few Days after he was hang'd, ſcatter'd about the Streets of London in the Night; a Fortnight after came out Biſhop Fowler's Anſwer to it, which was follow'd by another Libel in praiſe of Aſhton's Treaſon, call'd, The Loyal Martyr, eſteem'd very Scandalous by the Men then in Power, ſays the Oxonian in Athen. Oxon. The Lord Preſton confeſs'd all he knew, and was thought to have deſerv'd Pardon by ſo doing, which he accordingly obtain'd. We had Occaſion to mention an Addreſs from the Jacobites, Tories, &c. to the French King to land Troops in England about the time of Beachy Fight at Sea, and here is another Invitation ſix Months after. The former had rais'd the Indignation of the People ſo much againſt the Nonjuring Biſhops and their Adherents, that theſe Reverends thought fit to diſown the former Invitation, by a ſolemn Declaration under the Hands of Dr. William Sancroft, late Archbiſhop of Canterbury; Dr. John Lake, late Biſhop of Chicheſter; Dr. Thomas Kenn, late Biſhop of Bath and Wells; Dr. Thomas White, late Biſhop of Peterborough; and Dr. Francis Turner, late Biſhop of Ely; laſt mention'd, becauſe his Double Dealing is notorious. For no-body doubts of his being acquainted with the Traitorous Scheme for an Invaſion and Rebellion found about Aſhton, tho' he had the Face at his Execution to declare he dy'd Innocent, as too many wicked Wretches do, who die the ſame Death. The five late Biſhops juſt mention'd, renounc'd all Invitations in order to an Invaſion; but they cou'd not help making uſe of a Term which ſeem'd to have Poiſon in it. For ſpeaking of the Pamphlet, treating of the Cauſes of the Diſaſters in England, which I have ſpoken of before, they ſay, 'Twas written to raiſe ſuch a Fury againſt them, as might end in DEWITTING. 'Twas well known what was inſinuated by that, and it ill became Men of their Profeſſion, to favour any ſuch Inſinuation grounded on Falſhood in fact, as if the Prince of Orange then their Sovereign, had ſet the Dutch Mob on to tear the De Wits in pieces. Turner of Ely was the Penman of this Declaration, and he had Malice enough to cheriſh ſuch an Aſperſion, and not Honeſty enough to forbear ſpreading it. Two Letters of his were now intercepted, addreſs'd to King James and his Queen Mary, wherein the former Correſpondence with the Courts of Verſailles and St. Germain's is plainly own'd, and that it was with the Conſent of all of them: I ſpeak in the Plural, ſays the quondam Biſhop, becauſe I write my Elder Brother's Sentiments, as well as my own, and the reſt of the Family. To which Correſpondence, The Interruption that has been given, adds the Biſhop, has had very Ill Effects. The French were ſo far from keeping theſe Memorials and Invitations ſecret, that they publiſh'd it every where without any Reſerve. The late Biſhop of Ely, aſſur'd the late King and Queen, that his Elder Brother and all the reſt of the Family, ſent their Aſſurance of full Duty in Words, and would ſhew it by their Actions. Is it Partial to interpret this, That by Elder Brother he means the late Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and by the reſt of the Family, The Nonſwearing Biſhops and Clergy, and their Abettors High-Church and Tories? who as yet condeſcended to call themſelves Proteſtants, as by theſe Paſſages in the Scheme for King James's Reſtoration, found about Aſhton.

The Preſton's Plot.

Turner Biſhop of Ely's Treaſonable Letters.

The King muſt think of nothing ſhort of a Proteſtant Adminiſtration, the Proteſtants having the Heads, Hands, and Wealth on their Side, with Advantage of at leaſt 200 to one in Number of the Papiſts; and that all the latter muſt hope for, was a legal Liberty of Conſcience. They ſay this at the ſame time that they are very preſſing for a Popiſh French Army, and what ſuch Auxiliaries wou'd have done for the Security of our Church, is eaſily imagin'd, by what King James himſelf had done, after his Promiſes to his Council and Parliament on that Subject.

Scheme for King James's Reſtoration.

The Lord Preſton makes a Remark in the Paper, which was taken written with his own Hand, which ſets a certain Party in a light they are not very well pleas'd with, when they are got into Places by their own Cunning and the Weakneſs of Others. The Clergy have been more than once charg'd with Prevarication in this Matter, and moſt of all the Inferior Rural Clergy: The more Learned and Wiſe, eſpecially thoſe of London, have been true to the Intereſt of England; as Sir Richard Graham, call'd Lord Preſton confeſſes, diſtinguiſhing them thus; The London Clergy are the worſt; as for the other, he ſpeaks plainly, we have their Wiſhes, and they their Oaths. There are more ſuch treaſonable Hints of his in the ſame Paper. Ormond diſoblig'd about the Guards. ---- Three of Five againſt the Vacancy of the Throne,

The Country Clergy the moſt diſloyal.

A.D.1691 Throne, Beaufort, Newcaſtle, Thanet. Then he puts down ſome Lawyers, as Sawyer, Lutwych, Pemberton, Levinz, and two New Converts of the Old Puritan Stamp, Winnington, Shower; after theſe comes Carter, and others at Portſmouth, the likelier Man to come to him ---- Get to it before the Conjunction ---- Fight in the Chops of the Channel ---- Land behind South-Sea Caſtle, Portſmouth not mann'd ---- nothing but Paliſadoes about Goſport. Jennings, Strickland and Trevanion from St. Malo's in the Night, diſmiſs his Foreigners, &c. Theſe were Heads to help his Memory when he came to France. If one knew what he meant by the Woman that was with the King in Ireland, and ſent with a Commiſſion ----- to Stafford failing not to be ſent again, one might probably find out another Aſſaſſination Plot; there having been ſeldom an Invaſion Plot without one. There is no great Myſtery in his Fr. K. his Highlanders and the like, nor in what was to be done to theſe Lords, Dorſet, Cornwallis, Stamford, Macclesfield, Montagu, Devonſhire, Monmouth, Shrewsbury. For the laſt, as well as all the reſt of theſe Illuſtrious Peers and Patriots, was then intirely in the Intereſts of King William, and an Aſſertor of Revolution Principles; and it was then little thought that a Lord of ſuch Excellent Senſe and Honour, wou'd ever have join'd with ſuch Men as got into the Miniſtry after Sacheverel's Sedition. Theſe Lords were doubtleſs remember'd in Preſton's Memorandum, as Exception to a Pardon, their Heads and their Eſtates being to pay for the ſhare they had in the Revolution; but there is not a Word of Seymour, Osborne and other good Churchmen, who declar'd early for the Prince of Orange, and were at Bottom ſtill the ſame Men as when the Oxford Decree was made.

Further Grounds to believe the Impoſture of the Pretender.

There happen'd an Affair with relation to Aſhton, which gives further Grounds of Jealouſy, that the Pretender is an Impoſtor, and a Jealouſy bordering very near upon Conviction. In a Paper he left behind him, to be publiſh'd by his Friends, he ſays, He was carrying over to King James, certain Papers, containing a Scheme of the whole Matter, and Proofs to be produc'd to prove the Legitimacy of his Royal Highneſs, as he calls him, and this he was doing for King James's View. A hopeful Buſineſs! a Scheme of the Prince of Wales's Birth, for the Satisfaction of his Father. Did not King James know more of that Matter than Mr. Aſhton? Was there any need of a Scheme to ſatisfy the pretended Mother and her Train at St. Germain's? Muſt not this Intrigue be better known to both that King and Queen and their Confidents, than to any one elſe? If the Birth was true, why was there any other Scheme drawn up for it, than what was given the World in the Depoſitions of the Court Lords and Ladies, which tho' they wanted Evidence, wanted not for Obſcenity, as a late Hiſtorian obſerves? I think this is as ſufficient Proof of the Impoſture as one could wiſh; would it not be a pleaſant Thing for a Man to preſent a real Mother, with a New Scheme of her Delivery?

I ſhall conclude my Reflexions on this Subject, with thoſe of a very famous Author, who queſtioned whether or not this Paper was Genuine, tho' publiſh'd by Aſhton's Friends after his Execution. The Men that have ſuppoſitated this Paper, ſays he, have by this one Story of drawing up a Scheme of the Prince of Wales's Birth to ſend to King James, unhappily ſtumbled upon one of the ſtrongeſt Preſumptions in the World, that they were alſo capable of a Scheme to ſuppoſitate an Heir to a Crown, when it made for their Intereſt ſo to do; and the rather, that thereby they make King James merely Paſſive in the Thing that would ſeem moſt to concern him of any body Living, and do pretend to give him the Model of an Affair, that, if it had been really true, he muſt of Neceſſity have known much better than themſelves, or all the World beſides.

There remains nothing more concerning Aſhton, A.D.1691 but what is in the Story of his Widow, which ſhew'd our Wiſe-heads of that Faction, what they were to expect from a ſecond Reſtoration, if it had been in their Power to have brought it about, and they had not all turn'd Papiſts. Mrs. Aſhton expecting to be highly preferr'd at the Court of St. Germain's, after her Husband had been hang'd for them; went thither, and as ſoon as ſhe came, Prieſts were ſent to her to tell her, that nothing but being a Roman Catholick, cou'd recommend a Woman to the Queen's Service: which the diſconſolate Widow declining to do, they took no Notice of her; and ſhe dying of Grief, was refus'd Burial, till her Father Mr. Rigby of Covent-Garden, as an Act of Special Grace, and at great Charge, obtain'd leave to have her Corpſe brought over to England.

Theſe Particulars are too inſtructing and entertaining, to be cenſur'd as Digreſſion.

The Parliament which had been adjourn'd to the 31ſt of March, met then, but were adjourn'd again from time to time till the 22d of October, when they went upon Buſineſs.

The Queen, in his Majeſty's Abſence, publiſh'd a Proclamation againſt Papiſts and other diſaffected Perſons; and the King and Queen the ſame Month of April, publiſh'd another, appointing a General Faſt on the Third Wedneſday in every Month, which was continu'd ſeveral Years, and was a great Novelty in Country Places, where Sermons had never been heard but at Funerals on Week-Days. Monthly Faſts.

As ſoon as his Majeſty return'd to England, his firſt Care was for the ſpeedy equipping and ſetting forth of the Fleet, and then he gave the neceſſary Directions for the Tranſportation of ſuch Troops as he intended ſhou'd ſerve the next Campaign in Flanders, where he reſolv'd to command the Confederate Army in Perſon. He ſtaid in England not much above a Fortnight, and re-imbark'd for Holland, May 1ſt, aboard the Mary Yatch, and landed near Maeſeland-Sluice the next Day; ſo that his Majeſty was at Kenſington on Friday, and at the Hague a Sunday, notwithſtanding he was detain'd one Night at Harwich. On the 8th of May the King went to Loo, and from thence ſent away the Earl of Marlborough and Count Solms to Flanders, to put all Things in readineſs againſt his Arrival. On the 31ſt of May, his Majeſty parting from Loo paſt thro' Breda to the Confederate Army, attended by the Duke of Ormond, ſtill foremoſt in the Service of his King and Country; the Marquiſs of Wincheſter, and the Earl of Eſſex: and it is no great Honour to the Engliſh Name, that there were no more Noblemen, who, reviving the ancient Cuſtom of the Engliſh Nobility, choſe rather, as Biſhop Kennet ſays, to ſhare with their Prince in the Honourable Hazards of War, than to lead an Inactive and Inglorious Life at Home, either in Theatres in London, or in Walks and Gaming-Houſes at the ſeveral Wells, or with Dogs and Horſes at their Seats and Manors, to ſay nothing of Houſes of Pleaſure. The Biſhop adds, It was no Credit to our Nation, that the Example of theſe Noble Lords and Engliſhmen, were not follow'd by more of their Quality. His Majeſty having diſappointed Boufflers in his Attempt upon Liege, and taken all the Meaſures a wiſe General cou'd think of, to draw Luxemburgh to an Engagement, which he on his Part took all the like Meaſures to avoid; his Majeſty demoliſh'd Beaumont, a Town the French General had made himſelf maſter of, and leaving the Command of the Army with Prince Waldeck, he went to Loo the 17th of September. The ſame Day the Confederate Army march'd to Leuze, and on the 19th advanc'd towards Cambron; which the Duke of Luxemburgh hearing, and that the King had left the Army, he was encourag'd to make an Attempt upon their Rear, and wou'd

The King's ſhort ſtay in England.

A.D. 1691 wou'd probably have gone farther, had it not been for the brave Reſiſtance of the Dutch Cavalry, under the Lord Auverquerque, who to recover the Honour they loſt at Flerus, rally'd them after they had been put into Diſorder, renew'd the Fight with greater Fury, and gave time to the Dutch Infantry to come up; which the French not liking to have to do with ſince the ſame Fight, Luxemburgh drew off, contenting himſelf with having kill'd about 1000 of the Confederate Army, with the loſs of 500 of his own. It is obvious that ſuch Campaigns as theſe, were not worthy the Preſence of King William, the Guardian of the Liberty of Europe; but the backwardneſs of the Allies in furniſhing their Quota's, purſuant to their Stipulations, made the French ſo far Superior in Strength to their Army, that it was glorious to the King to hinder ſo much as he did the Progreſs of Lewis XIV's Conqueſts; who threaten'd to add the whole Netherlands to them, as often as his Armies took the Field, or at leaſt his Flatterers ſo threaten'd in their Panegyricks, Medals and Motto's, which he paid liberally for, and are now the moſt ſhining Monuments of his Triumphs.

After a Month's ſtay at Loo and the Hague, his Majeſty embark'd October 18. on board the Mary Yatch, and ſetting ſail from the Maeſe, under Convoy of Sir Cloudeſley Shovel, arriv'd the next Day in England, and came that Night to Kenſington; having eſcap'd the bloody Deſigns of his Enemies, to have him maſſacred at Loo, which if the French King did not know of, his Miniſters did, as did alſo the Jacobites in England, by means of Parker one of the Chief Aſſaſſins, who was in that bloody Conſpiracy, as will be ſeen the next Year. In the mean time I will purſue the Affairs of Ireland, to the total Reduction of that Kingdom by the Arms of King William, the Deliverer of the Proteſtants there, as he had been of thoſe in Great-Britain.

A Deſign to aſſaſſinate the King at Loo.

Affairs of Ireland.

There was little Action in that Country on either ſide during the Winter, only the Iriſh Rapparees, Thieves and Murderers, were very troubleſome to the Engliſh; till their Army took the Field, which was about the beginning of June; and then they ſoon diſpers'd, and return'd from murdering and robbing to the Iriſh Army, of which they were not the moſt ſcandalous Members. General Ginkle, who commanded the Engliſh Forces, ſoon became Maſter of Ballymore, which on the 8th of June ſurrender'd to him at Diſcretion. The Governor Ulicke Bourk, formidable only in his Iriſh Name, being frighted at this Meſſage, That if he did not ſurrender in two Hours, he and his Garriſon were to expect no Mercy. At this Place 259 Rapparees laid down their Arms. From thence the Army march'd towards Athlone; and on the 19th, the Van-guard beat the Enemy from ſeveral Out-Works of the Engliſh Town of Athlone, on this ſide the Shannon, and lodg'd themſelves there. The next Day, a Battery of ten Eighteen-Pounders having ruin'd a Baſtion near the Water-ſide, the General order'd an Aſſault to be made, which was bravely perform'd by the Engliſh, who forc'd their way by continual Fire, till they came to the Breach, which a French Captain of Granadiers firſt mounted, throwing his Granado and firing his Piece; his Men following his Example, it ſo encourag'd his Party, that tho' he fell in the Action, they ſoon drove the Iriſh out of the Place, ſome flying over the Bridge on Connaught ſide, and the reſt leaping into the Shannon, where many were drown'd. After this Succeſs, Batteries were planted againſt the Iriſh Town of Athlone; and by the 22d of June, the Cannons and Mortars began to play briskly on the North-Eaſt ſide of the Caſtle. The 25th was ſpent in raiſing more Batteries, one below, and another above the Bridge, while another was erected oppoſite to a Baſtion the Iriſh had made on the other ſide of the River. At the ſame time the General was concerting Methods to march part of the Army over the Shannon, at a Ford towards Lanesborough; but that Deſign being fruſtrated, he reſolv'd to force his way through the Engliſh Town; and to that end, labour'd hard to gain the Bridge, wherein he found no ſmall difficulty. However, on the 27th, the Engliſh burn'd the wooden Breaſt-Work the Enemy had rais'd on the other ſide of the broken Arch, and the next Morning had laid their Beams over, and partly plank'd them; which a Party of the Beſieg'd endeavouring to ruin, they were all kill'd in the Attempt: This did not diſcourage another Party of theirs, to ſet about the ſame Work; and they deſperately effected it, throwing the Planks and Beams into the River amidſt the Fire of the Engliſh: an Action that ought to teach all Nations Modeſty in their Judgment of the Bravery of all other People but themſelves, for the Iriſh here acted as brave a Part as the braveſt of them could ever boaſt of. The General then reſolv'd to carry on the Work by a cloſe Gallery on the Bridge; but this too was burn'd by the Iriſh; and there ſeem'd no way left to paſs the Shannon: But on the 30th of June, a Council of War was held, where it was warmly debated, whether to attempt the River itſelf, or march off. There were not wanting great Reaſons for the latter, which were oppos'd by the Duke of Wirtemberg, Major-General Mackay, lately come from reducing the Highlanders in Scotland, Major-General Talmaſh, Major-Generals Ruvigny and Tetteau, and Colonel Cambon, who urg'd, That no brave Action could be perform'd without Hazard; that the Attempt of taking the River, and paſſing it ſafely, was like to be attended with Succeſs, and proffer'd themſelves to be Leaders of the reſt. Their Opinion prevail'd, the Detachment drawn out the day before was order'd ſtill to be in a Readineſs, and the General commanded they ſhould be brought down by Six in the Evening, the uſual Hour of relieving the Guards, that the Enemy might not ſuſpect the Deſign. Now every thing being in order, and the Signal given, Captain Sandys and two Lieutenants led the firſt Party of 60 Granadiers, all in Armour, and 20 abreaſt, ſeconded by another ſtrong Detachment of Granadiers commanded by Colonel Guſtavus Hamilton, which were to be ſupported by ſix Battalions of Foot, who, with unparallel'd Bravery, took the River, a little to the left of the Bridge, againſt one of the Enemies Baſtions, the Stream being very rapid, and the Paſſage exceeding difficult, by reaſon of ſome great Stones that were in the River. At laſt, with amazing Intrepidity, they ſurmounted all Difficulties, forc'd their way thro' the Water, Fire, and Sword, and gain'd the oppoſite Bank, while other Soldiers laid Planks over the broken Part of the Bridge, and others were preparing the Pontoons, by which the Engliſh paſs'd over ſo faſt, that in leſs than half an Hour, they became Maſters of the Town, the Garriſon flying away in diſtraction to the Iriſh Camp, and the Engliſh poſſeſs'd themſelves of all the Works that were on that ſide of it towards the Enemy. This Enterprize, as it was the moſt hazardous, ſo was it the moſt glorious in the whole Courſe of the War, and in Courage and Danger, as much exceeded the boaſted Paſſage of the Rhine by the French King, as the fording the Thames at the Tower while the Guns were firing, would exceed the croſſing it in a Ferry at Lambeth; tho' ſuch Waſte of Rhime, Fuſtian, and Flattery, was beſtow'd on that Conqueror for his marvellous Intrepidity in the Paſſage.

Athlone taken.

Siege of Athlone.

The Engliſh were no ſooner enter'd the River, but an Expreſs was ſent from the Town to Monſieur St. Ruth, late Dragooner of the Proteſtants in France, and now General of that Army, for which Prayers were prepar'd in the Jacobite Liturgy, to deſire Succours; his Anſwer was, It is impoſſible for the Engliſh to pretend to take a Town, while I am ſo near with an Army to defend it; I would give a thouſand Piſtoles

A.D.1691 Piſtoles they durſt attempt it. Sarsfield, who wanted neither Courage nor Underſtanding, reply'd, I know it is a difficult Enterprize, but not too difficult for Engliſh Valour to attempt it: and therefore he preſs'd St. Ruth to ſend away ſome Forces to relieve the Town; which the French General refuſing to do, and ſtill turning the Enterprize into a Jeſt, ſome hot Words paſs'd between him and Sarsfield, which were thought to have their fatal Conſequences not long after. This is the General, on whoſe Life F. Orleans makes the Fate of Ireland, and conſequently the Fate of King James to depend. St. Ruth being ſoon convinc'd, that the Engliſh had driven the Iriſh out of the Town, and were in actual poſſeſſion of it, order'd ſeveral Detachments to beat them out again; but this wonderful General found he had been guilty of another Overſight, in not levelling thoſe Fortifications of Athlone, that were againſt his Camp: for now the Engliſh us'd the Enemies Works againſt themſelves, and ſtruck ſuch Terror upon the whole Army of Iriſh and French, that they decamp'd that very Night.

The Engliſh being enter'd the Town, found more Obſtruction from the Rubbiſh beat down by their Cannon than from the Enemy; which made the Soldiers curſe and ſwear bitterly, and gave occaſion to that excellent Perſon Major-General Mackay to tell them, They had more Reaſon to fall down upon their Knees, and thank God for the Victory; and that they were brave Men, and the beſt of Men, if they would ſwear leſs.

General Mackay rebukes the Soldiers for ſwearing.

It was a common Report in London, that there were very great Wagers laid on the taking of Athlone by ſuch a Day, and that ſome of the General Officers had a Correſpondence with Mr. Henry Furneſe, Citizen of London, who dealt in Inſurances of all kinds, upon this and other the like Articles. That the Time limited for the taking of Athlone wearing apace, the Generals concern'd, expedited it by this daring and fortunate Enterprize, and 'twas ſaid, gave every one of the Grenadiers that firſt took the River a Guinea a-piece. Be that as it will, it is certain Mr. Furneſe was deep in theſe Wagers, and had ſo good Intelligence, that the State ſometimes made uſe of it.

Biſhop Kennet in the Compleat Hiſtory concludes the Affair of Athlone thus: After this manner was the Iriſh Town of Athlone, when proudly thought inacceſſible, reſolutely taken in an Hour's time. It is a hard Matter to match in Hiſtory ſo brave an Enterprize, a fortified Town attack'd croſs a deep and wide River, only by 3000 Men in the Face of a great Army; to which may be added, and of a General, who, according to the Jeſuit Orleans, was the moſt invincible Hero in the Service of his invincible Monarch; who were Maſters of all the Fords by the Retrenchments they had caſt before them; and therefore it was but Juſtice, continues the Biſhop, that General Ginkle ſhould entail on his Family the Honour of this Atchievement, by the Title which was afterwards beſtow'd on him of Earl of Athlone. And if ſo, what could be more unjuſt, than the dwelling ſo invidiouſly on a ſmall Grant to him of ſome Lands in Ireland, to help ſupport that Dignity, as was done by Mr. Trenchard and others, but not all the Commiſſioners for the Iriſh Forfeitures? General Ginkle having put Athlone into a Poſture of Defence, march'd with his Army, July the 10th, and having reach'd Ballinaſloe, encamp'd along the River Sack upon Roſcommon ſide, a very good Paſs; which, if St. Ruth had ſecur'd, he would have given the Engliſh a great deal of trouble. But in truth, he poſſeſs'd himſelf of a more advantageous Poſt; for the Iriſh lay on the other ſide of Aghrim Caſtle, three Miles off, and were extended from the Church of Kilcommodon, on the Right, to a Place call'd Courtnapori, about two Miles in length. On their Left ran a Rivulet, with ſteep Hills and little Bogs on each ſide; next to which was a large Red Bog, almoſt a Mile over; and at the end of it ſtood the A.D.1691 Caſtle of Aghrim, commanding the way that led to their Camp, paſſable for Horſe no where but juſt at the Caſtle, by reaſon of a ſmall River, which running thro' a moiſt Ground, made the whole a Moraſs. This Moraſs extended itſelf along to the Right, where there was another Paſs at Vrachres, having a riſing Ground on each ſide, and the Iriſh Camp lay along the Ridge of a Hill, on the ſide of which ſtood two Daniſh Forts, about half a Mile's diſtance from the Bog below; and this cut into ſmall Encloſures, which were lin'd very thick with Muſqueteers, and kept a Communication between them.

Thus we find the valourous St. Ruth hemm'd in with Bogs, Forts, Hills, and Hedges, wherein the Knowledge Sarsfield and the Iriſh Officers had of the Ground, very much help'd him. Gen. Ginkle having view'd his Camp, found it of very difficult Acceſs; but conſidering he had advanc'd ſo far, and muſt either fight his way through, or retreat with Loſs and Shame, he brought up his Army to front the Enemy, and provoke them to Battle. St. Ruth ſuppoſing by the Countenance of the Engliſh, that they were reſolv'd to attack him, did all he could to encourage his Men, ordering Prayers and Maſſes to be ſaid in every Quarter. The Speech he is ſaid to have made, not being thought to be genuine, I omit it; the Purport of it was to animate them to behave manfully, Since now was the only Time for them to recover their loſt Honours, Privil ges, and Eſtates, and to extirpate Hereſy.

The Battle of Aghrim.

On Sunday, July 12, the Engliſh Army march'd early in the Morning towards the Iriſh; but the Weather proving foggy, they halted till about Noon, when they advanc'd in as good order, as the Nature of the Ground would permit. General Ginkle having view'd the Poſture of the Enemy, and ſeeing the Neceſſity of making himſelf Maſter of the Paſs of Vrachres, he ſent a Daniſh Captain to force it; but he failing in the Attempt, he order'd 200 of Cuningham's Dragoons to march to certain Ditches nigh the Ford, to keep the Iriſh from coming over, while the Army in the mean time continu'd their March. The General finding it neceſſary to gain the Ford, and the other ways which led to the Right of the Iriſh Camp, as the moſt proper means to attack them, commanded Cunningham's Dragoons at the Ditch, to advance about two a-clock towards a Party of the Enemy, that were poſted on the other ſide; who, upon this, with another Party that ſuſtain'd them, retir'd behind a Hill nearer their Camp, where a great Body was poſted; and all theſe, being ſtill reinforc'd by others, the Engliſh Dragoons were oblig'd to retreat; upon which, the General order'd Eppinger's Dragoons to get between thoſe Bodies and the Iriſh Camp, who preſently diſcovering this Motion, would, by the Advantage of quick Reinforcements, have been too hard for the Engliſh, had not the Dragoons been ſeconded by the Earl of Portland's Horſe, who behav'd here with wonderful Bravery. By this means, what was at firſt only a Skirmiſh, engag'd a conſiderable Part of both Armies; but the Enemy retiring in ſome time brought the Generals together to conſult, Whether it was not better to defer the Battle till next Morning? which was ſo far agreed on, that the Tents were order'd to be ſent for. But when, by what had already happen'd, they perceiv'd the Enemy to be in ſome Diſorder, the Battle was fully reſolv'd on; wherefore it was agreed, by the Advice of Major-General Mackay, to begin it on the Enemy's Right; by which it was propos'd to draw part of their Strength from Aghrim Caſtle, near to which their main Body was poſted, that ſo the Right Wing of the Engliſh might have an eaſier Paſſage over to attack their Left; and then the whole Engliſh Army might have an opportunity to engage, which otherwiſe could not poſſibly be; and this Advice had its deſir'd Effect.

*A.D.*1691 About half an Hour after Four in the Afternoon the Engliſh Left Wing mov'd towards the Iriſh, and the Battle began afreſh by Five. The Ditches were ſtrongly lin'd by Iriſh Muſqueteers, and their Horſe advantageouſly poſted to ſupport them; and here the Iriſh behav'd ſo well, that it ſhew'd King James had put an Affront on their whole Nation, by charging them with Cowardice in the laſt Speech he made at Dublin, which they would have reſented, and abandon'd him, had they had any other Spirit in them but what was infus'd by a blind Zeal for Papiſtry. They defended their Poſts with unparallel'd Obſtinacy; nor would they ſtir from one ſide of a Ditch, till the Engliſh put their Pieces over on the other; and then having Lines of Communication from one Ditch to another, they would preſently poſt themſelves and flank the Engliſh; which occaſion'd great Firings on both ſides, and continu'd on the Left almoſt an Hour and half, before the Center and the Right Wing of the Army began to engage. In the mean time, the main Army advanc'd, and Major-General Mackay, and the other Officers, obſerving ſeveral Bodies of the Enemies Horſe and Foot draw off from the Left, and moved towards the Right, where they were hard put to it by the Engliſh; General Ginkle laid hold of that opportunity, and order'd the Foot to march over the Bog, which fronted the Enemies main Body. The Regiments of Erle, Herbert, Creighton, and Brewer, paſſing over the narroweſt Place, where the Hedges on the Enemies ſide ran fartheſt, had Orders to march to the loweſt of the Ditches adjoining to the ſide of the Bog, and there to poſt themſelves till the Horſe could come about by Aghrim Caſtle, and ſuſtain them; and till the other Foot had march'd over the other Bog, where it was broader, ſupported by Colonel Foulks and Brigadier Stewart's Regiments. Erle's, and the other three Regiments, purſuant to their Orders, advanc'd over the Bog, moſt of them paſſing up to the middle in Mud and Water, and upon their near Approach to the Ditches, receiv'd the Enemies Fire, which yet did not hinder them from marching to the loweſt Hedge, and beating the Iriſh from thence, and ſo on from Hedge to Hedge till they were got very near their main Body. But the Iriſh had ſo well order'd the Matter, that they had an eaſy Paſſage for their Horſe among thoſe Ditches and Hedges, which being obſerv'd by the valiant Colonel Erle, the ſame who was in Diſgrace during the Harleian Adminiſtration, of which he ſaid ſomething, as will be hereafter remember'd; he encourag'd his Men by telling them, There was no way to come off but to be brave; which, in truth, they were to a wonder. But being both flank'd and fronted, and expos'd to all the Fire from the neighbouring Hedges, they were forc'd from their Ground, and retreated again to the Bog with conſiderable Loſs. Among others, the gallant Col. Erle and Col. Herbert, the latter Brother to the Earl of Torrington, were taken Priſoners. Col. Erle, after being twice taken and re-taken, at laſt got clear, by ſliding himſelf off an Iriſh Dragoon's Horſe, as he was en Crouppe, on the Crupper, and unobſerv'd in the Heat of the Action. Col. Herbert was barbarouſly murder'd by the Iriſh, when they ſaw they could not keep him; his being Brother alſo to Sir Edward Herbert, King James's Lord Chancellor at St. Germains, procuring him no more Favour with thoſe mercileſs Maſſacrers.

Col. Erle taken and retaken.

In the mean time, Col. St. John's, Col. Tiffin's, Lord George Hamilton's, the French Refugee-Regiments, and ſeveral other Regiments, were marching over the Bog, the Iriſh lying ſo cloſe in the Ditches, that many of the Engliſh were doubtful whether they were there or no. But as ſoon as the French Proteſtants, and the other Troops got within 20 Yards of them, the Iriſh made a furious Fire upon them; which the other ſuſtain'd with incredible Bravery, preſſing forward, tho' they could ſcarce ſee one another for Smoak. At this time the Battle ſeem'd ſo doubtful, that a Spectator would have had no Reaſon to think Victory inclin'd to the Engliſh, for the Iriſh had driven their Foot in the Center ſo far back, that they were almoſt got even with the great Guns, planted near the Bog; of which the Engliſh had no Benefit in that Conjuncture, becauſe of the Mixture of the Iriſh with their own Men. *A.D.*1691 The Battle doubtful.

We hear little all this while of the Horſe; but during this Engagement, between the Foot and the Enemy, Major-General Ruvigny's Regiment of French Horſe, and Sir John Lanier's, being both poſted on the Right, the latter was afterwards drawn to the Left, where they did great Service; and the Right Wing of the Engliſh Horſe, were in the mean time making the beſt of their way to ſuccour their Foot, being ſenſible of the extream Danger they were in, and that all was at ſtake. The Cavalry, beſides the Showers of Bullets pour'd on them from a Body of the Enemies Dragoons and Foot, that were conveniently poſted under a covert Place, was alſo oblig'd to preſs and tumble over a very dangerous Paſs; but having with undaunted Reſolution ſurmounted all theſe Difficulties, they lodg'd themſelves at laſt in a dry Ditch, in the hotteſt of the Enemies Fire from Aghrim Caſtle, and ſome old Walls and adjoining Hedges. It was reported, that St. Ruth himſelf obſerving it, could not help ſaying, They are brave Fellows, 'tis Pity they ſhould be expos'd. And we cannot help obſerving that the Engliſh, in both the Battles they won in this Iriſh War, had Rivers, Bogs, Mountains, Forts, and Caſtles, to combat with, as well as the Enemy, who were ſo vain, as to impute the Difficulties the Engliſh met with, to their own Valour only, and not to the Advantage of Ground, which they knew beſt how to chuſe in their native Country. St. Ruth's ſaying of the Bravery of the Engliſh.

The Engliſh Foot continu'd ſtill to be engag'd with Diſadvantage in the Center, which being obſerv'd by the brave Talmaſh, he haſted with ſome freſh Men to their Relief, and order'd the broken Regiments to halt and face about, which they immediately obey'd, and boldly charg'd the Iriſh, who had advanc'd upon them to the very Center of the Bog, kill'd above 300 of them before they could retreat out of it; and then march'd up to their old Ground, from whence they had been beaten. At the ſame time, Mackay fell upon the Enemy with a good Body of Horſe on their Left, and among the reſt, a French Refugee-Regiment of Horſe forc'd a Regiment of Iriſh Dragoons from an advantageous Poſt, and put Tyrconnel's Horſe to flight: Upon which, Ruvigny, the ſame whom the notable Adminiſtation before mention'd ſo cruelly and ungratefully dealt with, after he had led the Confederate Army to Madrid, at the Head of the Oxford Horſe, ſupported by his own Regiment, went along the ſide of the Bog, and bore all down before him. And now the Horſe and Foot of the Engliſh Right and the Iriſh Left Wing, being mix'd, there was nothing but a continual Fire, and a very ſharp Diſpute all along the Lines; the Iriſh with great Reſoluteneſs endeavouring to maintain their Ditches, and the Engliſh to beat them from thence. And if we pauſe a little here, we ſhall find that Ruvigny, afterwards Earl of Galway, by putting Tyrconnel's Horſe to flight, and bearing down all before him; and the Engliſh Foot, by driving the Iriſh out of the Bog, and recovering the Ground they had loſt; would have given a Spectator ſuch a View of the Battle, as would have made him promiſe Victory to the Engliſh. And 'tis a general Error in the French and Jacobite Writers to aſcribe the Loſs of the Battle to the Death of St. Ruth, for the Turn appear'd plainly before he was kill'd, tho' he had brag'd, when he ſaw the Engliſh driven back to the Bog, He would beat them to the very Gates of Dublin. He ſaw now, with great Concern, Oxford, Ruvigny, Langſton, and Bierly's Horſe, with Leviſon's Dragoons, preſſing towards the Caſtle; to oppoſe which, he order'd a Brigade of his own Horſe

A.D.1690 Horſe to advance, and riding to one of his Batteries to give the Gunners Orders where to fire; he afterwards led on ſome Horſe towards the Place, where he ſaw the Engliſh were getting over: but as he rode down the Hill of Killcommodon, where lay the main ſtreſs of the Battle, being juſt under the Iriſh Camp, he was kill'd with a Cannon-Ball, when he had not about him one token of a ſudden Victory, but many of a Rout, tho' it was not then really ſo in effect. As ſoon as he fell, his Body was remov'd behind the Hill, and his Guard going off at the ſame time, many of the Iriſh Horſe did the like; and their Army was ſoon driven to the top of Killcommodon Hill, where their Camp was, which being levell'd and expos'd to the Engliſh Shot, the Enemy made but a faint Reſiſtance, Horſe and Foot taking to their Heels; the Foot ran towards a large Bog behind them to the left, and the Horſe to Loughbreah, a very advantageous Paſs.

St. Ruth kill'd.

While all this was doing in the Right Wing and Center, the Engliſh to the Left, that were firſt engag'd, kept their Ground, and tho' the Iriſh, once or twice, made themſelves Maſters of the Chevaux de Friſe, that cover'd the French Foot of Refugees, yet the latter bravely recover'd them. However, little happen'd on that ſide for near two Hours together; neither did the Horſe and Foot, that were to the Left of all, diſturb the Enemy as yet, but kept in awe ſeveral Bodies of Horſe and Foot, which fac'd them on the other ſide of the Rivulet. But then perceiving Mackay's Battallions in the Center, to drive the Enemies before them; leſt thoſe Bodies that fac'd them ſhould fall back to the Relief of the Flying-Party; they engag'd them very briskly, and were at firſt receiv'd with great Reſolution; but at laſt the Iriſh fled all out of the Field, their Foot being miſerably ſlaughter'd by the Engliſh Horſe and Dragoons; and their Horſe purſu'd near three Miles, till Night coming on with a thick miſty Rain, prevented the Engliſh from getting between them and Loughbreah, which gave many of them an Opportunity to eſcape. However, it was computed, that no leſs than 4000 of Iriſh were ſlain on the Spot, and of the Engliſh 700.

F. Orleans's Hiſtory trifling and falſe.

The Jeſuit Orleans's Book is a Trifle not worth Notice, and if any is taken of it here, 'tis becauſe he boaſted King James aſſiſted him in the Writing of it, which is not the more unlikely, becauſe the Facts are not true. He ſays of this laſt Battle, that of Aghrim,

King William had never reduc'd Ireland, had not St. Ruth, in the Battle he fought near Athlone, been kill'd by a Cannon-Ball, after he had broke all the Enemies Foot; who, by the way, had recover'd the Ground they had loſt before St. Ruth was kill'd, as he was actually giving Orders for purſuing this beginning of Victory; as Monſieur Ruvigny, with the Oxford Horſe, was actually purſuing Tyrconnel, and other Iriſh Horſe and Dragoons, that were actually flying before him. As for the Honour of this great Day, the renowned General Ginkle had ever the Modeſty to confeſs, that it was principally owing to the Conduct and Bravery of the Marquiſs de Ruvigny; let us remember this, when we come to the Uſage he met with from Mr. Robert Harley and his Brethren, and of the Oxford and French Regiments of Horſe. The Victory was the more glorious, for that beſides the prodigious Advantages the Iriſh had in their Ground, they had the ſame in their Numbers, their Army conſiſting of 20000 Foot, and 5000 Horſe and Dragoons; and the Engliſh of not above 18000 effective Men. General Ginkle having allow'd his Soldiers ſome Days of Refreſhment, and in the mean time receiv'd Information of the State of Galway, the moſt conſiderable Place next to Limerick, which the Iriſh had in their Poſſeſſion, he directed his March thither, inveſted the Town and ſummon'd the Garriſon to ſurrender. The Lord Dillon, the Gover- A.D.1691 nor, made Anſwer, That Monſieur d' Uſſon, who commanded in Chief, as well as himſelf and the reſt of the Officers, were reſolv'd to defend the Place to the laſt Extremity. But they continu'd not long in this Gallantry, for the Engliſh having taken the Fort, the Iriſh were building on the other ſide of the River, the latter beat a Parley and exchang'd Hoſtages; but the Iriſh demurring upon the manner of Surrender, the General grew impatient, and ſent once or twice to them to come to a Concluſion. At laſt Lieutenant-Colonel Burk, one of the Iriſh Hoſtages, was allow'd to go in, to whom Major-General Talmaſh, who ſeem'd rather inclin'd to lay the Treaty aſide, and take the Town by Storm, ſaid, when you are ready to begin again, give us a Sign by firing a Gun into the Air. But Burk reply'd, we will not fire a Gun from within, till we are provok'd from without. Accordingly the Garriſon Galway capitulated, and ſurrender'd on reaſonable Terms; the ſurren- Conſequence of which, was the Submiſſion of Bal- der'd.

the Engliſh Army came before the Place the 25th of Auguſt. The ſame Day they made themſelves Maſters of Cromwel and Ireton's Forts, which were now order'd to be call'd Mackay's and Naſſau's, becauſe gain'd by thoſe Commanders. I ſhall not enter into the Particulars of this Siege, there being none extraordinary in it. The Engliſh Generals had thoughts of turning it into a Blockade, and ſending a ſtrong Detachment of the Army into the Counties of Kerry and Clare, to diſperſe what Forces the Iriſh had in a Body, and then reduce Limerick by ſtarving it; which might eaſily have been done, the Engliſh being Maſters both of the Field and the Sea. For the French Fleet, after all the great Bounce of their Victory off Beachy laſt Year, durſt not this Year look the Engliſh in the Face. Thoſe that wiſh'd well to the Proteſtant Intereſt in Great-Britain and Ireland, were not ſo well pleas'd with the reducing of Limerick, which had no Succour to expect, as they were ill-pleas'd Second Siege of Limerick. with the Unaccountable Treaty that was made with the Garriſon; by which not only a great Number of the moſt flagitious Rebels were protected from Puniſhment, but were reſtor'd to their Liberty and Eſtates; and even a Pretence given to thouſands of the Rebellious Iriſh to plead the Articles The Articles of Limerick diſlik'd.
of Limerick, againſt their Forfeitures by Attainder. It is very obvious, the Rebels in Limerick cou'd have done little more harm, and muſt before the Winter was over, have accepted of ſuch Terms as Conquerors think fit to deal to the Conquer'd. The Engliſh Forces in Ireland were now inur'd to the Country, and cou'd have weather'd the Blockade better than the Iriſh cou'd have born the approaching Winter-Seaſon, in a Town ſo ſtreighten'd on all Sides. But it was generally thought, that the late King had too many Friends in and about Whitehall, to have ſo good Counſel purſu'd, as was that of cruſhing his Party for ever, by an unconditional Surrender of Limerick, the laſt Hole they had left to hide in. Nothing can be more vain and ridiculous than what Orleans the Jeſuit ſays, after King F. Orleans rick was ſuſtain'd with ſuch Reputation, that it might have been a Means to reſtore that King. Whereas in truth, the Beſiegers, under what Influence I know not, unleſs it was their deſire to ſave the effuſion of Chriſtian Blood, were far from behaving before Limerick, as they had done before Athlone. 'Tis true, all Ireland, but that Town and its Dependencies, had ſubmitted; and there was not that Neceſſity of expoſing the Men to Slaughter, as when a ſtronger Army than their own, and a third Part of the Kingdom ſtood out againſt them.

The Victory owing to the Earl of Galway.

This

A.D.1691 This was the Diſcourſe at that time, and conſiderate Perſons will doubtleſs be ſtill in the ſame Sentiments.

The moſt conſiderable Action during this Siege, was on the 22d of September, when all the Engliſh Grenadiers, ſuſtain'd by four Regiments of Foot, were commanded to attack the Works, which cover'd Thomond Bridge, wherein the Enemy had poſted 200 Men; the Diſpute was hot and obſtinate for a while, and the Attack extremely hazardous, the Beſieg'd plying the Aſſailants with their Cannon from the King's Caſtle, and two or three more Batteries, as alſo with their ſmall Shot from the Walls. However, the Engliſh Granadiers forc'd their way, maugre all Oppoſition; and the Iriſh abandon'd their Poſts; upon which, a ſtrong Detachment was ſent from the Town to ſupport them: but the Engliſh advanc'd with ſo much Reſolution, that they beat the ſtrong Detachment alſo, and purſu'd them over the Bridge into the Town, where a French Major, who commanded at Thomond-Gate, fearing the Engliſh would enter the City pell-mell with the Runaways, order'd the Drawbridge to be drawn up, and left the whole Party expos'd to the Fury of the Purſuers, who ſhew'd them little Mercy, killing 600 of them, beſides a great Number that was drown'd, and 150 taken Priſoners.

This is the boaſted Defence of Limerick, which the Jeſuit ſaid, was ſo likely to have been a Means for King James's Reſtoration. The Engliſh lodg'd themſelves within ten Yards of the Bridge, in ſpite of a High-Tower that ſtood near the end of it; and the Iriſh finding now all Communication cut off between them and their Horſe, and beginning to deſpair of French Succours, entertain'd ſome Thoughts of Surrender. The ſame Reaſons that inſpir'd the Iriſh with ſuch Thoughts, ſhou'd have had the contrary Effect on the Engliſh, and have kept them from treating with the Rebels on the Terms that were unhappily agreed upon. Soon after the laſt Action, Col. Wachup looking out of a Tower, call'd to Lieutenant-General Scravenmore, and deſir'd leave to come and ſpeak with him; which being readily granted, he deſir'd the ſame Liberty for Sarsfield, to ſpeak with Major-General Ruvigny; which being alſo agreed to, Sarsfield and Wachup propos'd Conditions for the Surrender of the Place, and after a ſhort Conference return'd into the Town. The next Day they both came out again, and deſir'd a Ceſſation of Arms for three Days, till they could ſend to Lieutenant-General Sheldon, who lay at Six-Mile Bridge with about 1500 Horſe, in order to have them included in the General Capitulation; which had it been at Diſcretion, had been reaſonable; but to take them out of Rebellion into Protection, when there were 4 or 5000 Engliſh Horſe and Dragoons ſo near them, is a ſtep that no good Policy can account for; this being alſo granted, the Priſoners in the Town were releas'd. It is proper to remark, that whatever Inſinuatioh there may be here of too great Compliance with the Iriſh, in the Treaty of Surrender, nothing is intended to reflect in the leaſt on the Honour of General Ginkle, or the other Generals, who were without doubt influenc'd in their Counſels, by the Knowledge they had of the Biaſs of thoſe of England, where there were ſtill too many Tares among the Wheat.

Ill Counſels.

On the 26th of September, Sarsfield and Wachup din'd with the General, and it was then agreed to exchange Hoſtages, while the Treaty was on foot; for the Engliſh, were the Lord Cutts, Sir David Collyer, afterwards Earl of Portmore, Col. Tiffin and Col. Piper, who were ſent into Limerick; for the Iriſh, were the Earl of Weſtmeath, the Lords Evagh, Louth and Trimelſtown, who remain'd in the Engliſh Camp. The Iriſh ſent out their Propoſals the next Day, but ſuch extravagant ones, that the General made Anſwer, Tho' I am a Stranger to the Laws of England, yet I underſtand, that what they inſiſt on, is ſo far contradictory to them, that I cannot grant any ſuch Thing. And immediately he order'd a New Battery to be rais'd; but upon the Requeſt of the Iriſh, he ſent them in twelve Articles, which prov'd to be the Baſis of the Capitulation. A.D.1691

On the 1ſt of October, the Lords-Juſtices of Ireland arriv'd in the Engliſh Camp; and after ſome further Conferences with the Iriſh Commiſſioners, the Treaty for the Surrender of the City of Limerick, the Caſtles of Roſs and Clare, with all the other Places and Caſtles, held ſtill by the Iriſh in that Kingdom, was ſign'd the 3d of October. I wou'd deſire any ſober Underſtanding to ſolve this Queſtion, Whether the Surrender of theſe terrible Caſtles, with the Town of Limerick, was ſuch an Advantage to the Engliſh, as to diſcharge thoſe that were in them, of the Guilt and Penalties of Rebellion. They wou'd have been beaten about the Ears of the Rebels, as faſt as the Engliſh cou'd have come at them. The Articles of Limerick have been ſo often pleaded in Law and Argument on the ſide of King James's Rebellious Party in Ireland; and are beſides ſo diſhonourable and diſadvantageous to the Proteſtant Name and Intereſt in theſe Kingdoms, that I ſhall only mention the Heads of three or four of them.

This long Article drawn up ſo Lawyer-like, made a hole for inconceiveable Numbers of the Attainted Iriſh and their Heirs to creep out at.

By the 11th Article, Col. Simon Lutterel, who behav'd ſo villainouſly towards the Proteſtants, as Governor of Dublin; Capt. Rowland White, Maurice Euſtace of Gormonſtown, and Chevers of Mayortown, were included, and all of them to have a General Pardon by the fifth Article; which I ſuppoſe the Reader will have no more Curioſity to ſee, than I have to inſert, conſidering what Reaſon that and other Articles gave the Jeſuit Orleans to boaſt, The Iriſh made the fineſt Capitulation that ever was ſeen.

'Twas ſign'd by Sir Charles Porter, and Thomas Coningsby Eſq; afterwards Lord Coningsby, for the Engliſh, and by Baron de Ginkle; for the Iriſh, by Sarsfield, owning his Title of Lord Lucan, given him by the Abdicated King; the Lord Gallmoy, N. Purſel, N. Cuſach, Theob. Butler, John Brown, Gen. Dillon; Preſent Scravenmore, H. Mackay, T. Talmaſh. The News of this Surrender was brought to the King in Holland, by Mr. Henry Furneſe before ſpoken of; on whom his Majeſty was pleas'd to confer the Honour of Knighthood.

By other Articles, all the Iriſh, that were willing to go to France, had Liberty to do it; but General Ginkle two Days after, receiv'd a Letter from a Lieutentant-Colonel in the Iriſh Army, wherein he complain'd he was confin'd for refuſing to go to France; which he reſented ſo much, that he immediately order'd four Guns to be planted upon Boll's Bridge, and ſaid in ſome Paſſion, he would teach

Not ſo,* reply'd the General, You ſhall go in again, and do the worſt you can. At laſt all things were calm'd, and the Priſoner enlarg'd. As many of the Iriſh as were willing to go, were ſhipp'd off for France; where, upon their Arrival, they were welcom'd with a comforting Letter from King James; if there could be any Comfort in the Promiſes of a Prince in his ordinary Circumſtances, to reward and promote them.

Ireland reduc'd.

The Iriſh War ended with the Surrender of Limerick, Sligo having ſome time before been given up to the Earl of Granard; and it wou'd be ungrateful to deny the General, Baron de Ginkle, the Glory due to his Conduct and Courage in accompliſhing that great Work, ſo much for his Maſter King William's, and the Engliſh Nation's Honour and Intereſt, of which the Parliament of England was ſo ſenſible, that when the General came to London, the Houſe of Commons order'd the Lord Caſtleton, Sir Henry Goodrick, and five more of their Members to attend him with their Thanks to him and his Officers, for the great Services they had done towards the Reduction of Ireland. To which the Baron reply'd, I acknowledge this diſtinguiſhing Honour done me by the Houſe of Commons, and value it above a Triumph. The Succeſs of their Majeſties Arms in Ireland, was owing chiefly to the Valour of the Engliſh; and I will take care to communicate the Vote of the Houſe to the Officers that ſerv'd in Ireland, and always endeavour the Proſperity of their Majeſties and their Government.

The Parliament thanks General Ginkle.

We have mention'd his being made Earl of Athlone, and the Grant of Lands in Ireland, 26480 Acres, which was confirm'd to him by an Act of Parliament in Ireland; but that did not hinder its being put into the Report of the Commiſſioners for Iriſh Forfeitures, not to do him Honour moſt certainly, but to confound him with other Grantees, whoſe Services they found to be in no proportion to their Rewards. The City of London, to expreſs their grateful Senſe of the Services of General Ginkle and the other Generals in Ireland, invited the Baron, now Earl of Athlone; the Duke of Wirtemberg; Lieutenant-General Scravenmore; Lieutenant-General Lanier; Lieutenant General Talmaſh; Major-General Ruvigny; who was never forgiven by the Faction for his Bravery and Atchievements in that War; with moſt of the Field-Officers in Town; to dine with Sir Thomas Stamp, Lord-Mayor, the Aldermen, Sheriffs, and other Principal Citizens, at Merchant-Taylor's-Hall, where they were entertain'd with equal Reſpect and Magnificence.

Two Days after the Articles for the Surrender of Limerick were ſign'd, a Squadron of French Ships, Convoy to ſome Tranſports for the Relief of Limerick, arriv'd in Dingle Bay, and one of them running into the River of Limerick, was ſtranded and ſunk, having on board moſt of the Money that was then ſent; which ſeveral Engliſh Divers attempted to fiſh up afterwards, but their Intelligence or their Art fail'd them.

From the Reduction of Ireland, to the Death of Queen MARY.

Containing the Space of Three Years, Two Months, Twenty-five Days.

INSTEAD of meeting the Engliſh at Sea; the French Fleet did nothing but look out for our Turky Ships which were homewards bound, richly laden, under the Convoy of 14 Men of War, commanded by Admiral Aylmer, who carried them ſafely into Kingſale; while Admiral Ruſſel for want of Intelligence kept another Courſe, by which he miſt them: but hearing they were got into that Port, he gave Directions for ſecuring their Voyage to London; and ſail'd himſelf in queſt of the Enemy, whoſe Fleet lay at Bell-Iſle, ſo well defended againſt any Attack, that the Admiral did not find it practicable. So he return'd to Plymouth, meeting a terrible Storm in his way, which drove the Coronation, a Second Rate, Capt. Skelton Commander, aſhoar near Ramhead, where ſhe periſh'd, with all or the greateſt Part of her Crew. The next Day, Sept. 4th, the Harwich, Capt. Henry Robinſon, a Third Rate, was caſt away near Plymouth. And it was with great Difficulty the Admiral brought the reſt of the Fleet ſafe into that Port.

The Parliament met October 22d, and his Majeſty told them in his Speech to both Houſes,

King William's Speech to the Parliament.

" That he hop'd the good Succeſs with which " it had pleas'd God to bleſs his Arms in Ireland, " would not only be a great Encouragement to " them to proceed the more chearfully in their " Work, but would be look'd upon as an Earneſt " of future Succeſſes, which their timely Aſſiſtance " might, by God's Bleſſing, procure them all. He " did not doubt but they would take care to pay " the Arrears of that Army, which had been ſo " deſerving, and ſo proſperous in the reducement " of Ireland, to a peaceable Condition. And he " aſſur'd them, there ſhou'd no Care be wanting on " his Part to keep that Kingdom, as far as poſſible, " from being burdenſome to England for the fu- " ture. That it would be neceſſary to have a " ſtrong Fleet next Year, and early at Sea. That " the great Power of France would as neceſſarily " require, that they ſhould maintain a very conſi- " derable Army ready upon all Occaſions, and he " did not ſee how it was poſſible to do this with " leſs than 65000 Men."

He concluded thus;

I ſhall only add, That by the Vigour and Diſpatch of your Counſels and Aſſiſtance to me in this Seſſion of Parliament; you have now an Opportunity in your Hands, which if neglected, you can never reaſonably hope to ſee again, not only to eſtabliſh the future Quiet and Proſperity of theſe Kingdoms, but the Peace and Security of all Europe.

Their Loyal Addreſs.

Both Houſes congratulated his Majeſty upon his ſafe and happy Return after ſo many Hazards to which he had expos'd his Perſon, and upon the Succeſs of his Arms in the Reduction of Ireland; and at the ſame time they aſſur'd him, they would aſſiſt him to the utmoſt of their Power, in carrying on a vigorous War againſt France, in order to procure an honourable and laſting Peace to his own Dominions, and to ſecure his Neighbours from the Injuries and Invaſions of the Common Oppreſſor: they mean the French King, with whom the Sacheverel Miniſtry made the Inglorious and Precarious Peace of Utrecht, after the Confederate Arms had reduc'd him to a Neceſſity of confining his Oppreſſions to his own Subjects.

A.D.1691 They also addreſs'd the Queen, and acknowledg'd her Prudent Adminiſtration of the Government, during his Majeſty's Abſence.

The ſame Day the Parliament met, a Proclamation was publiſh'd for a general Thankſgiving.

On the 28th of October, a Bill was brought into the Houſe of Commons, for abrogating the former Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy in Ireland; and appointing the Oaths to King William and Queen Mary: which after two or three Conferences between the Lords and Commons about the Lords Amendments, which they dropt, paſt both Houſes and had the Royal Aſſent.

By the end of the Year, the Commons finiſh'd the Supplies for the next Year's Service, for the Fleet and Army, amounting in all to Three Millions, Four Hundred and Eleven Thouſand, Six Hundred, Seventy-Seven Pounds. But the diſpatch of the Supplies had always in this Reign ſome Impediment or other thrown in its way, to hinder their Efficacy as much as cou'd be, with ſaving Appearances, and concealing the true Deſigns of the Party. The Affair of the Eaſt-India Company took up a great deal of time. The Parliament ſettled the Conditions on which the Charter of the Company ſhould be confirm'd, among which were theſe.

Conditions of the Eaſt-India Company's Charter.

That their Fund ſhould be not leſs than 1500000 l. and not more than 2000000 l.

That they ſhould every Year export in Goods of the Growth and Manufacture of England, to the value of 200000 l.

That all their Goods imported ſhould be ſold at Publick Sales, except Salt-Petre for the Uſe of the Crown.

That they ſhall yearly ſell to the King 500 Tuns of Salt-Petre refin'd, at 30 l. a Tun.

That no Lot at any Sale ſhall exceed 500 l.

That no Perſon ſhall be Governor, or Deputy-Governor, who has leſs ſhare in the Stock than 2000 l. or Committee-Man, that has leſs than 1000 l.

That no Dividends be made without leaving a ſufficient Stock to pay all Debts and carry on the Trade.

That all By-Laws ſhall be approv'd by the General-Court.

The Houſe of Commons alſo reſolv'd, That the Committee of the Eaſt-India Company, be oblig'd to give Security, ſuch as the Houſe ſhou'd approve.

That the Stock and Eſtates they now have, ſhall be made good 749000 l. all Debts paid.

Accordingly Sir Thomas Cook, Sir Thomas Rawlinſon, Sir William Langhorn, and other Committee-Men, deliver'd in Propoſals concerning Security to be given; which being diſapprov'd, the Committee was order'd to produce the Perſons they propos'd to be Security, and an Account of the Sums for which each Perſon ſhould be Security; which they did to the Satisfaction of the Houſe: upon which they order'd a Bill to be brought in, to eſtabliſh the Eaſt-India Company according to the Regulations and Reſolutions they had agreed on; but it came to nothing. On the contrary, ſeveral Petitions being preſented againſt that Bill, to which the Eaſt-India Company did not give ſatisfactory Anſwers; the Commons addreſs'd the King to diſſolve it, and grant a Charter to a New Company. His Majeſty's Anſwer was, It is a Motion of very great Importance to the Trade of this Kingdom, I will conſider of it, and in a ſhort Time give the Commons a poſitive Anſwer. However he was pleas'd to confer the Honour of Knighthood on Sir John Goldsborough, who was going to India in quality of the Company's Commiſſary-General.

For the better Intelligence of Tranſactions in theſe Times, we muſt remember that the two Parties in Parliament, Court-Party and Country-Party; the latter a Miſnomer, aſſum'd by the Tories, and thoſe that voted with them, were ſo near A.D.1691 to an equality, that like Shoars they got and loſt ground, as lucky or unlucky Incidents fell in the way. Neither of them miſt any Opportunity to leſſen the other in Favour and Credit; and as the Tories thought fit, at this Juncture, to abate a little of their Oppoſition to the Government, and Diſregard to the Perſon and Honour of the King; hoping by Cajolry to get themſelves into Employments, and then to behave in them as ſeem'd meet in their own Eyes; the Court-Party or Whigs ſaw well enough what they were driving at. But there were too many of their Opponents about the King, for them to hinder his giving Ear to ſome of their Counſels, and mingling ſome of their Leaders with his faithful Servants, who were thereby diſabled from doing him that Service, which otherwiſe wou'd have eſtabliſh'd the Peace and Proſperity of the Kingdom on a ſolid Baſis. Some Attempts were made to expoſe the Negligence, if not the Treachery of the Tories, that had work'd themſelves into the Miniſtry, but they were raſh and not well enough grounded to ſucceed; and in all ſuch Caſes where a Party do not gain, they are ſure to loſe ground. On the 12th of Nov. the Commons were acquainted that Mr. Bridges a Member of their Houſe, cou'd give an Account of an Information given him by a Captain in their Majeſties Fleet; That Sir Ralph Delaval, one of the Admirals, had lately taken a French Boat going for Ireland, with Papers of dangerous Conſequence to the Government. The Houſe order'd Mr. Bridges to name the Perſon, and he nam'd the Lord Danby, Son to the Marquiſs of Carmarthen. A Conference was then deſir'd with the Lords upon Matters relating to the Safety of the Kingdom, but the Buſineſs did not turn out as was expected. There was no Copy of a Letter from the Earl of Nottingham to Sir Ralph Delaval, in the intercepted Packet, only a Letter from the Earl to Sir Ralph, deſiring him to ſend up that Packet; ſo that Storm blew over. The Commons regulated the Payment of the Forces by effective Muſters; and inquired into the Miſcarriages of the Fleet, the Admiralty Papers being laid before them, by two of the Commiſſioners, Admiral Ruſſel and the Lord Falkland; but theſe Regulations and Inquiries rais'd more than anſwer'd the Expectations of the People, and were afterwards thought to be intended rather to delay Matters than amend them. In the mean while a fatal Accident had like to have befallen their Majeſties Palace at Kenſington, which took fire on the 10th of November, and burnt down the Stone-Gallery, but ſtopp'd before it reach'd the Royal Apartment. 'Twas ſaid, when the King firſt heard Fire cry'd, he immediately ſaid, Where's my Sword? in a Suppoſition there might be ſome Treachery.

Fire at Kenſington Houſe.

About the ſame time Dr. Welwood a Phyſician, noted afterwards for his Memoirs, which he borrow'd from Converſations with Biſhop Burnet, publiſh'd a Weekly Paper, entitled, Mercurius Reformatus, in which he detected and expos'd the ſiniſter Deſigns of the Tories; but his Zeal having carry'd him farther, than was agreeable to their Friends in the Houſe, on whoſe Proceedings he ſeem'd to reflect; he was order'd into Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms, and reprimanded by the Speaker when he was diſcharg'd. But Dr. Welwood was not without Comfort in his Afflictions, being ſoon after made one of the Phyſicians in Ordinary to his Majeſty.

Dr. Welwood queſtion'd in Parliament. Made Phyſician to the King.

Not long after this, the Daniſh Miniſter complain'd of a Book, entitled, An Account of Denmark, writ by Mr. Moleſworth, afterwards Lord Viſcount Moleſworth, who had reſided there as Envoy from England. The Dane told the King, If he had been a Subject of Denmark, his Maſter would have ſtruck off his Head for it. To which his Majeſty jesty reply'd, The Government of England is regulated by the Laws, which are the Rule both for King and People to go by; but as for Mr. Molesworth, if you will give your self the Trouble, to go and tell him what you have said, I do not doubt but he will put your Words into the next Edition of his Book. This slight Event was industriously made use of by the Tory-Party, as a Bone of Contention between the two Courts, their Majesties, and their Royal Highnesses, the Prince and Princess of Denmark, to whom they represented that Molesworth would not have written so injuriously of the Danish Nation, had he not been encourag'd in it by Courtiers. The Oxonians cou'd not be silent on such an Occasion; William King Student of Christ-Church, who must needs have been well instructed in the Affairs of the Baltick, while he was sojourning on the Banks of Isis, wrote an Answer to it, which he call'd, Animadversions on a pretended Account of Denmark, of which little more than the Title was ever read. However, it procur'd Favour at the Court of her Royal Highness the Princess of Denmark, who made Mr. King her Secretary.

A Bill was brought into the House of Commons, for regulating Abuses in Elections and Returns to Parliament, which was rejected at the third Reading. Several Money-Bills being ready for the Royal Assent, Part of the Supplies for the next Year, his Majesty having given it, was pleas'd to speak as follows, the 24th of December.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I Must not lose this Occasion of returning you my Hearty Thanks, for the great Proofs you continue to give me of your Zeal, and Resolution to support and assist me, in the vigorous Prosecution of the War against France next Year; and I assure you it shall be my greatest Care, that the Assistance you give me may be so apply'd, as to render them more effectual for the Aids you design'd them: but I must take Notice to you at the same time, with some Trouble, that the New Year is already come; while our Preparations for it are not only more backward, but those of our Enemies, as we have reason to think, in greater forwardness than they were the last Year. I find myself therefore necessitated from this Consideration, most earnestly to recommend to you, Gentlemen of the House of Commons, the hastening such farther Supplies, as you design for the Prosecution of the War.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The Season being so far advanc'd, this present Sessions cannot admit of a much longer Continuance, and therefore I must recommend to you the Dispatch of all such other Bills, that you shall judge necessary for the Publick Good.

1692. On New-Year's Day his Majesty was pleas'd to issue out his Proclamation against vicious, debauch'd and profane Persons. It being necessary for Governors, to put the People sometimes in Mind of their Duty, tho' the Governed seldom take so much Notice of it as to read, or hear such Proclamations.

In the present Sessions of Parliament, a Bill had been brought into the House of Commons, For regulating Trials in Cases of High-Treason, which past that House, and was sent to the Lords, who added a Clause, by which in all such Cases, every Peer of England should have Summons to attend, at least 20 Days before such Trials: whereas till then, it had been the Custom for the Lord-Steward for the time being, to summon by his Serjeant at Arms, a competent Number only of Peers, to be Triers of Peers; and the Lord-Steward being appointed by the King's-Commission, the Commons thought that Clause an Alteration in the Constitution, and as such disagreed to it, which occasion'd several Conferences between the Managers for both Houses. Charles Montagu Esq; afterwards Earl of Hallifax, distinguish'd himself at the first Conference as a Manager for the Commons. For the Lords were the Duke of Bolton, the Marquiss of Hallifax, the Earl of Mulgrave, the Earl of Rochester, the Earl of Nottingham, the Earl of Monmouth, the Earl of Stamford. But after all the Conferences and Debates concerning this Clause, the Lords insisted upon it, and the Commons adher'd to their Disagreement. The Commons also disagreed to the Amendments the Lords made to the Bill for Commissioners of Accounts; and the Orphan's Bill took up much time with as little Effect. The Commons were also amus'd with William Fuller's pretended Discoveries of a Plot against the Government; but failing to produce the Persons he nam'd for Witness as Col. Thomas Delaval, and Mr. James Hayes, they voted him to be a notorious Impostor, a Cheat and false Accuser, and address'd the King to order the Attorney-General to prosecute him, which was done, and the Villain sentenc'd to the Pillory. The Faction made the most of this Fellow's Imposture; they compar'd all the Discoveries of Plots against the Government, to this false Discovery of Fuller; and whenever any Conspiracy was detected, another Fuller's Business was their Cant. But their Mouths were soon stopp'd, by the repeated Attempts of Ruffians and Regicides, to put an end to the most valuable Life in the World; for which some of them paid their Debt to Justice on the Gallows.

*A.D.*1692 Debates about the Bill concerning Trials for High-Treason.

Fuller's Sham-Plot.

Ill use made of it by the Tories.

On the 24th of February, the King came to the House of Peers, and pass'd the Poll-Bill, the Militia-Bill, that against corresponding with their Majesties Enemies, against Deer-stealing, that for the Settlement of the Poor, those about Benefit of Clergy, Feeding Cattle, &c. I refer the Reader for the Titles of these, and other Acts publick and private, to Bishop Kennet's compleat History, thinking my own will be more compleat without them, unless they have something in them more worthy the Curiosity of the Publick. The King clos'd this Session with the following Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I Return my hearty Thanks to you all, for the great Demonstrations you have given me of your Affections in this Sessions, and of your Zeal for the Support of the Government.

And I must thank you, Gentlemen of the House of Commons, in particular, for the great Supplies you have granted for the Prosecution of the War. I assure you, I shall take care so to dispose of the Money you have given me for the publick Occasions, as that the whole Nation may be entirely satisfied with the Application of it.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I think it proper to acquaint you with my Intentions of going beyond Sea very speedily, which, I am afraid, have been retarded more than is convenient for the present Posture of Affairs; and upon that account, I think it necessary to put an end to this present Meeting; the Season of the Year being now so very far advanc'd, that it may prove of the last ill Consequence to continue it any longer.

Bishop Kennet, in his History, has an Article which he calls the State of Religion, which indeed is every one's grand Concern; but as his State of it consists chiefly of making and translating Bishops and other Dignitaries of the Church, in which they themselves are only concern'd, I do not take it to be an indispensable Duty of an Historian to enlarge upon it in a general History; so I shall content myself with just naming those spiritual Promotions within the Compass of the two last Years, it being impossible to be exact in Chronology in Historical Relation, consisting of so many various Parts, Kingdoms, Countries, Actions, and Counsels, all in Motion at the same time.

The

A.D. 1692 Nonjuring Bishops succeeded by others.

The Sees of the Nonjuring Bishops were thus fill'd.

Bishops Depriv'd.	Bishops put in their Places.
Dr. Will. Sancroft, Archbishop of Canterbury.	Dr. John Tillotson.
Dr. Thomas Kenn, Bishop of Bath and Wells.	Dr. Richard Kidder.
Dr. Frampton, Bishop of Glouceſter.	Dr. Edward Fowler.
Dr. Thomas White, Bishop of Peterborough.	Dr. Richard Cumberland.
Dr. Lloyd, Bishop of Norwich.	Dr. John Moor.
Dr. Francis Turner, Bishop of Ely.	Dr. Simon Patrick.

Dr. Beveridge's Scruples.

Dr. Beveridge, Rector of St. Peter's, Cornhill, was nominated to the See of Bath and Wells, but he declin'd accepting it; of which much was made by the Tories, as an Act of a moſt tender ſcrupulous Conſcience, tacitly charging his Reverend Brethren, who accepted the nonſwearing Biſhops vacant Sees, with Uſurpation and Injuſtice. But truly we muſt needs ſay, there ſeems to be more Weakneſs than Conſcience in this Conduct of his. That it was lawful for thoſe Biſhops to take the Oaths, he prov'd by his own Example, for he took them himſelf, and accepted of the Office of Chaplain to their Majeſties King William and Queen Mary; and the Behaviour of theſe conſcientious Prelates, as they were then, and are ſtill call'd to reflect on the Biſhops, who fill'd their Sees, as Men of no Conſcience, is ſo very inconſiſtent, that 'tis impoſſible not to impute it to Weakneſs alſo, after ever ſo little ſerious Conſideration. Take it in the Words of an ingenious Author, Contemporary with their Deprivation; How came it to paſs, That theſe pretended Martyrs, for a falſe Loyalty, refus'd to give the late King James any Aſſurance that they would adhere to him? And that upon the Prince of Orange's advancing towards London, they invited him to the Adminiſtration before the late King left England? To go no farther, that very Act of theirs was as much Treaſon, according to their own Paſſive-Obedience Doctrines, as ever Hugh Peters was guilty of. Again, Did they make no Scruple to turn King James out of the Government, and yet after others are ſettled, are they troubled with Qualms of Conſcience about the former's Right; is it tolerable for them to ſay, they would not have had his preſent Majeſty King, when they had aſſiſted ſo truly to UNKING the other, and no real Medium was left, but King William or a Commonwealth? How ſtupid were theſe Men to imagine, that the Legiſlature was to regulate their Proceedings by the Qualms of their ſickly Conſciences? Was it not like good Phyſicians dieting People of ſound Conſtitutions like thoſe of diſtemper'd and crazy ones? I know this is one of the Places in my Hiſtory, which the Party will call Partial, and therefore I require of them to anſwer theſe Objections before they paſs their Judgment.

Weakneſs in him and others.

St. Tr. vol. II. p. 423.

The Nonjuring Biſhops Pretences to Loyalty confuted.

Now alſo were Dr. Robert Grove made Biſhop of Chicheſter; Dr. John Sharp, Archbiſhop of York; Dr. John Hall, Biſhop of Briſtol; Dr. Gilbert Ironſide, Biſhop of Hereford; and Dr. Thomas Tenniſon, Biſhop of Lincoln.

Mr. Talbot was made Dean of Worceſter, in the room of Dr. George Hickes, who refus'd the Oaths to their Majeſties. The ſame Man, five or ſix Years before, refus'd to ſpeak a Word to King James, to ſave the Life of his Brother, a pious Nonconformiſt Miniſter, whom Jefferies caus'd to be hang'd at Glaſtonbury in Somerſetſhire, for joining with the Duke of Monmouth. Dr. Woodward was made Dean of Salisbury, and Dr. Comber Dean of Durham, in the room of Dr. Granville. I muſt not part with this Gentleman without taking into Conſideration an Expreſſion of a noble Author, the Doctor's Kinſman, in a Letter to another Kinſman Mr. Beville Granville, upon his going on the Divinity Line at Oxford, becauſe it reflects ſeverely on the whole Body of the Clergy of the Church of England, who had taken the Oaths to King William and Queen Mary; becauſe indeed it reflects on our preſent happy Conſtitution in an extraordinary manner, where it is ſaid of this Dr. Granville, He was in every thing Apoſtolical, for he abandon'd All to follow his Lord and Maſter: A very bold Figure indeed, to compare the late King, who had loſt his Kingdoms for breaking the Laws and oppreſſing his Subjects, to Chriſt Jeſus; and a Proteſtant Clergyman, a Fugitive in a Popiſh Country, to St. Peter and St. John, who left all to follow the Lord and Maſter of all Beings in Heaven and upon Earth. And let us ſee how well this ſame Maſter of Dr. Granville deſerv'd this Hyperbole in his Panegyric, by the Doctor's Entertainment at St. Germains.

"The firſt Trial they, the Church-of-England "Men in France, made of their Intereſt in King "James, and King James's in the French King, "was to deſire a Chappel for the Exerciſe of their "Worſhip, according to the Church of England, "propoſing Dr. Granville, the Earl of Bath's "Brother, to be their Chaplain, he having left his "Deanery of Durham out of a miſtaken Principle of "Loyalty." This Affair happen'd much about the time of the diſperſing a Book call'd the Project, which I have ſpoken of in the preceding Pages.

K. James uſes the Engliſh Proteſtants at St. Germains ill.

The Negotiation for it promis'd pretty fair at firſt, notwithſtanding King James and his Queen were more againſt it than King Lewis, till the latter found there was no Good to be done in England by ſuch Double-dealing with the Engliſh Fugitives in France; ſo, as the Hiſtory tells us, "Dr. Gran- "ville was oblig'd not only to retire from the "Court, but alſo from the Town of St. Germains, "to avoid the daily Inſults of the Jeſuits and Friars, "and the dreadful Efforts of the Jealouſies with "which they poſſeſs'd King James's Courtiers a- "gainſt him." However, it is ſaid very gravely in A. Wood's Athen. Oxon. King James II. conferr'd the Archbiſhoprick of York upon him on the Death of Dr. Lamplugh; and the ſame Author obſerves in his Faſti, He had been no Sufferer for King Charles the Firſt's Cauſe, nor ejected his College, becauſe entered therein after the Parliament's Viſitors had turn'd out the Royaliſts: at which time Dr. Conant was Rector of that College, Exeter, out of which, and all his Church-Preferments, he was turn'd, by the Act of Conformity, being then a Preſbyterian. One ſhould conceal no part of Hiſtory, if one would acquire the Character of Impartial. Other Clergymen, who refus'd to take the Oaths requir'd by Law, were,

Dr. Thomas Lane, Fellow of Merton College; he was on the Civil-Law Line, and attending K. James in Ireland, was wounded at the Battle of the Boyne. He afterwards practis'd in Doctors Commons.

Dr. John Fitzwilliams, Prebend of Windſor, of Note chiefly for a Sermon preach'd by him near Cambridge, being a Thankſgiving for King Charles the Second's having eſcap'd the Aſſaſſination-Plot by the Presbyterians.

Dr. Thomas Smith, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxon; who, two or three Years before, had been turn'd out for Diſobedience to King James.

Dr. Nathaniel Busbie, Rector of Long Melford in Suffolk. A Meaſure of this Man's Underſtanding and Honeſty may be taken by the Titles of ſome of his Works, as Proſecution no Perſecution, the Miſchiefs of Anarchy, the Miſchiefs and Treaſons of Conventicles, &c. All Sermons, moſt of them preach'd at Aſſizes; and it was not improper to give theſe Proofs of the Moderation and Abilities of this Man, that the Reader may have the better Conception of the Merits of theſe Nonjuring Doctors.

Mr. Francis Lee, of St. John's College, Oxon, Chaplain to John Lord Stawell in Somerſetſhire, at the Time when that Lord began the building of an Houſe there, which his whole Eſtate would not have finiſh'd according to the Model, and have left him wherewithal to have kept in Repair afterwards.

Mr. Henry Dodwell proclaim'd Rebel by K. James.

Mr. Henry Dodwell, Cambden-Profeſſor at Oxford; he had been graduated in the Univerſity of Dublin, and proclaim'd Rebel by King James in Ireland, according to the Faſti Oxon, where he would have been impriſon'd, if he had not been hang'd, for the ſaid Rebellion. It is an Oxonian that furniſhes me with theſe Memoirs. But being then in England, P. 233. he ſuffer'd there, continues my Author, for adhering to the Oaths he had taken to King James. There is ſomething ſo whimſical in the Conduct of theſe Nonjurors, that really one hardly knows how to be angry with them, and ſhould have pity'd their Folly, if it had not ſo often degenerated into Treaſon and Aſſaſſination. This Mr. Dodwell was look'd upon as a Prodigy of Learning and Parts by the Faction, and is ſo talk'd of ſtill by them; but his true Character, which was well known to all but them, was a Compoſition of Rigour and Obſtinacy. King William was wont to ſay of him to Dr. Tenniſon, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Mr. Dodwell wants to be in Priſon, but I ſhall diſappoint him.

King William's Saying of his Obſtinacy.

I have remember'd thoſe of the Nonjurors only that were their Authors, and moſt admir'd by the Party; and having not the ſame Conveniency for the Cambridge Men, as for the Oxford, muſt be contented with the latter.

Before we enter upon the Affairs of this Year, ſome notice muſt be taken of the Honours and Preferments in the laſt, when John George, Elector of Saxony, and Charles Earl of Dorſet and Middleſex, were made Knights of the Garter; Sir Edward Nevill, one of the Judges of the Common-Pleas; Sir John Powel, one of the Barons of the Exchequer; John Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, John Earl of Bridgwater, Anthony Lord Viſcount Falkland, Robert Lord Lexington, Charles Lord Cornwallis, and what was very ſurprizing, Laurence Earl of Rocheſter, Richard Earl of Ranelagh, and Sir Edward Seymour, were ſworn of the Privy-Council; the three laſt being of the number of thoſe that voted againſt making their Majeſties King and Queen. And it was this motley Council that produc'd thoſe motley Counſels, which made King William and his true Friends uneaſy, to the very laſt Year of his Reign. Sir Edward Seymour was alſo made one of the Lords of the Treaſury, the Buſineſs of which, he underſtood not much better than he did Divinity. Abſtrupus Danly, of Yorkſhire, Eſq; Richard Levet, Eſq; one of the Sheriffs of London; and Godfrey Kneller, Eſq; their Majeſties principal Painter, were knighted; Henry Lord Viſcount Sidney, was made Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland; Charles Lord Cornwallis, one of the Lords of the Admiralty; Charles Montague, Eſq; one of the Lords of the Treaſury; Thomas Earl of Pembroke, Lord Privy-Seal; Willam Earl of Devonſhire, Lord-Lieutenant of Middleſex; Vere Earl of Weſtmoreland, joint Lord-Lieutenant of Kent; Charles Lord Lanſdown, joint Lord-Lieutenant of Devon and Cornwal; Sir William Phipps, Governor of New-England; Benjamin Fletcher, Eſq; Governor of New-York; Samuel Allen, Eſq; Governor of New-Hampſhire Province in New-England; William Harbord, Eſq; Ambaſſador to the Grand Signior; from whom his Majeſty had receiv'd a Letter of Congratulation, and to deſire his Mediation for a Peace with the Emperor of Germany. The beginning of this Year James Johnſton, Eſq; late Envoy Extraordinary from their Majeſties to the Elector of Brandenburgh, to whom he carry'd the moſt noble Order of the Garter, was made joint Secretary of State with the Lord Secretary Stair, in the Kingdom of Scotland. Having before me Mr. Secretary Johnſton's Speech to the Elector, when he inveſted him with the Garter, I ſhall inſert a Paragraph or two, the Sentiments and the Expreſſions being as noble as the Subject.

A.D.1692

Motley Counſels miſchievous.

Secretary Johnſton's Speech to the Elector of Brandenburgh.

May it pleaſe your Electoral Highneſs,

" NOTHING excites in Men the Deſire of " Glory, ſo much as ſignal and laſting " Marks of Honour. For to noble and generous " Minds, Honour is certainly the greateſt Reward, " and ſuch Marks are the moſt acceptable Parts of " it, to wit, a publick Acknowledgement that Men " deſerve it.

" Of theſe Marks, the moſt eminent have been " appropriated to Chivalry. Religion hath its Treaſure above. Juſtice, and the other peaceable " Virtues, without Arms, would be of little or no " uſe. Therefore Military Glory, as moſt neceſſary, hath been prefer'd to all others; beſides, it " is acquir'd with greater Danger, and is founded " on nobler Paſſions.

" Amongſt all Incitements to it, nothing has " prov'd ſo effectual, as the Inſtitution of the Orders of Knights Companions and Brethren.

" Such Orders do engage Princes, by the ſtricteſt " Ties of Honour, to give, in their own Perſons, " an Example of Military Virtue; and prove alſo " the higheſt Encouragement imaginable to follow " it. For by theſe Fraternities, they deſcend from " their Greatneſs, and conſent that brave and gallant Men ſhould be brought into a ſort of Equality with themſelves.

" Amongſt military Orders, there are none that " can diſpute either Antiquity or Dignity with that " of the Garter, which may indeed be call'd the " Mother-Order, for the other great Orders have " ſprung out of this Root, being form'd upon the " Model of it, &c." The whole being in the State-Tracts, I refer the Reader to the Speech at large. Vol. III. p. 674.

On the 26th of March, her Majeſty the Queen having then the Adminiſtration of Affairs, publiſh'd a Proclamation for the Wedneſday Monthly Faſt during the War; and four Days after, the Queen Dowager, who in all Junctures had govern'd her Family very prudently, left London, proceeded to Dover, and embark'd there for Calais, from whence Queen Dowager leaves England.

A.D.1692 whence she continu'd her Journey by Land to Portugal.

Sir Rowland Gwyn, Treasurer of their Majesties Chamber, was remov'd from his Place April 7, for Words spoken against the Lord Sidney; the Substance of which, he could not prove, when requir'd to do it by the Council.

His Majesty was now at Loo; and before he could begin the Campaign, the Jacobites in England were elevated with the Hopes of their Master's Restoration, founded on a Conspiracy they and their Confederates in France had form'd to murder the King, and invade the Kingdom. This Plot had been a-foot ever since the Year 1689, but had been often interrupted by Discovery, or fear of Discovery.

The Lancashire Plot.

Bromfield the Quaker began it first in Lancashire. He lay some time after King James was gone, at the then Earl of Salisbury's House at Hatfield; from whence he travel'd Northwards, and poison'd the Minds of the People with an Aversion to the Revolution. He was very instrumental in Dundee's Rebellion in Scotland; and in Ireland he confirm'd Tyrconnel in his Resolution to defend that Kingdom against King William: From Ireland he went to Lancashire, where he took up his head Quarters at Mr. Fitzherbert's at Wapra, and Mr. Wilson's at Redland; from whence he went frequently to the Lord Molineux's at Croxteth, where, and at other Popish Houses, he had his Conferences with the Conspirators, which being suspected by the well-affected Gentry of that County, they got so good Information, that the Ship he bought, to carry him to and from Ireland, was seiz'd by Mr. Marston. However, by the Assistance of another Mr. Marston, Mr. Wynn of Gop, Mr. Lloyd of Greith, Mr. Robert Brierson of Chester, Mr. George Pennant and Mr. Pue of Pendal, he got over to Ireland again, and was made one of the Commissioners of King James's Irish Mint; all which was sworn before Secretary Trenchard by Mr. Wilson of Redland, where he lurk'd some time. I am the more particular about this Villain Bromfield, because I saw him, when Mess. Harley and St. John were Ministers of State, make his publick Appearance about the Court, as did Skelton from St. Germains, and Lawless an Irish Outlaw from Spain. Lunt, the chief Manager of the Lancashire Plot, swore, Bromfield, in the Name of the Plotters, desir'd Commissions from King James to raise Horse and Foot, which was granted; and himself and one Thrilfal brought over these Commissions, and King James's Declaration from Ireland. Mr. Wilson also swore that he saw Lunt deliver,

Bromfield the Quaker's Treason.

To Mr. Sherburn of Stonyhurst, a Commission for a Regiment of Horse.

To Mr. Townley of Townley, a Name too well known in the last Popish Rebellion in Lancashire, a Commission for a Regiment of Horse.

To Mr. Girlington of Girlington, a Commission for a Regiment of Foot.

To Mr. Westby of Mobrick, a Commission for a Regiment of Dragoons.

To Mr. ——, a Commission for a Regiment of Foot.

To Sir Thomas Stanley of Alderly, a Commission for a Regiment of Horse.

To Mr. Chumley of Vale Royal, the same whom the House of Commons had imprison'd for refusing the Oaths as a Member of their House, a Commission for a Regiment of Horse.

To Sir Rowland Stanley, a Commission for a Regiment of Horse.

To Sir Robert Throgmorton, a Commission for a Regiment of Horse.

To Sir Henry Titchbourn, a Commission for a Regiment of Horse.

To Sir Gifford of Chillington, a Commission for a Regiment of Horse.

To Sir James Symmonds of Ashton in Staffordshire, a Commission for a Regiment of Horse.

To the Lord Molyneux, a Commission to be Governor of Liverpool. A.D.1692

Sir Charles Neal had a Commission to be Lieutenant-Colonel.

William Fowler, Esq; of St. Thomas near Stafford, had a Captain's Commission.

Mr. Augustine Gifford, Captain Goure, Basil Brooks, Esq; } were to be Captains of Horse.

Thomas Tildesley, Esq; a Name too well known in the last Lancashire Rebellion, was to have a Regiment of Horse.

---- Dalton of Thurnham, Esq; a Regiment of Dragoons.

The Lord Brudenel, a Regiment of Horse.

It is not to be suppos'd, that King James flatter'd himself that so many Regiments of Horse could be rais'd for his Service; but these Lancashire Gentry would needs be all Horse-Officers, and such Commissions were sent to them to humour them, as Children are humour'd with gilt Hobby-Horses and Gingerbread. Their Vanity is below the Gravity of History.

We find among these, not only Papists, but several who call'd themselves Staunch Churchmen, as Mr. Girlington, Mr. Chumley, Sir Thomas Stanley, Sir Rowland Stanley, &c. These and several other Commissions being delivered by Lunt and Wilson, Lunt was sent to London, to buy Arms and list Men; which he did, as appears not only by his own Evidence, but the Evidence of Robert Bradley, of Chippin in Lancashire, before Judge Rokesby; and the Evidence of John Wilson, of the same Chippin, before Judge Eyre. Lunt, when he went to Ireland for these Commissions, had a private Audience of the Earl of Melfort; at which no body assisted, but the Lord George Howard, Lord Thomas Howard, and the Quaker Bromfield, which shews that the Invasion Plots, and Assassinations, were indeed but one Plot continu'd from the beginning of the Revolution, and was first laid by Bromfield, who had so much the Countenance of the Sacheverel Ministry.

Several of these Commissions were seiz'd aboard the Bark that brought Lunt and Thrilfal from Ireland; and Henry Knowles and Richard Whiteside, two of the Bark's Crew, swore Thrilfal and Lunt left them there in the hurry they were in, to make their Escape The Loyal Gentlemen of Lancashire, hearing Lunt and Thrilfal were in the Country again, caus'd strict Search to be made for them. Thrilfal was found, hid in a Stack of Turf near his own House, by a Corporal of the Militia, who, upon his making Resistance, ran him thro' the Body; of which Wound he dy'd upon the Spot. Can any thing be a plainer Proof of the Traitor's Guilt, than his venturing his Life rather than stand a Tryal? And can any one doubt there was a Plot in Lancashire, when one of the Plotters fell a Sacrifice for it in this manner? Yet did the Faction, and some weak Brethren impos'd upon by them, pretend to turn this Conspiracy into a Jest; and the execrable Ferguson, the Cameronian Apostate, call'd it, in his Letter to the Lord Chief Justice Holt, A sham Contrivance of some little Ministers, to ruin those that were accus'd without Cause.

One of the Plotters kill'd.

That the Jacobites were as wicked in ridiculing the Plot, and charging the Government with it, as in the Plot itself, is prov'd by shewing the Government did not concern itself in the Matter, till the Gentlemen of the best Figure in Lancashire apply'd to the Earl of Shrewsbury, then Secretary of State, with an Information of the seizing of several suspected Persons and Arms in that County, and desir'd to know what should be done with them, in a Letter sign'd by the Lord Willoughby, Sir Ralph Ashton, James Holte Esq; Thomas Lever Esq; Joseph Yates Esq; Nich. Starkee Esq; Henry Farringdon Esq; Joseph Horton Esq; The flying away of Mr. Walmesley,

A.D. 1692 Walmeſley, and other Popiſh Gentlemen, to France, was a great Corroboration of the Truth of the Conſpiracy, which wanted not ſufficient Evidence till ſeveral of the King's Witneſſes were murder'd, as will be ſhewn hereafter. Lunt, and Abbot the Lord Molyneux's Steward, were ſeiz'd at Coventry; and Cawſon, Maſter of the Bark in which Lunt and Thrilfal came from Ireland, in Lancaſhire. Cawſon being ſent for up to Town by a Meſſenger, was told, when he came to Coventry, that Lunt was in Goal there; and when he went to him in Priſon, he own'd 'twas the ſame Man he brought from Ireland, and to whom the treaſonable Papers taken aboard his Veſſel belong'd. Tho' Lunt himſelf afterwards made a full Confeſſion of the Matter, yet the Proof of it depended not on his ſingle Evidence, for John Kelly an Iriſh Soldier, harbour'd by the Lord Molyneux, an active and liberal Accomplice in moſt of theſe Deſigns againſt King William, made Oath before Mr. Thomas Yarnold Mayor of Worceſter, Richard Earl of Bellomont, Sir James Ruſhout, Bart. William Bromley Eſq; Edmund Lechmere Eſq; Richard Dowdeſwell Eſq; that he had ſeen the Commiſſions ſent from Ireland to the Lord Molyneux, to Mr. Townley of Townley, Mr. Standiſh of Standiſh, Sir James Pool of Pool-Hall near Cheſter, and others. His Information was ſo full and particular, that ſeveral Lancaſhire Papiſts were taken up, and others fled; yet the Plot was all this while, nay, and is ſtill the Subject of the inſolent Raillery of the Jacobites, and the inſipid Mirth of the Tories. Kelly's Evidence being ſo ſtrong, he was ſoon remov'd out of the way, and no more heard of. Mr. Robert Dodſworth, a good Catholick of Weſtmoreland, giving Information of the ſame Conſpiracy to his Kinſman Roger Kirby, Eſq; Governor of Cheſter, and the Earl of Macclesfield, he was ſent for to London, and made Oath of it before my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt; he nam'd Mr. William Molyneux, Mr. Townley, Mr. Standiſh, and others, to have had Commiſſions; he gave an account of Arms provided, and Men liſted; but there is a Paragraph in his Information, which has particular Relation to the Staunch Churchmen of the Order of the condemn'd Dr. S——; I ſhall therefore repeat it, to ſhew what good Friends the High-Church, the Schiſm and Occaſional-Bill Men were to Popery and Slavery, otherwiſe to King James: This Informant farther depoſeth, That Mr. Marſden, a Proteſtant, was one of their Companions; and he having a great Eſtate, always protected Roman Catholicks, when there was occaſion: That Mr. Husband, a Proteſtant of Kirby-Lonſdale, bought Warlike Furniture for the uſe of the Roman Catholicks: One Carter, another ſuch rare Proteſtant, accepted of a Captain's Commiſſion in the ſame Regiment: Another of 'em, Alexander Butler, was to be a Captain in Colonel Tildeſley's Regiment: Two other ſuch Staunch Men, Kimple and Cole, had Cornet's Commiſſions in the ſame Regiment. This he ſwore the 16th of May 1690, the Time when Orleans the Jeſuit ſays, The Prince of Orange was to have been hard put to it; and had not Kelly been made away with, the Lancaſhire Plotters had been try'd then, and for fear of it, the chief of them, as Colonel Molyneux, Mr. Standiſh, Mr. Townley, Mr. Blundel of Ince, &c. ran away; and tho' they were ſearch'd for twelve Months together by the Militia, yet they could not be found, as appears by a Letter from three Juſtices of the Peace of that County Palatine, Sir Ralph Aſhton, Joſeph Horton, Eſq; Joſeph Yates, Eſq;

The Plot ridicul'd by Jacobites.

High-Church in the Plot.

This Diſcovery ſo frighted the Popiſh Conſpirators, and their Abettors in Lancaſhire, that they lay quiet for ſome time, and left the Management of King James's Affairs to the Lord Preſton, Mr. Aſhton, Mr. Elliot, Crosby, and others. Crosby was a daring deſperate Fellow, poor, proud, raſh, and fit for any wicked Attempt to patch up his tatter'd Fortune. Dodſworth at length prevail'd with Lunt to confeſs, which the Papiſts having Intimation of, and fearing it would go hard with their Friends in the Lancaſhire Goals, if there were two Witneſſes againſt them, as there would be upon Lunt's turning Evidence, they remov'd Dodſworth alſo out of the way, he being murder'd by one Deane and his Brother, profeſs'd Jacobites. Redman, another of the Conſpirators, was alſo murder'd two Days after he had communicated his Deſign of diſcovering what he knew to a Friend, who betray'd him. He had given the Houſe of Commons ſuch Satisfaction by his Information, that they recommended him to his Majeſty for a Reward.

A.D. 1692

Evidence murder'd.

About this Time Mr. Edward Robinſon, made Oath before Richard Wright Eſq; a Juſtice of Peace in the ſame County, that he had ſeen a Commiſſion from King James, at Mr. Fazakerly's of Spello-Hall in Lancaſhire; that the Lord Molyneux's Servant had brought a Meſſage from King James to the Conſpirators; and that John Herrington of Egbeth, Eſq; told him he had a Captain of Horſe's Commiſſion. Upon Dodſworth's Death, Lunt went from his Confeſſion, that Conſpirator knowing he cou'd not merit much by his Evidence, becauſe it was ſingle, and the Faction tampering with him to keep him tight; ſo he was ſent down to Lancaſhire to be try'd himſelf. But Cawſon the main Witneſs againſt him, falling ſick and dying before he cou'd be try'd, and his Crew, who cou'd have ſworn to the Treaſonable Papers, and to his coming from Ireland, being all at Sea, the Proſecution dropt; the Cuſtom-houſe Officers who ſeiz'd the Papers, had omitted to mark them, and therefore cou'd not ſwear to them. Thus he got off, and being diſcharg'd, was employ'd again by the Plotters in Lancaſhire, particularly the Lord Molyneux, Col. Molyneux, Sir William Garrard, Col. Garrard, Mr. Dickenſon of Heightonhay, Col. Townly, Col. Tildeſley, Col. Dalton; who ſent him to the Court of St. Germains, after a Conſult at Standiſh-Hall. And not long after Walmeſley beforemention'd, and Parker, came from thence to England, and there was a great Meeting of the Conſpirators at Dungan-Hall, Mr. Walmeſley's Houſe, where Commiſſions from King James were diſtributed, preparatory to an Inſurrection, to favour an Invaſion from France, where King James had got an Army ready at La Hogue. Crosby went into Lancaſhire to meet Col. Parker, and it was there that the Aſſaſſination was reſolv'd. Biſhop Kennet writes, Parker aſſur'd them, that tho' they cou'd not accompliſh their Deſign to kill King William before he went to Holland, yet it wou'd be re-aſſum'd in Flanders, by the ſame Perſons who had undertaken it laſt Campaign. If Crosby juſt mention'd, is the ſame who was afterwards made a Collector of the Exciſe in South-Wales, and was employ'd by a Perſon of great Dignity and Office in Queen Anne's Reign, and alſo in the late King's, it wou'd occaſion Speculations, which I ſhou'd not venture in this Place to communicate to the Publick. It appears by the above Relation, that from Bromfield the Quaker's ſetting out from Hatfield, to Crosby's coming to Lancaſhire, juſt before the intended French Invaſion from La Hogue, the Plot for a ſecond Reſtoration has been working; and that it has branch'd out into Aſſaſſination Plots, will be prov'd in the Sequel.

Crosby in the ſame Treaſon.

Lunt brought Advice in December, that King James would be in England the next Spring, and that Parker would be with them ſoon after himſelf, with further Inſtructions. The Conſpirators approv'd Lunt's Conduct ſo well, that they entruſted him with levying Men in and about London, to be ready againſt the time, and to buy Arms, which he ſent down to Lancaſhire; and had Subſiſtence Money from the Lord Molyneux. Parker brought over with him one Harriſon alias Johnſon, a Romiſh Prieſt, a horrid blood-thirſty Villain, much in Favour

A.D.1692 vour with the Earl of Melfort, King James's Favourite, at St. Germain's; who was concern'd alſo in Charnock's Aſſaſſination Plot, which ſprung from this Root.

On the 2d of April, it ſhould have been the firſt, the late King James wrote a Letter, to be addreſs'd to ſeveral Perſons of Quality in England, requiring them to give their Attendance at the Delivery of his Queen; who, old as ſhe was, might doubtleſs have been with Child, if proper Means were made uſe of. This Letter was not only addreſs'd to ſeveral Lords, who had been of his Privy-Council; but to ſeveral Ladies, as the Dutcheſs of Somerſet, the Dutcheſs of Beaufort, the Marchioneſs of Halifax, the Counteſſes of Derby, Mulgrave, Rutland, Nottingham, Danby, the Lady Lumley, Lady Brooke, Lady Fitzharding, Lady Fretchville; and to the Wives of theſe Commoners, Sir John Trevor Speaker, Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave, Sir Thomas Pope-Blount, Sir John Guiſe, Thomas Foley Eſq; Sir Thomas Stamp Lord-Mayor of London, Sir William Aſhurſt, Sir Richard Levet, the two Sheriffs, and Dr. Hugh Chamberlayne the famous Man-Midwife. But all theſe noble Perſons, and the Doctor too, thought fit to let the French Midwives do and ſay what they wou'd on that Occaſion, without their giving themſelves any trouble about it. 'Twas ſaid ſhe was deliver'd of a Daughter, and this was to be a new Proof, that ſhe had had a Son.

Parker the Traytor in England.

Parker, upon his Arrival in England, call'd ſome General Officers and other Confederates together, in or near London, and told them, Their old Maſter had now obtain'd of the moſt Chriſtian King 30000 effective Men, and when the Spring was a little more forward, King James, who was already marching into Normandy, would be wafted over with them into England s with Aſſurance that if that Number was not great enough to reduce his Rebellious Subjects, France would ſpare him 30000 more. Then addreſſing to Capt. Blaire, who made Oath of it before the Privy-Council, he added, I am going to command in Lancaſhire, but intend to move Southward at his Majeſty's Landing, and therefore deſire you to join me, in regard my own Men are raw, and yours for the moſt Part are old Officers and Soldiers. Biſhop Kennet adds, "When Parker went into Lancaſhire, he took with him ſeveral good Officers, ſome of which ſtaid with him in that County, and others he diſpos'd of in Yorkſhire and the Biſhoprick of Durham: His Head-Quarters were at Mr. Walmeſley's at Dungan-Hall." Whom one may be aſſur'd, Parker had Confidence enough in, to truſt him with all his Plots; and he was concern'd in none, but what had Murder and Maſſacre at the Bottom. Parker left behind him at London, Mr. James Fountaine, Lieutenant-Colonel to the Lord Montgomery, who ſeems to have been alike in all Plots and all Pardons, and Col. Holman, who were compleating each a Regiment of Horſe, to join King James at his Landing. He had left Paris and was come to La Hogue, with an Army of above 20000 Iriſh, French, Scots and Engliſh Papiſts and Tories.

King James's Declaration.

To prepare the way for him, he publiſh'd a Declaration ſo miſerably worded, that notwithſtanding the Impotent Menances with which it is ſtuff'd, one cou'd ſcarce help pitying him, for having no better a Penman among all his Counſellors. What little there was in it worth anſwering, was fully confuted by Dr. Lloyd then Biſhop of St. Aſaph, in a Treatiſe, entitled, The Pretences of the French Invaſion examin'd, and alſo in a Tract written on Purpoſe, intitled, Reflections, &c. Both which Pieces being intire in the State-Tracts, I ſhall not enlarge upon this Matter here, which indeed deſerv'd not the Pen of ſo learned an Author, as Biſhop Lloyd; ſo much as that of Sir Fleetwood Shepherd, who made himſelf and the World very merry, in his Excellent Ballad, beginning thus,

Sir Fleetwood Shepherd's Ballad on King James's Declaration.

The true and genuine Explanation,
Of one King James's Declaration;
To which let us add 8 or 10 Verſes more.
Then having tortur'd our Invention,
To frame a Draught of our Intention;
By the Advice of Huntington,

And of all Ranks ſome Fifty-One;
Who have adjuſted for our Coming
All Gimcracks fit for ſuch a Mumming;
And 'tis their Buſineſs to perſuade you,
We come to ſuccour, not invade you.

I cannot help owning, that excepting my Fears for the King's ſacred Perſon, I never had any for what the Jacobites and their French Auxilaries cou'd do to us. Young as I was, I knew there was then, as there is ſtill, a Body of Engliſh Proteſtants, who, if ſome of them were not diſabled by Teſts, were, and will be always ready to drive the French, and all other Enemies to the Revolution, faſter out of the Kingdom than they came into it.

The

A.D.1692 The London and Westminster Militia muster'd.

The Militia of Westminster, consisting of 3000 Men, and a Troop of Horse, under the Earl of Bedford; and the Militia of London, consisting of about 10000 Men, under the Lord-Mayor and the City-Colonels, were drawn out in Hyde-Park; and there appear'd in their Countenances a chearfulness and desire to be in Service on that Occasion; which cou'd not be very grateful to those of the Faction, who had heard how the London Militia behav'd in the Civil War.

The Fleet under the Command of Admiral Russel, past thro' the Downs the 8th of May, where they were join'd by Admiral Allemonde, with the Dutch Squadron under his Command; and soon after Sir Ralph Delaval join'd Admiral Russel with the English Men of War from St. Hellens. Tourville the French Admiral, was in hopes of meeting with the English Fleet before these two Junctions, or at least before both of them, and that embolden'd him to pursue his Master the French King's Orders, to look out the English Fleet and fight them. The Jacobites had also sent David Lloyd above-mention'd, Express to the Lord Melfort, to acquaint him, They had corrupted several of the English Sea-Commanders, particularly Rear-Admiral Carter; who indeed had been apply'd to by them, and having giving the Government Intimation of it, he was order'd to humour the Thing; which he did so effectually, that those credulous Wretches gave into it, to the Destruction of their Plot, and their Confederate's Fleet. For Melfort, upon this and other false Intelligence of the backwardness of the Dutch Squadron, and the Number of the English Fleet, got an Order from the French King to Tourville to engage without waiting for the Thoulon Squadron. There being a Rumour of Disaffection in the Officers of the Navy, and that several of them were discharg'd on that account; her Majesty judging rightly, that it was spread by the Enemies to the Government, to confirm them in their Duty, order'd the Earl of Nottingham to write to Admiral Russel, and let him know she had an intire Confidence in the Fidelity and Zeal of all the Officers in the Fleet, and was resolv'd not to displace any one of them; in return to which they sent up a very Loyal Address, sign'd by Sir John Ashby, Sir Ralph Delaval, Mr. Rook, Sir Cloudesley Shovel, Mr. Carter, the Flag-Officers and other Commanders. It was deliver'd by the Lords of the Admiralty, May 16th; and her Majesty's most gracious Answer was, I always had this Opinion of the Commanders, but am very glad this is come to satisfy Others, which dutiful and affectionate Address, and the readiness that apdear'd every where for the Defence of the Kingdom, rid her Majesty so far of her Concern, that she prorogu'd the Parliament, from the 24th of May, when they were to have sat, to the 16th of June: Giving this reason for it in the Proclamation; Our Navy being now at Sea, and join'd with our Allies, and in a readiness, by the Blessing of God, to resist and repel the Designs and Attempts of our Enemies. While the Jacobites were pleasing themselves with the Hopes of approaching Success, their Pleasure was interrupted with News of the Junction of the Dutch Fleet and ours, which happening not to be true at first, and for fear the Report should be believ'd in France; they sent Sir Adam Blaire to France to give Assurance, that the Dutch were not yet come up: In which however, they understood soon after they were deceiv'd, and dispatch'd Clerk to let the French know it. But Clerk was so far from gaining Credit, Blaire having just brought the contrary News, that he was imprison'd for spreading a false Report, till several other Expresses confirm'd it, and then the French King sent Messenger after Messenger to Tourville, to countermand his fighting Orders, but his Messengers came all too late. For on the 19th of May, the Mareschal de Tourville bore down and engag'd the Confederate Fleet off Cape Barfleur, about Eleven in the Forenoon, and continu'd the Engagement till about half an Hour past Four in Afternoon, when the French steer'd away with all their Boats; the great Firing on both sides having soon occasion'd a Calm. But a fresh Gale springing up about Six, the Blue Squadron continu'd the Fight, and maintain'd it till Ten at Night; when the French being worsted, and having had four Ships blown up, steer'd away for Conquest-Road. All that Night was very Calm, and Foggy the next Morning; but about Eleven it beginning to clear up a little, the English saw the French Fleet about two Leagues from them, very much lessen'd in their Number, not seeming to be above 38 Men of War, after which they made all the Sail they could; and about Ten it grew Calm again. At Three in the Afternoon the two Fleets came to an Anchor, but weigh'd about Eleven at Night, and anchor'd next Morning. On the 21st, the English sail'd again after the Enemy, Admiral Russel steering towards Barfleur, and the Dutch and Blue Squadron towards the Road of Alderney, thro' which Part of the French Fleet got safe to St. Malo's, the English not thinking it safe to pursue them that way; for which Sir John Ashby was question'd in Parliament, and truly the Question seem'd very natural, Why cou'd not you pursue, as well as they fly? Sir Ralph Delaval had better Success, for off of Cherburgh he burnt the Royal-Sun, a Ship of 104 Guns, commanded by Admiral Tourville; the Admirable, a Ship of 102 Guns; the Conquerant of 80 Guns, and three more of lesser Rate. Admiral Russel was no less successful in pursuit of 13 French Men of War, who haul'd in for La Hogue; in which Bay he anchor'd the 21st, the next Day he stood in, and sent Vice-Admiral Rook with several Men of War, Frigates and arm'd Boats to endeavour to destroy that Part of the Enemies Fleet. But the French had got their Ships so very near the Shoar, that not any of the Men of War, except the small Frigates, cou'd do any Service. However that Night six of the Enemies Men of War were burnt, and the next Day: the other seven, besides several Transports, King James being all the while encamp'd so near the Coast at La Hogue, that from his Platforms some small Damage was done to the English who destroy'd the French Ships. The Count de Fourbin, who commanded the Pearl, the third Ship in the French Line next Tourville, writes that 14 of their best Men of War were burnt at La Hogue, and that all their whole Fleet might have been destroy'd, had not the English been so slow in the Pursuit; for which neither he nor we knew the Reasons. The Royal-Sun was burnt by Capt. Heath; the Conquerant by Capt. Greenway; the Admirable by Boats-Crews; Capt. Fowlis's Fireship was herself set on fire by the Enemies Shot. There perish'd in the whole, of the French Navy-Royal, Twenty-one First, Second and Third-Rate Men of War, two Frigates and about sixty Transport Ships, on their Coasts and off St. Hellens. Of the English not one Man War was lost, and besides Rear-Admiral Carter, and Col. Hastings, not one Commission Officer was kill'd. Col. Hastings was Commander of the Sandwich a Second-Rate Man of War, which had two or three of the biggest Ships in Tourville's Fleet upon her at once; she made a gallant Defence as long as Col. Hastings cou'd command, but after he was mortally wounded, and had left the Charge of his Ship to his first Lieutenant Bernard Darby, with very earnest Admonitions to behave as he had done, that poor Wretch, who had been Master of a small Craft, employ'd by the Libeller Danel Foe, when he was a Trader, flung himself on his Belly upon the Quarter-Deck, and did not shew himself in his Office, till Mr. Hastings the Colonel's Brother, and the rest of the Officers threaten'd to throw him over-board. Are the Occasion of the Destruction of the French Fleet.

A Loyal Address from the Fleet to the Queen.

A D. 1692 Ship very much ſhatter'd drove thro' the Enemies Ships, making the beſt Defence ſhe cou'd, and got into Portſmouth, but ſo diſabled that ſhe was not ſerviceable; and Darby being try'd for Cowardice, was turn'd out of the Service with Ignominy. The Number of the ſlain on each ſide cou'd not well be determin'd, the French by running away in good time, and getting near the Shoar, ſav'd moſt of their Crews by their Flight and their Boats.

On the 26th of May, Admiral Ruſſel, ſent Sir John Ashby, who was return'd from a fruitleſs purſuit of the French; with a Squadron of Engliſh and Dutch Men of War, to burn the Enemies Tranſports at Havre de Grace, but it was not practicable. The Harbour is ſo ſhoal Water, that the Ships cou'd not get in, and indeed the French themſelves, are forc'd to take their Guns out of their great Ships, when they go in or out of it.

Admiral Ruſſel's firſt Letter, dated the 20th of May, brought an Account of a Victory in general only. It was directed to the Earl of Nottingham, Secretary of State, who receiv'd it ſo early next Morning, that the Queen was not ſtirring when he brought it to Kenſington, in a Diſhabillee, for haſte, which was then much talk'd of. It is impoſſible to expreſs the Joy of all ſorts of People, except the worſt ſort, Jacobites, on News of this glorious Victory; more Particulars of which were known a Day or two after, by Letters from Sir Ralph Delaval and others on board the victorious Fleet. Admiral Ruſſel gave Orders that Publick Prayers and Thankſgiving, ſhould be made to Almighty God, on the 27th of May throughout their Majeſties Fleet, for this great and ſignal Victory; and indeed the Admiral look'd on the whole Event, as Providential from the Beginning to the End, as he was pleas'd to tell a Gentleman, from whom I take it, in theſe Words: Above twenty different Accidents, all of them above the Power of Man, or the Sphere of his Deſigns, concur'd to the obtaining of this Victory, of which the want of any one of them had unavoidably loſt us the Opportunity. Every Change of Wind and Tide, from the Mouth of the River to the Place of Battle, ſeem'd as deſign'd by Heaven to concert the meeting of the two Fleets at that very Critical Moment they happen'd to meet; and which was yet the more remarkable, if they had not fought that very Day, they had not fought at all; the Orders for Monſieur Tourville's returning to Breſt, coming to him within a few Hours after he was engag'd.

Admiral Ruſſel aſcribes the Victory to Providence.

One may eaſily imagine that King James made but a ſorry Figure, in his Camp near La Hogue, while his dear Friend's Capital Ships of War were in a Blaze, before him, and his Iriſh and French Army; and thus all the Expence the French King had been at for his Expedition to England was uſeleſs. His and his Friend's Diſgrace and Loſs, were a Mortification which ſunk his Spirits ſo low, that he wrote this abject Letter to his Protector Lewis XIV.

Monſieur my Brother,

King James's abject Letter to the French King.

" I Have hitherto, with ſomething of Conſtancy " and Reſolution, ſupported the Weight of all " the Misfortunes, which it has pleas'd Heaven to " lay upon me, ſo long as myſelf was the only Suf- " ferer; but I muſt acknowledge this laſt Diſaſter " utterly overwhelms me; and I am altogether " Comfortleſs in Reference to what concerns your " Majeſty, through the great Loſs that has befal- " len your Fleet. I know too well that my un- " lucky Star it is, that has drawn down this Miſ- " fortune on your Arms always Victorious, but " when they fought for my Intereſts: And this is " that which plainly tells me, that I no longer me- " rit the Support of ſo great a Monarch; and who " always is ſure to vanquiſh when he fights for him- " ſelf. For which reaſon it is, that I requeſt your " Majeſty, no longer to concern yourſelf for a " Prince ſo unfortunate as myſelf; but permit me A D. 1692 " to retire with my Family to ſome Corner of the " World, where I may ceaſe to obſtruct the uſual " courſe of your Proſperity and Conqueſts, which " only my Misfortune could interrupt. It is not " juſt that the Potenteſt Monarch in the World, " and the moſt flouriſhing above all Others ſhould " ſhare in my Diſgrace, becauſe you are too gene- " rous. 'Tis better much, that I ſhall only retire, " till it pleaſe Omnipotent Providence to be more " propitious to my Affairs: For howſoever it pleaſes " Heaven to diſpoſe of me and mine, or into what- " ſoever Receſs I may be thrown, I can aſſure " your Majeſty, that I ſhall always preſerve to the " laſt gaſp of my expiring Breath, that due Ac- " knowledgment which I ſtill retain of your Favours " and conſtant Friendſhip. Nor can any thing " more contribute to my Conſolation, than to " hear, as I hope to do, when I have quitted whol- " ly your Dominions, of the quick return of your " wonted Triumphs, both by Sea and Land, over " your Enemies and mine, when my Intereſt ſhall " be no longer intermixt with yours."

I am,

Monſieur my Brother,

Yours, &c.

James Rex.

Her Majeſty, whoſe Intrepid and Prudent Conduct at this Critical Juncture, was the Subject of all Men's Admiration and Applauſe, ſent 30000 l. to Portſmouth to be diſtributed among the Seamen; order'd Medals to be ſtruck for Tokens of Honour to the Officers, and caus'd the Bodies of Admiral Carter and Col. Haſtings to be honourably interr'd. The Troops that were encamp'd near Portſmouth, were ſhipp'd off there under the Command of the Duke of Leinſter, Duke Schomberg's Son; and the French were alarm'd with Apprehenſions of a Deſcent on their Coaſts, which was alſo expected in England. But conſidering there were not above 5 or 6000 Men taken aboard the Fleet, there was not much Ground for ſuch Expectations; and the Deſign appear'd at laſt to be the Tranſportation of thoſe Troops to Flanders, where they arriv'd the 20th of Auguſt, and landed at Oſtend. They poſſeſs'd themſelves of Furnes and Dixmuyde, which they began to fortify, and by which the King ſeem'd to have ſome great Deſign that way. But whatever it was, all miſcarried, both thoſe Places being not long after abandon'd to Boufflers by Count Horn; which his Majeſty much reſented in him, who till then had always a great ſhare in his Eſteem. Perhaps the ſame touch'd the Count very near, for he did not long ſurvive it.

In the Courſe of this Hiſtory, I ſhall avoid entering into the Particulars of Campaigns, of Encampments, Battles and Sieges, not only on account of Duke Schomberg's juſt Reflection, upon ſuch Narrations, which are generally confus'd and imperfect, or at leaſt deficient in Military Circumſtances and Terms; but becauſe the Engliſh Reader does not concern himſelf ſo much in Foreign as in Home-Tranſactions. Beſides the Fortune of the War abroad, does by no means invite one to dwell upon it, either in Writing or Reading. However, where the Engliſh Forces are in Action, I ſhall think it my Duty to remember it. Had the French King's Deſigns this Year, had as much Honour as Contrivance in them, his Flatterers wou'd have had ſomething to have ſaid for them. But we ſhall ſee preſently, that the Execution of them was founded in Treachery and Murder.

Prince of Conde's mean Opinion of Lewis XIV's Heroiſm.

The great Prince of Conde, who knew Men in general, and this wonderful Man in particular, as well as any body, had a very mean Opinion of his Heroiſm, and was wont to ſay, he had little of the General

A.D.1692 General in him, either for Counſel or Action; certain it is, that whenever he enter'd upon any, he had ſecur'd the Succeſs of it before-hand by Corruption or Surprize. And there is no Military Enterprize of his recorded in Hiſtory, without ſome ſuch Blemiſh.

The Elector of Bavaria had, by the Influence of King William, been made Governor of the Spaniſh Netherlands, and it was hotly reported, that his Majeſty for ſome Reaſons not made publick, had deſir'd the Elector to withdraw the Prince of Barbaſon from the Government of Namur. Accordingly the Elector deſir'd that Prince to make the Campaign with him, and he came to Bruſſels under pretence of ſo doing. He had not been long there, before News came, that the French King was coming in Perſon to beſiege that City; and the Prince of Barbaſon deſir'd the Elector to permit him to return to his Government, which he could not refuſe him, without taking it from him, and that was not then thought proper; however, his Fidelity was ſo much ſuſpected, that the Elector order'd the Count de Thian to accompany him in the Siege, and gave him private Inſtructions to have an Eye on the Behaviour of Barbaſon. In theſe Circumſtances was the Government of Namur, when Lewis XIV. inveſted it, May the 25th, and ten Days after had the Town ſurrender'd to him; the Garriſon retiring into the Caſtle.

King William receiv'd Advice of this Siege in his Camp at Anderlech, from whence May 28th he march'd towards Louvain, and encamp'd near Bethlem-Abbey; where he gave the Enemy notice of his Victory at Sea, by a triple Diſcharge of the Artillery, which he had caus'd to be drawn to the Top of a Hill that look'd towards Namur, and the whole Army being drawn out, expreſs'd their Joy by ſeveral Vollies; the Noiſe of which reaching the French King's Ears, he made ſlight of the Occaſion, and as it was reported ſaid, Here's a mighty pother indeed, about burning two or three Ships. One can ſcarce believe he cou'd ſay a Thing ſo vain and ſo ſilly; for beſides that he loſt almoſt ten times that Number of his beſt Men at War, the Defeat at La Hogue was ſuch a ſhock to his Naval Power, that he was never after able to put out a Fleet to meet the Engliſh and Dutch Fleet in the Channel. He had been thirty Years making up a Navy, at as much Expence as would have maintain'd all his Garriſons; it has been computed at Twenty Millions Sterling. He had form'd to himſelf the Project of making himſelf Maſter in both Seas, and then of giving Laws to all Chriſtendom. He cou'd not do this without a Fleet ſuperior in Strength to both Engliſh and Dutch, his own was ſo in Beachy Fight two Years ago, and now wou'd have been ſo again, had it come up before the Junctions already mention'd. But this Blow put an end to his Dream of being the Neptune as well as the Mars of Europe; and whatever Airs he gave himſelf, while he waspuft up with his Conqueſt of Namur Town; no doubt his Diſgrace and irreparable Loſs at La Hogue ſtung him more than he was tickled with all the Praiſes of his Poets and Orators on the taking of that Town and Caſtle, the latter being deliver'd up to him five Days after, he immediately return'd with Madam Maintenon and the Court Ladies to Verſailles, where he receiv'd the Congratulations of thoſe whom he well enough paid for what they did or ſaid for him, as Mr. Prior obſerves in his Traveſtie of Boileau's Ode, on his taking of Namur.

The French King ſpeaks contemptibly of the Victory over his Fleet.

His Power deſtroy'd by it.

He takes Namur.

In the mean time, King William advancing to relieve the Place, poſſeſs'd himſelf of all the Poſts on his Side of the Mehaigne, as Luxemburgh, who cover'd his Maſter's Siege, did of two Villages ſurrounded with ſtrong Hedges and Thickets on the oppoſite Side. His Majeſty's Army had ſuch an entire Command of the River by their Batteries, that the French Soldiers cou'd not come at a drop of Water from thence. The ſame Evening the King order'd A.D.1692 Pontoons to be laid over it, in order to attack the Enemy next Day, for which all Things were ſo well-diſpos'd, that the whole Army might paſs in Front at the ſame time; but that Night and ſome following Days, the Rains fell ſo violently that there was no ſtanding the Weather, or as far as Human Foreſight cou'd reach, the French King and his Army at Land, wou'd have come off no better than his Fleet had done at Sea. For King William was animated by the News of Admiral Ruſſel's Victory; the Confederate Army was very near equal to the French in Number, and in Goodneſs of Troops by no means inferior. Thus we ſee, it was a ſudden unforeſeen Accident, which put a ſtop to King William's glorious Enterprize, and gave the French King the Conqueſt of Namur. It was the Rains that broke the Bridges and ſcatter'd the Pontoons, which are mention'd even by Boileau in his fulſome Ode above-mention'd.

Mais qui fait enfler la Sambre?
Sous les jumeaux effraiez,
Des Froids terrens de Decembre,
Les Champs par tout ſont noies.

But what makes the Sambre ſwell?
The Cold Torrents of December;
Under the frighted Twins,
Drown every where the Fields.

King William being after that diſappointed in a Deſign he had form'd to ſurprize Mons, march'd from his Camp at Melle to Genap and Hall. On the 1ſt of Auguſt he paſt the Seine, and was join'd by 3000 Hanoverians. The French Army under Luxemburgh were advantageouſly encamp'd between Enghien and Steinkirk; and on Auguſt the 3d the King advanc'd towards them with Intention to attack them, for which they were well-prepar'd, having had timely Advice of the Approach of the Confederates from Monſieur Tracey, who commanded a Detachment of Horſe between the two Armies.

The Prince of Wirtemberg, who led the Van, conſiſting of Lieutenant-General Douglas's Regiment, Col. Fitzpatrick's, Col. O-Farrel's, a Battalion of Guards, and of Churchil's Brigade, and two Battalions of Danes; drove the French from Hedge to Hedge, and erected two Batteries againſt them, which did great Execution while the Army was marching up to the Head of ſome Defiles, where they were order'd to halt, except the Engliſh Life-Guards, Lieutenant-General Mackay's, Sir Charles Graham's, the Lord Cutts's, the Earl of Angus's, and Col. Hodges's Regiments, which being interlin'd with the Horſe, were order'd to advance, as were alſo the Prince of Heſſe's, Col. Lowther's and the Earl of Leven's Regiments; which ſupported the Prince of Wirtemberg, who after two Hours cannonading began the Attack with the Danes. Never was more terrible and more regular Firing heard, and the Confederate Troops drove the French beyond one of their Batteries; which the Danes and the Engliſh Guards poſſeſs'd themſelves of, and wou'd have ſent away the Guns, had not the Enemy cut off the Traces, and carry'd away the Horſes. General Douglas, with his Battallions, beat the French from three ſeveral Hedges, and made himſelf Maſter of the fourth, when going thro' a Gap to get on the other ſide, he was unfortunately kill'd. All the other Regiments behav'd with equal Bravery, firing Muzzle to Muzzle thro' the Hedges, they on the one ſide, and the Enemy on the other.

Battle of Steinkirk.

The Duke of Wirtemberg ſent Meſſenger after Meſſenger to Count Solms, who commanded the main Body to ſend him Aſſiſtance; and the King himſelf being ſenſible of the Difficulties the Duke, with the Vanguard, had to encounter with, diſpatch'd Count Paulin, one of his Aid du Camps, to Count Solms, with poſitive Orders to ſend more Foot to the Count Solms's Ill-Conduct.

A.D. 1692 the Duke; inſtead of which, he order'd the Horſe, which were of no uſe among thoſe Defiles, to march, and the Foot to halt; and this was the loſs of the Battle: for the Ground where the Vanguard was engag'd, was ſo ſtreight, and the Enemy had ſuch Hedges, Copſes, and Ditches, to cover them, that there was nothing to do for the Horſe, and the main Body was almoſt a Mile in the Rear. However, the King made all poſſible Diligence to get up the Foot; and the Eagerneſs of the Soldiers to obey his Commands, was ſuch, that they put themſelves into ſome Diſorder; and the Vanguard being overpower'd by thirty Battalions of the Enemy, which charg'd them continually, one after another, and by a freſh Body of Dragoons, brought up by Boufflers, they were forc'd to retire in confuſion. The Engliſh Life-Guards ow'd their Preſervation to the Daniſh Foot-Guards; and Baron Pibrach's Regiment of Lunenburghers being in Diſorder, and the Baron himſelf dangerouſly wounded, the brave Sir Bevil Granville, who commanded the Earl of Bath's Regiment, march'd up to his Relief, receiving the Enemy's Fire before he ſuffer'd any Man of his Battalion to diſcharge once; by this means he lodg'd himſelf in a hollow way, order'd his Serjeants to carry off the Baron, and maintain'd his Poſt till he was commanded to leave it by the Prince of Naſſau.

The Loſs of the Battle.

Sir Bevil Granville's Bravery.

If the Suſpicion of Count Solms's halting out of envy to the Prince of Wirtemberg was true, he deſerv'd a greater Puniſhment than being forbidden his Majeſty's Preſence for ſome Months after; and truly the King himſelf did not forbear expreſſing a Jealouſy of his Behaviour, in ſaying as he did frequently, Ah, my poor Engliſh, how are they abandon'd! The Vanguard having been forc'd to retreat, and the French Army reinforc'd by Boufflers; the King, as Night drew on, commanded all the Forces to retreat, which they did with admirable Order, without any Diſturbance from the Enemy.

In this Battle were kill'd the brave Lieutenant-General Mackay, Lieutenant-General Douglas, Lieutenant-General Lanier, Colonel Hodges, the Earl of Angus, and other gallant Officers, and above 2000 Men. The Wounded and Priſoners were about 3000; and the Loſs of the French was not much leſs, tho' they conceal'd it as much as they could, to make their Victory the more important. However, they confeſs'd there were kill'd on their ſide the Prince de Turenne, the Marquis de Bellefonds, the Marquis de Tilladet, the Marquis de Firmaçon, Brigadier-General Stoupa, and ſeveral other Officers of Diſtinction. As bravely as the Engliſh Officers and Soldiers behav'd in this Battle, the Diſaffected in England rejoic'd publickly at the Succeſs of their Enemies, particularly at Bath and at Windſor: as to Bath, no better could be expected from that Rendezvous of Sharpers and Prodigals; but Windſor was taken more notice of, becauſe ſome of the Offenders were ſaid to be the Princeſs's Servants.

People at Bath rejoice.

It was ſuppos'd, that the good Intelligence which the French Miniſters and Generals had of the Deſigns and Motions of the Confederates, procur'd them whatever Advantages they boaſted of in this Campaign; at the end of which, the Chevalier de Milleveux, one of the Elector of Bavaria's Domeſticks, was hang'd on a Tree in the right Wing of his Majeſty's Army, for correſponding with Luxemburgh, and betraying the Counſels of the Confederates, as far as he could get Knowledge of them.

About the ſame time, another notorious Traytor, the Chevalier de Grandval, was diſcover'd and brought to condign Puniſhment; and there are ſo many great Names concern'd in his Treaſon, that it deſerves a little Enlargement.

Monſieur Louvois, chief Miniſter to Lewis XIV. had a Project communicated to him for aſſaſſinating King William, which was found ſeal'd up in his Cabinet after his Death; and his Son and Succeſſor in the Miniſtry, the Marquis de Barbeſieux, carry'd it on. The Perſons who were the chief Contrivers of this damnable Deſign were the Chevalier Grandval, Colonel Parker, and one Dumont, who was promis'd 20000 Livres a-year in Eſtate, and the Order of St. Lazar; Grandval being to be made a Duke, and to have Lands for the Support of his Dignity. There was a grand Meeting of all the Conſpirators at Paris the Year before, at which aſſiſted the Marquis de Barbeſieux, Madam Maintenon, the female Miniſter and Favourite, Monſieur Paperel, Paymaſter-General of the French Army, the Chevalier Grandval, Colonel Parker, and Monſieur Dumont: where it was concerted to execute the Deſign thus; Dumont, after having enter'd himſelf in the Confederate Army, was to take his Opportunity, when his Majeſty viſited the grand Guard or the Lines, to ſhoot him behind his Back. Grandval and Parker were upon a previous Intimation to have a Body of Horſe in readineſs to reſcue him and bring him off. Accordingly, Dumont went to the Confederate Army, and Parker and Grandval to the French, where they waited with Impatience at the Grand Guard, Night and Day, to hear from Dumont; whoſe Heart failing him, he retir'd to the Court of Hanover. Grandval and Parker return'd to Paris, and are again ſet to work by Barbeſieux, and the reſt of the Conſpirators; among whom Monſieur Chaulais, Quarter-Maſter-General to the French Army, then firſt appear'd; as alſo a new Aſſaſſin in the place of Dumont, one Leefdale, of a good Family near Bois le Duc, who had formerly been a Horſe-Officer in the States Service, and was drawn into this helliſh Plot by Grandval. However, Dumont took courage again at Hanover, and renew'd his Correſpondence with Grandval, and new Inſtructions being given them, Grandval, Leefdale, and Parker went to St. Germains on the 16th of April 1692, to ſpeak with the late King James about the ſaid Deſign, to uſe the Words of Grandval's Sentence ſign'd by the Earl of Athlone, who had Knowledge of it, and to take leave of him before they began their Journey. Grandval had Audience of King James, the late Queen being preſent, the King telling him, Parker has given me an Account of the Buſineſs. If you and the other Officers do me this Service, you ſhall never want: and Parker, Grandval, and Leefdale enter'd into Diſcourſe about doing it. Who condemn'd him to be hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd. It is remarkable, that this Aſſaſſination, as well as the reſt, was to be follow'd by a French Invaſion; and that ſuch was the King, and ſuch the Cauſe, for which the Jacobites compos'd their impious Prayers in their new Liturgy. The Guilt of both is therefore to be ſhar'd by the whole Faction, who were apprehenſive, as Grandval told Leefdale, That the King of Great-Britain was the only Obſtacle to the French King's Deſigns. Let us therefore conſider

The Jacobites pray for the Succeſs of it.

Besides the Conspirators before mention'd, the Duke of Luxemburgh, Monsieur Bedal, the French Envoy at Hanover; Monsieur Mureau, Envoy from the King of Poland to the States-General, a French Man; and probably their Master himself were in the Secret of this intended Murder: For it is not likely such a villainous Contrivance should be form'd by his Favourites and Ministers, without his Knowledge and Consent; or if it was, that they would all have continu'd in their wonted Favour and Ministry. The Duke of Schomberg, Brother to the Duke of Leinster, commanded a Body of Troops, sent by King William to the Assistance of the Duke of Savoy, who this Year enter'd Dauphiny, at the Head of 20000 Men, and took the City of Ambrun; where Duke Schomberg publish'd a Declaration in the Name of his Britannick Majesty, inviting People to join him, and assuring them, The King of England had no other end in causing his Forces to enter France, but only to restore the Nobility and Gentry to their ancient Splendor, the Parliaments to their pristine Authority, the People to their just Privileges, and even to grant his Protection to the Clergy; and in short to cause the Edict of Nantes to be reviv'd, of which the Kings of England had been made Guarantees. Several new Converts took hold of this Opportunity to recant their Conversion before Monsieur Dubourdieu, Duke Schomberg's Chaplain. The Duke of Savoy possess'd himself also of Gap, a City on the Frontiers of Provence, and put large Tract of Country under Contribution; but falling sick of the Small-Pox, a Spirit of Division crept among the Generals, and hinder'd farther Operations on that side. Monsr. Dubourdieu brought away with him above 200 French Protestants, who had return'd to their first Religion; and their Majesties King William and Queen Mary improv'd their Alliance with the Duke of Savoy toward the Restoration of the Vaudois, who thro' the Violence of their late Persecution, were unable to keep up the Form of any Discipline, or even any Publick Worship. Monsr. Dubourdieu acquainted the Bishop of St. Asaph with their miserable Condition; that worthy Prelate interceded for them with the Queen, who was graciously pleas'd to cause a Fund to be settled upon them out of the Privy Purse, for the Maintenance of ten Preachers, and as many Schoolmasters, in the Vallies of Piedmont.

Tho' I should not be willing to fill my History with Prodigies and Portents, and Revolutions in the Frame of Nature, yet I cannot help remembring, that on the 8th of September, there happen'd an Earthquake at London, and Parts adjacent, particularly in Essex, where at Chingford I was Witness of great Fractures made by it in Bottles and Glasses. It was not felt in England only, but also on the Continent. The King was then in his Camp at Dinner, in an old decay'd House, which shaking very much, and every one apprehending it was ready to fall, his Majesty was prevailed on to rise from Table, and with Difficulty, because of the Croud, got out at the narrow Door; but the Surprize was soon over, and he return'd to his Dinner.

An Earthquake.

About the beginning of November, was discover'd a famous Sham Plot, invented by one Robert Young in Newgate, and his Accomplices Henry Pierson and Stephen Blackhead, who counterfeited the Names of the Earl of Marlborough; the Earl of Salisbury, the Bishop of Rochester, the Lord Cornbury, and Sir Basil Firebrass, which they put to an Association. Blackhead went three times to the Bishop of Rochester's House, at Bromley in Kent, upon a sham Errand from a suppos'd Doctor of Divinity; but with no other Intent, than to drop the Association there, that it might be found by the King's Messengers. Young gave Information against Dr. Sprat Bishop of Rochester; and upon that, his House was search'd, and the Paper found. His Person was also secur'd, and he was some Days under Confinement; but the Matter being examin'd before the Council, and Young and Blackhead confronted, the Forgery appear'd, and the Bishop was discharg'd. Yet it was said to be a kind of Judgment upon him, for the Sham Presbyterian Plot, which he himself had drawn up seven or eight Years before, and for which so many innocent Persons suffer'd Death, tho' he only suffer'd a short Confinement.

A.D.1692 Young's Plot against the Bishop of Rochester.

On the 13th of September, her Majesty, in the King's Absence, publish'd two Proclamations, the one against Jacobite Libellers, the other against Highwaymen and Thieves; and some People thought they might very well have been put into the same Proclamation. Now it was, that the Glenco Business in Scotland was industriously nois'd about Town and Country, and represented, by Jacobites and Tories, as bad as the Massacres at Paris and in Ireland; and as the King's Act and Deed, who knew nothing of the Matter, farther than that military Execution was determin'd against all those Highlanders that still stood out in Rebellion against the Government, which was the Case of Glenco and his Men, as it lay before his Majesty. The notorious Libeller and Incendiary Lesley publish'd a pretended Relation of the Fact in a Letter, which was greedily swallow'd by the Faction of both Denominations, Tories and Jacobites; and which was as false as it was villainous, as will appear by the Votes of the Scots Parliament in July 1695, when they took this Affair into Consideration.

Glenco Business.

The King knows nothing of it particularly.

In the mean while, the King left the Camp at Grammon the 27th of September, and having diverted himself with Hunting a few Days at Loo, he embark'd aboard the Mary Yacht, attended by Sir Cloudesly Shovel and several Men-of-War, and landed at Yarmouth, October the 18th. He lay the next Night at Sir John Duke's at Sexmondham; met the Queen at Newhall, the 20th; and in the Evening their Majesties pass'd to Kensington, thro' the City of London, amidst the continu'd Acclamations of the People, who express'd an unusual Joy on that occasion. Two Days after, the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, &c. attended their Majesties with a congratulatory Address. The King knighted Salathiel Lovel, Esq; the Recorder, and accepted of their Invitation to dine at Guildhall on the Lord-Mayor's Day, who was then Sir John Fleet. Their Majesties saw the Show in a Balcony in Cheapside, were afterwards conducted by the Sheriffs to Guildhall, and entertain'd with equal Plenty and Magnificence. After Dinner the King knighted John Wildman, Esq; James Houblon, Esq; Aldermen; Leonard Robinson, Esq; Chamberlain; Rowland Aynsworth, Esq; William Scawen, Esq; Josiah Child, Esq; and John Foach, Esq; Citizens.

The monthly Fast was discontinu'd till farther Order; and a Proclamation issu'd for a Thanksgiving Day, October the 27th; in which Proclamation particular mention was made of the Deliverance from the Barbarous and Horrid Assassination-Plot.

On the 4th of November, his Majesty's Birth-Day, the Parliament met, and the King in his Speech told them,

A.D.1692

King's Speech to the Parliament.

" He was glad to meet them again, and thank'd " them for the great Supplies they had given him. " He hop'd by their Advice and Aſſiſtance, to " ſupport their common Intereſt againſt the exceſſive " Power of France.

" That they had great Reaſon to rejoice in the " happy Victory at Sea; and he wiſh'd the Succeſs " at Land had been anſwerable to it.

" That the Bravery and Courage of the Engliſh " there, muſt ever be remembred with Honour.

" That the French were repairing themſelves at " Sea, and deſign'd to augment their Land-Forces; " which made it neceſſary for us to have at leaſt " as great a Force, by Sea and Land, this Year as " the laſt.

" That he was ſenſible of, and afflicted for, this " heavy Charge on his People, not to be avoided " without inevitable Ruin and Deſtruction.

" That the Inconvenience of ſending out of the " Kingdom great Sums of Money, for the Payment " of the Troops abroad, was indeed very conſide- " rable, and he ſhould receive, with all the Satis- " faction imaginable, any Methods they could ſug- " geſt to leſſen it."

He then ſpoke of a Deſcent into France, which he intended to attempt, and deſir'd their Aſſiſtance to enable him for it; adding,

" Upon this Occaſion, I cannot omit taking no- " tice of that ſignal Deliverance, which, by the " good Providence of God, we receiv'd the laſt " Spring, to the Diſappointment and Confuſion of " our Enemies Deſigns and Expectations. This " has ſufficiently ſhewn us how much we are ex- " poſ'd to Attempts from France, while that King " is in a Condition to make them. Let us therefore " improve the Advantage we have at this time, of " being join'd with moſt of the Princes and States " in Europe, againſt ſo dangerous an Enemy. In " this ſurely all Men will agree, who have any Love " for their Country, or any Zeal for our Religion. " I cannot therefore doubt, but you will continue " to ſupport me in this Work againſt the declar'd " Enemy of this Nation; and that you will give as " ſpeedy Diſpatch to the Affairs before you, as the " Nature and Importance of them will admit, that " our Preparations may be timely and effectual for " all that is dear and valuable to us. I am ſure, I " have no Intereſt but what is yours. We have the " ſame Religion to defend; and you cannot be " more concern'd for the Preſervation of your Li- " berties and Properties, than I am, that you ſhould " always remain in the full Poſſeſſion and Enjoy- " ment of them; for I have no Aim, but to make " you a happy People.

King William zealous for Engliſh Liberties.

" Hitherto I have never ſpared to expoſe my own " Perſon for the Good and Welfare of this Na- " tion; and I am ſo ſenſible of your good Affections " to me, that I ſhall continue to do ſo with great " Chearfulneſs upon all Occaſions, wherein I may " contribute to the Advantage of England."

The Parliament's Addreſs to the King, and to the Queen.

This excellent Speech produced hearty Addreſſes from both Lords and Commons, and in particular to the Queen, for her wiſe and happy Adminiſtration in the King's Abſence.

On the 11th of November, the Bill for regulating Trials in Caſes of High-Treaſon was reviv'd, and a Clauſe being preſented, to be added to it, a Debate enſu'd; the Reſult of which was, that the Bill was order'd to lie on the Table; and no farther mention was made of it during this Seſſion.

The Parliament thank Admiral Ruſſel.

The Commons took into Conſideration the Naval Affairs, and began with giving Admiral Ruſſel their Thanks for his great Courage and Conduct in the late Victory obtain'd at Sea. However, there wanted not Perſons in the Houſe, who, out of Envy to the Admiral, or Diſlike to the Victory, ſuggeſted that the Advantage gain'd upon the Enemy, might have been better improv'd. Upon which, the Houſe enter'd upon the examining the ſeveral Inſtructions, Orders, and Reſults of Councils of War, touching the laſt Summer's Expedition in relation to the Proceedings of the Fleet, and the Deſcent intended to be made upon France, after the Victory at Sea. Sir John Aſhby, who was more in the good Graces of the Perſons laſt mention'd, was examin'd the 19th of November, particularly in relation to the French Men-of-War, that made their Eſcape into St. Malo, which the Count de Fourbin, who commanded one of thoſe Men-of-War, confeſſes, might have been deſtroy'd with good Management by the Engliſh. However, the Houſe was very well ſatisfied with Sir John Aſhby's own Account of that Matter; which could not agree with that of the Count de Fourbin, who was in the Battle: he ſays, " In the " Evening there appear'd a Fleet of 40 Sail, which " were Merchant-Ships going to Havre de Grace, " under Convoy of one of the King's Ships; the " Engliſh, who ſpy'd them as well as we, thought " it was the Fleet which the Count d'Eſtrees was " bringing from Provence, to join ours, which " was the reaſon that they put themſelves again in " order of Battle, expecting another Attack; but " when Day broke, we ſaw they were above ſeven " Leagues off. If we had in our turn taken ad- " vantage of this Opportunity, which offer'd, as it " were, of itſelf, this falſe Step of the Enemy would " have given the King's Fleet all the Time neceſ- " ſary to get away, but they did not improve it." The Speaker, by Direction of the Houſe, told Sir John Aſhby, the Houſe took notice of his ingenuous Behaviour at the Bar, and that he had given them Sattisfaction, and was diſmiſs'd from farther Attendance. The next thing the Commons took into Conſideration, was, why a Deſcent had not been made into France? Admiral Ruſſel was queſtion'd about it; but he excus'd himſelf by ſaying, That twenty Days had paſs'd between his firſt Letter to the Earl of Nottingham, after the Fight, and his Lordſhip's Anſwer. Here's plainly three Weeks Time loſt, wanting one Day. The Secretary of State does not certainly make the original Orders, but he is to move and forward them, and if any Impediment offers, to get it remov'd, and the Counſels of State diſpatch'd and executed with all neceſſary Speed; therefore I do not ſee why Admiral Ruſſel deſerv'd Blame for mentioning that Delay of twenty Days, becauſe the Earl of Nottingham ſaid, He had acted according to Orders, which was all he could do, as Secretary of State; which, as I have obſerv'd, ſeems not to be all his Lordſhip could have done as a Privy-Counſellor and Miniſter, tho' it was all he could do as Secretary. In the mean time, the Lords, at a Conference, communicated to the Commons ſome Papers, which their Lordſhips had receiv'd from the King, relating to thoſe Affairs, which being read afterwards in the Lower Houſe, it was reſolv'd, That Admiral Ruſſel, in his Command of the Fleet, during the laſt Summer's Expedition, had behav'd himſelf with Fidelity, Courage, and Conduct. 'Tis obvious, that the Party within Doors and without, could not forgive Admiral Ruſſel's preventing King James's bringing over an Iriſh and French Popiſh Army, to reſtore himſelf to the Throne, and his Friends to Places; which both could not bear to ſee fill'd with others, who better deſerv'd them; and theſe Men did not ceaſe whiſpering Things to the Admiral's diſadvantage, in the King's Ear, which they could at this time come at, 'till that Admiral was laid aſide the very next Year after he had ruin'd the Naval Power of France, and had had the Acknowledgment of his Services made twice by the Houſe of Commons in one Seſſions.

On the 14th of November, Sir Edward Seymour deliver'd to the Commons a Meſſage to his Majeſty, in anſwer to their Addreſs about the Eaſt-India Company the laſt Seſſions. Upon which, a Bill was brought in for Regulating and Eſtabliſhing the Eaſt-India Trade; but it met with great Oppoſition, and

A.D.1692 and the Debate ended in an Addreſs to his Majeſty, like the former, to diſſolve the Company; to which the King was pleas'd to return this Anſwer, I will always do all the Good I can for this Kingdom, and I will conſider of your Addreſs. We ſhall find, e'er it be long, that this Eaſt-India Bill had Negatives and Affirmatives of all Parties, and that the Managers for the Company, made the Oppoſition it met with, a Pretence to draw an immenſe Sum out of their Treaſury, as if it was likely, that it might be advantageouſly diſtributed among Members of Parliament. In leſs than a Month's Time, the Commons went thro' the Supply and voted,

For the Fleet 1926516 l. for the Army 2090563 l. for Deficiency of the Poll-Bill 750000 l. in all 4767079 l. The ways and means for raiſing theſe prodigious Sums, were chiefly four Shillings in the Pound Land-Tax, 70000 l. per Ann. out of the Hereditary Exciſe for four Years; an Additional Exciſe on Liquors, to raiſe a Million by Annuities.

An unconſcionable Premium for Money by Annuities.

The latter was an unconſcionable Advantage to the Subſcribers, who had 14 per Cent. for Life, and many of them are receiving it to this very Day.

That part of the King's Speech which refer'd to the Commons the Conſideration of Methods to prevent the Inconveniencies of ſending Money abroad, took up a great deal of time. Whoever drew up his Majeſty's Speech, whether Lord Somers, as was generally thought, or any other Miniſter, it was very artfully put in. The Cry of the diſaffected had been made the louder againſt Taxes by this Article of ſending Money abroad, and this will ever be the Cry in the time of Foreign War. For if we have Troops in Service on the Continent, how they ſhall be paid without Money, and how we ſhall have Money there, without a great Ballance of Trade on our ſide, which can never be depended upon, no more than a Certainty of Exchange, is inconceivable to Perſons of Knowledge and Experience in Buſineſs. 'Tis no matter for that; the Vulgar, I mean the great as well as ſmall, do conceive there are no Riches in the World but Gold and Silver; not even Diamonds, Pearl and Precious Stones are Wealth with them, in any manner of Compariſon with Silver and Gold; which can be carry'd to Fairs and Markets, and purchaſe every where, whatever they have a mind for: ſo that the carrying out of Money is the utter Impoveriſhment of the Nation, according to their wiſe way of calculating. Whereas nothing is plainer, than that if you ſend out 100 l. in Silver to the Eaſt-Indies, for Example, and bring back 500 l. for it in Goods, of which you export 150 l. only, and make 200 l. of it; you have that 200 l. back for the 100 l. in Silver you ſent out, either in Silver alſo, or in Diſcharge of Demands abroad, for which you muſt have ſent Silver if you had nothing elſe that wou'd be taken in Payment. However, this will always be a Clamour by inexperienc'd and prejudic'd Perſons; and the carrying out of Silver, tho' to bring back Gold, will be an eternal Grievance, till the Advantage of it is underſtood. This Digreſſion is the more a-propos, becauſe the ſending Money to Flanders, was ever in the mouths of all the diſaffected, who meant nothing by it but the ſending Soldiers to Flanders; for if they were ſent, as I have ſaid, they muſt be paid, and if you had no Trade to pay them in, they muſt be paid in Money: An unavoidable Inconvenience of the War, which ever was, and ever will be attended with worſe Things than Inconveniencies. Let us ſee how the Parliament provided againſt it, why by appointing a Committee to conſider how the Army abroad might be ſupply'd with Bread, Cloaths and other Proviſions of the growth of this Kingdom. Which had it been feaſible, the Miniſtry knew how to have it done every whit as well as the Committee, as it prov'd upon the Experiment. In the Conſideration of the Navy, a Motion was made, That his Majeſty be humbly adviſ'd, to conſtitute a Commiſſion of the Admiralty of ſuch Perſons as were of known Experience in Maritime Affairs, which upon the queſtion paſt in the Negative. This Motion was occaſion'd by a conſtant Clamour in the City of London, againſt the Management of the Admiralty, with reſpect to Convoys and Cruizers; which not being well-ſtation'd or equip'd ſeaſonably, gave the French Privateers opportunities to make great Spoil of our Merchant-Men. One of the Lords of the Admiralty being apply'd to by ſome Barbadoes Merchants for Convoy, and preſſing him to provide it for them; he anſwer'd, they needed not to have given themſelves that Trouble; for the Virginia Convoy would be order'd to take Care of their Ships. Such being the Caſe, there was certainly reaſon for that Addreſs, and the Court thought ſo, tho' their Party in the Houſe did not think fit to have his Majeſty directed therein. For not long after, Sir John Houblon an Alderman, was made one of the Lords of the Admiralty, and another Merchant, too nearly related to the Author to be nam'd, was propos'd and expected to have had a Seat at that Board, for which he was as well qualify'd as any Man in London, and loſt it by loſing his Election; as a Miniſter of State told him; and he loſt that Election by the Dexterity and Induſtry of Sir Edward Seymour, who wrote to his Friends in the Country, That Fellow can ſpeak, and therefore you muſt chuſe the other: Both of the Candidates being Diſſenters, and the Weight of the Tories turn'd the Scale for the Perſon who cou'd not ſpeak, by one Vote only in the Borough, and by ſix in the Houſe of Commons; where the Election was determin'd, about the ſame time that the Addreſs was mov'd for. Another Addreſs was carry'd Jan. 11. That for the future all Orders for the Management of the Fleet, ſhould paſs through the Hands of the Lords Commiſſioners for the executing the Office of Lord High-Admiral; which Vote was thought to be occaſion'd by the Difference between the Earl of Nottingham and Admiral Ruſſel. A.D.1692

Ignorance of one of the Admiralty-Board.

A wrong Judgment of exporting Silver.

A Bill for ſatisfying the Debts due to the Orphans of London, was brought into the Houſe of Commons; but not paſſing this Seſſions, there were means us'd to quicken it at the next Trial, which will be then ſpoken of.

A Bill was brought in by the unanimous Conſent of the Houſe, for the better Preſervation of their Majeſties Perſons; which was however thrown out at the ſecond Reading. The ſame Fate attended the Bill for the aſcertaining the Fees of Officers. A Care worthy the regard of that Houſe, conſidering the abominable Extortions too much countenanc'd, as well as practis'd in Courts of Juſtice, as well as other Places.

About the beginning of December, Sir Edward Huſſey, Member of Parliament for the City of Lincoln, preſented to the Houſe of Commons, A Bill touching Free and Impartial Proceedings in Parliament, which paſt the Commons and was ſent to the Lords for their Concurrence. This was a Bill which the Whigs wou'd have been very zealous for in the Reign of the two laſt Stuarts; and the Reaſon was very plain, becauſe ſeveral Perſons then in Employment both Military and Civil, were incapacitated by it to be Members of Parliament. And thoſe Kings employ'd few, but ſuch as were ready to ſacrifice our Religion and Liberties to their Will and Pleaſure. Whereas King William's Servants, in Imitation of their Maſter, who declar'd as much in his laſt Speech, were as much concern'd for the Preſervation of the People's Liberties and Properties, as they cou'd be themſelves. Notwithſtanding all this, and that every Soul in both Houſes were ſatisfy'd, the King wou'd not employ any one that wou'd adviſe him to alter the Conſtitution which he had preſerv'd, and did continue to preſerve at the hazard of his Perſon, and a Life on which the Liberty

A.D. 1692 Liberty of all Europe depended. Yet the ſame Arguments that wou'd have been juſt againſt King Charles and King James's evil Counſellors, were made uſe of to turn King William's faithful Servants out of Parliament; and that not only by Jacobites and Tories, but by diſcontented murmuring Whigs; ſuch as the Foleys, the Harleys, the Winningtons, ſuch as How, Manly, Sir John Guiſe, &c. who ſet the Grumblers in our Times an Example to ſpeak of the Court and of themſelves, as the Whigs did in thoſe Reigns, the worſt of Times. Can it be imagin'd that the Earl of Mulgrave, who ſign'd the Warrant for the Impriſonment of the ſeven Biſhops, and was one of the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, who depriv'd the Fellows of Magdalen College of their Habitations and Freeholds; had really at heart the Liberties and Properties of the People of England, ſo much as to be in fear for them, in the Reign of King William? Well, let that go as it will, this Earl made a notable Speech for the Bill; which was highly extoll'd by the diſaffected, as a Maſter-Piece of Eloquence and Wit. That Lord wanted neither, but his Argument ſeems to be too Sophiſtical and Sarcaſtical for the Gravity of ſo auguſt an Aſſembly; I ſhall only repeat a ſhort Paragraph of it.

Grumblers join with Tories againſt the Court.

To this, I have heard but of one Objection by a Noble Lord, That if this Act ſhould paſs, the King is not allow'd to make a Captain, or a Colonel, without diſabling him to ſit in Parliament. Truly, if a Captain has only deſerv'd to be advanc'd, by expoſing himſelf in Parliament, I think the Nation wou'd have no great Loſs in the King's letting alone ſuch a Preferment. But if ſuch Officers as Col. Erle, Col. Selwyn, Col. Beaumont, Col. Bierly, Col. Brewer, Col. Cuts, Col. Herbert, Gen. Churchil, Gen. Talmaſh, Sir Bevil Greenville, Col. Lumley, Col. Windham, Col. Trelawny, Col. Seymour, Col. Mordaunt, Col. Colt, Col. Leviſon, Col. Webb, Col. How, Col. Hanmer, Col. Stanley, Col. Bellaſis, Col. Bridges, Col. Harvey, Col. Fairfax, Col. Holt, Col. G. Hamilton, Col. Ingoldsby, &c. I ſay, if ſuch Officers, who were cover'd with the Honourable Scars of the Wounds, they had receiv'd in expoſing themſelves to Dangers in Battles, had been render'd unſerviceable to their Country in Parliament by his Lordſhip's Arguments; I think the Nation wou'd have had no great Reaſon to applaud them, as was done by the Faction, tho' the Oration was all of a Piece, with what I have quoted out of it.

Officers in the Army.

This Bill not paſſing in the Houſe of Lords, Occaſion was taken from an Objection made by the Negatives, that this Act might by its Conſequences prolong the Parliament, to bring in and paſs another Bill for frequent Parliaments, which paſt the Houſe of Commons alſo, but was refus'd by the King; and the Reaſon Biſhop Kennet gives for it, is, He had no mind to part with this Parliament as long as the War laſted. And a very good one it was, if the vigorous proſecution of that War againſt the Common Enemy was neceſſary; which the Commons had ſufficiently ſhewn by the Prodigious Sums they had given the King towards it. All which wou'd have been thrown away, together with our Religion and Liberty, if France had made her Advantage of the Diviſions which generally are the Effect of hot and haſty Elections.

The King refuſes to paſs the Bill for frequent Parliaments.

1693. In the beginning of the next Year, Complaint was made to the Houſe of Commons, of a printed Pamphlet, entitled, King William and Queen Mary Conquerors. A Notion that never enter'd in the Heads of knowing Men, otherwiſe than among all their Majeſties rightful and lawful Titles to the Crown, they wou'd add one, which tho' they did not approve themſelves, might be approv'd by thoſe, who lik'd any Title better than a Parliamentary One. This doubtleſs was Biſhop Burnet's Intention, by giving it a Place in his Paſtoral Letter. The Author of the above-mention'd Pamphlet, was one Mr. Edmund Bohun, who tho' Tory enough, had got into the Licenſer's Place, by the Intereſt of ſome Perſons of the ſame Denomination, who had got into much better Places. This Man was but a poor Writer, and cou'd ſay nothing worth the Parliament's taking notice of, for its Smartneſs. However, the Title gave Offence, and ſo the Pamphlet and the Paſtoral Letter were both order'd to be burnt; it being believ'd, that after Bohun's Book had been condemn'd, when the Biſhop's Letter was queſtion'd, the Word was Burn it, Burn it, and prevail'd more for the Pun's ſake, than any Thing elſe.

A.D. 1693.

A Pamphlet call'd King William and Queen Mary Conquerors.

Order'd to be burnt, as alſo Bi-ſhop Bur-net's Paſtoral Letter.

Sir Edward Seymour, being order'd to repreſent to his Majeſty, that under pretence of preſſing Men for Sea-Service, Land-men had been taken up, and ſhip'd off for Flanders, as particularly a Servant to a Member of the Houſe of Commons; his Majeſty return'd Anſwer by the ſame Sir Edward, that he had order'd the Officers of the Army not to receive any ſuch Preſt Men, and the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty to examine the Preſs-maſters, and puniſh thoſe that had preſs'd Landmen for Sea-Service.

Ireland.

We have had little to ſay of the Affairs of Ireland ſince its Reduction. The Lord Sidney being made Lord-Lieutenant of that Kingdom, Sir John Trenchard ſucceeded him as Secretary of State. While the Lord Sidney was in that Office, he had for his Under-Secretary William Pulteney, Eſq; whom he carry'd with him to Ireland as one of his Secretaries the laſt Year, his other Secretary being Sir Cyril Wyche. I know not what the Oxonian means, when he ſays in the Athen. Oxon. that Sir William Pulteney, the Father, was formerly one of James Harrington's Rotten-Club; a Society of Republicans, who however were very hearty Friends to King William, and had been Commonwealth's Men in the Reigns of the two laſt Stuarts, when it was a hard Matter for any honeſt ſenſible Man to keep his Monarchical Principles.

p. 1062.

The next Year the Lord Sidney return'd to England, and his Secretary Sir Cyril Wyche was appointed one of the Lords Juſtices of that Kingdom; the other two being Henry Lord Capel, Brother to the Earl of Eſſex, who was found murder'd in his Cloſet in the Tower ten Years before, and William Duncomb Eſq; Knight of the Shire for Bedford; who wou'd have ſcorn'd to have been a Tool in the Harleyan Miniſtry, as was one of the ſame Name and Family. The Lord Capel carry'd over to Ireland with him, as his Chaplain, Thomas Lindeſay Maſter of Arts, made Miniſter of Woolwich in Kent by Biſhop Sprat. He had not been in Ireland above half a Year before he was made Dean of St. Patrick's; and how he roſe and behav'd in Queen Anne's Reign, we ſhall ſee when we come to it.

The Affairs of Ireland were ſo manag'd in the Lord Coningsby's time, that the People there ſent Complaints over to England, which the Malecontents and Murmurers were well enough pleas'd with, as giving them a handle to make ill Impreſſions of the Government; and there were alſo Perſons who with ſiniſter Views were ready to fall in with any thing that look'd like redreſſing of Grievances. This mix'd Party were very forward in receiving Informations from Ireland, and improv'd them ſo well for their Purpoſes, that the following Addreſs was preſented to the King.

A long Addreſs to the King about Ireland.

" WE your Majeſty's moſt Dutiful and Loyal
" Subjects, the Commons in Parliament aſ-
" ſembled, having taken into our ſerious Conſide-
" ration, the State of your Majeſty's Kingdom of " Ireland, find ourſelves oblig'd by our Duty to
" your Majeſty, with all Faithfulneſs and Zeal to
" your

A.D.1693 " your Service, to lay before your Majeſty, the " great Abuſes and Miſmanagements of the Affairs " of that Kingdom.

" By expoſing your Proteſtant Subjects to the " Miſery of free Quarter, and the Licentiouſneſs of " the Soldiers, to the great Oppreſſion of the " People; which we conceive hath been occaſion'd " chiefly by the want of that Pay, which we did " hope we had fully provided for them.

" By recruiting your Majeſty's Troops with Iriſh " Papiſts, and ſuch Perſons, who were in open Re- " bellion againſt you, to the great endangering and " diſcouraging of your Majeſty's good and loyal " Proteſtant Subjects in that Kingdom.

" By granting Protection to the Iriſh Papiſts, " whereby Proteſtants are hinder'd from their legal " Remedies, and the Courſe of Law ſtop'd.

" By reverſing Outlawries for High-Treaſon a- " gainſt ſeveral Rebels in that Kingdom, not with- Againſt the " in the Articles of Limerick, to the great Diſcon- Limerick " tent of your Proteſtant Subjects there; by let- Articles. " ting the Forfeited Eſtates at Under-Rates, to the " Prejudice of your Majeſty's Revenue.

" By the great Embezzlement of your Majeſty's " Stores in the Towns and Garriſons in that King- " dom, left by the late King James. And by the " great Embezzlements that have been made in " the Forfeited Eſtates and Goods, which might " have been employ'd for the Safety and better " Preſervation of your Majeſty's Kingdom. We " crave leave alſo to repreſent to your Majeſty, that " the Addition to the Articles of Limerick, after " the ſame were finally agreed and ſign'd, and the " Town thereupon ſurrender'd, hath been a very " great Encouragement to the Iriſh Papiſts, and a " Weakening to the Engliſh Intereſt there.

" Having thus, moſt gracious Sovereign, out of " our Affectionate Zeal to your Majeſty, with all " humble Submiſſion to your great Wiſdom, laid " before you theſe Abuſes and Miſmanagements in " your Majeſty's Kingdom of Ireland; we moſt " humbly beſeech your Majeſty, for Redreſs there- " of,

" That the Soldiers may be paid their Arrears, " and the Country what is due to them for Quar- " ters, and that no Iriſh Papiſt may ſerve in your " Army there.

" And foraſmuch as the reducing of Ireland, " hath been of great Expence to this Kingdom; " we do alſo humbly beſeech your Majeſty, that " according to the Aſſurance your Majeſty has been " pleas'd to give us, no Grant be made of the For- " feited Eſtates in Ireland, till there be an Oppor- " tunity of ſettling that Matter in Parliament, in " ſuch Manner as ſhall be thought moſt conve- " nient.

" That a true Account of the Eſcheats and For- " feited Eſtates, both Real and Perſonal, and Stores " left by the late King James, may be laid before " the Commons in Parliament, to the end that the " ſaid Eſcheats, Forfeitures and Stores, and the " Embezzlements thereof may be enquir'd into.

" That no Outlawries of any Rebels in Ireland " may be revers'd, or Pardon granted to them, but " by the Advice of your Parliament, and that no " Protection may be granted to any Iriſh Papiſt to " ſtop the Courſe of Juſtice.

" And as to the Additional Article, which opens " ſo wide a Paſſage to the Iriſh Papiſts, to come " and repoſſeſs themſelves of the Eſtates, which " they had forfeited by their Rebellion; we moſt " humbly beſeech your Majeſty, that the Articles " of Limerick, with the ſaid Addition, may be laid " before your Commons in Parliament; that the " manner of obtaining the ſame may be enquir'd " into, to the end it may appear by what means the " ſaid Articles were ſo engag'd, and to what Value " the Eſtates thereby obtain'd do amount to.

" Thus, may it pleaſe your Majeſty, we your " moſt Dutiful and Loyal Subjects do lay theſe A.D.1693 " Matters in all Humility before you; and as your " Majeſty has been pleas'd to give us ſuch Aſſu- " rances of your Readineſs to comply with us, in " any Thing that may tend to the Peace and Secu- " rity of this Kingdom; we doubt not of your Ma- " jeſty's like Grace and Favour to that of Ireland, " in the Safety and Preſervation whereof, this your " Majeſty's Kingdom is ſo much concern'd."

Several Articles of this Addreſs ſeem to be ſuch as are the unavoidable Effects of War and Confu- Reflections upon it. ſion, Soldiers will be licentious, Iriſh Papiſts might eaſily creep into the Army, as French Papiſts did into the Refugee Regiments; Stores, if King James left any worth ſpeaking of, did doubtleſs not encreaſe, by being ſhifted out of one hand into another; nor wou'd People be very forward to raiſe the Rents of Eſtates, a Year or two after they had been ravag'd and waſted by Troops of all Nations. Theſe things lie uppermoſt in the Conſideration of ſuch Matters; but as to the granting Protection to the Iriſh Rebels, the reverſing of Outlawries, and whatever might be done by rapacious and corrupt Lawyers; as to the Additional Article of Limerick, it were to be wiſh'd, that more ſtreſs had been laid upon thoſe Grievances, and leſs upon the others.

His Majeſty return'd this prudent Anſwer to the Commons Addreſs, Gentlemen, I ſhall always have The King's Anſwer. great Conſideration of what comes from the Houſe of Commons, and I ſhall take care that what is amiſs ſhall be remedied.

We muſt now take a ſhort view of Affairs in Scotland. Scotland, which we left in a very declining Condition with reſpect to the late King James, and they never mended afterwards. Fifteen Hundred Highlanders march'd as far as Strathſhay in the County of Murray, where they expected to be join'd by other Rebels. But Sir Thomas Levingſton, whom King William made Lord Tiviot, falling upon them unexpectedly, with 800 Foot and ſix Troops of Dragoons, not only routed them, but kill'd 500 on the ſpot, and took many Priſoners as well Officers as Soldiers. After which he made himſelf Maſter of Lethindey Caſtle; and Major Ferguſon was very ſucceſsful againſt the Rebels in the Iſle of Mull; while his Brother, that vile Apoſtate from all Principles of Morality, Religion and Liberty, was in the Depths of the Aſſaſſination and Invaſion-Plots in England. Things being come to this Paſs, moſt of the Chiefs of the Rebels ſubmitted, and others Scots go to of them paſt over to France, as the Earl of Perth, St. Germains. the Earl of Lauderdale, the Earl of Dumferling, the Earl of Dumbarton, Dundee's Son, Col. Graham, Col. Wachup, Col. Buchan, Biſhop Gordon, Mr. James Macquean, Mr. Cockburn, Sir James Montgomery, Major Scot, Col. Maxwell, the Lord Dunkel, and others, as well pretended Proteſtants as Papiſts. But the Churchmen of Great-Britain were oblig'd to be Churchmen of France too, or were abandon'd to ſtarve by the Court of St. Germains. The Earl of Dumferling, and Col. Canon, who retir'd from Ireland to that Court, were both Inſtances Church of of King James's unalterable Inveteracy againſt the England Church of England, even againſt High-Church the Men ill Adorers of his Divine Right and abſolute Power. uſed there. The Earl of Dumferling, a Member of that Church, happening to have a quarrel there with one Capt. Browne a Papiſt about a Trifle, the Captain was countenanc'd and encourag'd in it, and made Commander of a Company of Scots reform'd Officers in Catalonia; while the Earl liv'd in Contempt, purely on account of his Religion, which ill Treatment broke his Heart, and he ſunk under the Weight of As the Earl of his hard Fate at St. Germains. He was deny'd Dumferling. Chriſtian Burial after he was dead, and his Friends were forc'd to hide his Corpſe in a Chamber, till an Opportunity was found of digging a Hole in the

*A.D.*1693 Fields in the Night, in which they were glad to depoſite it for fear of worſe Uſage.

Col. Canon. Col. Canon's Sufferings were equal to the Earl's. He was General of King James's Army in Scotland, and ſerv'd him ſo faithfully, every body expected he wou'd be rewarded with ſome great Command upon his Arrival at St. Germains; but he poſitively refuſing to abandon the little Religion he had, was reduc'd to the ſcandalous Allowance of half a Crown a Day; while Papiſts who had ſerv'd under him were prefer'd to good Poſts. This unhappy Gentleman finding himſelf thus neglected, took it ſo much to Heart, that he dy'd of Grief and Want; having taken the Sacrament from the Hands of Dr. Granville two Days before his Death: but a Prieſt, who wou'd not ſtir from him when he was dying, thruſt a Wafer down his Throat after he was Speechleſs, and to have the Merit of his Converſion gave out he dy'd a Catholick, which got the Favour of Burial, or his Corpſe had far'd as did the Earl of Dumferling's.

Sir James Montgomery. Sir James Montgomery, the ſame who was deputed with the Earl of Argyle and Sir John Dalrymple, to preſent the Crown to King William in the Name of the Parliament of Scotland, out of ſome Diſguſt abandon'd the Intereſt of his Country and turn'd Jacobite. He was for ſome time King James's moſt active Agent in England, and wrote and publiſh'd the Declaration which was to have attended the La Hogue Invaſion; as alſo a Pamphlet, entitl'd, Britain's juſt Complaints. In a word, he was his conſtant Champion on all Occaſions, always drawing his Pen in his Quarrel, and ready always to draw his Sword. Yet this very Sir James Montgomery, who had done ſuch great Things and run ſuch great Hazards for him, being oblig'd to fly to France, having eſcap'd from a Meſſenger, cou'd not obtain any ſhare in the Abdicated King's good Graces, meerly becauſe he would not quit High-Church in Britain for High-Church in France. He was brow-beaten by the Court-Prieſts, upbraided every Day with having been once in the Prince of Orange's Intereſt; and at laſt he was forc'd to retire to Paris, where he dy'd neglected, with the melancholy Reflection of the miſerable State he had brought himſelf into, by his Apoſtacy and Folly.

Earl of Lauderdale. Nay, the Earl of Lauderdale, tho' a Papiſt, yet becauſe he adviſ'd King James to let the Proteſtants have the Adminiſtration of his ſmall Government, and recommended the Earl of Clarendon, and the Nonjuring Biſhops, as the fitteſt to ſerve him in England; and the Lord Hume, the Earl of Southesk, and the Lord Sinclair in Scotland; he was forbid the Court, and enjoin'd to ſend his Lady a Proteſtant to England, himſelf being reduc'd to a Penſion of about 90 l. a Year, and not long after he dy'd of Grief at Paris, ſeeing no Probability of his Maſter's changing his Meaſures.

Mr. Alexander Maitland. His Brother Mr. Alexander Maitland, had on ſeveral Occaſions behav'd very bravely in King James's Service: He had alſo deſerted King William's, under whom he had a Command in the Scots Guards; but coming to St. Germains, and being ſuffer'd to ſtarve, he choſe rather to make his Peace with an offended Government, than live in the Contempt of an ungrateful one.

Sir William Sharp. Sir William Sharp falling under Diſtruſt with Melfort and Innes, grew alſo into Contempt. The Penſion allow'd him while the Scots Rebellion laſted, was taken from him, and he was forc'd to quit France, becauſe he wou'd not quit his Religion, and throw himſelf on the Mercy of his lawful Sovereign.

Dr. Cocburn. But King James's uſage of Dr. Cocburn a Scots Divine is ungrateful, and barbarous beyond any thing that can be imagin'd. He was baniſh'd Scotland for treaſonable Practices, and forc'd to fly from England for writing treaſonable Libels. He thought to have found an Aſylum at St. Germains, if not a Recompence, but inſtead of this he was perpetually teaz'd by the Prieſts to turn Papiſt, and when they cou'd not prevail, they repreſented him as a dangerous Perſon, and got him ſent from France, whence he retir'd to Holland, and liv'd in Want and Miſery, as is hinted elſewhere. *A.D.*1693

Is there need of any more Inſtances, to prove King James's incurable Averſion to the Church of England, and all Churchmen? Need I name the Lord Henmore, Mr. Louthian, Capt. Murray, Capt. Da'ziel, Capt. Maclean, Mr. Kinnard, &c. all Scots High-Church, all mortal Enemies to Presbytery? yet becauſe they were obſtinate in their Principle of Religion, be what it wou'd, and thought it ſtill better than Popery, they could not find Bread at the Court of St. Germains, and choſe rather to run the Hazard of Impriſonment in England, than ſtay and ſtarve in France.

Earl of Middleton. The Earl of Middleton having the greateſt Intereſt of any of the late King's Followers in the Engliſh Jacobites and Tories, that Prince carry'd it moſt kindly to him, and ſeem'd to have ſome Confidence in him. However, he was never Prime Miniſter, as Melfort was, nor had any Concern in the Management of Affairs between Verſailles and St. Germains, that being done by Father Innes a Scots Jeſuit. He was ſeldom call'd to Council, and the French Court never depended on his Correſpondence. He always declar'd againſt reſtoring the Forefaulted King by a French Power; for which he ſo incurr'd the Diſpleaſure of that Court, that he was at laſt abridg'd of his Penſion, and to gain a ſorry Subſiſtence, oblig'd to abandon that Religion which had till then been the occaſion of his Misfortunes. The worſt of it all was, his Converſion was never thought ſincere, and the Allowance for his Maintenance was little more than 100 l. a Year.

I do not here add Inſtances of the Uſage the Engliſh Fugitives met with at St. Germains, if they did not renounce High-Church. I content myſelf with the Hiſtory of theſe Scots Noblemen and Gentlemen, being fewer in Number, and their Caſe rather more deplorable than that of the Engliſh, who had better Proviſion made for them by their Friends at Home; elſe I might name Sir Edward Herbert, King James's Lord-Chancellor in France, as his Father had been King Charles IId's. This Herbert and his Wife were put under Confinement. Bromfield the Quaker was ſent to the Baſtile; Sir Andrew Forreſter, Sir Theophilus Oglethorp, Mr. Ferguſon, Grahame Lord Preſton's Brother, Capt. Fielding and others, were driven from St. Germains by the hard Treatment they met with there. Notwithſtanding which, in Scotland as well as England, the Enemies to the Government, eſpecially the Prieſthood of them, continu'd to make the Cauſe of King James the Cauſe of the Church, and to ſay of the Fugitives of St. Germains, as was ſaid of Dean Granville, they, like the Apoſtles, left all to follow their Lord and Maſter.

Sir Edward Herbert. Bromfield the Quaker in the Baſtile.

We have mention'd the Seſſions of Parliament in Scotland, where the Duke of Hamilton was Commiſſioner, in which High-Office he was ſucceeded by the Earl of Melvil; and while he was in Commiſſion, the Act of Aſſurance paſt, whereby the Aſſurers were oblig'd to declare before God, that they believ'd King William and Queen Mary to be King and Queen of that Kingdom de Jure, as well as de Facto, and engag'd to defend their Title as ſuch, with their Lives and Fortunes. This Teſt was requir'd to be taken by all Perſons capable to elect or be elected Members of Parliament, and all in any Publick Truſt or Office, Civil, Military or Eccleſiaſtical, together with the Oath of Allegiance, under Penalty of Deprivation. The Diſcourſe was in London, that his Majeſty intended to go in Perſon to Scotland, and the Lord Melvil ſpoke of it in Parliament as the King's Intention, which

The Act of Aſſurance in Scotland.

A.D.1693 which was fruſtrated by the Urgency of Affairs in Ireland and the Netherlands. This Parliament paſs'd an Act for reſtoring the Presbyterian Miniſters, who had been thruſt out ſince the firſt of January 1661; and another, declaring all Rebels, that were in Arms againſt King William and Queen Mary.

Sir John Maclean ſurrenders his Iſle of Mull.

The Progreſs of Major Ferguſon in the Iſle of Mull, was ſo proſperous, that it oblig'd Sir John Maclean the Proprietor, to ſubmit to their Majeſties Government, and deliver up his Caſtles to their Forces; which being done, he went to London, had the Honour to kiſs the Queen's Hand, and from thence went to Holland, to throw himſelf at his Majeſty's Feet.

His Majeſty appointed the Duke of Hamilton to be High Commiſſioner in the Year 1692, who was very acceptable to the Scots Nation, having ſet an Example of Loyalty, and Love of his Country, and the Proteſtant Religion to his Son and Succeſſor in Dignity and Fortune, which he but ill imitated, eſpecially in the latter Part of his Life. The King wrote an affecting Letter to the Scots Parliament, and receiv'd a moſt dutiful and affectionate Anſwer.

The Deſign of this Hiſtory.

Thoſe Readers that bear in mind the Title of this Hiſtory, will excuſe me for being ſo ſhort in the Narration of thoſe Parts of it, which concern Scotland and Ireland; for beſides that, in the drawing up the Scheme, the Tranſactions at large in thoſe Kingdoms were left to Hiſtorians, that treat of them in particular; our original Deſign was to explain by Facts the wicked Purpoſes of the Faction in England, which before, and after the Revolution, have, under various Pretences and Denominations, been endeavouring to deſtroy our Liberties Spiritual and Temporal; and as they have all along branch'd out into Scotland and Ireland, the Leſſon ſerves for thoſe Kingdoms, as well as for this.

Before we proceed in the Engliſh Hiſtory, we will take ſome notice of Honours and Preferments beſtow'd by their Majeſties in the laſt, and the beginning of this Year.

Honours and Preferments.

Sir Henry Capel was created Baron Capel of Tewkſbury, and the following Lawyers were made Serjeants at Law;

Sir George Treby.	Henry Gould, Eſq;
Samuel Eyre, Eſq;	Roger Moor, Eſq;
Francis Purley, Eſq;	Reginald Bretland, Eſq;
William Coward, Eſq;	John Darnel, Eſq;
George Pricket, Eſq;	Joſeph Girdler, Eſq;
Thomas Gooding, Eſq;	Littleton Powys, Eſq;
Nathan Wright, Eſq;	Charles Bonython, Eſq;

Sir John Trevor made Maſter of the Rolls.

Sir Edward Ward was made Attorney-General, and Sir John Trevor, Maſter of the Rolls, in the room of Henry Powle, Eſq; deceas'd. We ſhall ſee in a Year or two, what an Honour he did to the Recommendation of thoſe about the King, who, as well as himſelf, had been in favour in the late King's Time.

Admiral Ruſſel laid aſide.

By the ſame Advice.

But what was more ſurprizing than the giving ſo lucrative a Poſt to the Speaker of the Abdicated King's Parliament, was, the laying aſide Admiral Ruſſel, with his Laurels ſtill green and flouriſhing, and appointing Henry Killigrew, Eſq; Sir Ralph Delaval and Sir Cloudeſley Shovel to be Joint-Admirals of the Fleet. This was thought to be the doing of the ſame Sett of Counſellors that procur'd the Rolls for Sir John Trevor; and, in a word, that made King William's Reign ſo uneaſy to himſelf and his People, who could not be pleas'd to ſee the ſame Perſons about him as had been about King James, and with the ſame Favour and Influence.

The King, before he went abroad, appointed George Rooke Eſq; to be Vice-Admiral of the Red, and afterwards knighted him aboard his Ship at Spithead. The Lord Berkley was made Vice-Admiral of the Blue, Col. Matthew Aylmer Rear-Admiral of the Red., and David Mitchel Eſq; Rear-Admiral of the Blue. A.D 1693

Sir John Somers made Lord-Keeper.

Sir John Somers Attorney-General, was ſworn Lord Keeper of the Great Seal; Sir John Trenchard one of the Principal Secretaries of State; and both of the Privy-Council. Sir John Lowther of Whitehaven, Henry Priſtman Eſq; Anthony Lord Viſcount Falkland, Robeert Auſten Eſq; Sir Robert Rich, Henry Killegrew Eſq; and Sir Ralph Delaval, were made Lords of the Admiralty. The Honourable Edward Ruſſel Eſq; Treaſurer of their Majeſties Chamber. Dr. William Loyd, Biſhop of St. Aſaph, was tranſlated to the See of Litchfield and Coventry; and Dr. John Hartſtongue, the Duke of Ormond's Chaplain, was made Biſhop of Oſſory in Ireland.

Honours and Preferments.

Lord Mohun try'd for the Murder of William Mountfort the Player.

In the beginning of February, the Lord Mohun was indicted for the Murder of William Mountfort the Player, who was then one of the Favourites of the Pleaſurable Part of the Town, for his Good Action on the Stage and Good-Nature in Life; which are ſeldom found together in Perſons of his Profeſſion. A rakiſh Officer had made leud Addreſſes to Mrs. Bracegirdle, the famous Actreſs; which ſhe returning with diſdain, the Man reſolv'd to get his Will of her by force. Mr. Mountfort coming from her Lodgings, having ſeen her ſafe home, was attack'd by this Officer, and baſely murder'd. The Lord Mohun, being unhappily preſent when the Murder was committed, was apprehended, impriſon'd in the Tower, and brought to his Trial for it before his Peers in Weſtminſter-Hall; the Marquiſs of Carmarthen being conſtituted Lord High Steward pro hac vice: And after a Tryal which laſted ſeveral Days, the Lords on the fourth of February deliver'd their Judgment upon their Honours, and by a very great Majority acquitted the Lord Mohun of the ſaid Murder.

Acquitted.

On the 14th of March his Majeſty came to the Houſe of Peers, and gave the Royal Aſſent to the Supply Bills: To an Act for preventing Suits againſt ſuch as acted in Defence of the Kingdom. A hard Caſe! that Men ſhould be expos'd to the Vexatious Proſecutions of malicious Neighbours and mercenary Attorneys for acting in Defence of their Country, and conſequently in defence even of thoſe that proſecuted them, as all Proteſtant Diſſenters are expos'd to be, if they lead any Men againſt the Enemy, without having taken the Sacrament Kneeling. To Acts for the Militia, and Publick Accounts; for puniſhing Mutiny, Deſertion, and Falſe Muſters; to an Act for the Encouragement of Privateers; and to another for Preſerving the Game; and to 22 private Acts; after which, his Majeſty made this Speech.

Acts paſs'd.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" THE large Supplies, which you have given " me this Seſſion, are ſo great Teſtimonies " of your good Affections, that I take this occaſion " with great Willingneſs, to return my hearty Thanks " to you: And I aſſure you, it ſhall be my Care to " ſee that that Money you have given, may be ef- " fectually applied to ſuch Services, as may be moſt " for the Honour and Intereſt of England.

" I muſt recommend to your Care the Peace and " Quiet of the ſeveral Counties to which you are " now returning; and doubt not, but by your Care, " the Supply, which you have ſo freely given, will " not only be effectually levied, but with the greateſt " Equality too, and the leaſt Uneaſineſs to the Peo- " ple that is poſſible.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" The Poſture of Affairs does neceſſarily require " my Preſence abroad; but I ſhall take care to leave " ſuch a number of Troops here, as may be ſuffi- " cient for the Security of the Kingdom againſt any " Attempts of our Enemies.

" I ſhall add no more, but that as I ſhall conti-

" for the Good and Advantage of theſe Kingdoms,
" ſo I do likewiſe aſſure you, that my hearty and
" ſincere Endeavours ſhall never be wanting in any
" other kind, to make this a great and flouriſhing
" Nation".

King goes for Holland.

Then the Parliament was prorogu'd to the Second of May; and on the 24th of March his Majeſty parted from Kenſington very early, and came to Harwich that Night; but the Winds being contrary, the King came back to Colcheſter, and din'd and lay that Night at the Houſe of Sir Iſaac Rebow. The next Day he return'd to Kenſington; and three Days after parted from thence again for Graveſend; where he embark'd with a fair Wind for Holland, under Convoy of Rear-Admiral Mitchel, accompany'd by the Duke of Ormond, the Earl of Eſſex, and other Perſons of Quality; but not a ſufficient number to prevent Reflections on the Indolence, not to ſay worſe, of the noble Youth of England, who declin'd ſo fair an occaſion to acquire Glory in the Service of their King and Country. His Majeſty came to the Hague the 2d of April; from thence he went to Loo; and thence to the Army, to poſſeſs himſelf of the Camp at Perk; which he did, and by that, entirely broke the French King's Deſigns upon Brabant: and that invincible Hero, who was come to Flanders, return'd immediately to Verſailles, without attempting any thing, leaving his Army commanded by the Duke of Luxemburgh, encamp'd at Meldert; from whence they broke up, July 13, and march'd towards the Maeſe; which gave King William an Opportunity to ſend a ſtrong Detachment, under the Duke of Wirtemberg, to force the French Lines from the Scheld to the Sea by Dunkirk, which cover'd all their Pais Conquis, as they called it, their Conquer'd Countries, of which ſpacious and pompous Maps were made by Sanſon, to flatter, not only the French King, but the French Nation.

The French King leaves Flanders at his Coming.

French Lines forc'd.

The Prince of Wirtemberg forc'd the Lines, and rais'd great Contributions, which were dearly paid for afterwards.

In the mean time, Luxemburgh intercepted the Prince of Tilly, who was marching to join the Confederate Army with Part of the Garriſon of Maeſtricht, and oblig'd him to retire, with the loſs of 2 or 300 Men. He then took Huy, and made a Feint of Beſieging Liege; into which, the King threw ten Battalions of Foot, and that Detachment, and the Prince of Wirtemberg's, were ſo conſiderable a Part of his Army, that Luxemburgh reſolv'd to attack it, while they were abſent, the French Army being at leaſt 35000 Men ſtronger than the Confederates. It muſt be own'd, that a General would be much to blame, if he did not take hold of all Advantages in War, eſpecially of that of Superiority in number; which the French Generals almoſt always truſted to; and when they did their Maſter's Buſineſs by it, they deſerv'd well from him! but to be eternally bouncing of the Intrepidity of their Troops, and their doing Wonders, when they had two to one to do them with, is an Air peculiar to French Heroiſm. His Majeſty having notice of the Enemy's Approach, got on Horſeback, with the Elector of Bavaria and Chief Officers of the Army, and order'd it to be drawn up in Order of Battle.

Battle of Landen.

Moſt of the General Officers were for repaſſing the River Geet; but the King choſe to make Advantage of the Ground he had, rather than expoſe his Rear to the Enemy's Charge. Beſides, the French were now near the great defenceleſs Towns of Brabant, which muſt feel the Effects of their Fury, unleſs they had been ſtopt by venturing an Engagement.

As ſoon as the Enemy drew up by the Confederate Camp, the King order'd Brigadier Ramſay, with the Regiments of O-Farel, Mackay, Lauder, Leven, and Monroe, to guard ſome Hedges and Hollow Ways upon the right of the Village of Lare. A.D.1693 The Brandenburgh Battalions were poſted to the left, under the Command of Prince Charles of Brandenburgh, and were ſupported by the Hanover Foot, under Lieutenant-General Dumont: Theſe were afterwards reinforc'd by two Battalions of Guards, Engliſh and Scots. His Majeſty order'd the firſt Battalion of the Royal Regiment, Colonel Churchil's, Colonel Selwyn's, and Colonel Trelawney's Regiments, Prince Frederick's Battalion of Danes, and Fagel's Regiment, to poſſeſs the Village of Neer-Landen, which covered the left of the Confederate Body of Foot; which, upon the Approach of the French Army, wheel'd from the left to the right, to bring up their left to the Brook of Beek, where it was cover'd by this Village. The Ground being open between Neer-Winden and Neer-Landen, his Majeſty order'd a Retrenchment to be made in the Night, from the one to the other, to cover their Body of Foot, which was indeed but a ſlight Breaſtwork, there not being time for raiſing a better. This ſlight Covering was magnified by the French, as a formidable Retrenchment. The Dragoons upon the left, were order'd to the Village of Dormal, to guard that Paſs upon the Brook of Beek, from whence the left Wing of the Cavalry extended to Neer-Landen, where it was cover'd by that Brook, and from thence turn'd off to the right, behind the Body of Foot. Whether it was out of Envy to King William, or really that he found ſomething amiſs in the forming of this Camp, the Duke of Luxemburgh, when he view'd it the following Evening, ſaid, Now I believe Waldeck is dead; that General being allow'd to have been the beſt in the World for Incamping.

His Majeſty, who had been on Horſeback till late in the Evening, to give the neceſſary Orders, commanded his Coach at laſt to be brought to the Rear of Col. Stanley's Regiment, where he repos'd himſelf about two Hours, and early in the Morning ſent for Dr. Menard, one of his Chaplains, to pray with him in his Coach. After which, all things were diſpos'd for Action, and the next Day, July 19th, was fought the ever-memorable Battle of Landen, in which King William acquir'd more Glory, by his admirable Conduct and unparallel'd Intrepidity, tho' the Enemy had the Field, than Lewis XIV. had a juſt Claim to, by his Victories and Conqueſts. Early in the Morning, the Cannonading began on the Confederate ſide, and continu'd with good Succeſs till about ſix a-clock, when the French made a Motion to come near the Retrenchment abovemention'd. About eight, the Mareſchal de Luxemburgh commanded a ſtrong Body to attack the Village of Lare, which they perform'd with great Fury and various Succeſs, having gain'd and loſt the Poſts there more than once. At laſt, the Confederates, tho' inferiour in number, remain'd Maſters; and here it was the Duke of Berwick was taken Priſoner by Brigadier Churchil his Unkle. This ill Succeſs did not diſcourage the French from attacking the left Wing of the Allies at Neer-Landen, a Poſt, which tho' not weak in itſelf, yet being attack'd with great Diſproportion of Forces, the Confederate Troops were very hard put to it. However, they were ſo animated by the King's great Example and Royal Preſence, that after two Hours Diſpute, the French were entirely beaten off.

Thus far the inferiour Number of the Army of the Allies maintain'd their Ground againſt the ſuperior of the French, and Victory was on the ſide of the King; but now the Duke of Luxemburgh had Recourſe to his wonted Advantage in War, and order'd freſh Brigades to attack the Village of Neer-Winden. The Prince of Conti commanded this Reinforcement of freſh Men, the beſt Troops in the French Army, with which he charg'd the Confederates ſo vigorouſly, that the latter, being already ſpent by the former Engagement, were ſoon oblig'd to yield that Paſs to the Enemy; and Luxemburgh ad-

A.D.1693 advanc'd to obſerve the Paſſages that led to the Confederates Camp, for his Horſe to march in. As the Mareſchal de Villeroy was marching with a ſtrong Body of Horſe this way, the Count de Arco, General of the Bavarian Cuiraſſiers, charg'd them with ſo much Vigour, that he drove them back quite within their Foot, and here the Duke de Chartres narrowly eſcap'd being made Priſoner. The Elector of Bavaria made an Attempt to regain the Poſt of Neer-Winden; but Luxemburgh pour'd in upon him ſo many freſh Squadrons and Battalions, that his Men were quite tir'd out, and oblig'd again to abandon it. The Dutch and Scotch Guards having ſpent their Ammunition by their continual Fire, the King, who had left Neer-Landen on the Enemies ſecond Attempt upon Neer-Winden, twice led the Engliſh Battalions to the Charge up to the right of the Retrenchment, now flank'd and under the Enemy's Command, where they fought with great Bravery. In the mean time, Luxemburgh, who had found a more convenient Paſſage for the Horſe, between the Poſts of the King's, and Zurbeck's Brigades, came himſelf with the Prince of Conti, and Count de Marſin, into the Plain of the Confederates Camp, at the Head of the Carabineers and other Regiments, while the Mareſchal de Joyeuſe paſs'd between Neer-Winden and Lare. The Prince of Conti being join'd by the French Guards, fell upon the Hanover Horſe, and broke them. Part of the Enemy's ſecond Line of Horſe, and the Reſerve, enter'd upon the left along the Hedges of Lare; and the Marquis de Harcourt, who had been ſent for from Huy, arriving with twenty Squadrons, caus'd his Dragoons to alight and drive the Confederate Foot out of the Village. The Mareſchal de Villeroy came in on the right, of the Retrenchment, which Place the Engliſh Foot diſputed with undaunted Reſolution; and it was amazing, that after all thoſe Advantages gain'd by the French, the Confederate Camp being laid open to them, there had not been a Maſſacre of thoſe Troops: but the incredible Reſiſtance they made, gave a Check every where to the Fury of the Enemy, who having at laſt overpowered the Engliſh, remain'd Maſter of that part of the Retrenchment which they level'd to make room for a Body of Horſe to come, after the Hanover Horſe had been broken. The reſt of the Confederate right Wing of Horſe being cut off from the Body of Foot, was ſoon overthrown, being charg'd in Front and Flank. The Elector of Bavaria finding it impoſſible to reſiſt the Multitudes of the Enemies Forces, that came down upon the Confederates, retreated with great Difficulty over the Bridge, and rally'd on the other ſide as many of the ſcatter'd Horſe and Foot, as could get over, to favour the Retreat of thoſe that were ready to paſs. His Majeſty did what could be done to remedy this Diſorder, riding to the left to bring up the Engliſh Horſe, for the Relief of the right Wing; but the Enemy had now got another Body of Horſe in the Confederate Camp, commanded by the Duke d'Elbeuf. At the ſame time, the Duke de Montmorency, Luxemburgh's Son, fell upon the right Flank of the Dutch Horſe, and put them in Diſorder, before the Engliſh Horſe, which were led on by the King, could come up and form their Squadrons; ſo they were forc'd to charge the French in the ſame Order they rid up to them, and moſt of them had rid as faſt as their Horſes could gallop; but that did not hinder them from doing extraordinary Service. The King himſelf charg'd at the Head of the Earl of Galway's Regiment, which diſtinguiſh'd it ſelf very much on this Occaſion; and perhaps the Enemies to the Conſtitution did not forget it, when they perſecuted that Earl, the Colonel, in the Harleian Miniſtry. Colonel Wyndham, at the Head of his Regiment, charg'd ſeveral times through and through the Enemies Squadrons; Colonel Langſton was made Priſoner: And the Duke of Ormond, then in the true Engliſh Intereſt, having charg'd at the Head of Lumley's Regiment, receiv'd ſeveral Wounds, had his Horſe ſhot under him, and was reſcu'd by one of the French King's Guards, from the Hands of a Villain, who was offering to ſtab him: the Duke well rewarded the Life-Guard-Man, and maintain'd him both in England and France.

A.D.1693 Duke of Ormond wounded and taken.

The King finding the Battle was over on his ſide, order'd the Infantry to retreat to Dormal, on the Brook of Beek, which Poſt had hitherto been kept by the Dragoons of the left Wing, who had nothing to do this Day; and finding the Enemies were ſurrounding him on all ſides, he order'd the Regiments of Wyndham, Lumley, and Galway to cover his Retreat over the Bridge at Neerhaſpen, which he gain'd with no ſmall Difficulty. There were nothing now but Confuſion and Diſorder in the Confederates Camp, all thoſe that could not get the Paſſes for the Retreat, being preſs'd by the Enemy, were forc'd to fling themſelves into the River, where abundance were drown'd, and the Earl of Athlone narrowly eſcap'd it. Lieutenant-General Talmaſh brought off the Engliſh Foot with equal Prudence, Bravery, and Succeſs; but ſome of the Engliſh Life-Guards, the firſt Troop, were ſo ſcar'd with the Fury of a purſuing Enemy, that they did not think themſelves ſecure till they reach'd Breda. Sixty Pieces of Cannon, and nine Mortars, were loſt; but all the Baggage had been ſent to Lewe the Night before. As for the loſs of Men, the Confederates own'd but 6000 kill'd, wounded, or taken Priſoners; and the French confeſs'd they had above 2000 Officers kill'd or wounded: if their loſs of private Soldiers was in proportion to that of the Officers, there muſt have been many more than 6000 kill'd and wounded; ſome made them 18000; and the French pretended, the Confederates had 20000 kill'd, wounded, and taken Priſoners: Abate half on both ſides, and probably 10000 of the Confederates, and 9000 of the French, may be pretty near the Truth; for the Confederates loſs was little, and the French loſs very great, 'till after the levelling the Retrenchment: and Luxemburg's not purſuing his Victory, but ſuffering the King to get in all his Detachments, and encreaſe his Army to a greater Number than before the Battle, ſhews, he had nothing to boaſt of, but the Field, the Cannon, and Mortars.

The Loſs on both ſides.

In the Painting of this Battle, as imperfect and unartful as it is, it will be ſeen that his Majeſty is the foremoſt Figure in the Picture; that he is every where acting the different Parts of a General, and of a private Soldier; that he was in the midſt of the moſt imminent Dangers, he having eſcaped three Musket-Shots, one thro' his Peruke, which deafen'd him for a Time; one thro' the Sleeve of his Coat; and a third, which carry'd off the Knot of his Scarf, and left a ſmall Contuſion on his Side. If Lewis XIV. had ever been in the way of but one of thoſe Shots, his Poets and Orators would certainly have run mad with a Rack of Invention for new Hyperboles to expreſs their Flattery. The Juſtice the Prince of Conti did our King's Character, in what he ſaid of him in a Letter to the Princeſs, is more glorious than all the French Academy were able to ſay in Praiſe of their Immortal Man; I ſaw the King, ſaid the Prince of Conti, expoſing himſelf to the greateſt Dangers, and ſurely ſo much Valour very well deſerves the Poſſeſſion of the Crown he wears. Nay, ſo far did his Majeſty gain the Reſpect and Admiration of his Enemies, that it was a common Saying among them, We want only ſuch a King to make ourſelves Maſters of Chriſtendom

King William thrice in great Danger.

Prais'd by the Prince of Conti.

To repair the loſs of the French in the Battle of Landen, the Marquis de Boufflers brought them a ſtrong Detachment from the Rhine. Another ſtrong Reinforcement came from the Sea-Coaſt. And thus ſtrengthened, the Duke of Luxemburgh ſeven Weeks after the Battle ſat down before Charleroy, which capitulated October 10. In Catalonia the

*A.D.*1693 French found ſo little Reſiſtance, that they took Roſes in ſeven Days; and having a powerful Army on the Rhine, they oblig'd the Prince of Baden, who commanded the Confederate Army there, to keep on the defenſive, and took hold of the Diviſion between the Garriſon and Townſmen of Heidelberg, to make themſelves Maſters of that City, which they burnt, not ſparing the Tombs of the Electors Palatine, tho' the laſt Elector was the Dutcheſs of Orleans's Father. The Maſſacres, Rapes, and Spoil committed by the French in the Palatinate, have juſtly render'd that Nation deteſtable in Germany, and the Story will communicate the ſame Deteſtation to Poſterity. However, it had the magniſicent Appellation of a Conqueſt, and the Dauphin came in Perſon to ſee the horrible Scenes of Slaughter and Devaſtation made by the Troops of France, under the Mareſchal de Lorge, who had been of the ſame Religion with the Palatines, the Marquiſs de Chamilly, the Count de Melac, and other Generals. The Dauphin came afterwards to gather up the Remains of thoſe Laurels, which the Murders and Ravages of his Soldiers had gain'd for their Generals; but all he did, was to put a Garriſon into Stutgard, which being done, he return'd to Verſailles.

The horrid Cruelties of the French in the Palatinate.

The Duke of Savoy's Campaign.

The Duke of Savoy in the beginning of this Campaign was ſo ſtrong, that he not only took the Fort of St. George, and compleated the Blockade of Caſal in Italy; but laid Siege to Pignerol, and took the Fort of St. Bridget, which facilitated the Progreſs of the Siege. The Place was of ſuch Importance, that Monſieur Catinat, who commanded the French Army on that Side, made a Motion as if he had a Deſign on Turin; and the Duke of Savoy having blown up the Fort of St. Bridget, drew off his Army to obſerve him. This was what Catinat wanted, for having receiv'd very great Reinforcements, and being now ſuperior in Number to the Allies, his Purpoſe was to make his Advantage of it, and draw them to a Battle; which was fought in the Plains of Marſaglia. The Duke of Savoy's Troops, in Engliſh Pay, were commanded by the Duke of Schomberg, who being deny'd the Poſt that was due to him, reſolv'd to fight on Foot at the head of his own Regiment like an ordinary Colonel. Theſe Troops were poſted in the main Body, and the Duke was deſir'd by the Conde de las Torres, General of the Spaniſh Forces, to take on him the Command, after the main Body had repuls'd the French twice, and were about to be attack'd again. But the Duke piqu'd at the Uſage he had met with before, ſaid, It was neceſſary firſt to have his Royal Highneſs's Order, and till it come I will bear the Enemies Fire; adding, I find all Things are gone ſo far, that we muſt now either vanquiſh or die. And ſo indeed it happen'd with him; for the French having puſh'd the Confederates every where, the latter were forc'd to quit the Field with the loſs of their Artillery and 8000 Men. The Duke of Schomberg having fought with unparallel'd Valour, receiv'd a mortal Wound in the Thigh, of which he died not many Days after, to the great Regret of all good and gallant Men, for he was of that Number in the moſt eminent Degree.

Is kill'd.

The Hiſtory of this Year's War, between the Allies and the French King, wou'd be mortifying to all Lovers of the Liberties of Europe; if they had not in Memory, the Hiſtories of the Years from 1704 to 1710, when that mighty Conqueror was every where conquer'd; when the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene, made him account for what Advantages he had gain'd by Surprize, Bargains or Numbers, and the Wreaths he had won in the Campaigns before the Ryſwick Peace, dropt from his Brows, and his Temples were laid naked in his Coffin. Whoever has read, as I have, the inſolent, and one may add blaſphemous Panegyricks, on Lewis XIV's Victories this Year and others, will not think theſe Reflections ſevere, but a fair Repriſal in Confederate Story. *A.D.*1693

I remember very well no great good was expected from the change of Admirals, the moſt unaccountable ſtep in Politicks that we have yet met with. To turn out unfortunate Generals, tho' a Turkiſh Maxim, has been known; but to lay aſide a Victorious One, cou'd only proceed from the Counſel of a Faction, never us'd to and always afraid of Victory.

Sir George Rook meets the French Fleet.

The Engliſh and Dutch Fleet was large and ſtrong, and early equipp'd. There was alſo ready to take under their Convoy a Fleet of Merchant-men, conſiſting of about 400 Sail, Engliſh, Dutch, Hamburghers, Danes, &c. bound for the Streights. The Grand Fleet went with them to a certain Latitude, and then Sir George Rook with 23 Men of War, was order'd to poceed to the Streights. He left by the way, the Veſſels bound for Bilboa, Lisbon, St. Ubes and other Ports, under Convoy of two Men of War; and on the 11th of June, being come within 60 Leagues of Cape Vincent, he diſcover'd Part of the French Fleet: upon which, he call'd a Council of War, wherein it was reſolv'd, that the Wind being freſh Weſtwardly, and giving a fair Opportunity to haſten their Paſſage to Cadiz, the Merchants ſhou'd make the beſt of their way. Not long after, Sir George Rook diſcover'd the Enemies whole Fleet; and ſtood off with an eaſy Sail, to give what time he cou'd to the heavy Sailors to work away to the Windward. The Sheerneſs was ſent with Orders to the ſmall Ships that were under Shore, to get in the Night into Faro, St. Lucar and Cadiz. About ſix in the Evening, June 16th, the French Admiral, the Count de Tourville, and Vice-Admiral of the Blue, came up with the Leeward and Sternmoſt of the Confederate Squadron; which were three Dutch Men of War, that fought firſt eleven, and then ſeven French Men of War, but were at laſt forc'd to yield, having made the moſt obſtinate Reſiſtance that ever was known; and the Captains being carry'd on board the French Admiral, he ask'd Capt. Schreyer, one of them, Whether he was a Man or a Devil? but he treated them very civilly. The Dutch Merchant-men made for the Shore, and the Enemy after them, which gave a fair Opportunity to the Windward Ships and thoſe a-head to ſail off; and this tacking after the Dutch, ſav'd moſt of the Fleet. However, the loſs was very conſiderable, for beſides four of the greateſt Smyrna Ships, and one Dutch Man of War, which Monſieur Coetlogon burnt or ſunk at Gibraltar, and ſeven which he took; Monſieur de Tourville and the Count d'Eſtrees, the ſupreme Admirals of France, moſt glorioufly burnt a rich Pinnace, as in Biſhop Kennet's Hiſtory, and an Engliſh Man of War, took 29 Merchant-Ships, and deſtroy'd about 50 more; which Account muſt be corrected, by that which the Count de Forbin, who commanded a French Man of War in this Action, gives us, and we ſhall there find that the French who are ſo apt to magnify their own gains and their Enemies loſſes, make both leſs at this time, than they are made by our own Hiſtorians.

" The King's Fleet, ſays the Count, conſiſting " of 75 Sail, under the command of the Mareſchal " de Tourville, who having been beaten the laſt Year by Admiral Ruſſel, was made a Mareſchal of France, and Admiral Ruſſel who beat him laid aſide; " ſail'd for the Straits of Gibraltar, to meet the " Count d'Eſtrees, who was coming from Pro- " vence with 20 other Ships. We anchor'd in the " Road of Lagos, on the Coaſt of Portugal; I was " commanded to go out for Intelligence, and to " examine ſtrictly what appear'd: ſo that if I per- " ceiv'd a great Number of Ships, I ſhould make " it my Buſineſs to find out whether they were " Merchant-men or Men of War, belonging to " the

A.D.1693 " the Enemy. Three other Captains were de-
" tach'd with me on the ſame Errand, and in a " few Days we ſpy'd a Fleet of above 150 Sail be-
" longing to the Engliſh and Dutch; of which be-
" ing well aſſur'd, we made haſte to join our Fleet,
" and inform'd the Admiral, that the Ships we had
" diſcover'd were Merchant-men, and not Men of " War: upon this News he tack'd about, and ſail-
" ing before the Wind, for what Reaſon I know
" not, he was got above 10 Leagues out of the " way. Next Day our whole Squadron diſcover'd
" the Fleet of Merchant-Ships, which the Admiral
" order'd to be chas'd, but the Enemy took the " Advantage of the Wind, which we loſt the " Night before by our working, and made off, ſo
" that we did them but very little harm. How" ever, we took two of their Men of War of 60
" Guns, and burnt 30 of their Merchant-Ships;
" which were run a-ſhore on the Coaſt of Portu-
" gal. I burnt three of 'em myſelf, and took a
" fourth, and this was all the Loſs they ſuffer'd;
" and certainly 'twas happy for them that they
" 'ſcap'd ſo well, becauſe had it not been for the
" falſe Step I juſt mention'd, their whole Fleet
" muſt have been taken or deſtroy'd."

Moſt of the Merchant-men that were taken or deſtroy'd, were ſuch as belong'd to Neutral Nations; but the four great Turkey Ships that were loſt at Gibraltar, were Engliſh, and of as great Value as all the reſt. Theſe 4 Ships were got into that Bay, as were alſo ſeveral Danes, Dutch, &c. and a Squadron of French Men of War coming before the Place, threw Bombs among them; one of the firſt Bombs fell into one of thoſe Turkey Ships, which ſo terrify'd the Commander of that and the Commanders of the other 3 Engliſh Ships, that they immediately ſunk them; tho' it was thought the French might have ſhot 500 Bombs, and not one more have fal'n into any one of them. Sir George Rook's Conduct was alike Brave and Prudent; he diſpos'd of his Ships to the beſt Advantage, and afterwards made the beſt of his way, with the Men of War and Merchant-men under his Charge to Ireland. This Misfortune lay heavy on the Hearts of the Merchants, and indeed upon the Minds of all the People of England; and therefore at the next meeting of Parliament, the firſt thing they did, was to enquire into the Miſcarriages of the Fleet the laſt Summer, and after Enquiry, the Commons reſolv'd, That there had been a notorious and treacherous Miſmanagement in the Miſcarriage of the Smyrna Fleet; but when the Admirals came in queſtion, the Negative was put upon cenſuring them. Every body excus'd Sir Cloudeſley Shovel, and many thought Sir Ralph Delaval very hearty in the Service, but had not the like Opinion of Admiral Killegrew. It appear'd afterwards, that one Anſelm, a Secretary aboard the Fleet, held Intelligence with Crosby; a Letter from that Conſpirator, dated May 5. 1694. being found upon Search, ſign'd Philips, in which he ſaid, I muſt needs ſee you before I go to France.

Treachery in the Fleet.

There being ſome flying Reports which gave Jealouſies of Concealment in the Examination of the Admirals, the Privy-Council publiſh'd this Order, Oct. 25. Whereas a Report has been rais'd and ſpread by Henry Killegrew Eſq; Sir Ralph Delaval and Sir Cloudeſley Shovel, Admirals of their Majeſties Fleet, that the Right Honourable the Lord Viſcount Falkland, one of the Lords of their Majeſties moſt Honourable Privy-Council, did upon reading a Paper at the Board, ſtifle ſomething that was material to their Juſtification; the Lords of the Council having conſider'd and examin'd into the Matter, are ſatisfied, and do declare, that the Report is falſe and ſcandalous: Although upon Examination it did alſo appear, that ſomething happen'd which might miſlead the Admirals into that Error. And it is order'd in Council, that this be printed in the Gazette. Still the People murmur'd at the Change made in the Command of the Fleet this Year, which had produc'd ſuch ill Effects; nor did thoſe Murmurs ceaſe, till upon his Majeſty's Return, he declar'd in Council, that he had appointed Edward Ruſſel Eſq; to be Admiral. A.D.1693

That there had been Treachery in the Management of our Sea-Affairs and Land-Affairs, was the general Opinion in thoſe Days; and without being Partial I may affirm, 'twas laid to the Charge of the Tories then in Employment. There was a Dialogue publiſh'd at this Time addreſs'd to King William; in which the Whig talks thus to the Tory. State-Tracts, Vol. II. p. 389.

" The want of Intelligence hath been ſuch, that " Matters of the greateſt Conſequence have been " publick in every Coffee-houſe three Days before " they came to the Secretary's Office; particularly, " the loſs of our Merchant-Fleet, and beating our " Army in Flanders: As if, as one ſaid, Secreta- " ries, like Cuckolds, were to know their Diſho- " nour and Misfortunes laſt."

At this time much Notice was taken of great Intimacy between one of the Chief-Officers in the Admiralty, and Mr. Pepys a Favourite of the Abdicated King's and Mr. Ewers of Clapham, both profeſs'd Jacobites; and People ſuſpected, and did not ſtick to ſay, they believ'd Intelligence went that way. Prieſtman one of the Lords of the Admiralty, was one of King James's Sea-Captains, and others in that Commiſſion were as liable to Exception. A Gentleman whom I knew well, had Diſcourſe with Sir John Trenchard Secretary of State, on the Subject of employing thoſe, that had been employ'd by King James in his Illegal Government; and the Secretary ſaid, It was become neceſſary in the preſent Juncture of Affairs, and there was no way to make the King eaſy without it. The Gentleman, who had known Sir John Trenchard in thoſe times when he was proſcrib'd for his Zeal in the Country Intereſt, reply'd, This was not always your Opinion, Sir John. No, ſays Mr. Secretary, but I ſee with other Eyes now. And pray Sir, reply'd the Gentleman, which of your Eyes were better, thoſe you ſaw with ten Years ago, or theſe you ſee with now? The Secretary broke off the Diſcourſe, and the Gentleman his Correſpondence with him.

Whatever was ſaid or written by the true Friends to the Government againſt employing the Enemies to the Revolution, the Counſellors who ſaw with other Eyes, continu'd to keep up a motley Miniſtry; which may be liken'd to nothing more naturally than to Dogs hunting in Couples, the one pulling one way, and the other another; accordingly was the Succeſs of the Chaſe, till other Huntſmen had the Management.

The Earl of Bellomont, and Sir James Hamilton exhibited a Charge in Council againſt the Lord Coningsby and Sir Charles Porter, late Lords Juſtices of Ireland, concerning Male-Adminiſtration in that Kingdom; which not appearing ſo plain as they pretended to make it, the Charge was by her Majeſty's Order diſmiſs'd.

The Expedition in the Weſt-Indies this Year, was far from anſwering the Expence the Publick was at about it; Sir Francis Wheeler was order'd thither with a Squadron of Men of War, having ſome regular Troops on board, which were join'd by Sir Timothy Thornhil's and another Barbadoes Regiment. Col. Codrington Governor of the Leeward-Iſlands brought his Militia, and together with the Voluntiers, they made a Force ſufficient to have driven the French out of their Sugar-Iſlands with good Management. The Engliſh landed on the Iſle of Martinico belonging to the French, and deſtroy'd ſeveral Houſes and Plantations there, but drew off again, not being ſtrong enough or wiſe enough to do any thing but Miſchief; the worſt way of making War, and what generally is too dearly paid for.

Ill Succeſs in the Weſt-Indies.

In the mean time his Majeſty came to the Hague, October 1. and perſuaded the States of Holland to agree to the raiſing of 15000 Men for augmenting their Land-Forces, and alſo to the Addition of a conſiderable Number of Ships to their Navy. For which the King thank'd them in their Publick Aſſembly; and having waited almoſt a Month for a Wind, he embark'd aboard the Mary Yacht, Octob. 28. under Convoy of Admiral Mitchel, and the next Day landed at Harwich, lay at Sir Iſaac Rebow's in Colcheſter, and came the next Night to Kenſington. Three Days after a Proclamation was publiſh'd for a Publick Thankſgiving; and the Lord-Mayor and Court of Aldermen waited on his Majeſty to congratulate his wonderful Preſervation and happy Return. Nor muſt we forget the very Affectionate and Dutiful Addreſs, which the City of London preſented to the Queen, to congratulate her Majeſty on the King's ſafe Deliverance, from the many Dangers with which he was environ'd in the Battle of Landen.

A.D.1693 The King returns to England.

Notwithſtanding the Succeſſes of the French in Flanders, Germany and Savoy this Year; that Court did underhand feel the Pulſe of the Allies towards a Peace. The Secretary Du Pile was diſpatch'd to manage the matter in Holland, and Conditions were offer'd to the Diet at Ratisbon, for the Emperor and Empire. At the ſame time they us'd all Artifices to divide the Allies, and gain over Potentates and States to their Party. At Rome and to the Popiſh Princes, they repreſented this War as a War of Religion, in which they engag'd purely for the Intereſt of King James. They did what they cou'd to promote a Neutrality in Germany, and to prevail with the Sovereigns there to withdraw their Troops, and even to make ſome Motion that ſhou'd give Jealouſy to their Neighbours. They endeavour'd to take Advantage of the Circumſtance of the Ninth Electorate, to oblige the Princes that oppos'd it to continue their Oppoſition, promiſing to ſupport their Pretenſions, if they wou'd make a Diverſion in favour of France. They left nothing untry'd to blind the Duke of Savoy by Advantageous Offers. But thought it was in vain to lay any Snares for the King of England, depending, as there was but too much reaſon to believe, upon getting him off their hands by the Attempts of ſuch Villains as Parker and Grandvale.

The French King offers Conditions of Peace.

The Parliament met at Weſtminſter, Nov. 7. and his Majeſty made this Speech to both Houſes.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I Am always glad to meet you here, and I could heartily wiſh that our Satisfaction were not leſſen'd at preſent by the Diſadvantages we have receiv'd this Year at Land, and the Miſcarriages of our Affairs at Sea. I think it is evident that the former was only occaſioned by the great Number of our Enemies, which exceeded ours in all Places. For what relates to the latter, which has brought ſo great a Diſgrace on the Nation, I have reſented it extremely, and as I will take Care, that thoſe who have not done their Duty, ſhall be puniſh'd, ſo I am reſolved to uſe my utmoſt Endeavours, that our Power at Sea may be rightly manag'd for the future. And it will well deſerve your Conſideration, whether we are not defective both in the Number of our Shipping, and in proper Ports to the Weſtward, for the better annoying our Enemies, and protecting our Trade, which is ſo eſſential to the Welfare of this Kingdom.

King's Speech to the Parliament.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I am very ſenſible of the great Affection wherewith you have always aſſiſted me to ſupport the Charges of the War, which have been very great; and yet I am perſuaded that the Experience of this Summer is ſufficient to convince us all, that to arrive at a good end of it, there will be a neceſſity of increaſing our Forces both by Sea and Land the next Year. Our Allies have reſolv'd to add to theirs; and I will not doubt but you will have ſuch regard to the preſent Exigencies, as that you will give me a ſuitable Supply to enable me to do the like. I muſt therefore earneſtly recommend to you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, to take ſuch timely Reſolutions as that your

A.D.1693 " your Supplies may be effectual, and our Prepa-
" rations ſo forward, as will be neceſſary both for
" the Security and the Honour of the Nation."

Supplies delay'd by the Faction.

His Majeſty did thus every Year earneſtly preſs the Commons to expedite the Money-Bills, that the Preparations for the next Year's Service, might be ſo forwarded, as to deprive the French of the Advantages they had hitherto made, of being early in the Field; but there never wanted one Pretence or other from the diſaffected, to delay the Conſultations upon Ways and Means, tho' the Reſolutions for the Supply were timely and large, as in this Seſſions, Nov. 25. the Houſe of Commons voted 2500000 l. for the Navy, and 2535590 l. for the Army, which was encreas'd to 83121 Men. There being an Augmentation of ſix New Regiments of Engliſh Horſe, four New Regiments of Engliſh Dragoons, and fifteen New Regiments of Engliſh Foot. They gave 118000 l. to make good the Annuity Deficiency, and 293692 l. to make good a Deficiency of 300000 l. in the Poll-Bill; ſo that a Tax given for that 300000 l. brought in no more than 6308 l. Thus the Supplies given for the Service of the enſuing Year, amounted to near Five Millions and a half, which were rais'd by Four Shillings in the Pound Land-Tax, by two more Lives in the Annuities, by a further Exciſe on Beer, and a Duty upon Salt.

Two Bills which were brought into the Houſe, the one for frequent Parliaments, which began in the Houſe of Commons; and the other of the ſame Tenour, ſent down from the Lords were both rejected after the third Reading.

1694. In the beginning of next Year, Prince Lewis of Baden arriv'd at Whitehall, from whence he went to Kenſington to wait on his Majeſty, who receiv'd him with great Marks of Eſteem and Reſpect, and concerted with him the Operations for the enſuing Campaign; and in the Intervals of Councils, he entertain'd the Prince, with the Diverſions of Hunting, Hawking and Shooting flying, in which he excell'd.

Prince Lewis of Baden arrives in England.

On the 25*th* of January, his Majeſty gave the Royal Aſſent to the Land-Tax, and other Publick and ſome Private Bills; another Bill lay ready, touching Free and Impartial Proceedings in Parliament, which had been prepar'd the laſt Year, and was now again brought in, and paſt by both Houſes. But his Majeſty thought fit again to refuſe his Aſſent to it; upon which the Commons voted, That whoever advis'd the King not to give his Royal Aſſent to that Act, was an Enemy to their Majeſties and the Kingdom. They alſo preſented a Repreſentation about it to the King, and receiv'd a kind but an evaſive Anſwer, and a Motion was made in the Houſe, That an humble Application be made to his Majeſty for a farther Anſwer, but it paſt in the Negative.

The King refuſes the Royal Aſſent to the Bill for Free and Impartial Proceedings in Parliament.

State-Tracts, Vol. II. p. 336.

Who advis'd it.

By looking a little into the Political-Tracts, publiſh'd at that Juncture, we ſhall find out who the Men were, that advis'd the King to refuſe his Royal Aſſent to that Bill.

" There are another ſort of Men, ſays one of
" thoſe Authors, who enjoy the Powers and Profits
" of the late Revolution, and highly pretend to
" maintain it, that upon the Occaſion of this Bill,
" do ſo pervert the Meaning and Conſtruction of
" our Laws, and aſſert ſuch dangerous Notions, as " really tend to introduce Arbitrary Power and
" Slavery, if they do not unhappily throw the Peo-
" ple on King James.

" Theſe Men make a ſpecious ſhew of their Love
" to the Advancement of the Honour and Great-
" neſs of the Crown, as if they were their Majeſtys
" Principal Friends, tho' in truth they are daily
" undermining their Majeſties Legal Right to the " Crown, by the pernicious Notions of the late
" Reigns, which are contrary to the fundamental
" Maxims of our Government. They commend
" and applaud our King's refuſal of the late Bill,
" and ſome of 'em have been ſo bold as to ſay,
" whether in Love to King William or King James,
" I will not determine; that what the King did
" therein, was the chief thing he has done like a
" King. This was the Talk alſo, when his Majeſty
" refus'd to paſs the Bill for frequent Parliaments,
" which proves to us, that thoſe who had been
" Evil Counſellors to King Charles and King
" James II. cou'd not be good ones to King Wil-
" liam."

The Eaſt-India Company having obtain'd a Charter, by which they were impower'd to raiſe 744000 l. to be added to their general Stock; ſeveral Merchants of London petition'd for a Parliamentary Settlement, and the Houſe of Commons Reſolv'd, Jan. 19. That all the Subjects of England, have equal Right to trade to the Eaſt-Indies, unleſs prohibited by Act of Parliament: which does not ſeem to contain the whole State of the Matter; for if any Company of Men, have by Compact or Charter been at an Immenſe Charge, which was of abſolute Neceſſity to ſettle Commerce in any Part of the World, it is certainly juſt and reaſonable, that they only ſhou'd have the Benefit of that Commerce, till Satisfaction was made them for their Expence and Adventure.

A Miſtake in it.

About the ſame time, Complaint was made to the Houſe of Commons of a Socinian Book, entitl'd, A Dialogue concerning the Deities, and a brief but clear Confutation of the Doctrine of the Trinity. This Blaſphemous and Impudent Pamphlet, had been diſpers'd and enclos'd under Covers to ſeveral Members of Parliament. The Houſe order'd it to be burnt by the Common Hangman, and Enquiry to be made after the Author, Printer and Publiſher, who deſerv'd the Puniſhment the Laws had provided for them; as did alſo thoſe wicked Libellers, calling themſelves High-Church and Univerſity-Men; who endeavour'd to aſperſe the Illuſtrious and Pious Character of Archbiſhop Tillotſon, as favouring Socinianiſm, than whom no Divine had written more learnedly and elegantly againſt it. One of their Libels was entitl'd, Conſiderations on the Explications of the Doctrine of the Trinity, which was fully confuted by the Learned and Pious Dr. Williams, afterwards Biſhop of Chicheſter.

The Earl of Bellomont, not having ſucceeded in his Application to the Queen and Council, preſented Articles of Impeachment of High-Treaſon, againſt the Lord Coningsby and Sir Charles Porter, late Lords-Juſtices of Ireland, to the Houſe of Commons; who having examin'd the Affair, Voted that the Matters charg'd upon them, were not ſufficient ground for ſuch an Impeachment. It was for theſe vexatious Proſecutions, that the Court took Offence againſt the Lord Bellomont, and not for voting in Parliament according to his Conſcience; tho' the voting was pretended, and ſome Whigs who out of Diſguſt join'd with the Tories, gave out that it was ſo particularly in a Libel, publiſh'd by the Party; wherein the Libeller ſpeaks thus falſely and inſolently of his Majeſty. When I ſee him, ſometimes ſolliciting in Perſon in the Houſe of Lords, at others by my Lord Portland, beſides what he does by all his Under-Officers; when I hear he ſends Commands to ſome Lords, and Bribes to others, and turns out of his Place the gallant Lord Bellomont, meerly for giving his Vote in the Houſe of Commons according to his Conſcience, &c. it is Time to look about us. This Author wou'd have us believe he is a Whig, for he is angry with the King for employing thoſe who were his Enemies, when the Debate of the Crown was afoot, and ſuffering his Friends to be nick-nam'd Commonwealth's-Men, which had too much truth in it. I muſt not part with this Author, while he is declaiming on Bribery and Corruption, as our late

State-Tracts, Vol. II. p. 370.

A.D.1694 Grumblers have done, without repeating two or three Lines out of his Diſcourſe: I could name a certain Gentleman, who exactly reſembles Harry Guy, that the laſt Seſſions, when the Houſe was a little out of Humour, diſpos'd of no leſs than 16000 l. in three Days for ſecret Service; which if it was true, gives Reaſon to ſuſpect that this ſame Harry Guy got his own Money unwarrantably, and that thoſe he left it to, have only the Gleanings of Corruption and Bribery.

Harry Guy accus'd of Corruption.

On the 8th of February, the King gave the Royal Aſſent to the Million Lottery-Bill, which was that part of ways and means that was moſt acceptable to the People, and was therefore always reckon'd moſt eaſy, be the Fund what it will, which was to make it good.

The Commiſſioners for Publick Accounts, having laid before the Houſe of Commons, an Account of what Money had been paid for ſecret Services and to Members of Parliament out of the Publick Revenues, it was reſolv'd, February 17, That the Lord Falkland, a Member of that Houſe, by begging and receiving Two Thouſand Pounds from his Majeſty, contrary to the ordinary Method of iſſuing and beſtowing the King's Money, was guilty of a high Miſdemeanour and Breach of Truſt, and that he ſhould be committed to the Tower, during the Pleaſure of the Houſe. He was two Days after diſcharg'd upon Petition. This Gentleman was Knight of the Shire for Oxford in King James's Parliament.

During theſe Tranſactions in Parliament, Captain Bembow, with a Squadron of Men-of-War, bombarded St. Malo four Days together, tho' without much Succeſs, having only deſtroy'd ſome few Houſes, and beat down Part of the Town-Wall, not without ſome loſs; for a Bomb-Ship, aboard which was Captain Silver, Maſter-Gunner at Whitehall, was blown up, ſeveral Men kill'd, and the Captain diſabled in effect, or appearance, for farther Duty at Sea.

Sr. Malo bombarded.

Sir Francis Wheeler, who was appointed Admiral of a Squadron of Men-of-War, to make amends for the laſt Weſt-India Expedition, ſail'd with a Fleet of Merchant-Ships under his Convoy for the Streights, and arriv'd in February at Gibraltar; from whence he ſail'd with a good Wind at N.W. Febr. 17. but ſoon after, there roſe ſuch a violent Storm, with Thunder and Lightning and terrible Rain, that hardly any Man in the Fleet had ever ſeen the like: it continu'd all that Day and the following Night, the Wind blowing at E. and E.N.E. ſo that on Monday the 19th, about five in the Morning, Sir Francis Wheeler's own Ship the Suſſex was foundred, and all her Men, except two Moors, were loſt. Two Days after, the Body of the brave Admiral was found on a Sand-bank near Gibraltar, in his Shirt and Slippers, which gave occaſion to conjecture, that ſeeing himſelf in ſuch imminent Danger, he had ſtripp'd off his Clothes with a Deſign to ſave his Life by ſwimming, a Deſign form'd by Deſpair only, there being no Hope of Safety in ſuch a Storm. To this loſs, we muſt add that of the Cambridge and Lumley-Caſtle, both of them Men-of-War, the Serpent Bomb-Ketch, and the Mary Ketch, together with the Italian Merchant, the Aleppo Factor, the Great George, and the Berkſhire, bound for Turkey with very rich Cargoes of Superfine Cloth; many Bales of which were ſeen floating off the Spaniſh Coaſt; and ſome were recover'd, but ſo damag'd, they were worth little more than the Salvage. The William for Venice, and the Golden Merchant for Leghorn, both Engliſh Ships, alſo periſhed, being driven aſhoar on the Eaſt ſide of Gibraltar. Several young Merchants of good Families, going to ſettle in Turkey, were then drown'd, as Mr. Grove of Wiltſhire, Mr. Hunter, &c. Rear-Admiral Nevil, with two Dutch Men-of-War, had the good Fortune to be blown out of the Streights, and got ſafe into Cadiz, as the reſt of the Fleet did into Gibraltar, to repair the Damages they had ſuſtain'd in the Storm.

Sir Francis Wheeler caſt away.

Great Shipwreck.

A.D.1694

The Enemies to the Government, who rejoic'd in all National Calamities, moſt impiouſly as well as impudently reflected on this ſad Accident, as if God was angry with the Nation for having rejected the Romiſh Tyranny and Idolatry, by rejecting King James; they cry'd, The Elements fight againſt us, as if the Seas and Winds, and Powers of the Prince of the Air, were in Confederacy with Lewis XIV. and James II. If they would needs have Judgments to hang over the Heads of the Nation, why did they not look to the more natural Cauſes, the diſſembling with God and Man, by ſwearing Allegiance to their Majeſties, and at the ſame time Preaching, Praying, and Plotting againſt them? Why did they not fear that the Abuſe of the Lord's Supper in ſo open and ſo general a manner, as an Inlet to Profits and Honours, might be a Provocation which would ſtill have more dreadful Effects?

The Diſaffected turn it into a Judgment.

To repair the Loſs of the Men-of-War in this Storm, his Majeſty caus'd others, that were on the Stocks, to be finiſh'd with extraordinary Diligence.

The King continu'd to oblige the Party, that was very far from obliging him in the Vote of the Vacancy. He was pleas'd to make the Earl of Abingdon Juſtice in Eyre on this ſide Trent, in the room of the Lord Lovelace deceas'd, who had been ſo active in the Beginning of the Revolution, that it brought down the Diſpleaſure of the Oxford Men upon him, which they expreſs'd, in a Lampoon very commonly ſung by them. Mr. Charles Butler, Brother to the Duke of Ormond, was made Lord Butler in England, and Earl of Arran in Ireland: upon the Attainder of the Duke his Brother, he was ſome Years after choſen Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford. Peregrine Bertie, Eſq; was ſworn Vice-Chamberlain to the King, in the room of Sir John Lowther; Sir Samuel Eyre, Serjeant at Law, was made one of the Judges of the King's-Bench, and Sir Henry Gould one of the King's Serjeants; the Duke of St. Albans was ſworn Captain of the Band of Penſioners; and the Lord Viſcount Sidney was appointed Maſter-General of the Ordnance, and Colonel of the firſt Regiment of Foot-Guards, in the place of the late Duke Schomberg. His Majeſty at this time, the latter end of the laſt, and the beginning of this Year, knighted Sir Charles Loyd of Cardiganſhire, Sir John Buckworth of Surrey, and appointed the Lord Galway to command his Forces in Piedmont, and to be his Envoy Extraordinary there. He was alſo pleas'd, March 4. to conſtitute the Earl of Shrewsbury Secretary of State, in the room of the Earl of Nottingham, who had not himſelf been very eaſy in that Office.

Mr. Charles Butler made Earl of Arran.

Honours and Preferments.

I ſhall give the following Piece of Hiſtory in the Words of Biſhop Kennet, to avoid giving more Opportunities than are abſolutely neceſſary for an unjuſt Cenſure of Partiality: "The Oxford Hiſtorian "and Antiquary, Mr. Anthony a Wood, had lately "publiſh'd two uſeful Volumes, entitled, Athenæ "Oxonienſes, an Exact Hiſtory of all the Writers "and Biſhops who have had their Education in the "moſt antient and famous Univerſity of Oxford, "from the Year 1500 to 1690. Wherein he gave "Characters of Men with great freedom, tho' to "the beſt of his own Opinion, and often with great "Truth and Impartiality. Among other things in "the Life of Judge Glynne, he takes notice, That "after the Reſtoration of King Charles II. he was "made his Eldeſt Serjeant at Law, by the corrupt "dealing of the then Lord Chancellor, meaning Edward Earl of Clarendon. It was chiefly for this "Expreſſion, that the preſent Earl, as eldeſt Son "and Heir of the ſaid Chancellor, preferred an Action in the Vice-Chancellor's Court againſt the "Author, for Defamation of his deceas'd Father." I am ſatisfied, if the Ancients, Greeks and Romans, had been capable of admitting ſuch Actions at Law,

A D.1694 we had never ſeen a Word of Claſſical Hiſtory, and 'tis certainly a Refinement of the more barbarous Ages and Nations, on both Romans and Greeks. " The " Iſſue of this Proceſs was a hard Judgment given " againſt the Defendant, which, to be made the " more publick, was put in the Gazette in theſe " Words; Oxford, July 31, 1693. On the 29th " Inſtant, Anthony a Wood was condemn'd in the " Vice-Chancellor's Court of the Univerſity of Oxford, " for having written and publiſh'd, in the ſecond Vo- " lume of his Book, entitled Athenæ Oxonienſes, " divers INFAMOUS Libels againſt the Right Ho- " nourable Edward late Earl of Clarendon, Lord " High-Chancellor of England, and Chancellor of the " ſaid Univerſity, and was therefore baniſh'd the " ſaid Univerſity, until ſuch time as he ſhall ſub- " ſcribe ſuch a publick Recantation, as the Judge of " the Court ſhall approve of, and give Security not to " offend in the like nature for the future; and his " ſaid Book was therefore DECREED to be burnt be- " fore the publick Theatre; and on this Day it was " burnt accordingly, and publick Programma's of his " Expulſion are already affixed in the three uſual " Places.

" This Cenſure was the more grievous to the " blunt Author, becauſe it ſeem'd to come from a " Party of Men, whom he had leaſt diſoblig'd. His " Bitterneſs had been againſt the Diſſenters, which " is in truth downright Brutality; but of all the " zealous Churchmen, he had given Characters with " a ſingular turn of Eſteem and Affection; nay, of " the Jacobites, and even of the Papiſts themſelves, " he had always ſpoke the moſt favourable Things: " and therefore it was really the greater Mortifi- " cation to him, to feel the Storm coming from a " Quarter where he thought he leaſt deſerv'd, " and might leaſt expect it. For the ſame reaſon, " this Correction was ſome Pleaſure to the Presby- " terians, who believed there was a Rebuke due to " him, which they themſelves were not able to pay."

The Biſhop's upbraiding them with Impotence is the more ungenerous, becauſe the ſame Act, which put it out of their Power, turn'd them out of their Livings; and it implies no leſs than that thoſe, who by that Act had the Power, would not do them Juſtice. The Paſſage in A. Wood's Ath. Ox. for which he was condemn'd, ſtands in the ſecond Edition, as it was in the firſt, and is the more for my Purpoſe, becauſe it makes it poſſible that the Earl of Clarendon might be well ſo ſpoken of, as an Hiſtorian, if the Oxford Writer had reaſon to ſpeak of him ſo as a Chancellor. As Sir William Glynne of Oxfordſhire, Son of that Serjeant Glynne, who had been one of Oliver's Lords, was Biſhop Kennet's Patron before he became a Dignitary in the Church, one learns by this Paſſage, that the moſt exact Hiſtorian may regularly enough enlarge a little upon an Incident, wherein the Credit of a Friend is concern'd. I refer to that Prelate's Hiſtory, for an Account of Archbiſhop Sancroft's Death, and the Epitaph on his Tomb.

On the 14th of April, the ſecond Troop of Guards, commanded by the Duke of Ormond, and the Regiment of Horſe-Guards, commanded by the Earl of Portland; together with a fine Train of Artillery; were ſhipp'd off for Flanders: and the 25th of April, his Majeſty gave the Garter, vacant by the Death of the Duke of Hamilton, to the Earl of Shrewsbury, a Lord of ſuch excellent Endowments and Qualities, who had done ſuch great Things for the Revolution, and having been made Secretary of State, laid down his Office, becauſe he would not act with thoſe who had oppos'd it, that it was amazing to find him afterwards give the leaſt Countenance to the Harleian Adminiſtration. His Majeſty continuing ſtill the motley Meaſures, was pleas'd to create the Earl of Mulgrave Marquis of Normanby, and Henry Herbert of Worceſterſhire, Eſq; Lord Herbert of Cherbury; as alſo to appoint the Right Honourable Edward Ruſſel Eſq; Sir John Lowther of Whitehaven, Henry Prieſtman Eſq; Robert Auſten Eſq; Sir Robert Rich, Sir George Rocke, and Sir John Houblon, to be Lords Commiſſioners of the Admiralty; Sir Fleetwood Shepherd to be Gentleman-Uſher of the Black-Rod: and April the 30th, to create Thomas Marquis of Carmarthen, Duke of Leeds; William Earl of Bedford, Duke of Bedford; William Earl of Devonſhire, Duke of Devonſhire; John Earl of Clare, Duke of Newcaſtle; Charles Earl of Shrewsbury, Duke of Shrewsbury; Francis Lord Viſcount Newport, Earl of Bradford, Henry Lord Viſcount Sidney, Earl of Romney. Alſo to appoint Sidney Lord Godolphin, Sir Stephen Fox, Charles Montagu Eſq; Sir William Trumbal, and John Smith Eſq; to be Lords Commiſſioners of the Treaſury. Mr. Montagu was at the ſame time made Chancellor of the Exchequer; and the Marquis of Normanby, and the Lord Viſcount Durſley, Privy-Counſellors.

A D.1694 Honours and Preferments.

Dukes created.

The King clos'd this Seſſion of Parliament, April 25, with the following Speech.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" THE Proofs you have given of your Affec- " tion to me, and the Zeal you have expreſs'd " for the Support of the Government, oblige me " to return you Thanks before I put an end to this " Seſſion; and in particular, to thank you, Gentle- " men of the Houſe of Commons, for the large Sup- " plies you have provided to carry on the War.

" I will endeavour to do my Part, and it is from " the Bleſſing of God we muſt all expect ſuch Suc- " ceſs as may anſwer our Deſires.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" The Poſture of Affairs making it neceſſary for " me to be abſent for ſome time out of this King- " dom, I recommend it to you, that in your ſeveral " Stations, you be careful to preſerve the Publick " Peace."

On the 4th of May, the King and Queen, who had been at Graveſend, for forward for Canterbury; and his Majeſty, two Days after, embark'd for Holland in the Fubs Yacht, under Convoy of eight Dutch Men-of-War. The next Day his Majeſty landed over againſt the Brill in Holland, ſupp'd with Monſ. Reningsburgh, and came about Midnight to the Hague; from whence he went to Loo, to take the Diverſions of that Place, till Matters were ripe for his going to the Army.

The Confederate Fleet was this Year very ſtrong; and it is no wonder we find the French ſkulking in their Ports, or under their Coaſts, to avoid meeting them. At laſt, they got together, and made the beſt of their way to the Mediterranean, where they were to aſſiſt the Land-Forces in the entire Reduction of Catalonia; but Admiral Ruſſel following them into the Streights, hinder'd the Execution of that Project. Before he left the Coaſt, he was inform'd that a Fleet of French Merchant-Men lay in Bertram Bay, bound to the Eaſtward, and ſent Capt. Pickard, who had formerly been Maſter of a Merchant-Man in the Barbadoes Trade, and the Roebuck Fire-Ship, either to take or deſtroy them; which Orders the Captain obey'd ſo ſucceſsfully, that of 55 Sail, he burnt or ſunk 35, and drove the Man-of-War, that was their Convoy, aſhore, where ſhe blew up, with her two Sloops of between 10 and 15 Guns.

The Deſign form'd againſt the Harbour of Breſt, was not ſo well executed. On the 5th of June, the Lord Berkley, Admiral of the Blue Squadron, parted from Admiral Ruſſel with 29 Men-of-War of the Line, Engliſh and Dutch, beſides ſmall Frigats, Fire-Ships, Bomb-Ketches, and Tranſport-Ships. On the 7th he came to an Anchor between Camaret and Bertram Bay, tho' continually play'd upon by the Enemies Bombs from Cameret Weſtern Point, from a Caſtle on a high Rock in Bertram

The Deſign againſt Breſt unſucceſsful.

A.D.1694 Bertram Bay; and from two Forts on each ſide of the Iſthmus going into Breſt Road. The ſame Day the Lord Cutts, and the Marquis of Carmarthen in his own Galley, ſtood in a conſiderable way into the Bay, and having taken a good View of it amidſt the Enemy's Fire, they return'd and gave the Lord Berkley an Account of the Poſture of the Bay, and the Situation of the Caſtle, which they found very advantageous to defend the Place againſt any that ſhould attempt to land there: upon which it was thought adviſeable to ſend the Monk, a Sixty-Gun Ship, and the Diameten, a Dutch Ship of equal Force; but the Marquis of Carmarthen, who had view'd the Place, not thinking thoſe two Men-of-War ſufficient to cover the Boats at their Landing, and aſſiſt the Troops by playing upon the French, who were more numerous, and ſupported by fourteen Squadrons of Horſe, all regular Forces, a Council of War was held of Engliſh and Dutch Flags and General Officers, wherein it was reſolv'd, that more Men-of-War ſhould be added to the two former, as the Greenwich of 54 Guns, the Charles Galley of 32, the Shoram of 32, the Darkenſtein of 44, the Weſep of 30, and the Wolfe of 30, all which the Marquis undertook to poſt ſo as to bear with moſt advantage on the Caſtle, and to perform thoſe other Services, for which they were deſign'd. It was a Work of great Difficulty and Danger, for the Monk was no ſooner come within reach of the Enemies Mortars, but they began to throw their Bombs at her from the Point des Filettes, and the Weſtern Point of Cameret Bay; inſomuch, that when ſhe came within Three Quarters of a Mile of the laſt, one of the Bombs happen'd to break juſt over her, and a great Piece of it ſtriking thro' her Poop, and two Decks more, flew out again into the Water near one of the ſtern Poſts, and kill'd two of the Marquis's Marine Company, and wounded a third, who ſtood cloſe by on the Poop.

As ſoon as the Monk was got into the Bay, and come up a-breaſt with the Weſtern Point, they fir'd furiouſly upon her from Cameret Fort, and ſhe being neceſſitated to ſtand with her Stern right upon it; the Shot rak'd her Fore and Aft from thence, and did her a great deal of Miſchief. When all the Ships were got pretty well into the Bay, they were ſurprized with three Batteries more, the good effect of the French Intelligence, and the bad effect of ours; all which Batteries fir'd upon them, and our Men never ſaw them till they felt their Shot. But the Marquiſs, maugre all theſe Difficulties, poſted his eight Ships in ſuch a manner, as to be able to give great Succour to the landing Forces. 'Tis tedious and irkſom to give the Detail of this diſaſtrous Adventure, after one knows, that ſuppoſing there had not been ſo many Difficulties in landing, the Engliſh Forces, after they were landed, were but a handful, in compariſon to the great Detachments of French Horſe and Foot, ready poſted on the Coaſts to receive them.

As ſoon as theſe Men-of-War had dropp'd their Anchors in the Bay, they fir'd inceſſantly upon the Enemy, and forc'd the French to run twice out of Cameret Fort. The Engliſh could ſee from theſe Ships, that the Shoar was all lin'd with French Soldiers, defended by ſtrong Intrenchments againſt any Invader, in all Places where there was any Poſſibility of landing.

In the mean time, General Talmaſh, with a ſmall number of Well-Boats, went aſhore in a confus'd manner; whether out of Deſpair of ſucceeding, or an Opinion that he was ſacrificed to Envy, or the Hurry they were all in, cannot be determin'd. He landed under a little Rock on the South Side of a ſmall Bay; but not in that regular manner which was propos'd by my Lord Cutts, and had been agreed on. The French fell with the utmoſt Fury upon the Engliſh, and with their Batteries and ſmall Arms, quickly drove them back again with conſiderable Loſs, eſpecially of thoſe Men that were in the Boats and ſmall Veſſels, which upon the Tide of Ebb ſtuck faſt, and could not get off, and a great many were kill'd in them. But the Signal being given to bring off the Ships, which had all their Rigging cut to pieces, and moſt of their Sails and Yards diſabled, the Marquis of Camarthen, with incredible Labour and Hazard, brought them off all, except the Weſep, a ſmall Dutch Man-of-War, which he found with 12 Foot Water in her Hold, and all the Men kill'd, that were left with the Lieutenant, but himſelf, the Drummer, and one Man more. The Shoram was not ſo much damaged as the other Ships, and got the more eaſily out of Danger; but the Monk and Charles Galley were miſerably ſhatter'd. There were 400 Men kill'd aboard the Engliſh and Dutch Ships, and about 700 of the Land-Forces kill'd, wounded, or taken. The brave General Talmaſh was mortally wounded; and being convey'd to Plymouth, died there a few Days after. It is certain he believ'd himſelf betray'd. His laſt Words were very remarkable, and prove, beyond all Queſtion, the Correſpondence the French had with ſome of King William's Council; I die contented, ſaid he, having done my Duty in the Service of a good Prince; but I am very ſorry the Government is betray'd. He knew who were the Traytors, and nam'd them to a Perſon, who ſtood at his Bedſide, that he might diſcover them to Queen Mary, in his Majeſty's Abſence, that ſhe might be on her guard againſt thoſe pernicious Counſellors, who had retarded the Deſcent, and by that means given France Time, ſo to fortify Breſt, as to render all Approaches to it impracticable. I would not be thought too credulous, and therefore confirm what I have ſaid by what Biſhop Kennet ſays, Lieutenant-General Talmaſh fell a Sacrifice to this deſperate Attempt, and therefore, as ſome pretend, was deſtin'd to that Fall by the Envy of ſome of his pretended Friends. This is certain, that the French had Time to provide themſelves againſt a Deſign, that was become a Town-Talk in London, ſome Months before it was put in Execution.

General Talmaſh kill'd.

His dying Words prove that the Government was betray'd.

To revenge the Affront we receiv'd at Breſt, the Lord Berkley had Orders to bombard the Sea-Port Towns of France; and coming before Diep in Normandy, the 12th of July, he threw 1100 Bombs and Carcaſſes into the Town, which ſet it on fire in ſeveral Places. The Townſmen, who were in the moſt terrible Conſternation, deſpairing to quench the Flames, began to run away in Confuſion, which made the Marquiſs de Bearen ſend two Battalions of the Militia of Bretagne to encourage and aſſiſt them. But the Diſorders were ſo great, and the Fire ſo raging, that the Militia fled with the reſt of the People, and had the Confederates known what had paſs'd, they might, in all probability, have poſſeſs'd themſelves of the Place, which in ſuch caſe would not have been long tenable againſt the French Armies, that would have been ſent to diſlodge them. There was a Circumſtance in this Bombardment, which very much diminiſhes the Satisfaction an Engliſhman might out of Reſentment take in it; which is, that the Inhabitants were for the moſt part converted Proteſtants, or new Converts, that were not the worſt Enemies the Engliſh Nation and Religion had in France. This City was almoſt entirely reduced to Aſhes; and what Houſes were left, ſo much ſhatter'd, that the Ruin may be reckon'd general. From Diep, the Lord Berkley ſail'd to Havre de Grace, where, on the 16th of July, about Three o'Clock in the Afternoon, the Confederate Squadron approach'd the Town, under the Direction of Captain Bembow, began to throw their Bombs an Hour after, and it continu'd till next Moning, when, the Wind blowing hard, they gave over Shooting. Tho' this Place was not ſo utterly ruin'd as Diep was, yet a great part of it was burnt, and ſo conſiderable Damage done to it, that the Marks of it remain to this Day.

Diep bombarded.

Reflections

A.D.1694 Reflections were made on theſe Bombardments, as Acts of Cruelty and Deſtruction to the French, without any Advantage to the Confederates. But thoſe Wiſeheads that made them, did not conſider that the Deſign was anſwer'd otherwiſe, by making a Diverſion for great Detachments of Regular Troops, which were ſent to the Coaſts of France, and would elſe have been ſent to Flanders. Beſides the vaſt Charge it put the Enemy to, in keeping their Militia out along the Coaſts, from Normandy, even to the Borders of Spain; for the Duke de Grammont, Governor of Bayonne, erected a great many Batteries, and crouded the Coaſts with Seamen and Militia, for fear of an Inſult from the Confederate Squadron.

All this while and ſome time after, Admiral Ruſſel with our Grand Fleet rode triumphant in the Mediterranean, and coop'd up the French Fleet in the Harbour of Thoulon. What a ſecret Mortification muſt it be to the Invincible Lewis, as his Panegyriſts always ſtil'd him; to know that the Engliſh Fleet was not only Maſter of the Narrow Seas their own Dominion, but alſo of his pretended Empire the Mediterranean-Sea; and that he who had threaten'd the World with an Univerſal Monarchy, cou'd no more defend his own Port-Towns, but was forc'd to abandon his Subjects to the Fury of a juſtly enrag'd Enemy?

Admiral Ruſſel Triumphant in the Mediterranean.

The Mareſchal de Tourville once adventur'd out to Sea with a Deſign to ſlip by Admiral Ruſſel, who ſhew'd he underſtood how to watch him, as well as to beat him; and Tourville perceiving it, got into his Port again. The Maritime Power and Fame of England were never ſo glorious and formidable in that Sea, the Mediterranean, as at this time; which kept all the Italian Princes in awe, and the cautious Venetians began now to think of ſending a ſolemn Embaſſy into England, to court the Friendſhip of his Britannick Majeſty.

King William having put himſelf at the head of the Confederate Army in Flanders, form'd a Camp at Mount St. Andrew, of 31800 Horſe and Dragoons, the beſt mounted and order'd that ever had been ſeen in the Field, and 51000 Foot; whence we may preſage that we ſhall find the French entrench'd every where up to the Chin. The Confederates had alſo a Body of 7000 Men, under the Command of Count Thyan, near Ghent. The Enemy was not much Inferior in Number, and the Dauphin had the Command; but the Laurels he had been us'd to be ſent to gather, were not ripe enough for his Purpoſe this Campaign. His Majeſty did all he cou'd to bring this younger Invincible to a Battle, but he kept cloſe in his Camp under the Walls of Huy, till he was reduc'd to great Streights. The King made a ſhew of attacking him more than once, and the Duke of Luxemburgh being at one time more particularly apprehenſive of it; it was reported that he went in great haſte to the Dauphin, and not only told him of it, but expoſtulated with him, that he prepar'd not for an Engagement in ſo dangerous a Conjuncture. The Dauphin, who had had a Bookiſh Education, having then Cæſar's Commentaries in his Hand, ſaid, He had been reading for it, and conſidering how it ſhou'd be done; but how he cou'd be inſtructed by it in our Modern way of Fighting, is, as a certain Author phraſes it, paſt all Modern Underſtanding.

The Dauphin avoids King William.

The two Armies remain'd in their ſeveral Camps, as if upon a Trial of Skill, which cou'd keep there longeſt. The Dauphin declar'd his Orders were not to ſtir from his Camp at Vignamont, as long as the King remain'd at St. Andrew; but the Streights he was reduc'd to, oblig'd him at laſt to decamp: and tho' he thought to have conceal'd his Deſign, by ſending out ſeveral ſmall Bodies of Horſe under Pretence of Foraging, to reinforce the Marquis de Harcourt's Body on the other ſide of the Maeſe, who was to ſeize the advantageous Poſt of Pieton, and by that Means to get before the Confederates; yet the King of England, aware of his Intention, decamp'd before him on the 8th of Auguſt, and ſoon gain'd the Poſt of Pieton, where there was not Forage for above four Days; and being inform'd of the Enemy's March, he mov'd towards Niville, thence to Leſſines; having before ſent Orders for baking Bread at Ghent and Aeth. On the 12th, the Army was poſted at Chievre, from whence that Evening a numerous Detachment of Horſe and Foot, with ſome Pieces of Cannon, march'd to poſſeſs themſelves of a Poſt on the Scheld, and were on the 14th follow'd by the Army, in order to paſs the River at Pont-Eſperies. But tho' the Confederates made great Diligence to get thither, yet the French made more to prevent them. For the Elector of Bavaria on the 15th, having advanc'd towards Pont d'Eſchauffe, deſigning to force the Paſſage of that River; he found 30000 French ſo ſtrongly entrench'd on the other ſide, that he did not think fit to attack them. The haſty March of the Enemy to gain that Poſt, coſt them more Men and Horſes than ſome of their Battles, by their own Accounts of them. But that Loſs was inconſiderable in compariſon to the Advantage they made by it, for it hinder'd the Allies from penetrating into French Flanders, which had it been effected, would have thrown even the Court of France into a Conſternation, and have put an end to that War.

A.D.1694

The French King's Letter to his Army.

The French King was ſo ſenſible of it, that he wrote a Letter, which he order'd to be read at the head of the Army; wherein he return'd Thanks in the firſt place to the Princes of the Blood, next to the Mareſchal de Luxemburgh, as having a principal ſhare in the Conduct, then to the reſt of the Mareſchals of France, and all the General Officers, and laſtly to all the French and Swiſs Infantry, Regiment by Regiment; acknowledging how much he was beholden to their Zeal and incredible Diligence, for the Preſervation of their Country, Lives, and moſt important Places on the Sea-Coaſt; aſſuring them, he would on all Occaſions ſhew how ſenſible he was of their Affection, and deſiring the continuance of it. One may perceive the Old Monarch was in a mortal Fright, and 'tis to be queſtion'd, whether he got clear of it, till he had ſecur'd himſelf by the Ryſwick Peace. The French Army being deeply intrench'd near Courtray, they ſent numerous Detachments to cover Ypre, Menin, Berg St. Winox, and Dunkirk; and the King of England finding it impracticable to attempt any thing on that ſide, took hold of that Opportunity to diſpoſſeſs the Enemy of the Town and Caſtle of Huy. In purſuance of this Deſign, Prince Tſerclaes de Tilly paſt the Maeſe and inveſted the Place, with all the Horſe and Dragoons of the Biſhop of Liege, a Party of Brandenburgh Horſe, and ſome Battalions of Foot: The next Day arriv'd 16 Regiments of Foot, under the Command of the Duke of Holſtein-Ploen, whom the King had appointed to Command the Siege. The Place was no ſooner inveſted on both Sides the Maeſe, but the Town ſurrender'd to the Confederates; and by the 19th of Sept. the Batteries were rais'd againſt the Caſtle. The ſame Day, the Artillery conſiſting of 60 Pieces of Cannon and 30 Mortars came up; and the French made a Sally on Major-General Cohorn's Quarters, but they were beaten back with loſs, and the Works carry'd on vigorouſly till the 21ſt at Night, when the Beſiegers open'd their Trenches and carry'd them on ſucceſsfully, till the 24th in the Morning; when a Brandenburgh Serjeant, of the Regiment of Anhalt, mounted the Counterſcarp of Fort Piccard, at the head of 15 Soldiers only, and kill'd the few French that were there, threw a handful of Granadoes into the Water, and took away a Barrel of Powder and ſome Arms, which they brought into the Camp. The Duke of Holſtein-Ploen was a Witneſs of this bold and fortunate

The Valour of a Brandenburgh Serjeant.

A.D.1694 Action; and the other Generals were ſo pleas'd with it, that they prevail'd with the Brandenburgh General to write to the Elector, to deſire him to beſtow a Captain's Commiſſion on the Serjeant.

The Beſiegers continu'd firing on the Caſtle and the two Forts; both which laſt were taken by 700 Brandenburghers Sword in Hand. They in the heat of Action put 150 French to Death, and gave Quarter to 70 others, who were moſt of them wounded; themſelves loſing 20 Men only. The Beſieg'd diſcourag'd by the loſs of the two Forts, and finding all things ready for a general Aſſault, beat a Parley the 27th, and ſurrender'd on Articles, by which the Garriſon was to be conducted to Namur; and by this Conqueſt the French were totally expell'd the Biſhoprick of Liege, Dinant being then reckon'd Part of France.

The Freach King's Offers of Peace.

It was ſome time this Year, that the French King renew'd his Attempts to divide the Allies by theſe plauſible Offers of Peace.

France was then in Poſſeſſion of Friburg and Philipsburg, yet ſhe offer'd to part with both as an Equivalent for Strasburg; as alſo to reſtore Mont-Royal and Traarbach, in conſideration of her keeping Strasburg.

France offer'd to reſtore the Dutchy of Loraine, in as ample Manner, as it was afterwards reſtor'd by the Treaty of Ryſwick.

She offer'd to reſtore all the Places taken from the Elector Palatine, and to renounce the Pretenſions of the Dutcheſs of Orleans; an Article ſhe wou'd not conſent to at the Ryſwick Treaty.

She propos'd in this Scheme, to renounce all Pretenſions to the Netherlands, in favour of the Elector of Bavaria.

She offer'd alſo to renounce the Succeſſion to the Kingdom of Spain; to reſtore all ſhe had taken on the ſide of Catalonia, and Mons, Namur and Charleroy, to the King of Spain.

As to England and Holland, France offer'd to acknowledge King William, and to renew and enlarge the Treaties of Commerce between both Nations and her.

To tempt the King of Sweden to ſet this Negotiation a-foot, the Dutchy of Deux-Ponts wast o be reſtor'd to him.

Let us ſee what an Hiſtorian, to whom I am too nearly related to name him, wrote on this Subject 20 Years ago.

" What cou'd induce this haughty Monarch,
" when his Fortune was at the Height, to ſue for
" a Peace, and on as advantageous Terms to the " Allies, as any he has ſince made? I take it to " be nothing but the Reſolution of King William,
" his unalterable Firmneſs to the Cauſe of the Con-
" federacy, and the French King's Deſpair of di-
" viding the Allies; who had ſo warlike and ſo ſtea-
" dy a Prince at their Head, ſurrounded by Mini-
" ſters, who hated France with a Hatred becoming
" the Lovers of their Country, and were Friends
" to the Dutch, out of a Principle which will al-
" ways gain them the Friendſhip of true Britons;
" that our Intereſts are inſeparable. This certain-
" ly was the ground of the French King's Compli-
" ances, this made him afraid of his Fortune, which " might eaſily be conquer'd by the ſteadineſs of ſuch
" a Prince as King William; and this humbled him
" ſo far, as to put him upon courting a Peace in
" Private, while in Publick he had nothing in his " Mouth but Victory and the Glory of his Arms.
" The King of England's Wiſdom in rejecting of " theſe Offers was bleſt with Succeſs the next
" Year, &c."

Reaſons for it.

While his Majeſty was abroad, the Queen was pleas'd to command that Thomas Earl of Stamford, and Charles Montague Eſq; be ſworn Privy-Counſellors. The Elector of Brandenburgh, the Duke of Brunſwick and Lunenburgh, and the Duke of Shrewsbury, were inſtall'd Knights of the Garter, June 5. Mention has been made of that harden'd Villain and Aſſaſſin Parker, one of King James's Colonels, in our Account of the Lancaſhire Plot, for which he had been ſeiz'd and impriſon'd. He knew ſo much of the Helliſh Deſigns of the Conſpirators againſt the King and Government, that they and their Abettors were very buſy in their Endeavours to get him out of Priſon ſome how or other, being juſtly apprehenſive he wou'd be hang'd if he could not make his Eſcape; and they look'd upon him as the moſt daring and deſperate, as well as active and bloody of all their Agents. While he was in the Tower, a Perſon came to him and told him, he brought him Liberty, but he muſt have 200 l. Parker reply'd, you ſhall have 300 l. as he told Goodman, and accordingly he had it; and by this Fellow's means, he got out of the Tower in the Night, and from thence to France. There was a Proclamation for diſcovering and apprehending him, with the poor Reward of 400 l. but nothing came of it. A.D 1694

Parker the Aſſaſſin makes his Eſcape.

The King embark'd on the William and Mary Yacht in the Maeſe, Nov. 8th, being attended by a Squadron of Men of-War, under the Command of the Marquiſs of Carmarthen; he arriv'd the next Day at Margate, lay that Night at Canterbury, and was met by the Queen at Rocheſter. The next Day, their Majeſties came not to Kenſington till between eleven and twelve a-Clock at Night. As they paſt thro' the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, Illuminations, Bonfires, Ringing of Bells, and the continual Acclamations of the People, ſhew'd an Univerſal Joy for his Majeſty's ſafe Return. The Heads of the meaner ſort of People, had not been turn'd with the Whim of the Church's being in Danger. The Non-ſwearing and Falſe-ſwearing Prieſthood, tho' few in Number, and ſcandalous in Character, had indeed ſown Seeds of Sedition in their Conventicles and Cabals, in Sermons and Libels; but there was little Appearance of its producing ſuch a Harveſt as it did, in the beginning and end of the next Reign. Two Days after his Majeſty's Return, the Parliament met at Weſtminſter, and the King made this Speech to both Houſes.

The King returns to England.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The King's Speech to the Parliament.

" I Am glad to meet you here, when I can ſay
" our Affairs are in a better Poſture both by " Sea and Land, than when we parted laſt. The " Enemy has not been in a Condition to oppoſe
" our Fleet in theſe Seas, and our ſending ſo great
" a Force into the Mediterranean, has diſappoint-
" ed their Deſigns, and leaves us a Proſpect of " further Succeſs.

" With reſpect to the War by Land, I think I
" may ſay, that this Year a ſtop has been put to
" the Progreſs of the French Arms.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" I have had ſo much Experience of your good
" Affection to me, and of your Zeal for the Pub-
" lick, that I cannot doubt of your Aſſiſtance at
" this time; I do therefore earneſtly recommend
" to you, to provide ſuch Supplies as may enable
" me to proſecute the War with Vigour, which is
" the only Means to procure Peace to Chriſten-
" dom, with the Safety and Honour of England.

" I muſt likewiſe put you in mind that the Act
" of Tonnage and Poundage expires at Chriſtmas;
" and I hope you will think fit to continue that Re-
" venue to the Crown: which is the more neceſ-
" ſary at this time, in regard ſeveral Branches of " the Revenue are under great Anticipations, for
" extraordinary Expences of the War, and ſubject
" to many Demands upon other Accounts.

" I cannot but mention to you again, the Debt
" for the Tranſport-Ships, employ'd in the redu-
" cing of Ireland, which is a Caſe of Compaſſion,
" and deſerves Relief.

My

A.D.1694 My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I ſhould be glad you would take into your " Conſideration the preparing ſome good Bill for " the Encouragement of our Seamen. You can- " not but be ſenſible how much a Law of this Na- " ture would tend to the Advancement of Trade, " and of the Naval Strength of the Kingdom, " which is our great Intereſt, and ought to be our " principal Care."

The firſt thing the Houſe of Commons went upon, was the reviving the Bill, for the frequent Meeting and Calling of Parliaments. Mr. Robert Harley, who by his living in the Temple, I took to have been bred a Lawyer, was order'd to bring it in. He was Member for the Town of Radnor, and of a Family diſtinguiſh'd by Puritan and Preſbyterian Principles and Practices. The Tenour of this Bill was what was then underſtood to be Whiggiſh, but when ſuch Men as Muſgrave, Packington, Bolles and Gwin, &c. were for it, we may aſſure ourſelves, there was at that time nothing of Whig in the Intention of it. For theſe very Members, who had been of King Charles's II. Long-Parliament, and wou'd in thoſe Days, as ſoon have paſt a Bill for a Commonwealth as for a Triennal Parliament, were now earneſt for this, in hopes of dividing the Intereſt they hated; and thereby leſſening that of the Court, or rather of King William, which of courſe encreas'd that of King James. With theſe Men fell in all thoſe that had met with Diſappointments in their Political Views; and Mr. Robert Harley was generally ſaid, and generally believ'd to be one of thoſe: and his Example is a Leſſon to all ſuch as lie under Temptation to leave, ever ſo little, the ways of Truth, or which they believ'd to be Truth. For Mr. Robert Harley did little think at firſt, that from joining with the Tories, where they join'd with the Whigs, he ſhould come alſo to join with them, where they join'd with the Papiſts; as was every ſtep he took towards a Change of the Miniſtry in Queen Anne's Reign, and a ſcandalous and ruinous Breach of the Confederacy againſt France. This Bill for frequent Parliaments paſt both Houſes, and had the Royal Aſſent.

Mr. Robert Harley's Puritan Origin.

The Commons went chearfully on the Supply, and having examin'd the Eſtimates for the next Year's Service for the War; the Accounts of the Monies paid to the Fleet, to the Army, to the Allies, and for Forrage, and enquir'd into the Quota's the Confederates were ſeverally to furniſh, they voted 2382712 l. for the Navy.

2382000 l. for the Army.

To be rais'd by

Four Shillings in the Pound Land-Tax, and other Subſidies. They continu'd the Duties of Tonnage and Poundage five Years longer; and his Majeſty paſt that Bill, and the Triennial Bill, at the ſame time, December 22.

" The ſame Day, ſays Biſhop Kennet, one Dyer a very " Impudent Writer of New-Letters was juſtly re- " primanded by the Speaker, for preſuming to repre- " ſent the Proceedings of that Houſe. But ſuch a " gentle Rebuke could not reform a Fellow, who " wrote for two very neceſſitous Cauſes, for the Ja- " cobite Party, and for Bread." But the Lord Mohun rebuk'd him more effectually ſome time after; for finding him out at one of his factious Coffee-houſes, and ſhewing him a Letter wherein his Lordſhip was nam'd, he own'd it, not knowing my Lord; who immediately laid him on with a Cudgel he had provided for that Purpoſe, and made him ſwear to have no more to ſay of the Lord Mohun. It is too great a Start from this ludicrous Incident, to the moſt mournful one in the Engliſh Hiſtory; the Death of that truly moſt Religious and Gracious Princeſs Queen Mary. Let us therefore prepare ourſelves for it, by ſome Account of the Death of that moſt eminent Prelate, Divine and Scholar, Dr. John Tillotſon, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and we will take it from his Funeral-Sermon, preach'd by Biſhop Burnet in the Church of St. Laurence-Jury, where the Archbiſhop had formerly been Preacher, and where he deſir'd to be bury'd.

A.D.1694 Archbiſhop Tillotſon's Death.

" He kept nothing in Reſerve for his laſt Hours; " he was ſtill ready, waiting for them, ſo he could " not be ſurpriz'd, tho' every body elſe was. The " firſt Attacks, of his Sickneſs, came upon him while " he was in that Employment, in which he de- " lighted moſt, at Church, and in the Worſhip of " God. He bore them with the uſual Neglect of " himſelf; and tho' his Countenance ſhew'd he " was ill, he would neither interrupt nor break off " from thoſe Sacred Exerciſes, nor make haſte to " look after his Health. Ah the unhappy neglect of " a Life, that deſerv'd ſo well to be carefully preſerv- " ed! The Fit came on ſlowly, but ſeem'd to be " Fatal: All Symptoms were Melancholy: It ſoon " turn'd to a Dead Palſy. The Oppreſſion was ſo " great, that it became very uneaſy for him to ſpeak; " but it appear'd that his Underſtanding was ſtill " clear though others could not have the Advantage " of it; he only ſaid, I have no Burden on my Conſci- " ence. All Remedies prov'd ineffectual; he ex- " preſs'd no concern to live nor fear to die, but " patiently bore his Burden, till it ſunk him the " fifth Day, and in the 65th Year of his Age, Fri- " day, November 22."

Never was Sorrow for the Death of a Subject more univerſal, and when his Funeral was appointed, never was there a more numerous Train of Coaches fill'd with Perſons of Rank and Condition, who came voluntarily to aſſiſt at that Solemnity from Lambeth, to St. Laurence's Church; where Dr. Burnet, Biſhop of Salisbury, made the moſt moving Sermon I ever heard, and the moſt crouded Auditory I ever ſaw was the moſt affected with it. The Biſhop was interrupted in his Sermon by a ſhort flow of Sighs and Tears, which forc'd their way, as was viſible to the Audience; and there was upon it ſuch a general Groan, as ſunk ſo deep into my Heart and Memory, that it is impoſſible it ſhould ever wear out. The Biſhop of Peterborough having in his Hiſtory copy'd the whole of that excellent Sermon, which relates to Archbiſhop Tillotſon's Character, I refer to it. His Majeſty, after the Archbiſhop's Death, never mention'd him but with ſome ſingular Teſtimony of his Eſteem for his Memory. He us'd often to tell his Son-in-Law, James Chadwick Eſq; Member of Parliament for Dover, and one of the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms, I lov'd your Father, I never knew an honeſter Man, and never had a better Friend; as I have already hinted. The Queen was ſenſibly afflicted with the loſs of him, and tho' ſhe did not ſurvive him above a Month; ſhe found a way to reverence his Memory, by ſettling 300 l. a Year Penſion upon his Relict; who by her Lord's Generoſity and Charity, ſays Biſhop Kennet, had the leſs Proviſion made for her; ſo little, that I have been credibly inform'd, the Money which was rais'd by the Sale of the Copy of the Archbiſhop's Sermons, thoſe publiſh'd by Dr. Barker his Grace's Chaplain, amounting to 2500 l. was the greateſt Part of what was left her; and that Money was the largeſt Sum that had till then, if not ſince, been given for any Copy.

The Sale of his Sermons publiſh'd by Dr Barker.

Several Prelates and other Doctors were talk'd of to ſucceed in the Archiepiſcopal See; as Dr. Stillingfleet, Biſhop of Worceſter, but with no more Expectation that he wou'd have it, than Dr. Hall, Biſhop of Briſtol; tho' Biſhop Kennet mentions him ſo ſlightingly, as even the Biſhop of Briſtol was recommended by a great Party. Dr. Burnet Maſter of the Charter-houſe, and Clerk of the Cloſet, was alſo mention'd; and it was ſaid, with ſome Proſpect

A.D.1694 Proſpect of Succeſs, till upon a Repreſentation of certain Biſhops, that ſome of his Writings were too Sceptical, another Divine was pitch'd upon, and made Archbiſhop of Canterbury, with the Approbation of all Men, who wiſh'd well to the Church and Conſtitution of England; as did Dr. Tenniſon, then Biſhop of Lincoln, who was tranſlated to Canterbury, December the 5th.

And on Friday the 21ſt of December, her Majeſty was taken ill at her Royal Palace at Kenſington, and her Diſtemper ſoon appear'd to be the Small-Pox, with incurable Symptoms; the Rumour of which ſtruck ſuch a Damp on the Minds of the People, not excepting ſome even of the Jacobites, that there ſeem'd to be no Concern in them for any thing but the Life of the Queen, who had the help of all the Phyſicians of Eminence in and about Town. But the moſt exquiſite Care and Advice were ineffectual, and her Majeſty fell aſleep in the Lord, Dec 28. leaving the King and the whole Kingdom under inexpreſſible Grief and Affliction; for the rank Jacobites are never to be reckon'd a Part of this Kingdom, otherwiſe than as living in defiance to its Laws, and the Puniſhments that are there provided for them. The Circumſtances of her Majeſty's Departure were thus deliver'd by Archbiſhop Tenniſon in her Funeral-Sermon.

Archbiſhop Tenniſon's Account of Queen Mary's Sickneſs and Death.

" Some few Days before the Feaſt of our Lord's " Nativity, ſhe found herſelf indiſpos'd. I will not ſay, " that of this Affliction ſhe had any formal Preſage, " but yet there was ſomething that look'd like an " immediate Preparation for it. I mean her chuſing to hear read more than once, a little before " it, the laſt Sermon of a good and learned Man, " now with God, upon this Subject, What ſhall " we receive Good from the hand of God, and ſhall " we not receive Evil? This Indiſpoſition ſpeedily " grew up into a dangerous Diſtemper; as ſoon as " that was underſtood, the earlieſt Care of this " Charitable Miſtreſs, was for the removing ſuch " immediate Servants, as might by diſtance be preſerv'd in Health; ſoon after which, ſhe fix'd " the times of Prayer in that Chamber to which " her Sickneſs had confin'd her.

" On that very Day ſhe ſhew'd how ſenſible ſhe " was of Death, and how little ſhe fear'd it. She " requir'd him who officitaed there, to add that " Collect in the Communion of the Sick, in which are " theſe Words, That whenſoever the Soul ſhall depart from the Body, it may be without Spot preſented unto thee. I will, ſaid ſhe, have this Collect " read twice every Day; all have need to be put " in mind of Death, and Princes as much as any body " elſe.

" On Monday the flattering Diſeaſe occaſion'd " ſome Hopes, tho' they were but faint ones. " On the next Day, the Feſtival of Chriſt's Birth, " thoſe Hopes were rais'd into a kind of Aſſurance, " and there was a great Joy ſeen in the Countenances " of all good People; that Joy endur'd but for a " Day, and that Day was clos'd with a very diſmal " Night. The Diſeaſe ſhew'd itſelf in various " Forms, and ſmall Hopes of Life were now left. " Then it was, that he who perform'd the Holy Offices, believ'd himſelf oblig'd to acquaint the good " Queen with the Apprehenſions all had of an unlikelihood at leaſt of her Recovery. She receiv'd " the Tidings with a Courage agreeable to the " Strength of her Faith. Loth ſhe was to terrify " thoſe about her, but for herſelf ſhe ſeem'd neither to fear Death nor to covet Life. It was, " you may imagine, high Satisfaction to hear her " ſay a great many moſt Chriſtian Things, and this " among them; I believe, I ſhall now ſoon die, and I " thank God I have from my Youth learn'd a true " Doctrine, that Repentance is not to be put off to a " Death-bed. That Day ſhe call'd for Prayers a " third time, fearing ſhe had ſlept a little, when " they were the ſecond time read.

" On Thurſday ſhe prepar'd herſelf for the Bleſ- A.D.1694 " ſed Communion, to which ſhe had been no Stran- " ger from the 15th Year of her Age; ſhe was " much concern'd that ſhe found herſelf in ſo dozing a Condition, ſo ſhe expreſs'd herſelf, adding, " Others need pray for me, ſeeing I am ſo little able " to pray for myſelf. However, ſhe ſtirr'd up her " Attention, and pray'd to God for his Aſſiſtance. " And God heard her, for from thence forth to the " end of the Office, ſhe had the perfect Command " of her Underſtanding, and was intent upon the " great Work ſhe was going about; and ſo intent, " that when a ſecond Potion of a certain Draught " was offer'd her, ſhe refus'd it, ſaying, I have but " a little time to live, and I would ſpend it a better " way.

" The Holy Elements being ready, and ſeveral " Biſhops coming to be Communicants, ſhe repeated piouſly and diſtinctly, but with a low " Voice, for ſuch her Weakneſs had then made it, " all the Parts of the Holy Office, which were " proper for her; and receiv'd with all the Signs of " a ſtrong Faith and fervent Devotion, the bleſſed " Pledges of God's Favour, and thank'd him with " a joyful Heart, that ſhe was not deprived " of the Opportunity. She own'd alſo, that God " had been good to her beyond her Expectations, " tho' in a Circumſtance of ſmaller Importance; " ſhe having without any Indecency or Difficulty " taken down that Bread, when it had not been ſo " eaſy for her for ſome time to ſwallow any other.

" That Afternoon ſhe call'd for Prayers ſomewhat " earlier than the appointed time, becauſe ſhe fear'd " that was her Reaſon, that ſhe ſhou'd not long be " ſo well compos'd. And ſo it came to paſs, for " every Minute after this 'twas plain, Death made " nearer and nearer Approaches. However, this " true Chriſtian kept her Mind as fix'd as poſſible " ſhe could upon the beſt things; and there were " read by her Directions, ſeveral Pſalms of David, and alſo a Chapter of a pious Book, concerning Truſt in God. Towards the latter end " of it, her Apprehenſion began to fail, yet not " ſo much, but that ſhe could ſay a Devout Amen " to that Prayer, in which her Pious Soul was recommended to that God who gave it.

" During all this time there appear'd nothing of " Impatience, nothing of Frowardneſs, nothing of " Anger; there was heard nothing of Murmuring, nothing of Impertinence, nothing of Ill-" Sound, and ſcarce a Number of disjointed " Words.

" In all theſe Afflictions the King was greatly afflicted, how ſenſibly, and how becomingly many " ſaw, but few have skill enough to deſcribe it; I " am ſure I have not. At laſt the helps of Art, and " Prayers and Tears not prevailing, a quarter before " One, on Friday Morning, after two or three " ſmall ſtrugglings of Nature, and without ſuch A-" gonies as in ſuch Caſes are common, ſhe fell a-" ſleep."

Whoever thinks this mournful moving Scene, a Digreſſion in the Hiſtory of King William, has other Sentiments of it, than the King had himſelf; who look'd upon the loſs of his Queen as the greateſt of all Loſſes, nay, greater than all that had or cou'd befall him. With what Horror now, will the Reader be told, that this moſt Pious and moſt belov'd Saint and Queen, was follow'd to her Grave with the Curſes of Jacobites; and that one of their Prieſts in the Performance of their Profane and Impious Rites and Worſhip, blaſphem'd her Sacred Memory with this Text, Go now ſee this curſed Woman and bury her, for ſhe is a King's Daughter! Let no body imagine, that the King's and her Enemies were not capable of ſuch deviliſh Rage and Malice. One of the moſt boaſted of their Writers in a Libel, which he call'd, Remarks on ſome late Sermons, meaning thoſe preach'd by Archbiſhop Tillotſon, before

That the Queen was taken ſick and dy'd in that ſame Month, when her Father labour'd under an Unnatural Rebellion, and about that ſame Hour, the Idiot! that he went from Feverſham; and was cut off in the middle of her Days, according to the Puniſhment threaten'd to the Breakers of the Fifth Commandment, &c.

The Coiners of Judgments can never want Metal for their Mint, every Month in the Year and every Day in the Week, will offer them ſomething to adapt to their Dreams. Had her Majeſty dy'd in October, it was the Date of the Prince of Orange's Declaration againſt her Father; if in November, it was the Month in which her Father's Noſe fell a bleeding at Salisbury, which hinder'd his marching farther againſt the Prince of Orange; if in any other Day of the Month of December than the 28th, it wou'd have been diſtinguiſh'd by ſome Diſaſter or other to King James, and might have ſerv'd the turn for a Judgment, as well as that this villainous Libeller made uſe of.

Both Houſes condole the Loſs of the Queen.

Both Houſes of Parliament immediately addreſs'd his Majeſty to condole the great Loſs, and give him Aſſurance of their firm Adherence to his Intereſt. To the Lords who preſented their Addreſs in a Body to his Majeſty at Kenſington, he was pleas'd to ſay in theſe few Words of Sorrow:

The King's Anſwer.

I heartily thank you for your Kindneſs, but much more for the Senſe you ſhew of our great Loſs, which is above what I can expreſs.

To the Commons,

Gentlemen,

I take very kindly your Care of Me and the Publick, eſpecially at this time, when I am able to think of nothing but our great Loſs.

Next Day January 1. the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council, preſented the like loyal and condoling Addreſs to his Majeſty at Kenſington, and receiv'd this gracious Anſwer;

I take your Addreſs kindly, and you are ſure of my Affections.

The London Clergy of the Church of England, always diſtinguiſh'd by their Piety, Learning and Moderation, preſented alſo an Addreſs to the King on this ſorrowful Occaſion. The ſame did the moſt conſiderable Corporations throughout England; all which I don't inſert, to avoid Repetitions on a Subject that cannot give Delight, but by a Sympathetick Sorrow; and if I repeat the Addreſs of the Diſſenting Clergy, it is becauſe 'tis not in the Common Memorials, and was form'd and ſpoken by the Eloquent and Polite Dr. Bates.

May it pleaſe your Majeſty,

The Diſſenting Miniſters Addreſs of Condolance.

" THough we come in the Rear of the Train " of Mourners to pay our tributary Tears, " for the invaluable Loſs, in the Death of your " Royal Conſort, and our moſt gracious Queen; " yet our Reſentments of it are with as tender a " Sympathy, as are in the Breaſts of any of your " Subjects. This gives the ſharpeſt Accents to " our Paſſions, that the Conſiderations which are " moſt proper and powerful to allay our Sorrows, " exaſperate them. For while we remember what " ſhe was, how general and diffuſive a Bleſſing to " three Kingdoms, the ſevere Stroke of Providence " is the more afflicting. Such a Concurrence of " high Perfection ſhin'd in her Perſon and Actions, " that would have made her Illuſtrious in a low " Condition; and in her exalted Station they were " attractive of the Eyes and Admiration of all. A.D. 1694 " Her Mind was above the Temptations that at- " tend the Throne; Majeſty was mix'd with that " condeſcending Humility, that tender and bene- " ficent Goodneſs, that ſhe was eaſily acceſſible to " all for their Relief and Support. Her Piety and " Purity were ſo conſpicuous, her Affections were " ſo compoſed and temperate; that the Court, " which is uſually the Center of Vanity and Vo- " luptuouſneſs, became Virtuous by the Impreſſion " of her Example. Her Converſation was ſo regular, " that her Enemies, if Goodneſs in ſuch a bright " Eminency had any, could not faſten a Taint " upon her. Her Royal Endowments for Govern- " ment, Wiſdom, Magnanimity, Vigilance and " Care in managing Affairs of State, without which " the higheſt Princes are but Civil Idols, uſeleſs " and unprofitable to the World; theſe were in " ſuch a Degree of Excellency, that in your Ma- " jeſty's conſtrain'd Abſence, while you were de- " fending the Intereſt of Chriſtendom, againſt a Po- " tent Enemy abroad, with the Sword of War; " ſhe ſweetly order'd all things at Home with the " Scepter of Peace. She is gone, and muſt return " no more! Oh aſtoniſhing Grief!"

The King weeps.

Here the Royal Tears trickled down the Cheeks of the Great Prince, who ſo often appear'd undaunted in the moſt terrifying Dangers of Battle.

" But it becomes us with humble Submiſſion to " acquieſce in the Divine Diſpoſal. The Will of " God is always directed by infinite Wiſdom, and is " the Rule of Goodneſs. We muſt refreſh our Sor- " rows, with the Hope that ſhe is enter'd into her " Saviour's Joy, whom ſhe imitated and honour'd; " and that ſhe is made happy in the Love of God, " and the Light of his Countenance for ever.

" We humbly beſeech your Majeſty to accept " the renew'd Aſſurances of our inviolable and con- " ſtant Fidelity to your Perſon and Government, " and that we ſhall influence all that are within our " Compaſs, to perſevere in their Duty. We ſhall " earneſtly pray to the bleſſed God to keep you in " the beſt Protection, his encompaſſing Favour, to " ſupport your Spirit with Divine Comforts, and to " continue long your precious Life, ſo neceſſary " for preſerving the pure Religion, and the Civil " Rights of this Kingdom."

Queen Mary's Tenderneſs to Proteſtant Diſſenters.

And truly it muſt be confeſs'd, that the Diſſenters loſt in her Majeſty Queen Mary, a true Friend in the Senſe the Biſhop of Sarum expreſs'd in his Eſſay upon her Memory.

She had an Affection for the Church of England, that was neither blind nor partial. She ſaw what Finiſhings were ſtill wanted, and had dedicated her Thoughts and Endeavours to the conſidering of the beſt Means that might both compleat and ſtabliſh it. She long'd to ſee us in a cloſer Conjunction with all Proteſtants abroad; and hop'd we might ſtrengthen ourſelves at home, by uniting to us as many as could be brought within our Body. Few things ever griev'd her more, than that thoſe Hopes ſeem'd to languiſh: And that the Proſpect of ſo deſir'd an Union vaniſh'd out of ſight. Compare the Chriſtian Temper and admirable good Senſe of this Royal Saint, with the Weakneſs, Obſtinacy and Fury of that Party in the Convocation, who had nothing in their Mouths but, Nolumus mutare Leges Angliæ.

The Princeſs Anne's Letter to the King.

The Princeſs of Denmark had not been at Court in a Year or two before the Queen's Death; but had liv'd ſometimes at Sion Houſe, and ſometimes at Berkley Houſe; without giving or receiving any Viſits from her Royal Siſter, but upon her Death, ſhe wrote a kind condoling Letter to his Majeſty; wherein She begg'd his favourable Acceptance of her ſincere and hearty Sorrow, for his great Affliction in the loſs of the Queen; and aſſur'd him ſhe was as ſenſibly troubled with his Misfortune, as

A.D.1694 if she had never been so unhappy as to fall under her displeasure. She did earnestly desire his Majesty to give her leave to wait upon him, as soon as it could be with no Inconveniency to him, and without Danger of increasing his Affliction; that she might have an Opportunity in Person, not only of repeating this, but of assuring his Majesty of her real Intention to omit no Occasion of giving him constant Proofs of her sincere Respect, and Concern for his Personal Interest and Safety. The Princess's Interest was dependant entirely on the King's. The Settlement of the Crown at the Revolution was all the Right she had to it; and that took effect only after his Majesty's Death. It was plain she cou'd only have a Revolutional Title; her Father and pretended Brother, who however did afterwards pretend also that his Legitimacy was set right in her Opinion, being both living. The Princess's best Friends knew that if ever she succeeded to the Throne, it must be by the Support of King William's best Friends, and in virtue of the Act of Settlement; but there were not wanting a Party, who, to perplex and distress the Government, declar'd that on the Demise of the Queen, the Crown devolv'd to the Princess Anne of Denmark, in whom was the Hereditary-Right, which they asserted and deny'd as it serv'd a present Turn. These Men were what was afterwards call'd High-Church, and among them were found also Nonjurors and profest Jacobites. 'Tis a fine time Historians have in England, that they cannot speak the Truth, without being expos'd to the Insults of Messengers or Bailiffs, to Warrants and Writs, to Vexation and Expence, and that they write in Shackles as Rope-Dancers play Tricks. We must therefore turn to our French Author, La Mort de la Reine Marie, Espouse de Guillaume, produisit des Intrigues en Favour de la Princess Anne. Le Comte de Nottingham, qui avoit été prive l'année precedente de la Charge de Secretaire d'Etat, proposa dans la Chambre haute de mettre la Princess Anne de Denmark sur la Throne, &c. " The Death of " Queen Mary, Consort to King William, produc'd " Intrigues in favour of the Princess Anne. The " Earl of Nottingham, who had last Year been re- " mov'd from the Office of Secretary of State, pro- " pos'd in the Upper-House, to place the Princess " Anne of Denmark on the Throne; as if King " William had Possession of it only in his Wife's " Right. This Proposal animated the Party; 'twas " the Discourse of Coffee-houses, and the Subject " of Libels. The Tory Members in the House of " Commons were prepar'd to come into it; but " the Project was not well enough concerted to " succeed."

It does not appear that her Royal Highness countenanc'd it in the least; on the contrary, she acquiesc'd entirely in the Right the Law had given King William, prior to her own. And Dr. Tennison, Archbishop of Canterbury, was very Instrumental in the Accommodation and Reconcilement, between his Majesty and her Royal Highness, which lasted as long as the King liv'd; who, as a Mark of his Friendship and Affection, gave her most of the late Queen's Jewels.

CHAP. III.

From the Death of Queen MARY, to the Peace of Ryswick.

Containing the Space of Two Years, and Ten Months.

1695. WE have spoken of the Lancashire Plot in the preceding Chapters, and shall close that Matter in this. If the Faction had not wanted Understanding and Modesty, as much as Honour and Conscience, they wou'd have dropt it, after they had had the good luck to get off so well as they did at Manchester and Chester; but instead of lying quiet, and letting the thing die, they were such Idiots as to turn the Plot upon the Government, and to get Sir William Williams the Apostate Whig to declare, The Plot was forg'd to destroy many Gentlemen of Worth and Fortune. Which Scandal on the Government occasion'd the Parliament's inquiring into it this Sessions; and it appear'd that Lunt before-mention'd had been in France, after his going from his first Evidence. He had been employ'd again by the Conspirators, both at St. Germains and in England, which was his second Evidence; he swore, He had help'd several Jacobites over to France, and that generally Sir John Friend furnish'd Money for those Expeditions, and paid Subsistence Money to the listed Men.

The Lancashire Plotters charge the Government with forging the Plot.

George Wilson of Redland before spoken of, depos'd before Sir John Trenchard Secretary of State, he had harbour'd Bromfield the Quaker, and help'd him to make his Escape; that he was Lunt's Guide when he went about Lancashire to deliver King James's Commissions, to Mr. Tildesley, the Lord Molineux, Mr. William Molineux, Mr. William Garrard, which he saw him deliver, and others; that himself was employ'd by Mr. Walmsley to list Men for King James, and had Money from Capt. Penny for their Subsistence. That he knew of Lunt's listing Men in London; and of the buying of Arms, and carrying them into Lancashire, by Order of Mr. Townley, Mr. Standish, Col. Parker and others; which was also depos'd by the Carrier himself, John Wombal of Wiggan-lane: and the Earl of Macclesfield, Lord-Lieutenant of the County, upon Information by one Green, order'd one of Wombal's Boxes to be open'd, and found it full of Arms. There had been several other Boxes seiz'd, with proper Directions to whom they shou'd have been deliver'd; but such was the Intelligence and Diligence of the Jacobites, that those Boxes were stop'd at Litchfield, as they were on the Road, and never came forward to Lancashire. Wombal swore he deliver'd Boxes of Arms to Mr. Standish, Mr. Tildesley, Mr. Ashton, Mr. Stamford, Mr. Dickenson, sufficient for 1000 Horsemen. Notwithstanding this Man's Affidavit, and the Affidavits of several others, charging the Lancashire Plotters home, with the taking Commissions from King James, listing of Men and buying of Arms; yet some, who were even Friends to the Government, made a Jest of the Conspiracy, because none of the Conspirators were hang'd. There were great quantities of Arms found in the House of Mr. Standish, tho' Mrs. Standish told Capt. Baker, when he came with the King's Messenger to search, You might have sav'd yourself the Trouble, for we had notice from London of your coming ten Days before; and I myself knew one of these Messengers, who I am satisfy'd wou'd rather have help'd to conceal them, than to discover those Arms, had not his Place been in danger. However, Capt. Baker found wall'd up in an upper Room, 32 War-Saddles with all other Necessaries for Troopers; 62 Ammunition Horsemen's Swords, with a great Barrel of Swivels for Carbines.

1695.

Was here no ground of Suspicion? Mr. Standish's Estate was small and incumber'd; and was such a Store

A.D.1695 Store of Arms purely to mount his Domeſtick Equipage? Had not the Government good reaſon to ſeize him upon this Diſcovery, having alſo receiv'd Information before, of the ſhare he had in this Conſpiracy? At Mr. Tildeſley's were found by Mr. Sutton the Meſſenger, a great quantity of Embroider'd Houſings and Holſter Caps, behind a Wainſcot wall'd up with Bricks, and an old Commiſſion of King James's. But 'twas a hard thing, cry'd the Faction, that the Government would not let him be quiet in his Houſe, and that he ſhould be oblig'd by their cruel Perſecution, to fly his Country, with a new Commiſſion from King James in his Pocket, which one Dalton a brother Conſpirator adviſ'd him to burn, and he ſaid, I will burn myſelf firſt; as was ſworn by Lunt, Wombal and Dodſworth. At Mr. Maſſey's in Cheſhire, were found in a Cheſt cover'd over with an old long Pillow, 9 New Dragoon Saddles, with all proper Furniture; other Diſcoveries were made, and other Conſpirators ſeiz'd. There was no want of Evidence, and the only Card the Conſpirators had to play, was to buy off as many as they cou'd of the King's Witneſſes, and ſuborn others of their own; one Clayton and Brown, Hearſt and Elliot, were tempted to forſwear themſelves, to invalidate the King's Evidence, but they refus'd it. The Conſpirators were more ſucceſsful in their Attempts upon one Taffe, who had been a Conſpirator, one of the firſt Diſcoverers of the Conſpiracy, and inſtrumental in procuring Lunt's Diſcovery; himſelf introducing him to the Earl of Bellamont, when he came from France laſt. Taffe went with Lunt from the Lord Bellamont's to the Secretary's Office, heard his Examination, and was one of the moſt zealous Agents in the Management of the Diſcovery of this Plot. He accompany'd the Meſſengers in their ſearching for Arms at Standiſh-Hall and other Places in July 1694. But his Zeal was found out by them to be worſe than Mercenary, for under Pretence of ſearching for Arms, he ſtole a ſilver Chalice and other Goods from Mr. Hesketh, a Prieſt, near Preſton in Lancaſhire; but Capt. Baker oblig'd him to reſtore them. From Mr. Molineux he ſtole Money, another ſilver Chalice, an Altar-Cloth and other Goods, which Mr. Morriſon the Meſſenger forc'd him, tho' very unwilling, to reſtore: It appearing by this, that Taffe's real Deſign was only Thieving. Mr. Aaron Smith the King's Sollicitor, and Mr. Baker ſlighted him; and he in Reſentment reſolv'd to make his Market with the Jacobites. Nevertheleſs, when he return'd to London, he apply'd again to the Earl of Bellamont, and gave him an Account of the great Diſcoveries that had been made in Lancaſhire; and the Earl asking him, if what Lunt had ſworn was true, he anſwer'd it was; made ſtill great Profeſſions of Zeal in the further detection of this Conſpiracy, and inſiſted much on a Reward for what he had already done: but Mr. Smith and Mr. Baker, having inform'd the Miniſtry how ſcandalouſly he had behav'd in the Country, he came ſhort of the large Sums he expected; upon which he grew angry, and ſwore he would ſpoil the Plot. Accordingly he applies himſelf to one Wybrand, that by his means he might have Acceſs to Mr. Leigh of Lyme, who was in Priſon for the Conſpiracy. Wybrand ask'd him if there were any Witneſſes againſt the Conſpirators; and Taffe, as Wybrand depos'd, reply'd, There is Evidence enough to hang them all. Wybrand not giving him ſufficient Encouragement, he makes his Application to Mrs. Dickenſon, the Wife of another Plotter, a cunning intriguing Woman, and ſhe takes him into their Service. Twenty Pounds was paid him down, as was ſworn before the Houſe of Lords, and an Annuity promis'd to be ſettled on him, to be paid out of an Eſtate in Lancaſhire. Upon which he renounces any Knowledge of the Plot, and becomes Evidence for the Priſoners.

There were Witneſſes enough to the Truth of this Fellow's Conduct, yet on the Credit of ſuch a Thief depends all that was objected to the Evidence of the Lancaſhire Conſpiracy. Ferguſon, that moſt abandon'd Villain, was employ'd to write in Defence of the Plotters, and the Plot was ſo miſrepreſented by the Enemies of the Government to the People in the Country, that before the Conſpirators were brought to their Trial, the King's Witneſſes were threaten'd to be ſton'd. When the Trial came on at Mancheſter, October 7th, 1694, they had much ado to get ſafely in and out of Court, a Popiſh Mob at Mancheſter being encourag'd by the Tories to inſult them. They gave their Evidence, however, very clearly and poſitively, moſt of which has been before related. There were ten or a dozen Witneſſes to ſeveral Branches of the Conſpiracy, and the Conſpirators made a very weak and trifling Defence; all but Mr. Dickenſon, who by the help of his Wife, made the beſt of his very bad Cauſe. Taffe ſwore that Lunt and he contriv'd the Plot: and this was very much hearken'd to by the diſaffected, tho' it was prov'd that Taffe had not any Knowledge of Lunt, till May 1694. And there was ſufficient Proof, that the Plot commenc'd, as we have ſaid elſewhere, immediately after the Revolution. Upon hearing of Taffe's Evidence, Sir William Williams, then King's Counſel, ſat down in the Court, and would examine no more Witneſſes againſt the Priſoners, giving up the Cauſe at once, tho' there were many Witneſſes unexamin'd, as well to Taffe's Infamous Character, as the Plot itſelf. And this Proceeding of Sir William's ſo encourag'd the Papiſts, ſo influenc'd the Jury, that 'twas in vain to proceed farther in a Trial, where the Counſel for the King declar'd he had no more to ſay; nay, ſo far did this Renegade Counſellor act the Part of an Advocate for the Conſpirators, that as ſoon as the Court broke up, he took Poſt for London, and, as is before-mention'd, repreſented the King's Witneſſes, as Forgers of a Plot to deſtroy many Gentlemen of Worth and Fortune. Thus was the Scene ſhifted, and theſe Witneſſes had the Plot turn'd on them, being order'd to be indicted for the Forgery in the King's-Bench Court; and the Faction were ſo furious and ſo fortunate, that the King's Witneſſes were actually indicted at the Aſſizes at Lancaſter, and, ſays my Author, a good Churchman, by the prevailing Force of the ſecret Springs that were employ'd againſt them, were found guilty of Perjury; but the Matter being brought into Parliament, there was no more done to them.

A.D.1695 Ferguſon writes in Defence of the Plotters.

The Evidence for the King inſulted by the Papiſts.

Sir William Williams betrays the King's Cauſe.

I have treated this Conſpiracy the more largely, becauſe I never met with one ſo clearly prov'd by the Evidence, and ſo fully corroborated by Circumſtances. The Knight's riding Poſt, and the turning the Tables on the Witneſſes, is a Farce hardly credible in a Country, where Men pretend to common Honeſty, and common Underſtanding; yet was Sir William Williams at that time applauded for it by the Jacobites and Tories; who forgot what we read of him in Athen. Oxon. That he became an Advocate for the Fanatics in the Presbyterian Plot. You ſee what a fine Head and fine Tongue had this Oxford Writer, that he was an Advocate for John Hampden, Laurence Braddon, Sir Samuel Barnardiſton, &c. as alſo that he was an Advocate againſt the Seven Biſhops, as he was now againſt the King's Witneſſes, himſelf the King's Counſel, and was not contented with having procur'd an Indictment againſt them; he and others brought the Affair into the Houſe of Commons, and the Papiſts were ſo ſure of coming off with Honour, that Mr. Standiſh of Standiſh-Hall, an enormous Criminal, had the Impudence to appear about the Parliament-Houſe, as a Solicitor for his Fellow-Criminals. But when the Houſe had heard the ſame Evidence, that had been given in Lancaſhire, they Reſolv'd, February 6. 169$\frac{4}{5}$,

That

A.D.1695 The Parliamentre-ſolves that there was a Plot.

That it does appear to this Houſe, that there was ſufficient ground for the Proſecution and Trials of the Gentlemen at Mancheſter.

Reſolv'd, That upon the Informations and Examinations before this Houſe, it does appear there was a dangerous Plot carry'd on againſt the King and Government.

They alſo order'd Mr. Standiſh to be taken into Cnſtody, but he ran away; and they were ſo ſenſible of his Guilt, that they addreſs'd his Majeſty to iſſue out a Proclamation for apprehending him: but he got into France, and his Flight reviv'd the Credit of the Plot. The Houſe of Lords came to the ſame Reſolution as the Houſe of Commons did; and the King's Witneſſes after much Perſecution by Papiſts and their Abettors, were diſcharg'd, the Attorney-General promiſing to pay their Coſts. We ſhall ſee what ſort of Men theſe Abettors were, by the Counſel for the Popiſh Conſpirators, Sir Bartholomew Shower, Mr. Simon Harcourt, &c. And another Mr. Simon Harcourt, a Burgeſs for Aylesbury after Sacheverel's Sedition, who was very buſy in the Proſecution of the Evidence for the King.

Theſe are the Paſſages that the Faction will cry out againſt, as blemiſh'd with Partiality: but as I have inſiſted and will always inſiſt upon it, that they muſt prove the Facts to be falſe, before they have a Right to cenſure them as Partial; ſo I ſhall not forbear ſpeaking the Truth, and proſecuting my Deſign to expoſe the Treaſonable, as well as Seditious Practices of the Enemies to our Revolutional Conſtitution from its Eſtabliſhment to the end of the Period I am writing of. And in the Proſecution of this Deſign, I am oblig'd to take up again the Story of Crosby the Plotter, becauſe I find in his Company a Set of People, who were as loud in the Cry of the Church's Danger, after King James had forefaulted the Crown, as were the condemn'd Doctor, Tr----p, and their Brethren, when they were making way for Mr. Robert Harley's Miniſtry.

Crosby the Conſpirator's Buſineſs.

Croby's Buſineſs was to get as good Intelligence as he could of the Numbers and Strength of the Jacobites, and their Preparations for an Inſurrection, as alſo to concert Meaſures for King James's Landing. He was ſeiz'd as he was knocking at Mr. Simon Harcourt's Door in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, at 11 a-Clock at Night, in May 1694. He lodg'd at one Pugſon's a Taylor's Houſe in Germain-ſtreet; as ſoon as the Meſſengers began to ſearch that Houſe for Treaſonable Papers, two of his Female Friends flung a bundle of them into the Vault, but the Meſſengers, Mr. Legat and Mr. Hopkins, were too nimble for them, and recover'd the Papers. Pugſon the Taylor ſwore, That Crosby went by the Name of Philips, that he was going beyond Sea; That Mr. Simon Harcourt us'd to bring Writings to him, and came to him immediately after Sir James Montgomery was taken. This Mr. Harcourt was Clerk to Jefferies in his bloody Weſtern Aſſizes, and being return'd Member in two or three Parliaments, by Sir John Packington's Conſtable at Aylesbury, he appear'd at the head of two or three Addreſſes ſent out of Buckinghamſhire, when Mr. Robert Harley was Prime Miniſter. Beſides this ſtaunch Man, we find in Crosby's Company others, as Sir James Montgomery, Sir Andrew Forreſter, Sir Theophilus Oglethorp, Col. James Graham, Dr. Smith the Nonjuror, Dr. Sheridan the abdicated Biſhop of Kilmore in Ireland, Sir John Knight of Briſtol, not one of theſe profeſt Papiſts, to whom we muſt add Bromfield the Quaker, and Mrs. Penelope Higgons, whom I take to be Niece to Dr. Granville before-mention'd. This was Pugſon's Information upon Oath. In Crosby's Cuſtody was found a Letter from Mr. Simon Harcourt, Clerk of the Peace for the County of Middleſex, deſiring to ſee Mr. Philips, Crosby's Alias, at his Houſe at eight that Night, and telling him, Couſin Molly would let him know ſo much if ſhe could. "I have ſent, adds "he, alſo to his Coffee-houſe to ſignify ſo much." This Letter was directed to Mrs. Mary Jones, one of the Women who flung the bundle of Papers into the Neceſſary-houſe, and was dated the 19th of April 1694. In Crosby's Chamber was found a Letter, written by Sir John Knight to Mr. Simon Harcourt, deſiring him to tell Mr. Philips, alias Crosby, that he had very earneſt Buſineſs with him, and muſt of neceſſity ſpeak with him at Harcourt's Houſe at his firſt Leiſure. This Letter was dated the 2d of April, 1694, and in it were ſeveral villainous Expreſſions of King William and his Government. Another Letter was found among Crosby's Papers, ſign'd C---n, ſure every body knows who that is, deſiring to ſpeak with Mr. Philips before he took his Journey; to St. Germains was meant, for thither he was going. Two other Letters in his bundle, were from Col. Tanport and the Lord Molineux two other Conſpirators, but we ſhou'd not have mention'd 'em here, becauſe the latter was a Papiſt; and when Crosby was taken at Mr. Harcourt's Door, he had a Letter in his Pocket directed to King James's Queen Mary, written in his own Hand, containing Profeſſions of his Zeal for King James's Service. There were Letters full of myſterious Treaſon in Crosby's bundle, and two Schemes of his taken at Pugſon's; the firſt Scheme was addreſs'd to the Earl of Middleton, under the Name of Mr. Toncroft, and contain'd a falſe Repreſentation of the Ill Poſture of King William's Affairs, of the Diviſions and Grievances of the Nation, after the manner of Leſley's Rehearſals, Oldiſworth's Examiners, and Bo---l---ke's Craftſmen, to tempt the French King to take hold of that Juncture to invade us. The ſecond Scheme propos'd the Number of Forces to be ſent to conquer us, 50000 Frenchmen to be join'd with 5000 Foot and 1500 Horſe, all ſtaunch and form'd Troops ready in England. I ſhall inſert the latter Part of this Scheme, which was printed by Abel Roper in the Year 1698. The ſame Roper to whom Mr. Robert Harley gave a Place in the Secretary's Office, and whom the Faction employ'd to print Libels on the Duke and Dutcheſs of Marlborough, the Earl of Godolphin, the Earl of Wharton, the Lord Somers, and all the Illuſtrious Patriots who were remov'd to make room for ——— Our Enemies will tell the reſt with Pleaſure, to uſe the Terms of Biſhop Fleetwood. I proceed then as in Crosby's Scheme and Words.

"In our Opinion, Briſtol is the propereſt Place "for a Deſcent, it being a great Town, well-affec-"ted to his Majeſty, lying in the heart of the King-"dom, and the Counties about it are capable to "furniſh all Neceſſaries for ſuch an Army, as he ſhall "think fit to bring; beſides a great many other "Advantages which have been already explain'd to "you, Mr. Toncroft alias Lord Middleton: and upon "a Deſcent in that Place, his Majeſty may depend "upon a great Concurrence of the Nobility, Cler-"gy and Gentry from the adjacent Counties.

It was generally thought that the laſt Gentleman intended by theſe Initial Letters, Sir Peter Colliton, was put in out of pure Malice for his known Averſion to the Cauſe, in which the Conſpirators liſted him; for tho' Sir Peter was one of thoſe who were not rewarded according to their Deſerts, yet he was always zealous for the Preſervation of the Government; and Roper the Printer of the Paper, felt the weight of his Reſentment, for the Baronet finding his Mark ſet in ſuch Company, came to his Shop, and asking for the Book with this Liſt in it; upon ſeeing it, he demanded of him who was meant by Sir P— Co——n? Roper reply'd, Sir Peter Colliton, upon which Sir Peter gave him due Correction, and by his Cane made him acquainted with his Perſon.

It will preſently be ſeen, that this Paper has not the Authority of Dreams, and that the moſt ſanguine Jacobite in the Kingdom, if he had the leaſt Portion of Sobriety in his Underſtanding, knew all this to be a bundle of Lyes, the Ware they generally ſold to the French King and his Miniſters; who paid dearly for them, not in Money, for they had too many other Demands upon them, but in Faith, in believing what the Jacobites ſaid, and getting

Armies and Fleets ready at every call, to ſecond theſe Chimerical Inſurrections. A.D.1695

I have already hinted, why I have given the Reader and myſelf ſo much Trouble about this Crosby, a Wretch much below the Dignity of Hiſtory; and I ſhall add an Obſervation or two, which I find made on this ſame Scheme by a Writer in Queen Anne's Time.

" Whether this Paper was really the Senſe of " thoſe High-Church Champions, or an Invention " of the Conſpirators at London, only to tempt the " French King to ſend King James hither, I will " not diſpute. I give it on the Authority of Abel " Roper, as Crosby's genuine Paper; and this at leaſt " we may obſerve, that the Conſpirators flatter'd " themſelves with Hopes of Aſſiſtance from all " thoſe that had voted againſt the Revolution, againſt " the Aſſociation, againſt the War with France; " that had voted for the Tack for the Occaſional Bill, " and Schiſm-Bill, that had ſign'd Addreſſes for " the Hereditary-Right, that had voted againſt the " Proteſtant-Succeſſion, that had join'd with the " Harleian Miniſtry. All the Perſons here intend- " ed by the Initial Letters, who had been Mem- " bers of Parliament ſince the Abdication, will be " found in ſome or all of thoſe Black-Liſts, and " we may by that judge on very good grounds " what hearty Friends they were to King William, " and to Queen Anne while ſhe follow'd King Wil- " liam's Meaſures," and to King George, if any of them liv'd in his Reign. A Word or two more after the ſame Author on this Subject, and we have done with it. S. H. E. Vol. IV. p. 153.

" Tho' probably ſome of thoſe ſtaunch Men, " mark'd out by the firſt and laſt Letters of their " Names, wou'd have been glad to have had King " James again, to get into Places by it; yet they " had not the Zeal nor the Courage to venture their " Lives and Eſtates, by entering into a Conſpiracy " with ſuch profligate, deſperate Fellows, as Char- " nock, Porter, Crosby and Goodman, and the Ma- " nagers of the Jacobite Plots. Beſides, they knew " full well, that it was not in their power to engage " even their own Tenants and Dependants to join " with the French; and their Intereſt wou'd be loſt " as ſoon as their Deſign was known."

The Tories Plotters againſt King William.

Let the Factious call this Partiality, and let the Scrupulous do the ſame, it will be the effect of Anger only in the one, and Weakneſs in the other. For the Facts and the Names are a Proof, that my Charge is juſt and well-grounded.

On the 12th of January, a Petition from the Town of Royſton was read in the Houſe of Commons, complaining of great Abuſes committed there, by Officers and Soldiers, in exacting Subſiſtence Money; which they reſolv'd to be a great Violation of the Rights and Liberties of the Subject: and the Commiſſioners of Accounts, being order'd to lay before the Houſe their Obſervations, on the Abuſes and Ill-Practices committed by ſeveral Agents of Regiments, the ſame was done by Mr. Harley one of thoſe Commiſſioners. Then they examin'd Mr. Tracey Pauncefort, Agent to Col. Haſtings, whoſe Officers and Soldiers were petition'd againſt. As alſo Agent Roberts, Agent Wallis, Lieutenant Turner, Col. Haſtings and Major Montall; and it was Reſolv'd, That Mr. Tracy Pauncefort, by obſtinately refuſing to anſwer to a Matter of Fact, demanded of him by this Houſe, had thereby violated the Privilege, and contemn'd the Authority of this Houſe, and the Fundamental Conſtitution thereof. For which he was brought to the Bar, and upon his Knees receiv'd the Judgment of being committed Priſoner to the Tower of London. He was, upon his Petition, again brought to the Bar of the Houſe, but not giving ſatisfactory Anſwers, was remanded back to the Tower. His Brother Mr. Edward Pauncefort was examin'd alſo,

A.D.1695 and February 16th, it was reſolved, That he be taken into Cuſtody, for contriving to cheat Col. Haſtings's Regiment of 500 Guineas. And that Mr. Henry Guy, a Member of the Houſe, for taking a Bribe of 200 Guineas, be committed to the Tower. A Committee was appointed to draw up a Repreſentation of the Abuſes of Agents of Regiments; which being preſented to his Majeſty, he was pleas'd to anſwer, Gentlemen, I will conſider your Repreſentation, and take all Care poſſible to have the Grievances redreſs'd. Accordingly Col. Haſtings was immediately caſhier'd, and his Regiment given to Sir John Jacob. An Order of Council was publiſh'd, for the Chief Officers of the Army to meet twice a Week in the great Chamber at the Horſe-Guards, to receive and examine Informations of any wrong done by any Officer or Soldier; as alſo a Declaration, March 11th, for the Strict Diſcipline of the Army, and due Payment of Quarters. Four Days before, the Houſe of Commons committed Mr. James Craggs, one of the Contractors for cloathing the Army, to the Tower, for refuſing to produce his Books of Accounts, when requir'd ſo to do, by the Commiſſioners before-mention'd. Mr. Robert Harley was very buſy in the Execution of that Commiſſion, and acquainted the Houſe of Commons, that Mr. Richard Harnage another Contractor refus'd to be examin'd upon Oath before the Commiſſioners; upon which the Houſe order'd a Bill to be brought in, to oblige Mr. Edward Pauncefort, Mr. Tracy Pauncefort, Mr. James Craggs, and Mr. Richard Harnage, to diſcover how they diſpos'd the Money paid into their hands, relating to the Army.

Mr. Henry Guy ſent to the Tower for Bribery.

Mr. James Craggs ſent to the Tower.

Mr. Robert Harley very buſy about Publick Accounts.

A Complaint being made by Thomas Kemp and others, Hackney Coachmen, againſt the Commiſſioners for Hackney-Coaches, for arbitrary and corrupt Practices; and a Committee being appointed to examine the Matter, they by their Report clear'd Henry Aſhurſt and Walter Overbury Eſqrs; and the Houſe order'd an Addreſs to his Majeſty, to remove Henry Killegrew, Henry Villiers, and Richard Gee Eſqrs; the other Commiſſioners for Licenſing Hackney-Coaches.

An Addreſs for turning out the Commiſſioners for Hackney-Coaches.

The Cry of Bribery and Corruption, was not only againſt Perſons without doors, but Perſons within, and even againſt Members of the Houſe of Commons; ſome of whom did not ſtick to take Money in the Affair of the African Company; of which Committee, Mr. Robert Harley was Chairman: but I do not inſinuate that he was one of thoſe Money-takers; the Luſt of Money not being his predominant Vice. His State-Inquiries as a Commiſſioner of Accounts, did probably not ſave the Publick as much as his Salary amounted to, all other Payments on that Score conſider'd. But the Intent of the Parliament in paſſing the Bill, for taking and ſtating the Publick Accounts, was good and becoming true Patriots; tho' it was obvious, that the Clamour againſt Bribery and Corruption, was rais'd to caſt an Aſperſion on the Adminiſtration; which was not at all chargeable with what Haſtings, and his Officers did at Royſton; nor what the Hackney-Coach Commiſſioners did; nor with the Obſtinacy of the Agents for the Army, who did not think they were oblig'd to be their own Accuſers, till there was a Law made for it. But theſe were the Grievances about which Mr. Robert Harley buſy'd himſelf moſt. There was indeed a very great Diſcovery made of Corruption in the Management of the Eaſt-India Company about their Charter already ſpoken of, and how that Matter ſtood, is thus repreſented to us by a late Hiſtorian.

S. H. E. Vol. II. p. 191.

" As the perſecuting Party had taken this bold " ſtep in Spirituals, ſo they acted in Temporals; " and after they had ſold England to France, taken " the French King's Penſions for ſeveral Years, to " ſupply the Want of Parliamentary Subſidies; af- " ter they had encrich'd themſelves out of the " Spoils of a Bankrupt Exchequer, and the Mo- " ney that was rais'd for ſeveral Thouſands of poor " Orphans; they made ſurpriſing Pretences to a " ſingular Care for the Intereſt of their Country. " Their Opponents they call'd Plunderers and Pe- " culators; and when they had no Opportunity of " getting any thing, they never fail'd of exclaiming " againſt thoſe that had: but as ſoon as a Temp- " tation fell in their way, they remember'd what " was done by their Fore-fathers, and fill'd their " Pockets at the Expence of Honour and Con- " ſcience. I have alſewhere ſhewn how they were " King Charles's Penſioners in Parliament; as the " Miniſters and their Maſter were Lewis XIVth's; " and we ſhall find the ſame Miniſter who tranſ- " acted the Affair of a French Penſion for King " Charles, playing a ſmall Game for himſelf in the " Eaſt-India Company Buſineſs. The Directors " of that Company were, moſt of them at that " time, what we now call High-Fliers; and being " in Danger of loſing their Charter, for Miſma- " nagement and Corruption, they apply'd to their " Friends at Weſtminſter for Protection; which they " could not obtain but at a very unconſcionable " Price, near 300000 l. as appears by this State of " their Accounts, drawn up by their own Com- " mittee."

Sir John Thompſon.

The Honourable Thomas Wharton Eſq;

Of whom only the laſt Man had then the Character of a ſtaunch Man, and it is enough to ſhew which Party was innocent, by the Zeal of the Proſecutors.

If there were not then two Parties in the Houſe and in the Nation, this is downright Partiality, for which I am accountable.

On the 12th of March, Mr. Foley reported from the Committee, that as ſoon as they came to the Eaſt-India Houſe, they underſtood ſome Clerks of the Company, by Order, had lately taken out of their Books, Account of all Monies paid for ſpecial Service of the Company, beginning in the Year 1688, of which they deſir'd an Abſtract; which ſtood thus.

They also reported that Mr. Thomas Colson, then Member of Parliament for Totness, by Sir Edward Seymour's Interest, had made a Contract with the Company, by which he was to get 10000 l. in a Voyage of the Ship Seymour. Let the Reader guess who it was that went snacks in this round Sum of 10000 l. Sir John Ward declar'd to the Committee, He did not believe it was for Mr. Colson himself, but some other Gentleman. And Sir Benjamin Bathurst being examin'd, said, He had some warm Discourse with Sir Thomas Cook about 90000 l. receiv'd by him at once, as appears by the Receipt of the 10th of January 1693. But Sir Thomas made him no other Answer, than that the 90000 l. was to gratify some Persons, in case they could get an Act of Parliament. Sir Thomas Cook, who by the way was one of the Witnesses against Col. Sidney, refusing to give the House an Account of that prodigious Sum, was sent to the Tower; and a Bill order'd to be brought into the House of Commons, to oblige him to give an Account, how he distributed that and other Sums; which they past in two or three Days, and sent it to the Lords. When it was read the first time in their House, it was remark'd that the Duke of Leeds made a vehement Speech against it, which he introduced with a most solemn Protestation of his Clearness and Innocency, and laying his Hand on his Breast, declar'd upon his Faith and Honour, that he was perfectly disinterested, and had no Part or Concern in this Matter, and therefore might better appear against the Bill. The Lords sent for Sir Thomas Cook, who said he was very ready and very willing to make a Discovery, and would have done it before in the House of Commons, if he cou'd have obtain'd an Indemnifying Vote there, that his Confession shou'd be no Prejudice to him: which he then desir'd of their Lordships, to save him from Actions, Suits and Scandalums, as he term'd it. And truly there was good Reason, why he shou'd desire it; for if an Action of Scandalum Magnatum will lie against a Person for saying what is true, Sir Thomas cou'd hardly have escap'd it in his Confession; and History wou'd in such Case be like sailing between the Rocks of Sylla and Charybdis, where the Historian is sure to suffer Shipwreck on Falsehood and Flattery, or on Penalty and Punishment. And they resolv'd, that the Bill to call him to an Account should be dropp'd, and an Indemnifying Bill pass'd to encourage him to give an Account, without being forc'd to it by a Bill.

Sir Thomas Cook sent to the Tower.

The Duke of Leeds upon this Occasion distinguish'd himself, by an extraordinary Concern for the Honour of the Peers. He told the House, that the Commons had taken care of the Reputation of their House, by asking Sir Thomas Cook, if he had distributed any Money among any of their Members, that he purg'd them by a solemn Protestation that he had not; and the Duke thought it reasonable the Lords should have the same regard to themselves. He therefore mov'd that Sir Thomas Cook should be ask'd, Whether he was willing upon Oath, to purge all those who sat there? But this was not receiv'd.

The Lords having made some Progress in the Indemnifying Act, Notice came from Sir Thomas Cook by a Bishop, who appear'd zealous for him, that he was afraid he might be misapprehended as to what he said concerning a Discovery, in that he said he was willing and ready; for by ready, he meant no more than willing, and he should need at least seven Months to make the Discovery he promis'd. Some of the Peers highly resenting this, as prevaricating with them; he was brought to agree to the time allow'd by them, which was seven Days, as mention'd in the Bill. How zealous was the Duke of Leeds to clear the Character of his Peers! We find him the most busy and talkative upon this head; and he will have Reason, before we have done with this Bribery Business, to speak for himself as well as Sir Thomas Cook, who, as he knew well, had not been the Canal made use of for a Communication between the Company and himself. In order to get what they cou'd out of Sir Thomas Cook, the Indemnifying Vote before-mention'd past, and a Committee of Lords and Commons were appointed, with full Power to examine the Bottom of this bad Matter

The Committee of Lords and Commons conceiving Sir Thomas Cook's Account to be imperfect, and Mr. Comptroller Wharton in behalf of the Commons Committee, having reported his Examination; a Debate arose, in which several Members spoke, whom I shall distinguish by Initial Letters, as,

A. "Inform'd the House that Earl Rivers, who "upon the Examination was said to have receiv'd "300 and odd Pounds of the Money, protested he "never had a Penny, and tho' he was now of ano-"ther House, he had the same Esteem and Honour "for this House as heretofore; and that he had "mov'd the House of Lords, and they had sent "for Molineux, who had said he had receiv'd that "Money."

B. Observ'd, That as to all the little Sums, Sir Thomas Cook knew very well to whom they were given, but he could never learn to whom Sir Basil Firebrace

A.D. 1695 Firebrace deliver'd the Money he had receiv'd, for Sir Baſil would not give him any Account of that Matter, tho' often ask'd by him to do it. Acton wou'd have told him and he wou'd not hear him, ſo between theſe two we were ſawn. You have it among you, Genlemen.

C. "Took notice of Sir Thomas Cook's long "Preamble, that he had inſpected his Powers, re- "duc'd his Account into Writing, and deliver'd in "that Paper. Whereupon he was examin'd by "the Committee, and it was with great difficulty "that what they had was drawn from him. As "to the firſt 10000 l. they had but an Hearſay; "Tyſſen told him, he gave it Sir Joſiah Child, who "ſaid he gave it the King. And here note by the "way, that in the fore-mention'd Examination it "was ſaid to be a Cuſtomary Preſent; and that "in King Charles's and other Reigns, the like had "been done for ſeveral Years, as appears by the "Company's Books. As to the ſecond 10000 l. "to Acton, he proffer'd to tell him the Particu- "lars, and he was unwilling to hear him; but did "not doubt but Acton wou'd give a particular and "ſatisfactory Account of all diſtributed by him; "and yet at the ſame Moment being ask'd where, "and in what Condition this Acton was, he de- "clar'd he was a diſtracted Man, and not able to give "the Houſe any Account at all. As to the 40000 l. "to Firebrace, he believ'd he kept 10000 l. for "himſelf, and for the reſt he refus'd to tell him "to whom, or for what, or when it was iſſu'd. "That he mention'd Contracts to the Value of "60000 l. on account of procuring a New Char- "ter, and alſo 40000 l. for an Act of Parlia- "ment. They were not Fools, but they parted "with their Money very eaſily, their Proprietors "were little beholden to them."

D. Said, No Man is innocent, if every Man was guilty; the Members could not be innocent, if they did not lay their Hands on theſe Men, that had betray'd them and the Company, and he hop'd themſelves, he would have them go as far as they could, then they ſhould not be in fault; and mov'd that Firebrace and Acton ſhould be order'd to attend the next Day.

E. "Seconded the Motion, and mov'd that they "ſhould not forget a Member of their own, who "was accus'd for receiving a conſiderable Sum."

After this ſeveral Perſons were examin'd as to theſe Matters, and particularly one Mr. Bates, who was, or pretended to be well acquainted with the Duke of Leeds and other great Men; and had conſiderable Sums of the Company's Money lodg'd in his Hands, for obtaining a New Charter for them.

Before we enter farther into Bates's Affair, let us look again into Sir Thomas Cook's Account, for it is a Rarity.

Sir Baſil Firebrace being examin'd by the Committee of both Houſes, depos'd,

That Sir Thomas Cook gave him the firſt Sum of 10000 l. for his Loſſes, ſome time before the Charter for the Eaſt-India Company paſs'd. That the ſeveral Sums amounting to 30000 l. were receiv'd by him, by virtue of a Contract with Sir Thomas Cook, and was for Favours and Service done. That the Money was for himſelf, and he paid no Part of it for procuring a Charter or Act of Parliament, which it was his Intereſt to have obtain'd after the Contracts for the Stock were made, &c. The next Day Mr. Hornby the Goldſmith, purſuant to Order, exhibited to the Committees, an Extract of Sir Baſil Firebrace's Account; the ſame did Mr. Fowlis, Goldſmith, which were both very long, and gave not much Light in the Committee's Enquiry. But Sir Baſil deſiring himſelf to be call'd in, depos'd, "That having had a "Treaty with Mr. Bates, whom he thought able "to do Service in paſſing the Charter, and to have "Acquaintance with ſome Perſons of Honour; he "gave two Notes for 5500 Guineas on Mr. At- "well, payable to Mr. Bates or Bearer. That "one Note was was for 3000 l. and the other for "2500 l. which Notes he deliver'd to Mr. Bates, "who ſaid he wou'd return them, if the Buſineſs "was not done; that Sir Thomas Cook knew how "theſe Notes were to be diſpos'd of. But Bates wou'd "not deal on the Terms of telling of Names. "That he introduc'd him ſeveral times to the Duke "of Leeds, who made ſome Scruples in point of "Law; upon which he carry'd the Attorney-Ge- "neral to him, who had alſo 500 Guineas. That "one Day laſt Week, the 5000 Guineas were of- "fer'd to be paid back by Bates, and that he ac- "tually brought him 4400 Guineas on Thurſday "laſt, which was for the 5000; the 500 Guineas "for himſelf he kept, &c." It was remark'd, that there were but two Members of Parliament nam'd to have receiv'd Money the ſame way, and they were both Dead, Col. Dean had but 50 l. and Mr. Goldwell 1000 l.

Bates conceal'd himſelf on the firſt Noiſe of this Buſineſs, but the Houſe of Lords ordering him to be taken into Cuſtody, he own'd the Receipt of the 5000 Guineas, but ſhufflʼd the Matter off from the Duke of Leeds, with whom Sir Thomas Cook was apprehenſive the Charter ſtuck, and told Firebrace, as he ſwore, we muſt get him off; upon which Firebrace apply'd to Bates.

We have already obſerv'd, that Tyſſen's Money was pretended to be preſented to the King; and the diſaffected Jacobites and Grumblers made a great Noiſe about it: whereas it was only a Cuſtomary Preſent from the Company to the Crown, as was prov'd by Sir Joſiah Child, and cou'd not be thought to have been given for a Bill; ſince they offer'd 50000 l. but his Majeſty ſaid, I will not meddle with it. Then they offer'd the 50000 l. to the Earl of Portland, but he told Mr. Tyſſen, if ever he mention'd it to him again, he would be the Company's Enemy, and give 'em all the Oppoſition he could. The Earl of Nottingham was offer'd 5000 l. which his Lordſhip ſcorn'd to accept; but unhappily there was found in Sir Thomas Cook's Confeſſion, a Sum of 500 Guineas to a notorious Nonjuror, Charles Bates Eſq; who for that and 5000 Guineas paid afterwards, engag'd the Duke of Leeds to uſe his Intereſt for the Company. This Bates was apply'd to by Sir Baſil Firebrace, as a Man able to do Service, and having Acquaintance with ſeveral Perſons of Honour, as Sir Baſil depos'd; but this Jacobite would not ſtir till he had Notes for 5000 Guineas on Atwell the Goldſmith, who kept the ſame Shop in Exchange-Alley, as had been kept by Sir Thomas Cook, when he was a Goldſmith. Upon this, read the following Reflections in a Treatiſe written in Queen Anne's Time.

The King refuſes to take their Money.

Earl of Portland does the ſame, and the Earl of Nottingham.

The Duke of Leeds takes their Money.

" What Perſons of Honour muſt it be, that ſuch " a profeſs'd Enemy to the King was acquainted " with? Cou'd they be Friends to King William? " Is it a Wonder his Counſels were betray'd, his " Affairs perplex'd, and the War he was carrying on " unſucceſsful? He was adviſ'd to make uſe of a " Motley Miniſtry, and theſe Gentlemen gave out, " his Majeſty ſhou'd ſay, I will be King of my Peo- " ple, and not of a Party; but King William was " Maſter of too much good Senſe, to call the " Friends to the Revolution a Party. The Con- " ſtitution was Revolutional, and to adhere to the " Conſtitution is not to adhere to a Party, but to " one's Country, to the Whole; and to be Partial to " the Whole, is Nonſenſe in Terms, which muſt be " anſwer'd by thoſe that accuſe me of Partiality, " before I ſhall trouble myſelf about them." King William, purſuant to this hopeful Advice, took the ſtaunch Men in, and we ſee how they ſerv'd him. They have Intereſt at Court, the rank Jacobite Bates has Intereſt in them; was it likely that any thing Good cou'd happen to a Government that was in ſuch Hands?

What Partiality is, and is not.

We have ſeen what Sort of Account Sir Thomas Cook gave in, and no wonder the Committee of Lords and Commons thought it imperfect. The Managers for the Special Service endeavour'd asmuch as they cou'd to conceal their Management, and when the Committee of Commons enquir'd into the Particulars of the Payment of ſo large a Sum, as 103165 l. they were told at the Eaſt-India Houſe, there was no particular Account kept, but that the Governor did only in general inform what Sums he had diſburs'd, without naming to whom, or what Service; which ſeveral Perſons at the Eaſt-India Houſe ſaid was a new Courſe, ſince Sir Thomas Cook came to be Deputy-Governor or Governor, but in all times before he was concern'd, the Particulars of all Sums for Special Service were declar'd. In ſhort, they found that the Company's Money iſſu'd for Special Service, in the time when Sir Joſeph Hern and Sir Thomas Cook were Governors, was diſpos'd of by them, and plac'd to the Company's Account under the Head of Charges general.

A.D.1695

Debates about the Duke of Leeds's Money.

As ſoon as it was known the Duke of Leeds had been dealing with Bates, and Bates with the Company; the Houſe of Commons conceiv'd a juſt Indignation againſt ſuch Practices, and the Honourable Thomas Wharton Eſq; having made a Report from the Committee of both Houſes of the Examination taken by them; ſeveral Members ſpoke to it.

A. Mr. Speaker,

I conceive there is a neceſſity to ſearch this Matter to the bottom, the Houſe has a Thread in their Hands. They ought to provide Laws for the future to prevent the Members of this Houſe taking Money. All imaginable Endeavours have been us'd to ſtifle all Diſcoveries; and Mr. Bates appears an unfortunate Perſon, whom the Care of his Friend the Duke of Leeds, and the Senſe of his Oath, have caus'd to make ſuch Contradictions. I move that the Houſe would put the Matter in ſuch a Method, as becomes their Juſtice, and as the ſhortneſs of their time will allow.

B. Mr. Speaker,

" I do fully agree with the Gentleman near me, " there never were greater and more general In- " ſtances of Corruption and Neceſſity of ſpeedy " Remedy. It is very fit this Houſe ſhould let the " World ſee they are in earneſt. I ask leave to put " you in mind what Practice and Arts have been " us'd to ſtifle and ſtop your Diſcovery; ſo that " what you have is, as it were, by the utmoſt Force " and Conſtraint; you cannot wonder at it, when " you now find ſo great a Man at the Bottom. But " there is no Perſon in a Poſt ſo high, that this " Houſe cannot reach, no Man's Practice or Art ſo " deep that this Houſe cannot diſcover. Here have " been all imaginable Endeavours us'd to obſtruct " this Enquiry; firſt, his Majeſty's Name was made " uſe of at the Committee, with hopes perhaps that " that might ſtop any further Enquiry; and if it " was made uſe of there, you may reaſonably " expect it was made uſe of elſewhere. But that " appear'd ſo far from being a Reflection on the " King, that Sir Joſiah Child often complain'd of " it as a Rudeneſs to his Majeſty, that what other " Kings had yearly as a Preſent, they had not offer'd " to his Majeſty in three Years. It was indeed, if " not a Matter of Right, a Matter of Cuſtom. " Then a Noble Lord, who may be nam'd for his " Honour on this Occaſion, the Earl of Portland, " when the great Sum of 50000 l. was preſs'd upon " him, did abſolutely refuſe it, and told them he " would for ever be their Enemy and Oppoſer, if " they offer'd any ſuch thing to him. I having " thus mention'd the Innocent, I muſt ſay ſome- " what of the Guilty: A ſtop having been put, the " Duke of Leeds muſt be apply'd to. Certainly " there never was a more notorious Bribery, and " that in a Perſon, whom we might have thought " to have been free from ſuch a Crime. Whe- " ther if you reſpect the Greatneſs of his Place, or " of his former Obligations. It is fit to ſpeak plain- " ly on ſuch Occaſions, that the Houſe ought to " endeavour to remove ſuch a Perſon from the " King's Council and Preſence; what Security can " the Nation have when we are Bought and Sold " to one another? We have ſeen our Deſigns de- " feated, our Attempts betray'd, and what Won-

A.D.1695 " der is it? Can any Man think it more ſtrange, " that our Counſels ſhould be ſold abroad, than " that Charters ſhould be ſold at home? Certainly " a Man may reaſonably believe, that he who will " ſell the Subjects, will ſell the Kingdom if he can " have a ſufficient Bribe; what Prince can be ſafe " in ſuch Counſels, which are given for private Ad- " vantage? Several Propoſals for a Remedy may " be here offer'd, as that this Houſe ſhould addreſs " his Majeſty to remove the Duke of Leeds; but " with Submiſſion, an Addreſs is too mean and too " low a thing for the Houſe to do at this Time, and " upon ſuch an Occaſion, I therefore move we " may lodge an Impeachment.

C. Said, I wonder the Gentleman who ſpoke laſt ſhou'd ſay, that which he did not believe, that that Lord ſhould have ſold our Counſels to France.

B. Reply'd, " It is with ſome Uneaſineſs I ſtand " up, but the Gentleman forces me to it, for I do " not take Pleaſure to rake in a Dunghill; I was " far from ſaying any ſuch thing, but argu'd only " from Poſſibility, that it was as reaſonable to be- " lieve one as the other. That when Honour and " Juſtice were not the Rule of Men's Actions, there " was nothing incredible, that might be for their " Advantage."

D. I ſecond and agree in the Motion for an Impeachment.

E. " God alone, who can produce Light out " of Darkneſs, can fully diſcover the dark Practices " in this Affair. Such Actions as theſe are a Ble- " miſh, if not a Scandal to the Revolution itſelf. I " agree in the Motion for an Impeachment."

F. By what Law is it a Crime to take Money at Court?

G. " If there be no Law, it is time there ſhould " be a Law to prevent it.

H. The Law of God is againſt him, and broke by him. He took an Oath as a Privy-Counſellor; Juſtice is not to be ſold by the Common Law. But there are Parliaments to puniſh ſuch Crimes, and 'tis hop'd there will be ſtill.

F. " It ſeems doubtful whether there be matter " in this Report for an Impeachment; therefore be- " fore the Houſe goes to an Impeachment, they " ought to put the Queſtion upon the Report, and " ſee whether it be a Crime."

K. Where there is no Law, there is no Tranſgreſſion.

The Queſtion was then put, and it was

Reſolv'd,

That there does appear to this Houſe, upon the Report of the Committee of both Houſes, appointed to examine the Perſons mention'd in the Report of Sir Thomas Cook's Account; that there is ſufficient Matter to Impeach Thomas Duke of Leeds, Lord-Preſident of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy-Council, of High Crimes and Miſdemeanours.

The Duke of Leeds voted to be Impeach'd

Reſolv'd,

That Thomas Duke of Leeds, &c. be Impeach'd of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors.

The Earl of Pembroke, Lord Privy-Seal, made the ſame Report to the Houſe of Lords, as Mr. Comptroller Wharton had made to the Houſe of Commons; after the Reading of which, the Duke of Leeds ſpoke as follows:

Duke of Leeds's Speech in the Houſe of Lords.

My Lords,

" AS I have formerly proteſted myſelf to be " free in this Matter, ſo I ſtill deny upon " my Faith and Honour, that I am guilty of any " ſuch Corruptions as are ſuggeſted againſt me; " and if the whole Truth were laid open, it would " tend to my Honour and Advantage. I will be " free in telling your Lordſhips now before-hand, " all that paſs'd in which I was any way concerned. " Mr. Bates did introduce Sir Baſil Firebrace to " me, and I had Conference with Sir Baſil upon " the Subject of the Eaſt-India Company, which " Firebrace was concern'd for.

" Some time after, Mr. Bates came and in- A.D.1695 " form'd me, that he was to have a Sum of Money " of Sir Baſil, and he deſir'd me to lend him one " of my Servants, Mr. Bates keeping but one " Footman, to receive the Money; ſo I lent him " Mr. Robart, I knew nothing of the Sum. But " afterwards Mr. Bates came to me, and told " me he had receiv'd 5000 Guineas, which he " offer'd to me, telling me I had been very " obliging and kind to him, and that in Acknow- " ledgment of the many Favours he had re- " ceiv'd from my Hands, he humbly deſir'd me " to accept of them, which I refus'd. Mr. Bates " preſs'd me earneſtly to take half or a quarter, " which I ſtill refus'd, declaring I would not touch " a Penny, and telling him ſince he had taken them, " I thought there was no need of returning them, " they were his own, and I wiſh'd him good luck " with them, as I remember, I did once to Mr. " Harry Savile, for whom I had a great Reſpect: " which reminds me of a Story, I muſt needs tell " your Lordſhips upon this Occaſion. When I " was Treaſurer, the Exciſe being to be farm'd, " for which many put in, the Bidders for it, who " were to give in their Propoſals ſeal'd up, having " apply'd to Mr. Savile for his Intereſt at Court, " he came to me, and deſir'd that I would tell the " Gentlemen that put in, who were ſeveral, that Mr. " Savile had ſpoke for them. What, ſaid I, would " you have me tell all of them ſo, when but one of " them is to have it? No matter for that, ſays Mr. " Savile, for whoever has it, will think I have done " him this Service, and I am ſure of a good Preſent " without more ado. So, my Lords, when the " Men came, I told them one after another, Sir, " you are very much oblig'd to Mr. Savile; Sir, Mr. " Savile has been very much your Friend. A little " while after, when the thing was over, Mr. Savile " came and thank'd me for what I had done, and " told me he had got his Preſent that he expected, " which I told him, I was glad of, and wiſh'd him " good luck with it, as I did now Mr. Bates. And " thus I was the Shadow to Mr. Savile, as I was " now to Mr. Bates."

While the Impeachment againſt the Duke of Leeds was in Agitation in the Houſe of Commons, that Duke being inform'd of it, went immediately from the Upper to the Lower-Houſe, and deſir'd Admittance, which was granted, and a Chair plac'd for him within the Bar. The Speaker told him, that the Houſe having receiv'd Information that he deſir'd to be heard, they were ready to hear him, that there was a Chair for his Grace to repoſe himſelf, and that he might pleaſe to be cover'd. Then the Duke ſate down, put on his Hat, and after a little Pauſe aroſe, uncover'd himſelf, and made the following Speech.

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the Houſe,

In the Houſe of Commons.

" IN the firſt place, I thank you heartily for this " Favour of hearing me. I had attended ſooner, " if I had had the leaſt Intimation what the Houſe " was upon. I wiſh the Diſpatch thereof had not " been ſo quick. The Occaſion of my coming is " from the two Votes; upon the Report from the " Committee of both Houſes, I did all I could to " be inform'd of the Particulars, but could not, " nor have I any Notes. I was earneſt therein, " finding myſelf concern'd, and hearing of a Re- " port, a monſtrous long Report, to the end that I " might not be under the Diſpleaſure of either or " both Houſes; it is a bold Truth, but 'tis a Truth, " this Houſe had not been ſitting but for me.

" I was formerly purſu'd by this Houſe in two " Points, for being for the French Intereſt and for Pope- " ry; I had then, if I might have been heard, juſtify'd " myſelf, as I hope I have ſince done, and ſhall by " all

A.D.1695 " all the Actions of my Life. ONE Firebrace was " introduc'd to me by the means of Mr. Bates " whom I have long known, and if I am not much " deceiv'd in him, I cannot believe that Gentleman " would have tranſacted ſuch a Matter if put up- " on it.

" The Evidence is but Hearſay, and I hope you " will not condemn on Hearſay. I would not " take up your time by entring into Particulars; but " there is a Money Part, as well as a Treaty Part; " and as to the Money Part, much of it is falſe, " what is true I have made no Secret. I can, and " do ſay, that neither directly nor indirectly, upon " my Faith and Honour, I never touch'd one Penny " of the Money.

" I obſerve a great deal of Pains have been taken " to hook and draw Men in this Matter by a Side- " Wind, and Firebrace thinks his Merit will deſerve " 10000 and 30000 l. this 5000 Guineas was no " Part of the 40000 l. The Committee call'd in " and examin'd ſeveral Witneſſes; but Firebrace, " after his firſt Hearing, deſir'd to be call'd in a- " gain himſelf, contrary to all Rules, which ſhews " at leaſt that he is a very willing Witneſs.

" I have a Thread which I hope to ſpin finer, " and make it appear that this was a Deſign laid a- " gainſt me, long before the naming of this Com- " mittee; that Warning was given me ſome time " ſince, that this Matter would be prov'd againſt " me, and that Firebrace had been told, he ſhould " be excus'd if he would charge the Duke: I ask no " Favour but your favourable Juſtice. It will be a " moſt unfortunate thing in point of time, to be " under the Diſpleaſure of this Houſe, or of the " Nation. I pray that no ſevere Senſe be put on " what will bear a candid one, and that if it may " be, the Houſe would re-conſider what is done, " or at leaſt preſerve me from Cruelty; and not let " me lie on the Rack and be blaſted, until the Par- " liament ſhall ſit again. If you will proceed, I hope " it will be ſpeedily, for I had rather want Counſel, " want Time, want any thing, than be under " yours or the Nation's Diſpleaſure. I thank you " again for this Favour, and pray if you will not " re-conſider, that this Matter may be brought to " a Determination, and that I may have at leaſt " your ſpeedy Juſtice."

This Speech being ended, and the Duke withdrawn, Mr. Comptroller attended by many Members, went up to the Houſe of Lords with the Impeachment; and the Committee who were join'd with the Lords, were order'd to prepare the Articles againſt the Lord-Preſident.

The Houſe of Commons taking the Duke's Speech into conſideration, a worthy Member ſaid,

" By this Noble Lord's Speech, the Point is " now, whether the Houſe will arraign the Com- " mittee of both Houſes, or go on with their Im- " peachment. This Noble Lord, when he came " to the Matter, would not enter into Particulars, " but paſs'd it over with Excuſe of wanting Time. " He makes no Excuſe as to the Facts: His Argu- " ment of a Contrivance was, that the 5000 Gui- " neas charg'd on him, was no part of the 40000 l. " Firebrace was to account for. But this is an Aggra- " vation of the Crime; for Sir Thomas Cook had a " double Account, one with, and one without the " 5000 Guineas, and this is an Indication, that if " there was a Contrivance, it was not by the Com- " mittee, but with Sir Thomas Cook, to ſtifle the " Enquiry and conceal the Corruption. The " ſpeedy Juſtice of the Houſe is to be wiſh'd and " deſir'd. If there is ſuch a Contrivance, ſuch a " Thread as is mention'd by this Noble Lord, 'tis " not to be doubted but the Houſe where he is im- " peach'd will clear him."

Another Member mov'd, That a Committee might be appointed to withdraw, to conſider what was to be done, in order to gratify that Lord by Speedy Juſtice. His Friend Mr. Bates's tricking and contradicting himſelf, is more than the Evidence of Firebrace. Who was his Friend? Who was his Servant? thoſe were Queſtions not to be ask'd. Monſieur Robart was a Servant of my Lord-Preſident's, and is fled. Mr. Bates ſaid, he kept the Money in his Houſe? What was become of it? Sometimes he had ſpent it? Sometimes it was in his Cloſet. He did own the Money was not in his Houſe on Sunday, but on Tueſday Morning, Monſieur Robart brought it to him; but he would never declare from whence he brought it. A.D.1695

I ſhall not inſert the Articles exhibited againſt the Duke, nor the Duke's Anſwer, the Subſtance of them is contain'd in theſe Speeches; but obſerve ſome Paſſages, which confirm the Charge, as not only Bates's contradicting himſelf, but that, " when he was examin'd, he happen'd in haſte to " reply, when a Queſtion was ask'd him about the " Money? What, my Lord's Money? Diſtinguiſhing between the 500 Guineas that were given him for his Intereſt in his Friend at St. James's, and the 5000 Guineas that were for his Friend. Add to this, Robart's taking a Paſs out immediately in the Secretary's Office, under a wrong Name, and his eſcaping to Holland. 'Tis true the Duke, after the Commons had declar'd, they could not proceed further in the Impeachment, for want of ſo material a Witneſs, ſeem'd to inſiſt much on a Determination of the Matter, and made ſeveral Speeches to that purpoſe, eſpecially after Robart was gone off. A Proclamation was publiſh'd upon Addreſs of Parliament, which bore date the 9th of May 1695, ſix Days after it was order'd, and it was not proclaim'd till the 15th of May, which ſhews by what Influence it was, that it met with no greater Diſpatch. The ſame Influence prevail'd to have the Parliament prorogu'd, when they were about charging other Perſons with Bribery; an Impeachment having been mov'd againſt Sir John Trevor, who beſides the ſhameleſs Bribe he took in the Orphan's Buſineſs, was charg'd with having a ſhare of the Eaſt-India Company's Money too. Sir Baſil Firebrace depos'd, that 10000 l. was intended for Sir Edward Seymour, Sir John Trevor and Henry Guy Eſq; who had been expell'd the Houſe for receiving a Bribe in Paunceſort's Affair alſo, and left what he made of it to a Gentleman, that has lately been very long and loud in his Harangues againſt Bribery and Corruption. Sir Baſil Firebrace ſwore further that Sir John Trevor gave him ſome hints of his Expectation: Was he not a worthy Perſon to have the Scale of Juſtice put into his Hand, and to hold the Ballance in the Court of Chancery, as Maſter of the Rolls, as long as he liv'd, after theſe Charges of Corruption ſo publickly and ſolemnly exhibited againſt him? Nay, his Friend Mr. Clive refunded 500 Guineas, which Sir John Trevor had receiv'd of the Company's Money. The Duke of Leeds would fain have had it thought, that the Proceedings againſt him was only from a Party, and out of Pique; whatever it was among the Politicians, it could not be ſaid to be Pique in the Eaſt-India Company, who order'd a Committee of their own to inſpect their Books, and ſee how their Money was embezzled. This Committee was compos'd of the moſt eminent and worthy of their Members, as

Sir John Trevor, Sir Edward Seymour and Mr. Henry Guy charg'd with Bribery and Corruption.

William Fawkner Eſq;	Nathaniel Tench Eſq;
John Ward Eſq;	Mr. Robert Marſhal.
Edward Rudge Eſq;	Sir Jeremy Sambrooke.
Mr. George Boone.	Sir Benjamin Bathurſt.
Mr. Iſaac Houblon.

Who after a ſtrict Examination of the Matter, made a Report that they could find no Account of the

A.D.1695 the Diſpoſal of 103165 l. 15 s. 5 d. the greateſt Part of which was paid to Sir Baſil Firebrace, and there was 57000 l. in the Hands of Sir Thomas Cook, unaccounted for. The 5000 Guineas were part of theſe great Sums, and the Company's Committee had gone thro' the Affair before it was brought into Parliament. The Rumour of their diſcovering of Corruption, occaſion'd the Parliament's enquiring into this Bribery and others, and the Duke of Leeds, Sir John Trevor, Mr. Henry Guy and Mr. John Hungerford, were neceſſarily brought upon the Stage.

The Orphans Affair.

The Orphans hard Caſe was this:

The Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council of the City of London, had ſeveral Years ſollicited to have a Bill paſs'd, for Payment of the Debt due to the Orphans. It grew into a great Burthen on the City, during the Magiſtracy of Moor, Pritchard, North, Rich, and the reſt, Perſecutors of Diſſenters, and Surrenderers of the Charter. Many hundred Orphans ſtarv'd for want of their Portions, which had been put into the Chamberlain's Hands on the Security of the City; but as the Courtiers in King Charles II's Reign, ſhut up the Exchequer, ſo their Tools in the City ſhut up theirs, and pleaded Bankruptcy to the Demand of the diſtreſs'd Orphans. When the Management of the City-Affairs fell into better Hands, the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council, appointed a Committee to enquire into the Orphans Affair, and think of a proper Method to relieve them. This Committee were,

Sir Thomas Stamp.	Mr. Gilbert Heathcote.
Sir Francis Child.	Mr. John Johnſon.
Sir James Houblon.	Mr. Thomas Cudden.
Sir William Hedges.	Col. Thomas Cuthbert.
Sir Henry Furneſſe.	Mr. John Harvey.
Mr. Ayres.	Mr. Daniel Dorville.

Who finding that nothing had been done after three Years troubleſome Sollicitation; that ſeveral Bills had been brought into the Houſe of Commons to relieve the Orphans, but they were always loſt, or ſo clogg'd, that they could not get a Bill thro' the Houſe in a Seſſions of Parliament; thought the moſt effectual way to prevent the ſtarving of thoſe poor Creatures, would be to give ſome Men of Intereſt what they ſhould require for it, and engage them to do for Gain, what they would not do for Juſtice. Accordingly they made proper Applications, and diſpos'd of ſeveral Sums of Money, as

To Sir John Trevor, 1000 Guineas.
To Mr. John Hungerford, 20 Guineas.
To Mr Simon Harcourt, 5 Guineas.
To Mr. Jodrell, 100 Guineas, and 60 l. 9 s. 6 d.

This Money, and ſome more that is not known, being thus diſtributed, the Orphans Bill, which would not wag before, ran thro' the Houſe with uncommon Swiftneſs; for on the 12th of February 169¾, the Money was order'd to be given to Sir John Trevor the Speaker, rnd on the 12th of March, the Orphans Bill was ſent to the Lords for their Concurrence. Three Days after the Speaker had receiv'd his comfortable Importance, as it was call'd, the Bill was brought into the Houſe by Col. Goldwel, the ſame who receiv'd 1000 l. Bribe of the Eaſt-India Company; and that Gentleman was appointed Chairman of the Committee to whom the Bill was referr'd; what he receiv'd for his Pains and Trouble is not known, but doubtleſs he had no more kindneſs for the Orphans than for the Company, and would do nothing for nothing. This Goldwel was Member for St. Edmundsbury in Suffolk, and made a great hand of his Membership, tho' 'tis likely had he not dy'd before theſe Matters were call'd in Queſtion, he had far'd no better than Sir Thomas Cook and the reſt of 'em, who were lock'd up in Priſon by Act of Parliament. Sir John Trevor did not go ſneakingly to work, nor receive his Money in a Corner, he took it in preſence of Sir Robert Clayton and Sir James Houblon, from the Hands of the Chamberlain of London. A.D.1695

The Houſe of Commons having Intimation of this Bribery, order'd a Committee to inſpect the Chamberlain's Books, and examine ſtrictly the Committee of Aldermen and Common-Council. A Report of this Affair being made to the Houſe, they came to the following Reſolution.

Reſolv'd,

That Sir John Trevor, Speaker of this Houſe, receiving a Gratuity of 1000 Guineas from the City of London, after paſſing the Orphans Bill, is guilty of a High Crime and Miſdemeanor.

Tho' Sir John Trevor put his Name to the Votes, printed by Leak his Jacobite Printer, in which was this Reſolution; yet he did not think fit to attend the Houſe, who upon that elected Paul Foley Eſq; their Speaker; and

Reſolv'd,

That Sir John Trevor, late Speaker of this Houſe, being guilty of a High Crime and Miſdemeanour, by receiving a Gratuity of 1000 Guineas, &c. be Expell'd this Houſe.

Sir John Trevor the Speaker expell'd the Houſe for Bribery.

And two Days after, March 18th, 1694, they took into Conſideration the Merits of Mr. John Hungerford, who never ſpar'd his Lungs when any ſuch good Bills, as the Schiſm and Occaſional Bills were paſſing. He was Chairman of the Committee of the whole Houſe, when the Orphans Bill was committed, and having been very officious in forwarding it, the City was ſo grateful as to preſent him with a ſmall Purſe of Guineas; but the Houſe not approving of this Gratitude of theirs,

Reſolv'd,

That Mr. Hungerford, a Member of this Houſe, having receiv'd 20 Guineas for his Pains and Services, as Chairman of the Committee, to whom the Orphans Bill was committed, is guilty of a High Crime and Miſdemeanour.

Mr. John Hungerford expell'd the Houſe for Bribery.

Reſolv'd thereupon,

That Mr. Hungerford be expell'd this Houſe.

We have mention'd the chuſing Mr. Foley Speaker, which however was not without Oppoſition. Sir Thomas Littleton had at firſt the Majority of the Houſe; but Mr. Comptroller Wharton ſpeaking for him with more than ordinary Zeal, ſeveral of thoſe Members who inclin'd to chuſe him, having taken to themſelves the Name of the Country-Party, fell off from Sir Thomas Littleton, as too much a Courtier, and thereby gave Mr. Foley the major Vote.

How Mr. Foley came to be Speaker.

The Houſe of Commons order'd other Perſons concern'd in the Orphans Caſe to attend, as Mr. Charles Nois, Mr. James Smith, Mr. George Finch, Mr. Dowſe, Mr. Hern, Mr. Chiſwell and Mr. Chadwick; and order'd Nois into Cuſtody, for reporting he had been out ſeveral great Sums of Money to Members of Parliament about that Affair, and not being able to give Proof of any upon Examination.

This Humour of Complaining, as Biſhop Kennet calls it, went ſo far, that Complaint was made in the Houſe of Peers, as if the Fleet was ſent to the Streights to be ſold to the French; but the Lords after a Debate, inſtead of giving ear to it, voted an Addreſs of Thanks to his Majeſty, for ſending the Fleet thither. To which his Majeſty was pleas'd to return this moſt gracious Anſwer; I am very ſenſible how much our Safety depends upon our Strength at Sea, and therefore cannot but deſire the increaſe of it.

An unjuſt Complaint about the Fleet.

The Lords Addreſs of Thanks.

The King's Anſwer.

And I ſhall not be wanting to do what is in my power, as to the Matters mention'd in your Addreſs.

Which was to have a Naval Strength in the Mediterranean-Sea, during the War; and other Naval Strength, ſufficient to guard our Coaſts, our Plantations

A.D.1695 tations in America, to protect Trade, and to annoy our Enemies.

At the latter end of the last Year, the King knighted Sir John Sweetapple and Sir William Cole, Sheriffs of London; Sir Thomas Day, Mayor, and William Daines Esq; one of the Sheriffs of Bristol; who were afterwards, for many Years, Representatives in Parliament for that City. Sir Richard Hart and Sir John Knight, who were Members for Bristol before them, being, besides their Disaffection to the Government, so poor in Purse and in Spirit, that they demanded the usual Allowance for Citizens in Parliament, and threaten'd to sue the City for it. Captain Elliot, Commander of a Ship belonging to Jamaica, having made his Escape from the French, and giving timely Intelligence of the Design of the Enemy on that Island; his Majesty was pleas'd to order him a Medal and Chain of 100 l. value, and 500 l. in Money, as a Reward of his Service, and that he should be recommended to the Lords of the Admiralty, for an Employment in the Navy-Royal.

Poor Spirit of Sir John Knight and Sir Richard Hart the two Bristol Members.

Capt. Elliot's Services and Reward.

I must not omit the Funeral Solemnity, for the Royal Corpse of that glorious Saint Queen Mary, of which I was a mournful Witness. On the 29th of February, was publish'd this Order of Council:

Queen Mary's Funeral.

On Tuesday the 5th of March, being appointed for the Funeral of her late most gracious Majesty of blessed Memory, the biggest Bell in every Cathedral, College and Parochial Church of England and Wales; shall be toll'd from the Hour of Nine till Ten in the Forenoon, and from Two of the Clock till Three, and from Five till Six in the Afternoon of the same Day.

The Funeral-Procession began from Whitehall, all the way from thence to Westminster-Abbey being boarded, and rail'd in, and cover'd with Black Cloth.

The Proceeding was first the Knight-Marshal's Men and Deputy; three Hundred poor Women in Mourning-Gowns and Hoods; then the Banner of Union, several Classes of their Majesties Servants; the Children and Gentlemen of the Chappel-Royal; more of their Majesties Servants; Chaplains to their Majesties; Aldermen of London; other of their Majesties Servants; the Lord-Mayor of London; the House of Commons in long Cloaks, with their Speaker, having the Mace born before him, and his Train held up; the House of Peers in their Robes, with their Speaker, the Lord-Keeper, having the Mace and Purse carry'd before him, and his Train born up; the Banner of Chester, Cornwall and Wales, born by the Lord Spencer, the Lord Willoughby of Eresby, and the Lord Viscount Longueville; the Banners of Ireland and Scotland, by the Earls of Montrath and Selkirk; the Banners of England and France, quarterly of England, and the great Banner born by the Earl of Denbigh, the Earl of Stamford, and the Earls of Bridgwater and Suffolk. Then follow'd the Mourning-Horse led by the Lord Viscount Villers, Master of the Horse to her late Majesty, attended by two Equerries; the Helmet and Crest, Target and Sword, and Surcoat of Arms, born by Officers of Arms; follow'd by the Lord Marquis of Winchester, her late Majesty's Lord-Chamberlain; then the Queen's Body in a Purple Velvet Coffin, with a rich Cloth of Gold Pall, and upon it the Crown, Orb and Scepters on a Cushion; one of the Queen's Bed-Chamber Women sitting at the Feet, and another at the Head, in an open Chariot richly adorn'd, drawn by eight Horses, close cover'd with Purple Velvet, and adorn'd with Escutcheons and Feathers, six Bannerolls on each side, born by six Baronets; the Pall being supported by the Earls of Derby and Kent, the Marquiss of Normanby, the Dukes of Northumberland, Somerset and Norfolk; the Dutchess of Somerset Chief-Mourner, supported by the Earl of Pembroke, Lord Privy-Seal, the Duke of Leeds, Lord-President of the Council; the Dutchesses of St. Albans and Southampton, Supporters to the Train, assisted by the Queen's Vice-Chamberlain; Assistants of the Chief-Mourner, were two Dutchesses, twelve Countesses, and four Baronesses; then the Ladies of the Bed-Chamber; then the Maids of Honour; then the Bed-Chamber Women, all in the deepest Mourning. And it was remarkable, that as this Solemn Procession mov'd slowly on, about the middle of King-street, as the open Chariot with the Royal Corpse in it, stopp'd on some Occasion; there fell a thin Snow upon that and the Ladies that follow'd it; which the innumerable Concourse of People, crouding the whole length of the Procession, interpreted as an Emblem of the white Soul, that had lately animated that Royal Body; and immediately upon it there was a fresh flow of Tears from all their Eyes, and Sighs and the deepest Sorrow from all their Hearts; to which the dead Beat of the Drums, and the doleful hoarse Sound of the artful Shore's Trumpet, contributed not a little. The several Parts of the Proceeding were attended by the Kings and other Officers of Arms, and the whole clos'd with the Band of Gentlemen Pensioners and Yeomen of the Guard. A.D.1695

The two Houses of Parliament assist at it.

When the Body was taken out of the Chariot at the Door of the Abbey-Church, a Canopy of Purple Velvet was carry'd over it by the Gentlemen of the Privy-Chamber, and the Crown, Orb and Scepter on the Cushion, carry'd by Clarencieux King of Arms. The Dean and Prebendaries, with the Choir of Westminster, attended at the Entrance of the Church, which was illuminated with a great Number of Lights, and proceeded before the Body, which was deposited under a magnificent Mausoleum, erected in the middle of the Cross of that Church, and there remain'd during the Service and Sermon, preach'd by Archbishop Tenison, as has been said already. The Chief-Mourner and the rest of the Ladies that went in the Procession, were plac'd about the Body; and the House of Peers and House of Commons were seated on each Side. After Sermon, the late Queen's Secretary, and Treasurer, Master of the Horse, and Lord-Chamberlain; the Dean and Prebendaries of Westminster, and the Choirs of the Abbey-Church and Chappel-Royal, with the Officers of Arms, and those who bore the Atchievements and Regalia; proceeded before the Body to King Henry VIIth's Chappel, attended by the Supporters of the Pall, and follow'd by the Chief-Mourner. The Dean of Westminster perform'd the Office of Burial, which ended, Garter proclaim'd the Royal Styles, and the Body was interr'd in a Vault on the South-side of that Chappel.

The King about this time issu'd out Injunctions to the Archbishops, to be communicated by them to the Bishops and Clergy; which relating to Ordinations and Canons, are Matter for Ecclesiastical Story; and accordingly I leave it to the Ecclesiastical Writers.

On the 22d of April, his Majesty gave the Royal Assent, to the Act for Annuities; that for Duties on Marriages, Births and Burials; that for Duties on Coffee, Tea and Chocolate; for the Transport-Service; and other Acts, Publick and Private. After which his Majesty spoke as follows:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I take this Occasion to tell you, that the Season of the Year is so far advanc'd, and the Circumstances of Affairs are so pressing, that I very earnestly recommend to you, the speedy dispatching such Business as you think of most Importance for the Publick Good, because I must put an end to this Session in a few Days.

The next Day Sir Henry Goodrick acquainted the House of Commons, that their Address for obliging the Colonels and other Officers employ'd in the Reduction of Ireland, to account for what Money they had receiv'd to pay the Inferior Officers and Soldiers, had been presented to the King,

A.D.1695 who was pleaſed to anſwer, That he had already given Orders, as well in Flanders as in England, for the doing what is mention'd in the Addreſs; and that ſome Officers, who neglected to comply with the Directions, had been caſhier'd; however, that he will repeat thoſe Orders, under the ſevereſt Penalties to ſuch as ſhall diſobey them. Mr. Comptroller Wharton acquainted the Houſe the ſame Day, that their Addreſs had been preſented to his Majeſty, praying, "That his Majeſty, in his great Wiſdom, wou'd "pleaſe to take care for the future, that this Kingdom "be put upon an equal Foot and Proportion with the "Allies, in bearing the Charge of the preſent War." And that his Majeſty was pleaſed to anſwer in theſe Words, In this, as in every Thing elſe, I ſhall always endeavour to have a due Regard to the Intereſt, and to the Honour of the Nation. There was then, as when Mr. Robert Harley was about breaking the Confederacy, an affected Clamour of the vaſt Diſproportion between the Engliſh Charge, and that of the other Allies. At the ſame time, that the Dutch were in the ſame Tone with reſpect to themſelves, and pretended, that their Proportion of the Charge of the War was greater than that of any other of the Confederates, not excepting the Engliſh, all Things conſider'd: and the very great Debt they groan'd, and do ſtill groan under, looks ſomething like it. But the Party had always a Word given them to ground a Clamour upon; it was the Church immediately after the Revolution, then the Taxes, then the Loſſes at Sea, then the ſending Money abroad, then their being impos'd on by the Allies, then a Standing Army, then the Partition Treaties, then a new War; and after the King's Death, Church again; whenever the Leaders of them were not the Leaders of the Nation.

The ſeveral Cries of the Tories to raiſe Clamours.

The Eaſt-India Company's Buſineſs was ſtill a Matter of Inquiry and Debate in both Houſes; but the Commons did not think fit to proceed to the Trial of the Duke of Leeds upon the Impeachment, 'till they cou'd come at Robarts, who was the Agent for the 5000 Guineas. Upon which the Lord-Preſident ſaid in the Houſe of Peers; "My Lords, if "this Man be inſiſted upon as a material Evidence, "and my Trial is to be delay'd 'till this Perſon is "forth-coming, when am I likely to be try'd? I "humbly move your Lordſhips, that you will come "to ſome Reſolution, that if this Matter be not "immediately proceeded upon, ſo that I may be "tried before the End of this Seſſion, the Impeach-"ment may be diſcharg'd." To which ſome Lords cried Well-moved; but the King's Coming to the Houſe prevented any further Reſolution, as it did an Impeachment againſt Sir John Trevor, which was on the Anvil.

During this Seſſion of Parliament, that great Project of calling in the clipp'd and adulterated Coin, and recoining all the current Caſh of the Kingdom, was happily effected by the indefatigable Care and happy Contrivance of Mr. Charles Montague, one of the Lords of the Treaſury. The current Silver had for many Years been ſo adulterated and clipp'd, that five Pounds in Silver Specie were ſcarce worth forty Shillings, according to Standard: Nay, ſo enormous was this Grievance become, that I knew a Maſter of a Ship, who received of a Merchant 35 l. in Half-Crowns, which being to pay to a Goldſmith in Lombard-Street, there was but one Half-Crown in the 35 l. which he wou'd take, and that was a mill'd Half-Crown, the reſt being Iron and other baſe Money, clipp'd too, as if it had been Silver. This Miſchief grew upon the People by the Concurrence of ſome Traders, that made a a Market of it; nay, ſome who pretended not only to great Honeſty, but to Sanctity, encourag'd young Men, Merchant's and Tradeſmen's Apprentices, who had great Receipts of Money, to bring them broad Money and take their clipt, for which they allow'd 10, 15, and 20 per Cent. and by this Practice an Alderman's Apprentice aſſured me, when the Trade was over, he got 4 or 500 l. a year, moſt of which was by dealing with a noted Banker in Lombard-Street, one M.———, who, tho' dead long ſince, I forbear to name further, the Villainy being ſuch an Infamy to his Memory. The Nation had ſuffer'd moſt grievouſly by this Evil, and the Cure of it could be no longer delay'd, without apparent and inevitable Ruin to the Publick, and an Obſtruction to all Trade, Foreign and Domeſtick. Under this Neceſſity the Houſe of Commons, January the 8th, appointed a Committee to receive Propoſals, How to prevent the clipping of the Coin of this Kingdom for the future, and the Exportation of Silver. For the Error is National, that Silver is not a Commodity like Tin, Copper, or even Gold, to be barter'd for other Commodities, but is to be kept all within our Iſland, and to paſs only from one Briton to another in Shops, Markets, and Fairs. At this Juncture, the Exportation of Silver was prejudicial, becauſe the reſtoring the current Coin to Standard, was abſolutely neceſſary for reſtoring Credit, without which Commerce cannot ſubſiſt; and almoſt all the current Coin was now Iron, Braſs, or Copper, waſh'd or thinly plated over.

A vulgar Error about Exportation of Silver.

Mr. Montague's Project to recoin the Money.

Silver Money clipp'd away to a third part of its Value.

The Committee for Coin having ſate ſeveral times, Mr. Scobel, their Chairman, at laſt reported their Opinion; 1. That the beſt way to prevent the clipping the Silver Coin, was to new-coin the ſame into mill'd Money. 2. That 100,000 l. was a ſufficient Sum to make good the Deficiency of the preſent clipp'd Coin of this Kingdom. 3. That the Money hereafter to be coin'd ſhou'd be of the preſent Weight and Fineneſs. 4. That the Crown-piece ſhould go for 5 s. 6 d. and the Half-Crown for 2 s. 9 d. 5. That all Money to be coin'd under the Denomination of the Half-Crown, ſhould have a Remedy of 6 d. for the Ounce. 6. That for as much of the preſent Coin as any Perſon brought into the Mint, he ſhou'd have Weight for Weight, and the Overplus by a Ticket at per Cent. on a Fund to be appropriated for that purpoſe. 7. That the preſent Laws againſt coining be enforced by ſome Additions. 8. That all Perſons, whoſe Profeſſions require ſuch like Tools or Engines, that may be made uſe of for Coining or Clipping, be oblig'd to regiſter their Names and Places of Abode, and that it ſhould be penal on ſuch as ſhould neglect to do the ſame. 9. That it be penal on all ſuch Perſons as give more for any Silver Coin than it ought to go for by Law. 10. That it be Penal on all ſuch Perſons on whom Clippings are found. 11. That no Preſſes, ſuch as are us'd for Coining, be in any other Place than his Majeſty's Mint. 12. That it be Penal in all ſuch Perſons as ſhall import any clipp'd or counterfeit Money. 13. That it be Penal in any Perſon to export Engliſh Bullion, and the Proof to be upon the Exporter. 14. That it be Penal in any Perſon to counterfeit any Foreign Mark upon Bullion. All which Reſolutions being taken into Conſideration, the Houſe agreed to moſt of them, and inſerted them as Amendments into a Bill ſent down from the Lords, for preventing the Clipping and Counterfeiting the current Coin of this Kingdom. To which Amendments the Lords gave their Concurrence, and the Act had the Royal Aſſent. But of this more hereafter.

The Bill for Free and Impartial Proceedings in Parliament was thrown out of the Houſe of Commons after the third Reading. A Bill for regulating Trials in Caſes of High-Treaſon paſt that Houſe; and having been amended by the Lords, it occaſion'd ſeveral Conferences and Debates between the two Houſes, and remain'd unfiniſh'd. A Bill for Regiſtring Deeds, Conveyances, and Wills was obſtructed by the Lawyers in the Houſe of Commons; to uſe Biſhop Kennet's Terms, and the Reaſon he gives for it, is much to the Scandal of that Profeſſion, becauſe it tended to abridge Law-Suits, and would be to

The Lawyers oppoſe the Regiſtring of Deeds.

A.D.1695 Bills dropt or rejected.

to their Prejudice: if they had no other Reaſon for it, the Houſe had better have parted with them than with the Bill. A Bill to diſable Perſons from voting in Elections of Members to ſerve in Parliament, who ſhould refuſe to take the Oaths to the Government, a moſt reaſonable Bill: Thoſe, who refus'd to give the Government that Security for their Allegiance, ought not to have had any Truſt under it, and a Vote for Members of Parliament is a very conſiderable one; but it never came to a ſecond Reading. A Bill to veſt the forfeited Eſtates in Ireland in his Majeſty, which was read twice. A Bill to regulate Printing-Preſſes was dropp'd. A Bill requiring certain Perſons to take the Oaths to his Majeſty was ſent from the Lords to the Commons, and by them rejected after the ſecond Reading. The ſame Fate had a Bill for naturalizing Foreign Seamen. A Bill to oblige James Craggs and Richard Harnage to diſcover how ſome of the Money for cloathing the Army had been diſpos'd of: And a Bill to puniſh Tracy Pauncefort, and his Brother Edward Pauncefort, having been read three times by the Commons, was order'd to lie upon the Table.

The King came to the Houſe of Peers, May 3, and gave the Royal Aſſent to the Act for Duties on Glaſs Wares, Coals, and Culm. An Act for a general Pardon. An Act to prevent counterfeiting and clipping the Coin. An Act for impriſoning Sir Thomas Cook, Sir Baſil Firebrace, Charles Bates Eſq; and James Craggs, and reſtraining them from alienating their Eſtates: But a Clauſe was inſerted to enable Sir Baſil Firebrace, who was then about marrying his Daughter to the Earl of Denbigh, to give her a Sum not exceeding 20,000 l. in Portion.

His Majeſty clos'd this Seſſion with the following Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I Am come to give you Thanks for the Sup-
" plies provided for carrying on the War, in " which we are engaged; and at the ſame Time
" to conclude this Seſſion, which cannot be con" tinued longer without manifeſt Prejudice to the " Ends for which theſe Supplies are given; the
" Seaſon of the Year making it ſo neceſſary for me
" to be abroad, that it were to be wiſhed our Bu-
" ſineſs at home wou'd have allow'd me to have " been there ſooner. I will take care to place the " Adminiſtration of Affairs, during my Abſence,
" in ſuch Perſons, on whoſe Care and Fidelity I
" can entirely depend. And I doubt not, my Lords
" and Gentlemen, but every one of you, in your
" ſeveral Stations, will be aſſiſting to them; this " is what I require of you, and that you be more
" than ordinarily vigilant in preſerving the publick
" Peace."

Then the Lord-Keeper prorogued the Parliament to the 18th of June. And his Majeſty was pleas'd the ſame Day to declare in Council, that he had appointed,

Lords Juſtices.

Thomas Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury,
Sir John Somers, Lord-Keeper of the Great-Seal,
Thomas Earl of Pembroke, Lord Privy-Seal,
William Duke of Devonſhire, Lord-Steward of the Houſhold,
Charles Duke of Shrewsbury, one of his Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State,
Charles Earl of Dorſet, Lord-Chamberlain of the Houſhold,
Sidney Lord Godolphin, Firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury,

To be Lords-Juſtices of England, for the Adminiſtration of the Government during the King's Abſence. He alſo appointed Sir William Trumball to be Secretary of State, in the room of Sir John Trenchard deceas'd; Henry Lord Capel, Lord-Deputy of Ireland. About the ſame time he created William de Naſſau, Seigneur de Zuleſtein, Earl of Rochford; and Ford Lord Grey, Earl of Tankerville; who, together with the Duke of Schonberg, Peregrine Bertie Vice-Chamberlain to his Majeſty, and John Smith Eſq; one of the Lords of the Treaſury, were ſworn of the Privy-Council. Sir Thomas Trevor was made Attorney, and Sir John Hawles Sollicitor-General. And three Days after, May 12, the King went aboard the William-and-Mary Yatch at Graveſend, attended by the Duke of Ormond, the Earls of Eſſex and Portland, and ſo few others of the Nobility, that it reflects on the Britiſh Name to have no more of them to mention in Hiſtory, attending their Sovereign in the Purſuit of true Glory, the Depreſſing Tyranny, and preſerving the Liberty of Nations. His Majeſty ſail'd from the Nore on Monday Morning, being convoy'd by Sir George Rook with a Squadron of 18 Men of War, and the next Morning landed at Orange-Polders, din'd with Monſ. Requenburg, and came that Evening to the Hague; where having concerted proper Meaſures for the Campaign with the States and their Miniſters, he diverted himſelf ſome Days at Loo; and the 27th of May went from Breda to Ghent, where the Burghers receiv'd him with the ſame Marks of Honour and Reſpect, as they were wont to pay to the Dukes of Burgundy, and the Kings of Spain, their Sovereigns. A.D 1695

Honours and Preferments.

The War in Flanders.

The Confederate Army in Flanders was this Year more numerous than the French, which, on the Death of Luxemburgh, was commanded by the Mareſchal de Villeroy. His Majeſty order'd the Army of the Allies to be divided into two Parts, the one to encamp at Arſeel, and to be commanded by himſelf, and under him by the old Prince of Vaudemont. The other to encamp at Ninove, under the Elector of Bavaria, and the Duke of Holſtein-Ploen. There is Reaſon to believe the King's Deſign at the very Beginning of the Campaign was to lay ſiege to Namur, one of the ſtrongeſt Places not only in the Netherlands, but in the World: For the Elector of Bavaria had Orders to detach the Earl of Athlone with 40 Squadrons of Horſe towards Louvain; after which, his Majeſty march'd from Arſeel to Beccelar; and on the 3d of June, he view'd the Enemy's Lines from the Lys to the Schelde, where he found the main Body of their Army encamp'd within them. The Elector of Bavaria march'd alſo from Ninove, and encamp'd near the French Lines, to draw their Strength that way; and the Duke of Wirtemberg attack'd Fort Knock, but the Communication being open between that Fort and the French Troops under Montal, the Enemy cou'd have ſupply'd it ſo well with Men, that it muſt have taken up a great deal of Time, not then to be ſpar'd, to maſter it; ſo the Enterprize was given over.

Villeroy keeping cloſe within his Lines, which were not to be forc'd without great Diſadvantage, the King reſolv'd to form the Siege of Namur, and communicated his Scheme for it to the Elector of Bavaria, who highly approved it. Accordingly the Earl of Athlone being join'd by the Troops of Brandenburgh and Liege, June 28, march'd towards Charleroy; and the King himſelf leaving the Troops he commanded in Perſon at Rouſelaer, under the Command of Prince Vaudemont, advanc'd with a ſtrong Guard towards the Maeſe. Theſe Motions put the Enemy in Suſpence, whether the Confederates deſign'd to attack Namur or Charleroy. The latter was moſt fear'd by the Marquiſs de Harcourt, who therefore re-inforced that Garriſon; but the Earl of Athlone having paſt the Sambre at Caſſelet below Charleroy, marched again down that River towards Namur; and being re-inforced by a Body of Horſe and Dragoons from the Elector of Bavaria's Camp, took all the Poſts from the Sambre to the Maeſe; while the Baron de Haden, with the Brandenburgh and Liege Forces, inveſted the Place between the Maeſe and the Sambre. Another Detachment was order'd to inveſt Namur on the Coudros Side; but their not coming in Time, by reaſon of the Difficulty

A.D.1695 culty of the Ground, and the vaſt Extent of the Circumvallations, gave Mareſchal Boufflers an Opportunity to throw himſelf into the Place with ſix Regiments of the beſt Dragoons in the Army, whom he diſmounted, and ſent their Horſes back the ſame way they came. Then the whole Garriſon conſiſted of no ſmall Army, being at leaſt 15000 Men, commanded by a Mareſchal of France, and another very good General the Count de Guiſcard, aſſiſted by the moſt experienced Officers and Engineers in the French King's Service.

Nor muſt we omit remembring, that this Fortreſs, when King William laid Siege to it, was another ſort of a Place than when Lewis XIV. came to make his pompous Entry into it three Years before; Vauban, Megrigni, and his Maſter-Engineers, had added to the Fortifications more than what they found it wanted, when the French King took Poſſeſſion of it. As for inſtance,

This Place, when in the Hands of the Spaniards, was indeed but weak, as being abſolutely commanded by a ſteep Hill, which hangs over it from the Gate de Fer to that of St. Nicholas; ſo that when the French came before it, they cou'd bring down their Batteries to the bottom of the Hill, and even to open their Trenches at the Foot of it near the Maeſe; but the French had now a detach'd Baſtion upon the Aſcent of the Hill before St. Nicholas Gate, all of Stone-Work, with a Caſemot upon it Bomb-proof; their Counterſcarp was of Free-Stone, and the cover'd Way the ſame, which pointed juſt upon the Top of the Hill; ſo that no Cannon from the Plain cou'd bear upon this Work on the Hill: but the Confederates were neceſſitated to batter in reverſe from the other ſide of the Maeſe, from the Brandenburgh Batteries, which requir'd ſome Time before they cou'd bring them to the Water-ſide. But this was not all, for the French had made two or three detach'd Baſtions of the ſame Work upon the Right towards the Gate de Fer, juſt upon the Brow of the Hill; and at the Foot of the Hill before the Gate de Fer, and between the Hill and the Brook of Weerderin they had a fourth, which defended the Avenues between the Hills to this Gate. The Plain upon theſe Hills was fortify'd with a double cover'd Way palliſado'd, to defend thoſe detach'd Baſtions towards the Village of Bouge; and when the Confederates were about to attack the Place, they were working at a third cover'd Way nearer to the Brow of the Hill, juſt before theſe Works. Thus the Town of Namur, that before was but weak, was now by theſe additional Fortifications exceeding ſtrong, and held out longer than the Caſtle; tho' the Caſtle, when the French King came for this Conqueſt, held out three Times as long as the Town. The French thought fit to attack the Caſtle and Cohorn upon the Top of the Hill between the Sambre and the Maeſe, and this they afterwards fortify'd with ſo much Care and Art, that they thought it impregnable on that Side. Cohorn, or William-Fort, fell into their Hands, by driving their Trenches round the Work along the bottom, between it and the Terra-Nova, or upper Caſtle; which Work being ſurrounded, and all manner of Communication cut off, was forc'd to ſurrender. But the French, to prevent ſuch a Management for the future, built a ſtrong Stone Redoubt juſt upon the Top of the Hill, between the Cohorn and Terra-Nova, with a Caſemot upon it Bomb-Proof, and this Work commanded all the Bottom upon the Sambre, before which Work they had alſo made a very good cover'd Way, palliſado'd from the Angle of the Gorge of the Cohorn to the Brink of the Hill upon the Maeſe; to which we muſt add a very good Half-Moon they had made on the Curtain of the Horn-Work of the Terra-Nova, beſides their fortifying of the Devil's-Houſe, which flanks the Sides of the Cohorn towards the Maeſe with a ſtrong Stone Redoubt.

The Strength of the Place when the French King took it.

And when King William attack'd it.

Before the French took it, this Place had only a ſimple Retrenchment about it, and yet it held out four or five Days. From the upper Part of the Cohorn, which is towards the Maeſe, they had a good cover'd Way about the before-mention'd Redoubt, to the Edge of the Hill from the Maeſe. They had undertaken prodigious Lines, cut through a Rock all along the Top of the Hill, near an Engliſh Mile in length, terminating againſt the Edge of the Hill towards the Sambre, and the ſame Hill towards the Maeſe with two Redoubts at each End. The Line was finiſh'd, and the Redoubt towards the Maeſe very forward, but that towards the Sambre was but juſt begun when the Confederates came before the Place; ſo they made it up with Faſcines. In a word, the Caſtle was ſo ſtrongly fortify'd on the Top of the Hill with all theſe Outworks, that it wou'd have been a very tedious Piece of Work for the Confederates to have attack'd it this way. The weak Side of the Caſtle and Cohorn was towards the Sambre and the Town, and the French had not ſo well provided for an Attack on that Side. Thus all theſe prodigious Works fell into the Hands of the Confederates, in leſs Time than the French had taken the Place before, tho' then far inferior to what it was now in ſtrength; for after the Confederates had taken the Town, we ſhall find the new prodigious Works did not hold out long. A.D.1695

It was neceſſary to ſet theſe Things in a good Light, that the Reflections of thoſe, who envy'd King William's Glory in this Conqueſt, may not diminiſh it. It was their Cry then, the French King took it in a Month, King William was two Months about it. The French King had an Army ſufficient to carry on the Siege, and another to outnumber that of the Allies. The French King had a much weaker Town and Garriſon to attack, the latter conſiſting of ſcarce half the Number of the Garriſon, when King William attack'd it with all its new and impregnable Outworks; while Villeroy, with the French Army much ſuperior to his own, without Prince Vaudemont's ſeparate Body, was all the while almoſt within Ken of his Trenches to diſturb him. However, with all theſe Diſadvantages, the glorious King William took the Town and Caſtle of Namur in 64 Days; and Lewis XIV. with all the Advantages of Power without, and Weakneſs, if not Treachery, within, was 46 Days in taking them.

We come now to the Particulars of the Siege: The Confederates open'd their Trenches the 3d of July without any great Diſturbance from the Beſieg'd, and their Guns began to play from a Battery of three Pieces of Cannon from the Village of Bouge againſt the old Tower, and from the Edge of the Height of St. Barbe. On the 4th, a Detachment was ſent from the Confederate Army to re-inforce the Prince of Vaudemont, upon Information that Villeroy deſign'd to attack him with the French Army, which had been re-inforc'd from the Garriſons, and by Troops from other Bodies: The Prince had 50 Batallions of Foot, and 51 Squadrons of Horſe and Dragoons; Villeroy had double that Number, paſt the Lys, and advanc'd to St. Barbe, of whoſe Motions the Prince being aware, he made a Movement from his Camp at Wawter-gaem, to take up the riſing Ground of Arſeel, where he reſolv'd to expect the Mareſchal de Villeroy, who came up to him, July 14, time enough to have attack'd him; but not doing it, and the Prince being inform'd of Montal's Motion to join the French Army, and ſurround him, he wiſely alter'd his Reſolution of Fighting, and reſolv'd upon, contriv'd, and executed a Retreat, which gain'd him more Honour than the moſt ſignal Victory could have done. He order'd all the Baggage to load immediately in the Morning, and to march to Ghent; the Cannon was then drawn off from the Batteries, and ſent to Deynſe, with ſo much Secrecy, that the Enemy did not perceive it:

Prince Vaudemont's admirable for Retreat.

A.D.1695 for the Artillery moving leiſurely from the Batteries all the Afternoon, the French took it for the ordinary Motion. Then the two Lines of Foot march'd upon the left along the Retrenchment, to cover which the Prince order'd a Body of Horſe to poſt themſelves in the Retrenchment, as it was quitted by the Foot, who march'd out at the ſame time with their Pikes and Colours trailing; and while they were filing off, Prince Vaudemont order'd Monſ. Overkirk with the Right of the Horſe, interlin'd with Collier's Brigade of Foot, to form a Line falling towards Caneghen, extending himſelf from the Windmill of Arſeel towards Wink; which Motion was made to make Montal believe, that this Line was deſign'd for the oppoſing his Attempt upon the Rear of the Prince's Right, which ſeem'd to be his View upon his Junction with Villeroy. Things being thus excellently well order'd, the Prince of Vaudemont's Army diſappear'd at once, and Villeroy found himſelf the Dupe of a greater General, who got ſafe with his Forces under the Walls of Ghent; the French having to little purpoſe follow'd him, and endeavour'd to interrupt his Retreat, which being perform'd with ſo much Conduct and Succeſs, King William expreſt his Senſe of it in the following Letter to Prince Vaudemont:

King William's Letter to him upon it.

Couſin,

YOU cannot believe how much your Letter of Yeſterday Noon, which I receiv'd this Morning by Break of Day, diſturbed me: On the other ſide, how joyful I was upon Receipt of the other Letter, dated from Mary-Kirk near Ghent, this Day at three in the Morning. I am much oblig'd to you, for in this Retreat you have given greater Marks of a General, conſummate in the Art of War, than if you had gain'd a Victory; I abſolutely approve of your Conduct upon this Occaſion, and I hope it will hinder the Enemy from undertaking any more of the ſame Nature. Nevertheleſs I ſhall be impatient 'till I know which way they bend their March, ſince this Blow has failed them.

I remain always, &c.

In the mean while the Siege of Namur went on vigorouſly. The Beſieg'd made two or three ſmall Sallies, as if rather to ſhow themſelves than to damnify the Beſiegers, but with no Succeſs. That of the 18th of July with 1200 Horſe and four Squadrons of Dragoons was more conſiderable, but after a ſharp Encounter they too were beaten back with the Loſs of 200 Men. The King reſolv'd on the ſame Day to ſtorm the advanc'd Works and Traverſes of the Enemy. Accordingly Major-General Ramſey and the Lord Cutts, at the head of five Battalions of Foot-Guards, Engliſh, Scotch, and Dutch, began the Onſet on the Right; while Major-General Saliſch, with eight Regiments and 9000 Pioneers, inſulted the Enemy on the Left. To defend themſelves from this Attack, the Beſieged brought out eight Battalions, a great Detachment of Dragoons, and all their Grenadiers; the Diſpute was obſtinate for two Hours, but at laſt the French were driven out of their Works, and purſu'd to the very Gates of the Town. The King, who according to his Cuſtom remain'd upon the Place during the whole Action, was ſo well pleaſed with the Bravery and excellent Order of his Men, that laying his Hand over the Elector of Bavaria's Shoulder, he ſaid to him more than once in a way of Tranſport, See my brave Engliſh, See my brave Engliſh!

King William praiſes the Engliſh Soldiers. The Baſeneſs and Ingratitude of the Tories to him.

Let us here pauſe a little, and take a view of this Monarch looking with Extaſy on the great Actions of his Engliſh Soldiers, winning for himſelf and them immortal Glory; and then let us take a view of a baſe ungrateful Faction ſix or ſeven Years after, who procur'd out of ſpite to his glorious Memory that Affront upon him of RETRIEVING the Honour of the Nation, which was wickedly inſinuated to have been loſt by him. A.D.1695

Great Rains falling about this time, the Beſiegers were much incommoded, and their Approaches interrupted by them. However, on the 25th of July they ply'd their Batteries with Succeſs, rais'd new ones, and ſet on Miners to the Redoubt of Bellart near St. Nicholas Gate. The next day the Captain, who commanded in it, ſurrender'd at Diſcretion. The King going into the Trenches, perceiv'd the Batteries had made great Breaches in St. Nicholas Baſtion, the Demi-Baſtion of St. Roche, and at the end of the Counterſcarp of the Town, and order'd all things to be diſpos'd for the general Attack of the firſt Counterſcarp, which was perform'd towards five a-Clock that Afternoon, July 27, in this manner; the Engliſh and Scots commanded by Major-General Ramſey, and Brigadier the Lord George Hamilton, came out of the Trenches to the Right, and attack'd the Point of the foremoſt Counterſcarp, which enclos'd the Sluys or Water-ſtop. The Enemy receiv'd them with a furious Diſcharge, which however hinder'd them not in their Advances; and maugre the terrible Eruption of three or four Fougades of Bombs, which lay buried in the Glacis, they forc'd their Way, and drove the Enemy from that Counterſcarp: But it unfortunately happen'd, that while the Engliſh were making a Lodgment, ſome Sacks of Wool took fire, by which moſt of that Lodgment was conſum'd, and they were expos'd to the Shot of the Counter-Guard and Demi-Baſtion of St. Roche, which they ſuſtain'd and return'd with incredible Reſolution 'till the Fire was extinguiſhed. The Dutch, ſeeing the Engliſh in ſo hot a Place, advanc'd immediately along the Maeſe to the Breach of the Counterſcarp, and ſo vigorouſly attack'd the Enemy with their Hand-Grenadoes, that the latter ſought their Safety in a Retreat, which was a great Eaſe to the Engliſh. The Dutch lodg'd themſelves on the Counter-Guard, and thus both they and the Engliſh maſter'd and maintain'd the foremoſt Cover'd Way before St. Nicholas Gate, from the Maeſe to the Sluys, with part of the Counter-Guard. The Valour and Firmneſs of the Confederate Troops in this Action is ſcarce to be parallel'd. The Progreſs of the French King's Siege of Namur is compar'd to this like the mock Sieges on Hounſlow-Heath or Bunhill-Fields; tho' it muſt be own'd, that the French Officers and Soldiers, in the Defence of theſe Works, behav'd like Men of Courage and Experience. The Enemy did not throw many Bombs, but they fir'd inceſſantly into the Trenches with five or ſix Pieces of Cannon, which kill'd ſeveral Perſons about his Majeſty, particularly Mr. Michael Godfrey a Merchant of London, Brother to Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, who was murder'd by Papiſts in King Charles II's Reign. Mr. Godfrey was Deputy-Governor of the Bank of England, and came to ſettle Matters with the King about Remittances of Money for the Payment of the Army, but had the fatal Curioſity to viſit the Trenches, and ſee this Attack, in which he fell himſelf, after he had ſeen the Fall of many gallant Men, Officers, and Soldiers. The Elector of Bavaria, who was poſted between the Sambre and the Maeſe, was not idle all this while; he commanded an Attack to be made towards the Abbey of Salſines, which was perform'd with ſo much Vigour, that he not only forc'd the Retrenchment near the Sambre, but made himſelf Maſter of the Fort of La Balance, repuls'd four Squadrons of Horſe that came out of the Caſtle, laid a Bridge over the Sambre, paſt the River amidſt the Enemy's continual Fire, and poſſeſt himſelf of the Abbey, which favour'd the Attack of Vauban's Line, that ſurrounded the Works of the Caſtle. The Elector, reſolving to ſtorm this Line, order'd General Cohorn to diſpoſe all Things for that purpoſe towards Salſines, and General Fleming to do the

A.D.1695 ſame on the other ſide of the Maeſe. On the 30th of July by break of Day, his Electoral Highneſs, with the Spaniſh and Bavarian Generals, and General Cohorn, began the Attack toward Salſines, aſſaulting the Retrenchments in Flank, with about 3000 Foot, ſuſtain'd by ſome Battalions, and 1000 Spaniſh and Bavarian Horſe. Major-General Swerin attack'd the Line in Front, with 500 Grenadiers, as many Muſquetiers, and 100 Pioneers; and the Brandenburgh General with 500 Grenadiers, ſupported by 2000 Foot, inſulted the Enemy's Flank on the Maeſe Side. The French at firſt made ſome Reſiſtance by favour of a Line of Communication of one Redoubt and two Trenches, but being fallen upon in Front and Flank with extraordinary Bravery, they were driven to the Counterſcarp of Cohorn Fort. Animated with this Succeſs, the Beſiegers purſu'd the Runaways as far as the Devil's Houſe; where the Beſieg'd had ſeveral Cannon laden with Cartouches, and about 900 Men lying flat upon their Bellies, who now ſtanding up on a ſudden, pour'd in Vollies of Shot upon the Beſiegers. The latter ſtood all their Fire with amazing Intrepidity, forc'd the French to quit the Counterſcarp of the Fort, and made themſelves Maſters of it. However, it being impoſſible for them to lodge themſelves there, they made a pretty good Retreat, with the loſs of 200 Men only in all this brave Action; by which they gain'd a lin'd Redoubt, ſome advanc'd Batteries, and Vauban's Retrenchments from the Sambre to the Maeſe, cut thro' a Rock, as is before related; which the French boaſted wou'd coſt the Allies 5000 Men before they ſhou'd take it.

The Attack on the Caſtle-ſide, where the King was preſent, being over; his Majeſty went to view the Trenches on the Town-ſide, and finding that a Mine had been ſprung, which had over-turn'd a good Part of the Sluys into the Ditch, whereby the Water was lower by two Foot, he order'd the Miners to work on, in order to drain the Moat, and all things to be ready to make a Lodgment on the Demi-Baſtion. The two following Days the Beſiegers furiouſly batter'd the Works towards St. Nicholas's Gate, and threw many Bombs which did conſiderable Execution; particularly one fir'd by Lieut. Col. Browne of the Train, which ſet on fire the Enemy's Magazine in the Demi-Baſtion.

On the 2d of Auguſt towards Evening, the Lord Cutts with 200 Engliſh Grenadiers, and Brigadier Dedem with a like Number of Dutch; both which were to be ſuſtain'd by the Battalions in the Trenches; were order'd to attack the Saliant-Angle, and the Demi-Baſtion, which was perform'd with equal Gallantry and Succeſs, and after ſome Reſiſtance, a Lodgment was made on the ſecond Counterſcarp. By this time the Cannon had widen'd the Breaches, and all things being ready for a general Aſſault, Count Guiſcard the Governor demanded to capitulate for the Town; he came himſelf upon the Demi-Baſtion, where he order'd a White Flag to be hung out, and immediately all the Batteries ceas'd firing, and Major-General Ramſey ſent Col. Maccartney to the Breach, to know what the Count deſir'd: which being told to the Duke of Holſtein-Ploen, whoſe Quarters were juſt by; Advice of it was ſent to the King of England and the Elector of Bavaria, and a Capitulation being readily granted, Articles were agreed upon,

The Town ſurrenders. and the Town ſurrender'd the 8th of Auguſt. The Elector of Bavaria and Count Guiſcard manag'd the Treaty; the French Court being ſo whimſical, that they wou'd not own King William, till they had paid more for refuſing it.

The Garriſon retir'd into the Caſtle, where we will leave them a while, to ſee what the Mareſchal de Villeroy is doing with the Royal Army of France.

Being baulk'd in his Deſign againſt Prince Vaudemont, as alſo in another to ſurprize Newport; he march'd towards Dixmuyde, and order'd Montal to beſiege it. The Town was weak, but had a ſtrong Garriſon of 3000 Men, under the Command of Major-General Ellenburgh, who might have held it out a Fortnight, or have given it up with leſs Ignominy. But he was on that Occaſion ſuch a Poltron, that after a Reſiſtance of 36 Hours only, he ſurrender'd himſelf and his Garriſon Priſoners of War. Deynſe follow'd the Example of Dixmuyde, and was ſurrender'd at Diſcretion by Col. O-Farrel, who did not fire ſo much as a Gun. Villeroy order'd the Fortifications of theſe two Places to be raz'd; and it was thought a little ſtrange, that ſo good a Body of Troops, as theſe two Garriſons conſiſted of, ſhould be left expos'd in two ſuch weak Places, the French Army being ſo near them. Villeroy paſs'd the River Lys at Warker, and march'd up the Lines to the Scheld, which he croſs'd at Eskanaff, in order to continue his March to Ninove, giving out alamode de Gaſcon, that he was going to relieve Namur. Upon Advice of this Motion, the Prince of Vaudemont decamp'd from Ghent, Aug. 4*th*, and paſſing the Canal at Vilvoord and the Burnt-Bridge, pitch'd his Camp at Dighem. The Prince ſent to Villeroy, to demand the Garriſons of Deynſe and Dixmuyde, according to the Agreement about the Exchange of Priſoners; but the Mareſchal refus'd to ſend them back upon frivolous Pretences, and, contrary to the Cartel, moſt of the Soldiers were oblig'd to liſt themſelves in the French Service, or were ſent to Catalonia and other remote Parts.

A.D.1695 Dixmuyde and Deynſe baſely yielded to the French.

We have already ſaid ſomething of the Bombardments made by the Engliſh Fleet on the Port-Towns of France, which were renew'd this Year, and threw the Inhabitants of that whole Coaſt into the moſt terrible Conſternation. On the 4th of July, the Lord Berkley who commanded the Engliſh Fleet bombarded St. Malo; that of France being ſtill as it were block'd up in the Mediterranean, and their Harbours there. The Lord Berkley arriv'd before St. Malo the 4th of July, and gave the Signal the next Day for the Frigates to ſtand into the Channel with the Bomb-Ships, under the Directions of Col. Richards; upon which Capt. Bembow, who formerly had been Maſter of a Merchant-Ship in the Portugal Trade, went on board the Charles-Galley, and Captain Durley, Commander of the Charles Fireſhip, with a Dutch Fireſhip, had Orders to bear up with the Rock de la Comchee and attack it, and afterwards to ſet fire to the Veſſels; which was vigorouſly put in Execution, and a little after the Fort took fire, continuing burning for two Hours. Then the Gallies and Frigates being got in, ſtood in ſo near, that in charging the Bombs they were forc'd to leſſen the Weight of the Powder, otherwiſe they wou'd have gone beyond the Mark; three Hours after, ſeveral Parts of the eaſt-end of the Town took fire, and about two a-clock in the Afternoon, a great fire broke out in the middle of the Town, which continu'd burning till Night, and cou'd not be extinguiſh'd without blowing up of Houſes. A great Part of the Place was reduc'd to Aſhes. And Granville, another Town not far from it, ran the ſame Fate. It was upon the Bombardmant of this Town, that the preſent Lord Lanſdown, wrote a Poem to his Kinſman, then Charles Lord Lanſdown, beginning thus;

The Engliſh bombard the Port-Towns of France.

Though built by Gods, conſum'd by Hoſtile Flame,
TROY bury'd lies, yet lives the TROJAN Name;
And ſo ſhall thine, tho' with theſe Walls were loſt
All the Records our Anceſtors could boaſt.

The Arms of the Granville Family, remain'd ſtill at that Time on one of the Gates of the Town.

The Bombing of Calais prov'd not ſo ſucceſsful, and the Deſign upon Dunkirk miſcarry'd for want of right Management. However, the Loſſes of the

A.D. 1695 the French by theſe Bombardments, and the Terrors they were perpetually groaning under, made their Old Monarch uneaſy, amidſt the Glitter and Magnificence of his Palace at Verſailles. It was a mortifying thing to him, not to be able to defend his own Subjects from Inſults, after he had been inſulting all the World above 30 Years without Controul; and in his Rage at this Diſgrace, he ſent Orders to the Mareſchal de Villeroy to bombard the beautiful City of Bruſſels. The Excuſe for ſo barbarous an Act, was the bombarding St. Malo and other French Towns by the King of England's Fleet. As if there was no difference between the endeavouring to root out Neſts of Pirates, Robbers and Free-booters, who for Gain committed great Spoil on the Engliſh Navigation; and the ſetting Houſes on fire, which were fill'd with Ladies only, and Perſons of as Peaceable Diſpoſitions. The Duke de Villeroy, before he play'd his Mortars, ſent a Letter to the Prince of Berghen the Governor; the Contents of which were as falſe as they were baſe, ſeeing the Prince of Orange ſent his Fleet upon the Coaſt of France to ruin the Maritime Towns, without getting any other Advantage; as if it was of no Advantage to the Trade of England, to ruin thoſe that endeavour'd to deſtroy it. The Electreſs of Bavaria being in Bruſſels, the Mareſchal was ſo good as to intimate in his Letter, that if Notice was given where ſhe lodg'd, he wou'd not fire upon that Part of the Town. The Prince of Berghen communicated this Letter to the Elector of Bavaria, who was come to Bruſſels from the Camp before Namur on this Occaſion, and return'd Anſwer to Villeroy, that the Bombardment of the Port-Towns of France, regarding the King of England, he cou'd not ſay any thing to that Part of his Letter, which propos'd the Forbearance of all Bombardments but at Sieges; however he wou'd acquaint that King with it, and ſend him an Anſwer in 24 Hours. In the mean time, the Electreſs was at the King's Palace. It ſoon appear'd that Villeroy's Letter contain'd only an inſignificant Compliment. For inſtead of allowing time for the Prince of Berghen to have his Britannick Majeſty's Anſwer; he began that very Evening, Auguſt 13th, to fire upon the City with 25 Mortar-Pieces, and 18 Pieces of Cannon, that ſhot red-hot Bullets. It was not long before the Fire broke out in ſeveral Places, eſpecially about the Town-houſe. The Enemy continu'd firing without Intermiſſion all that Night, the Day following, and the next Night after that; during which, aroſe a high Wind, that would have ſet the whole City in a Flame, if the Inhabitants had not blown up ſeveral Houſes. On the 15th of Auguſt about Noon, the French gave over firing, and ſoon after drew off to Enghien. The lower Town ſuffer'd the moſt by the Enemies Bombs. As for the Electreſs of Bavaria, tho' ſhe was remov'd to the Suburbs, beyond the reach of the Cannon; yet ſhe was ſo frighted with its continual Roaring, that ſhe miſcarry'd upon it. Such were the Triumphs of Lewis XIV, whoſe Soul, had there been the leaſt Spark of true Heroiſm in the make of it, would have ſcorn'd to revenge on Tradeſmen and Women, the Affronts that were put upon his Maritime Power.

Villeroy bombards Bruſſels.

The Electreſs of Bavaria frighted by it into a Miſcarriage.

Villeroy after this notable Exploit, the frighting one of the greateſt Princeſſes in Europe into a Miſcarriage; having receiv'd ſeveral Re-inforcements from the Coaſts and other Places, and encreas'd his Army to 100000 Men, as the French themſelves boaſted, march'd towards Namur, giving out that his Intention was to raiſe the Siege and put an end to the War; but, as my Author phraſes it, he was egregiouſly miſtaken. For beſides that Prince Vaudemont, in conjunction with the Earl of Athlone, by extraordinary Diligence was got before him to the ſtrong Camp of Maſſey, five Miles from Namur; the Confederate Army was re-inforc'd with a Body of Troops from the Rhine, under the Command of that brave and moſt excellent Prince the Landgrave of Heſſe-Caſſel; ſo that the Siege of the Caſtle and Cohorn, was carry'd on with great Vigour, the Camp at Maſſey was ſtrongly fortify'd, and his Majeſty, ever vigilant and indefatigable, was preſent at both, as there was Occaſion for his Royal Preſence and Direction. A.D. 1695

On the 12th of Auguſt, the Beſiegers broke Ground and carry'd on their Trenches about 50 Paces before the Cohorn Fort towards the Sambre, and made a good Lodgment. New Batteries were order'd to be rais'd both of Cannon and Mortars, as well in the Ramparts, as in the Gardens of the City, in order to batter Terra Nova and Fort Cohorn both at once. The next Day the Beſiegers began to play from no leſs than 12 Batteries, and one of their Bombs falling upon the Magazine of the Devil's Houſe, blew up above 1000 Grenadoes charg'd, ruin'd a great quantity of Arms, and kill'd and wounded ſeveral Perſons. Mareſchal Boufflers being unus'd to this way of Fighting, began to wiſh himſelf in the open Field, and form'd a Deſign to break thro' the Confederates Camp with what Cavalry he had; but the King having Notice of it, order'd ſtrong Guards to be plac'd at all the Paſſes of the Sambre, and the ſame was done along the Maeſe by General Fleming; which oblig'd Boufflers to ſtay where he was, and ſhare the Fate of his Garriſon. However, on the 18th of Auguſt towards Midnight, they made a Salley with 200 Dragoons mounted, and 500 Grenadiers: of the latter, 150 were repuls'd on the Right by the Count de Rivera; the reſt made an Attack on the Left, where my Lord Cutts had juſt poſted the advanc'd Guards to ſecure the Workmen. The French Dragoons fell upon Lieutenant Sutton, who being poſted in the Plains of Salſines, with about 40 Fuſiliers, let them come on till they were very near him, then gave them a round Volley and retreated to his Body; but the Dragoons preſſing upon him, he commanded his Men to give them another ſuch Volley, which the French receiv'd undauntedly, preſs'd on ſtill, and had their Grenadiers charg'd at the ſame time, they wou'd doubtleſs have caus'd great Confuſion in the Trenches: but the Spaniſh and Bavarian Horſe, who were at hand, fell ſo furiouſly on the French Dragoons, that they drove them to the very Paliſadoes of the Caſtle, killing ſome and taking others Priſoners. In the mean time, Villeroy advanc'd as far as the Plain of Flerus, and gave the Beſieged a Signal of his Approach, by the Diſcharge of 90 Pieces of Cannon, which was anſwer'd by a great Light ſet on the higheſt Part of the Caſtle. The King upon this left the Care of the Siege to the Elector of Bavaria, and the Duke of Holſtein-Ploen; and on the 26th of Auguſt, put himſelf at the Head of the Confederate Army at Maſſey. Towards which Villeroy approach'd nearer ſtill, but found them ſo well poſted, that tho' he was 30000 Men ſtronger, he thought fit to retire in the Night, Auguſt 29th, with as little Noiſe as 100000 Men could make; contenting himſelf with having attack'd an advanc'd Guard of the Confederates, in order to gain an advantageous Poſt, which oblig'd his Majeſty to keep the Field from 4 in the Morning till 8 at Night; but the Mareſchal being repuls'd by the Heſſian Horſe, deſpair'd of doing any good that way. The next Day he mov'd along the Mehaigne, extending his Right to Perwys, and his Left to the Abbey of Boneff; upon which King William caus'd his Army to move towards Oſtin and Longchamp to obſerve the Enemy, who durſt not make any nearer Approaches to raiſe the Siege. But tho' his Majeſty was now ſenſible he was ſecure from the Attacks of Villeroy; yet Scarcity beginning to creep into his Camp, and the Neighbourhood of ſuch an Army as Villeroy's being very troubleſome; he on the 29th of Auguſt, with the Elector of Bavaria, A.D. 1695

Prince

A.D.1695 Prince Vaudemont, and other General Officers, concerted a general Aſſault for the next Day; when the Beſiegers began early to batter the Breaches of Cohorn Fort, and continu'd to do ſo till 11 a-Clock, when the Elector of Bavaria ſent Count Horn, accompany'd by the Earl of Portland, to ſummon the Beſieg'd. The Batteries having given over firing, Count Horn call'd to the Enemy, and told Count de Lamont, Commander of the French Foot, who appear'd on the next Baſtion, attended by the Marquis de Grammont and St. Heronime. That the Mareſchal de Villeroy, after having been three Days in ſight of the Confederate Army, had thought fit to retire towards the Mehaigne without Fighting; That the Garriſon could not expect now to be reliev'd; and that his Electoral Highneſs being willing to ſpare the Lives of ſo many brave Men, had charg'd him to offer honourable Terms to Count Guiſcard if he would ſurrender; but that he gave him but a quarter of an Hour to deliberate upon the Propoſals. Count Lamont took upon him to acquaint Count Guiſcard and the Mareſchal de Boufflers with Count Horn's Meſſage, and promis'd to bring back a ſpeedy Anſwer; but not returning in half an Hour, Count Horn grew impatient, and told the Marquis de Grammont that he had already out-ſtay'd his time, and therefore deſir'd him to ſend ſomebody to the Governor for an immediate Anſwer. A ſecond Meſſenger was diſpatch'd, and he alſo ſtaying above a quarter of an Hour, and ſeveral Officers of the Garriſon being come to view the Breach of Terra Nova; the Earl of Portland did not think fit to wait any longer. Thus the Parley was broke, and the Batteries play'd inceſſantly againſt the Breaches, till beween one and two, when the general Aſſault began in the following Manner.

The Signal being given, my Lord Cutts, who is ſaid to have deſir'd that Command, which was not then his Poſt in turn, at the Head of 300 Grenadiers, ruſh'd out of the Trenches of the ſecond Line, 7 or 800 Paces diſtant from the Breach of Terra Nova, where he was commanded to lodge himſelf; and Col. Marſigly march'd on his Right to poſſeſs himſelf of the Line of Communication, next Cohorn Fort. Count de Rivera, Major-General of the Bavarians, with 3000 Men, march'd out of the Trenches of the firſt Line, in order to attack the Breaches of Cohorn Fort. Major-General Le Cave advanc'd to attempt the ſame Fort at the Point, and Major-General Swerin march'd againſt the Caſotte with 2000 Brandenburghers. The Engliſh Grenadiers under my Lord Cutts, borne away by their own Native Ardor, and animated by the Example of their brave Leader, and Col. Windſor, Col. Codrington, Col. Stanhope, Mr. Thompſon, and other Engliſh Gentlemen, who expos'd themſelves as Voluntiers, ran faſter towards the Enemy, than they could be follow'd by the Battalions of Couthorp, Buchan, Hamilton and Mackay, who mov'd from Salſines to ſupport them. The Grenadiers mounted the Breach without Oppoſition, the Enemy not expecting to be attack'd on that Side, by reaſon of the great Diſtance of the Trenches; but as ſoon as the French ſaw theſe daring Aſſailants were not ſuſtain'd, they brought down 2000 of their beſt Foot and Dragoons, into the Space between the Cohorn and the Terra Nova, to fall on the Engliſh in Flank and in Rear, which oblig'd the latter to make a ſpeedy Retreat. The Beſieg'd made a ſhew of purſuing them, but by this time three of the before-mention'd Regiments being come up to their Aſſiſtance; the French retir'd thro' the Breach of Terra Nova, after having ſurpriz'd and defeated the 300 Men under Col. Marſigly, who was wounded, taken Priſoner, and ſoon after kill'd by a Cannon-Ball from the Beſiegers Batteries, with the French Officer that carry'd him into the Caſtle; the Engliſh having borne ſix ſeveral Diſcharges, had many Men kill'd and wounded, among the latter was my Lord Cutts himſelf, who receiv'd a Shot in his Head, which diſabled him for ſome time. Col. Windſor, afterwards Lord Windſor, was alſo dangerouſly wounded in the Head, of which I ſuppoſe his Lordſhip feels the Effects to this Day. A.D.1695

Count de Rivera, with the Bavarians, inſtead of marching to the Left of the Platform, went a little too much to the Right, towards the Cover'd Way, which was well palliſado'd, and thick ſet with Muſquetiers, who made a terrible Fire. Thro' this Miſtake, inſtead of ſtorming the two ſmall Breaches of the Angle of the Platform, according to the Scheme made for the Attack; the Bavarians attempted to force the Cover'd Way before the great Breach, by which they remain'd expos'd for two Hours to the Enemy's double Fire, which kill'd them abundance of Men; and among them Count de Rivera himſelf, with moſt of the Officers of the Bavarian Guards. My Lord Cutts, impatient to return to the Engagement, cou'd ſcarce ſtay to have his Wounds dreſs'd. He then put himſelf again at the Head of the Engliſh, proud of following ſuch a Leader; but finding the Aſſault of the Terra Nova not poſſible to be retriev'd, and obſerving the Bavarians, notwithſtanding the Loſs of their General, had fix'd themſelves on the Outermoſt Retrenchment of the Point of the Cohorn next to the Sambre, and maintain'd that Poſt with a greal deal of Obſtinacy, but cou'd not get more ground; he therefore reſolv'd to make good their Attack, and order'd a Detachment of 200 Men to be made out of ſuch as were moſt forward to ſignalize themſelves, whom he ſtill encourag'd by Promiſes of Preferment and Reward; and that they ſhould be ſuſtain'd by the Regiment of Mackay, and the other Engliſh Forces ſhould rally and follow them. Being come to the Place of Action, his Lordſhip detach'd a Party of thoſe 200 choſen Men, under Lieutenant Cockle of Mackay's Regiment, whom he order'd to attack the Face of the Saliant Angle next to the Breach, Sword in Hand, without firing a Gun; to paſs the Palliſadoes and enter the Cover'd Way, and there to make a Lodgment, if they found any Place capable of it. At the ſame time, my Lord Cutts commanded the Enſigns of Mackay's Regiment to march ſtrait to the Palliſadoes, and place their Colours upon them. All this was ſo well executed, that Lieutenant Cockle breaking thro' the Palliſadoes, beat the Enemy from the Cover'd Way, lodg'd himſelf in one of their Batteries, and then turn'd their own Cannon againſt them. On the other hand, while Mackay's Enſigns advanc'd to the Palliſadoes, the Bavarians renew'd their Attack with their former Bravery and better Succeſs, for they took the Poſt and made it good. The Forces were already ſo fatigu'd by an Aſſault which had laſted ſeveral Hours, that the Beſiegers contented themſelves to have gain'd the Cover'd Way before the Breach of the Cohorn, and the Saliant Angle towards the Sambre, and to have made a good Lodgment there, without any further Attempt upon the Breach. The ſeaſonable Re-inforcement the Lord Cutts brought to the Bavarians, had this further good Effect; that it kept the Enemy employ'd in the Defence of this moſt important Poſt, which very much facilitated Major-General Le Cave's Enterprize upon the Cover'd Way before the Ravelin and upper Point of the Cohorn, and ſo up towards the Caſotte, where he lodg'd himſelf without any conſiderable Loſs. In the mean time, Major-General Swerin, who commanded the Right Attack of all before the Caſotte, made up boldly towards the cover'd way and Retrenchment between the Caſotte and the Maeſe, drove the Enemy from their Poſts, ſecur'd all the Avenues, and made a Lodgment all along this Cover'd Way and Retrenchment of 300 Paces, which he extended to the Left turning in towards the Cohorn about 140 Paces

A.D. 1695 Paces more, to join it to that of Major-General Le Cave, which reach'd to the Ravelin of the Cohorn. Thus, tho' for want of a due Correſpondence among the ſeveral Attacks, either by the failure or miſtake of the Signals, the Beſiegers miſcarry'd in the great Deſign of this general Storm, which was to have taken the Caſtle with all its prodigious Outworks all at once; yet they were now Maſters of one of the greateſt Lodgments that ever was made in one Aſſault, being near an Engliſh Mile in Extent. Such a vaſt Lodgment could not be done in a Moment, neither could the Aſſault, which laſted till Evening, be maintain'd without conſiderable Loſs on both ſides. The Beſiegers by their own Confeſſion had 2000 Men kill'd and wounded, and amongſt them many Perſons of Note, as Count de Rivera, Col. Couthorp, Col. Marſigly, Col. Lindroot, the Baron de Heckeren, Lieut. Col. Fabricius, Capt. Mitchell of the Engliſh Guards. Among the wounded were, the Prince of Holſtein-Norburgh, the Lord Cutts, the Prince of Heſſe-Homburgh, Col. Eppingen, Col. Zinzenburgh, Col. Caunitz, Count Horn, Count Done, Col. Luzelburgh, Col. Mehn, Count Denhoff, Col. Hamilton, Col. Wiudham, who diſtinguiſh'd himſelf in an extraordinory manner, as did alſo Col. Evans, Col. Codrington, Col. Stanhope, and Col. Thompſon, to whom his Majeſty gave a Company of Guards, as a Reward of his Bravery in this dangerous and glorious Action.

The Bravery of an Engliſh Grenadier.

It was in one of theſe Attacks, that an Engliſh Grenadier of the Guards preſſing on to the Palliſadoes before ſpoken of, flung his Grenado over them, and laying his Hand on the Space between them, leap'd over and follow'd the Shell himſelf. The French being about to ſlaughter him, an Officer cry'd out, Bas, Bas, and ſav'd him for his amazing Courage; and telling the Count de Guiſcard, the Governor of Namur, and Mareſchal Boufflers, General of the Army within the Town and Caſtle, what he had ſeen of this Grenadiers deſperate Attempt; they order'd him to be ſent for, and Guiſcard ask'd him, how he durſt do it, when there were ſo many Enemies behind the Palliſadoes, and it was hardly poſſible to leap over them, had there been no Enemy there at all. No, ſaid the brave Engliſh Grenadier; No, my Lord, but nothing is impoſſible for an Engliſhman to come at his Enemy; if there had been no Enemy, I wou'd not have attempted it. A Saying ſo grand, that whatever is told of the Sayings of the Alexanders and Cæſars has not its equal.

The Loſs of the Beſieg'd did not exceed 1000 Men kill'd or wounded. The Elector of Bavaria expos'd himſelf to a Degree not to be imagin'd, riding from Place to Place, and giving his Orders where the Diſpute was moſt obſtinate. Upon the whole I meet with this Obſervation, which ſeems very juſt: the Engliſh were the moſt bold and preſſing; the Bavarians the moſt firm; the Brandenburghers the moſt ſucceſsful. In acknowledgment of which Service, King William wrote with his own Hand the following Letter to the Elector of Brandenburgh.

YOU intereſt yourſelf ſo far in the Publick Good, that you muſt needs receive a particular Satisfaction in hearing of the Surrender of the Caſtle of Namur; eſpecially, conſidering what ſhare you had in that Enterprize, which could not poſſibly have ſucceeded without the Aſſiſtance of your Troops, whom I cannot enough commend; nor can be leſs pleas'd with the admirable Conduct of your Generals. They have gain'd to themſelves the greateſt Glory and Reputation by this Action; and I aſſure you 'tis impoſſible for any one to be more ſenſible of an Obligation, than I am of that you have laid on me, by aſſiſting me in an Undertaking of ſuch Conſequence, which God has vouchſafed to bleſs; and which I hope will be a conſiderable Advantage to all the Allies. And you may aſſure yourſelf, I ſhall omit no Occaſion of giving you effectual Proofs of my Gratitude. A.D. 1695

The next Day, Aug. 31. was wholly ſpent by the Beſiegers in perfecting their Lodgments, and preparing all Things for a ſecond general Aſſault. But the next Day, Sept. 1. the Beſieg'd having demanded a Ceſſation of Arms to bury their Dead, which was readily granted, the Count de Guiſcard came upon the Breach a little before the Truce was over, and deſir'd to ſpeak with the Elector of Bavaria. His Electoral Highneſs having mounted the Breach, the Count offer'd to ſurrender the Cohorn Fort. But the Elector anſwering, if he would capitulate it muſt be for the whole, Guiſcard reply'd, that the Mareſchal de Boufflers commanded in the Caſtle; that he would let him know it, and deſir'd the Ceſſation of Arms might be contin'd: to which the Elector agreeing, the Mareſchal conſented to treat for the whole; and an Adjutant was immediately diſpatch'd to the King at Oſtin, to inform him of it. The Adjutant met his Majeſty with the Prince of Vaudemont, coming in his Coach to the Siege, to give Directions for the ſecond Aſſault, on which the King was ſo intent, that he ſaid, he wou'd carry the Caſtle the next Day, tho' he ſtorm'd it with all the Grenadiers in the Army. Upon his Majeſty's Arrival, Hoſtages were exchang'd, and Propoſals brought from the Caſtle; the chief of which was, that they might have ten Days to expect Succours: this being abſolutely deny'd, the French after ſome Debate among themſelves, were contented to receive ſuch Terms, as the Elector with his Majeſty's conſent would grant them; being ſuch as are uſual upon the Surrender of a ſtrong Fortreſs, whoſe Garriſon has made a gallant Defence. This Capitulation was agreed on that very Night, and ſign'd the next Morning. Part of the Outworks were preſently after given up to the Allies, the Beſieg'd having three Days more allow'd them to evacuate the Caſtle. 'Tis remarkable, that the Count de Guiſcard oblig'd the Mareſchal de Boufflers to ſign the Articles, becauſe he had commanded in the Caſtle during the Siege; whereas the Count had only commanded in the Cohorn and the Outworks, and that perhaps this was the firſt Capitulation that was ever ſign'd by a Mareſchal of France. The Mareſchal de Crequi, after his Defeat in Germany, having ſhut himſelf in the City of Treves, would rather ſuffer himſelf to be delivered up a Priſoner of War than ſurrender that City upon Articles. This Conqueſt redounded very much to the Honour of the Confederate Arms, and in a more particular manner to King William's, whoſe Troops were in the warmeſt of all the Actions during the Siege, ſuffer'd moſt, and had the Applauſe of the Elector of Bavaria, and all the Generals of the Allies. The French themſelves ſeem'd to be amaz'd at the Boldneſs of the Enterprize; they having, as we related, made ſuch additional Fortifications to Namur, as they preſum'd cou'd never be forc'd, and therefore they vainly ſet up this Inſcription over the Gates, Reddi, non vinci poteſt. On the ſame Evening the Caſtle capitulated, Orders were given in his Majeſty's Camp for all the Officers to lie in their Clothes, and the Soldiers to do the ſame with their Arms ready; and 60 Men out of each Battalion were commanded to re-inforce the Camp at Maſſey, to prevent any Surprize from the Enemy, who upon News of the Capitulation might have hop'd to have taken advantage of the Security of the Allies: but inſtead of ſuch a Spirit, the Mareſchal de Villeroy hearing it, was ſo griev'd at heart, that he wou'd admit no body to him for ſome Hours, and at length march'd off to the Plains of Flerus with ſo much Precipitation, that he left many of his Foragers and

The Caſtle of Namur ſurrender'd.

A.D.1695 Outguards behind him. The Mareſchal being thus ſorrowful and retir'd, the Confederates prepar'd themſelves for Rejoicings, after they had taken poſſeſſion of the Cohorn; for diſpoſing their Men in ſeveral Poſts from Maſſey to the Maeſe, along their Retrenchments, the Confuſion of the fire from ſo many different Places was very agreeable, and the triple Diſcharge of their ſmall Shot, ſeem'd to be but one of a long Continuance. Upon Advice of Villeroy's Motion, the King order'd ſeveral Brigades towards Salſines, and a Bridge to be laid over the Sambre, to oppoſe the Enemy in caſe they ſhould make any Attempt between the Sambre and the Maeſe, while the French Garriſon was ſtill in Poſſeſſion of the Terra-Nova; but Mareſchal Villeroy was far from any Thoughts of Fighting, for having re-inforced the Garriſon of Dinant with 1000 Men, he march'd his Army to the Lines near Mons. The Confederate's Horſe and Foot, that were encamp'd between the Sambre and the Maeſe, were commanded, Sept. 5, the Day prefix'd for the French to evacuate the Caſtle, to make a Lane on both ſides from the Breach of the Terra-Nova, thro' which the Garriſon was to march out up the Hill, and ſo down again to the Maeſe, in the Way that leads to Givet, whither it was agreed they ſhou'd be ſafely conducted. About 10 a-clock in the Forenoon, the Garriſon, which from 15000 was reduc'd to 5538 Men, began their March. The Mareſchal de Boufflers's Corps du Guard went firſt, then his Domeſticks, and next himſelf with the Count de Guiſcard the Governor, at the Head of the King's and Alfeld's Dragoons, that is, as many as were mounted, between 80 and 90 in Number. The King was Incognito in a Coach, and the Elector of Bavaria and the Landgrave of Heſſe, and the Chief Officers of the Army on Horſeback, to ſee them paſs, within 200 Paces of the Breach, and were ſaluted by the French Mareſchal and the Count with their Swords. This Civility was hardly over, when Monſ. Dyckvelt accoſted Boufflers with a Meſſage, which ſomewhat diſcompos'd his Countenance; and as they were riding up to the top of the Hill, M. d'Etang, Brigadier of the Life-Guards, made up to the Mareſchal with about 12 Gentlemen of that Corps, and arreſted him in his Britannick Majeſty's Name, by way of Repriſal for the Garriſons of Dixmuyde and Deynſe, which were detain'd and ill-treated by the French, contrary to the Cartel. The Mareſchal ſeem'd at firſt very much incens'd, alledging in a broken Speech, That the Laws and Cuſtoms of War were violated, and particularly the Capitulation lately ſign'd by the Duke of Bavaria, wherein he was expreſsly mention'd. That the King of France his Maſter would reſent this Treatment of a Man of his Character, and revenge it to the utmoſt of his Power; and that for his Part he had defended the Place like a Man of Honour, and did not deſerve it.

The Mareſchal de Boufflers arreſted.

Theſe were true French Airs; the King of England knew his Maſter's Diſpoſition, and his Power to revenge, and had taken this juſt and neceſſary Step in defiance of both, which the Mareſchal did not conſider in the hurry of his Paſſion. Monſ. Dyckvelt reply'd; "That the French King, his Maſter, "by detaining the Garriſons of Dixmuyde and Deynſe, "contrary to their Capitulation, by which they "were made Priſoners of War, and conſequently "ſhould have been diſcharg'd within the limited "time, paying their Ranſom, which was offer'd, had "forc'd his Britannick Majeſty to that way of demanding Satisfaction for that Infraction; that "the Mareſchal being arreſted, was not out of any "Diſreſpect to his Perſon, but rather the contrary; "for when it was propos'd to detain the whole "Garriſon by way of Repriſal, the King of Great-Britain had expreſs'd ſo much value for his Perſon, that he look'd upon him as a ſufficient Caution to anſwer for 6000 Men, the Number of "the two Garriſons of Dixmuyde and Deynſe. But "that at the ſame time he had his Majeſty's Order A.D.1695 "to offer him his Liberty, if he wou'd paſs his "word for ſending back the ſaid Garriſon, or re"turn himſelf a Priſoner within a Fortnight." To which Boufflers anſwer'd, I cannot paſs my Word of Honour in a Matter, which I cannot execute myſelf; and now for a little more Gaſcon, If I were at the Head of 50,000 Men I wou'd not ſuffer myſelf to be arreſted, but now I muſt ſubmit. As Brave and as Great a Mareſchal as he, the Mareſchal Tallard, at the Head of 60 or 70,000 Men, ſuffer'd himſelf to be arreſted, and clapt up in a Coach by the Engliſh nine Years after. Boufflers having ſo ſaid, put up his Sword, and went back with his Domeſticks to Namur, where the Earl of Portland gave him a Viſit, and told him as from himſelf, That he made no doubt of his Releaſement upon his Parole of Honour; but the Mareſchal anſwer'd, That in regard he knew not the Reaſons why his Maſter detain'd thoſe Garriſons, he cou'd not engage for any Thing. The Mareſchal's Bluſtering, when his Maſter had given ſuch juſt Provocation to King William for this Proceeding, and when he had not a Word to ſay in excuſe of the French King's detaining and maltreating 6000 Men of the Confederates, has ſomething in it very abſurd and ridiculous. From Namur he was conducted to Maeſtricht, and treated in both Places with all the Reſpect due to his Quality during his Detention, which was not long; for upon the Return of his Maſter of the Horſe, whom he ſent to give the French King an Account of what had happen'd, and the Mareſchal engaging his Word, that the Garriſons of Dixmuyde and Deynſe ſhou'd be ſent back, the King of England order'd the Governor of Maeſtricht to releaſe him, and give him a Guard to conduct him ſafe to Dinant.

Upon News of the taking of Namur, the Lords-Juſtices of England appointed a Day of publick Thankſgiving, and the ſame was religiouſly obſerv'd throughout all England, where the Joy for his Majeſty's Succeſs in the Netherlands was univerſal, the Jacobites being too inſignificant, as well as too malignant, a Faction, to be reckon'd amongſt Engliſhmen. The King's ordering Boufflers to be arreſted for the Garriſons of Dixmuyde and Deynſe was highly extoll'd, as it ſhew'd a Diſregard of that Power, which had hitherto made all Europe tremble, and a hearty and great Concern for his own and his Confederates Honour. The Faction were Thunderſtruck, and hung down their Heads with Shame and Sorrow, which had lately been erect, in hopes of ſeeing the Confederates baffled in their Attempt upon Namur, which excited many of them to lay conſiderable Wagers that it would not be taken, and their Loſs by it was the Ruin of their Fortunes, as it was in ſome meaſure the Ruin of their Cauſe. Among theſe Wagerers and Sufferers was Dr. Davenant, who reveng'd himſelf on the Government afterwards, as well as he could, by Writing againſt it.

Dr. Davenant a Wagerer.

The Confederates being now in full Poſſeſſion of Namur Town and Caſtle, they found there 69 Pieces of Cannon, 281,000 Weight of Powder, 2000 ordinary Bombs, 100 leſs ones, 750 Grenadoes of 24 pound Weight, 4000 ordinary Grenadoes fix'd, 150 Barrels of Cannon-Ball, 15 Ton of Salt-Petre, and 800 ſpare Muskets, with other Military Stores; and with this Conqueſt King William ended the Campaign. His Majeſty, leaving the Command of the Army to the Elector of Bavaria, went to Dieren, and thence to Loo, his uſual Receſs for Diverſion and Buſineſs.

The King returns to Loo.

The Affairs of Scotland and Ireland afford little Matter for Hiſtory in the four laſt Years; theſe two Kingdoms, having no farther a Share in the War abroad, than as they were Members of the Monarchy of Great-Britain, and of the Confederacy againſt France.

The Lord-Deputy Capel held a Parliament in Ireland, and Aug. 27, made a wiſe and eloquent Speech to

A.D. 1695 to them, which is at large in Biſhop Kennet's Hiſtory, and the Contents of it appear in the Acts that Parliament paſt; who Nem. Con. voted a Supply of 163,325 l. to be rais'd by an Additional Exciſe on Beer, Ale, and other Liquors, and by a Poll-Tax. The Lords and Commons having preſented Addreſſes of Thanks to the Lord-Deputy for his Speech, paſt this Vote, That they would to the utmoſt of their Power ſtand by and aſſiſt his Majeſty, and his Government againſt all his Enemies, Foreign and Domeſtick. They paſt an Act, declaring all Attainders, and all other Acts, made in the late pretended Parliament, to be void. Another, for the better ſecuring the Government by diſarming Papiſts. Another, for taking away the Writ de Heretico comburendo. Another, to reſtrain Foreign Education, intended to hinder the Growth of Popery. The Houſe of Commons reſolv'd, That the great Intereſt and Countenance the Iriſh had in the Court of England during the two laſt Reigns, had been the chief Cauſe of all the Miſeries and Calamities, that had ſince befallen the Kingdom.

Acts paſt in Ireland.

On the 9th of May a Parliament met in Scotland. The Marquiſs of Tweedale was his Majeſty's Commiſſioner; and the King's Letter to the Lords, and Shires, and Burghs, was to this effect:

The King's Letter to the Scots Parliament.

" That the Continuation of the War hinder'd him " from purſuing his Reſolution of being amongſt " them in Perſon, and ſo oblig'd him to call them " together once more in his Abſence: That there- " fore he had appointed the Marquiſs of Tweedale " to be his Commiſſioner, and to repreſent his " Perſon and Authority among them. That the " Marquiſs had given Proofs of his Capacity and " Experience in Buſineſs, as well as of his Fidelity " and Zeal, by his many and long Services to the " Crown and Nation, particularly ſince his being " Lord-Chancellor, which would render him very " acceptable to them. That his Majeſty had fully " entruſted him with his Mind, and given him " Power to paſs all ſuch Laws for the Good of that " his Majeſty's ancient Kingdom, as had been pro- " pos'd to his Majeſty at this Time. That the " Marquiſs was to ask nothing of them in his Ma- " jeſty's Name, but that which the Intereſt of the " Country made neceſſary to be done. That there- " fore his Majeſty need not mention to them, that " the Subſidies for paying the Forces were now " expir'd, and that their Peace and Safety required " the Renewing of them during the War. That " his Majeſty was glad of any Appearances of a " Diſpoſition to Moderation and Union about " Church-Matters; and he hop'd they wou'd en- " courage it, and promote it, by removing the Sub- " jects of Differences as much as they could. That " he was not unmindful of the Letter to him in " the Cloſe of the laſt Seſſion. That the known In- " terruptions he had had in Buſineſs this Winter, had " been a great Hindrance to him, but he was re- " ſolv'd to do whatſoever might be for the Security " of the Government, and the Satisfaction of his " Subjects. He recommended to them Calmneſs " and Unanimity in their Proceedings, not doubt- " ing but they would act ſuitably to the Confidence " he had put in them, in calling them again in his " Abſence."

If, as it is the general Opinion, Miniſters of State prepare ſuch Sort of Letters for their Maſter to ſign, one may ſuppoſe this to have paſt under the Pen of Mr. Secretary Johnſton; and not only from the Cuſtom in this Caſe, but from the Prudence and healing Spirit, contain'd in it.

The Lord High-Commiſſioner's Speech had in it the ſame good Qualities; he told that great Aſſembly, " That his Majeſty's tender Care and Con- " cern for their Safety and Welfare did evidently ap- " pear in minding every Thing that might con- " tribute thereto, particularly as to the Church, " that all Differences might be compos'd; it be- " ing his Majeſty's Purpoſe to maintain Presbyterian A.D 1695 " Government in the Church of Scotland, and that " the Peace and Security of the Kingdom againſt " Foreign Invaſion and inteſtine Commotion be " provided for. That if they found it wou'd tend " to the Advancement of Trade, that an Act be " paſt for the Encouragement of ſuch as ſhould ac- " quire and eſtabliſh a Plantation in Africa or A- " merica, or any other Part of the World, where " Plantations might be lawfully acquired; his Ma- " jeſty was willing to declare, that he would grant " to the Subjects of this Kingdom, in favour of " thoſe Plantations, ſuch Rights and Privileges as " he granted in like Caſes to the Subjects of his o- " ther Dominions. And that the Judicatories, higher " and ſubaltern, be ſo regulated in their Proceed- " ings, as that Juſtice might be adminiſter'd with " the greateſt Diſpatch and leaſt Charge to the " People. That theſe Things had taken up ſome " part of his Majeſty's Time and Thoughts theſe " Months paſt, and had been frequently diſcours'd " by him, and then put in the Method of Inſtruc- " tions and Directions for his Grace's Behaviour. " That therefore it only remain'd for them to take " theſe weighty Affairs into Conſideration, and to " conſult of the beſt Ways and Means to enable " his Majeſty to perfect ſo good Deſigns, by grant- " ing him Supplies for maintaining the preſent Land- " Forces, and for providing and entertaining a com- " petent Naval Force, for the Defence of the Coaſt, " and ſecuring of Trade. His Majeſty had granted " a Commiſſion of Admiralty for managing the " Affairs thereof, not omitting to take care for the " other unavoidable Contingencies of the Govern- " ment, wherein the Civil Liſt came ſhort." The Earl of Annandale, Lord-Preſident of the Parliament, made alſo a Speech to them on this Occaſion: He acknowledg'd his Majeſty's gracious Letter, wherein he ask'd nothing for himſelf, but only prevented their neceſſary Cares for the Peace, Welfare, and Advantage of this Kingdom. He took notice of the freſh Aſſurances they had of his Majeſty's firm Reſolutions to maintain the Presbyterian Government of this Church. " He hop'd the Mode- " ration and Calmneſs, that ſhould at this time ap- " pear in all their Proceedings in Church-Matters, " would ſatisfy the World, That this is the Govern- " ment moſt agreeable to the Temper and Inclination " of this People, and moſt ſuitable to the Intereſt and " Support of their King, the Civil Government, and " Peace of this Kingdom. He enforc'd all that had " been ſaid by one thing, which did juſtly challenge " a more than ordinary Zeal and Vigour in their " Duty at this time, which was the ſad and irrepa- " rable Loſs they had ſuſtain'd of the beſt of Queens, " wiſhing they might all of them make this Uſe of " it, that as now the whole Sovereignty was lodg'd " in his Majeſty, it might appear by their Actings, " that they had doubled their Forwardneſs and En- " deavours to ſerve him, which was the only way " now left them to ſhew their juſt Senſe of their " inexpreſſible Loſs, and to make it in ſome mea- " ſure ſupportable to his Majeſty."

The Parliament were duly affected with theſe Speeches, and order'd an Anſwer to his Majeſty's Letter, as alſo an Addreſs of Condolance for the Death of the Queen. They appointed a Committee for the Security of the Kingdom, and another for Trade. They voted 1,440,000 l. Scots for the Land-Forces, and for Cruiſers and Convoys; to raiſe which they paſt a Poll-Bill, and gave a ſix Month's Ceſs upon Land. The Committee of Trade prepar'd the Act, which produc'd the Weſt-India and African Companies, and the Darien Enterprize, which was approv'd and paſt. It is not very agreeable to common Senſe and common Juſtice, that an Act of Parliament in Scotland for promoting Trade and Navigation, being offer'd or propos'd to the King for his Royal Aſſent, ſhould have

The Scots Weſt-India and African Companies.

*A.D.*1695 have been rejected by him, especially after he had in his Speech recommended such a sort of Trade to them. And in truth as to the Settlement at Darien, if the Scots cou'd have establish'd it upon their own bottom, without drawing in Foreigners to share, or rather to engross the Advantages of it, I do not see what great Harm it would have been to the English, who had no Pretence to a Foot of Ground there, nor to any Dealings with the Natives, exclusive of others. Several other good Laws past in this Session of the Scots Parliament, as An Act against Popish Parents making Deeds, or Dispositions of their Estates, in prejudice of their Heirs, who turn Protestants. An Act in favour of the Linnen Manufacture. An Act for the Manufacture of Paper. An Act against Intruders into Churches. Acts against Blasphemy, Prophaneness, Irregular Baptisms, and Marriages. An Act to raise 1000 Men yearly, to recruit the Scots Regiments at Home, and now Abroad. An Act for burying in Scots Linnen. An Act for erecting a Publick Bank in this Kingdom, &c.

The Act for a Bank there.

It was in this Session that the Affair of Glenco came under Examination. The Jacobites represented the arbitrary Execution of 30 or 40 Rebels in the Highlands of Scotland, as a Massacre more barbarous and bloody than the Massacres of France and Ireland, wherein 3 or 400,000 Protestants were butcher'd. A doleful and dreadful Account of it was drawn up by a Nonjuring Priest in Scotland, and sent to Lesley the Nonjuring Priest in London, who having fitted it for their Purpose, caus'd it to be printed and dispers'd, purely to fill the Heads of the People with injurious Notions; that the Scots Highlanders Throats were cut by the King's especial Command, tho' he knew no more of the Matter than King James did; and indeed, as Bishop Kennet writes, it was contrary to his Intention. True it is, there was too much Rashness and Cruelty in that Execution, which was so far back as February $169\frac{2}{3}$. The King had in January sent Instructions to the Commander of his Forces in Scotland, to reduce the Highland Rebels, who did not in due Time accept of the Benefits of his Majesty's Proclamation of Indemnity, publish'd in August 1691, offering a free Pardon to all the Highlanders, who had been in Arms, upon their coming in and taking the Oaths by the last Day of December. Mackdonald, Laird of Glenco, who had been one of the most desperate Rebels in the Highlands, by a pretended Mistake or Blunder, let that Day elapse, and stood out with his Clan against the Government: For if they did not stand out, why did the Witnesses for the Deceas'd, after his Death, affirm, that he offer'd to bring them in? Be that as it will, he had almost five Months Time, after the Proclamation of Pardon was publish'd, to take hold of it; and his deferring it, shews, he, like other Rebels in Scotland, expected daily the Effects of the Promises made them in France of Succours and Support. This Glenco was an Associate of Sir John Macklean, and join'd first with Dundee; and after his Death with Canon and Buchan in an obstinate Rebellion, for which however he shou'd not have been murder'd, but hang'd. What is certain of the Matter is, that the Soldiers quarter'd at Glenco, did on the 13th of February 1692, shoot that Laird and one Man more, if not two, for there's Difference in the Relations; that the Laird of Auchintriaten, another desperate Rebel, and four more were kill'd at Auchnaion, and nine more at Inneriggen; but that the Highland Evidence, for the chief Witnesses were Glenco's Sons, made this very bad Matter a great deal worse than it was, one may perceive by their swearing to such idle Stuff, That a Woman and a Boy of four Years old were kill'd, and that at Auchnaion there was a Child miss'd, and nothing found but the Hand; insinuating that they had eaten up the Rest. That these Rebels were still in a Readiness, if not in Arms, to fall upon the Friends to the Government, appears by the Oath of John Mackdonald, Glenco's Son, who depos'd, *A.D.*1695 that upon seeing Capt. Glenlion, who commanded the Soldiers, preparing his Arms as for some Action at Inneriggen, and asking him why he did it, Glenlion said, We are to march against Glengary's Men. I say not this to extenuate the Guilt of those, who, exceeding their Orders, put Men to death without legal Process; it was Slaughter if they were not in Arms, and Cruelty if they were, being so few in Number, and a whole Nation against them: But I do say it because the Disaffected represented these Men as so many Innocents sacrific'd, To what? They have not Sense and Honesty enough to own in Answer, To the Resentment of their Neighbours, whom they had some how or other offended, and being no less barbarous than themselves, brought down this Vengeance upon their Heads. For in the Report of the Lords-Commissioners to enquire into this Matter, I find this Deposition by Glenco's two Sons, that when their Father Alexander Mackdonald of Glenco was with Sir John Macklean the Laird of Glengary, and others at Auchallader, to meet the Earl of Broadalbin in July 1691, to confer about a Cessation of Arms; the Earl quarrell'd with Glenco about some Cows, the Earl alledg'd Glenco's Men took from his Men, and threaten'd to do him a Mischief; which introduces this Tragical Story in the Report, and is as it were the Basis it is built upon. But what Credit is to be given to John Mackdonald, Alexander Mackdonald, Glenco's Sons, Renald Mackdonald of Glenco, and Renald Mackdonald of Inneriggen, swearing in the Cause of their Father, and the Head of their Clan, must be left to the Reader to determine.

The Affair of Glenco.

Before this Business was brought into Parliament, Queen Mary, in the Absence of King William, sent particular Directions to Mr. Secretary Johnston in Scotland, to push on the Enquiry, and search into the bottom of it, which he did as far as he cou'd get light by the most diligent Inquest, insomuch that I have read this of it in a Letter from Scotland; You know as well as I, that his Diligence to serve the Queen in this Matter, was always judg'd here to be one of the chief Causes of our Nation's losing that Able and Honest Minister. Not long after Glenco's Death, King William, anno 1693, gave power by express Instructions to William Duke of Hamilton and others, To examine and enquire into the Slaughter of a certain People of the Name of Mackdonald, and others in Glenco. But upon some groundless Suggestions that the said Inquiry was imperfect, a new Commission was granted to the Marquis of Tweedale Lord High-Chancellor; the Earl of Annandale; John Lord Murray, afterwards Duke of Athol; Sir James Stuart; Adam Cockburn of Ormistoune; Mr. Archibald Hope of Rankeiller; Sir William Hamilton of Whitelaw, Senators of the College of Justice; Sir James Ogilvy, Sollicitor, afterwards Earl of Seafield; and Adam Drummond of Meggris, To take Precognition by whom, and how the said Slaughter was committed; which Commission being read in Parliament the 22d of May 1695, the House voted, Nem. Con. That his Majesty's High-Commissioner transmit their humble Thanks to his Majesty for ordering an Inquiry into this Matter, whereby the Honour and Justice of the Nation may be vindicated.

King William knew nothing of it.

State-Tracts, vol. II. p. 599.

We must not forget the Introduction to this Story is, the Earl of Broadalbin's Quarrel with Glenco, and the Conclusion is to the same purpose in the Lords Commissioners Report. "It may "also be notic'd, that some Days after the Slaugh-"ter of the Glenco Men was over; there came "a Person from L—— Campbel of Balcal-"den, Steward to the Earl of Broadalbin, to the "deceas'd Glenco's Sons, and offer'd to them, if "they would declare under their Hands, that the "Earl of Broadalbin was free and clear of the said "Slaughter, they might be assur'd of the Earl's

"Kind-

A.D.1695 " Kindneſs, for procuring their Remiſſion and " Reſtitution."

The Inſtructions given by the King in Jan. 1692, before ſpoken of, were directed to Sir Thomas Levingſton, Commander of the Forces in Scotland, and to uſe the Words of the Lords Commiſſioners Report, " did indeed order and authorize, Sir Thomas to " march the Troops againſt the Rebels, who had " not taken the Benefit of the Indemnity, and to " deſtroy them by Fire and Sword; which is the " actual Stile of our Commiſſions againſt inter- " communed Rebels: but with this expreſs Miti- " gation in the Fourth Article, That the Rebels " may not think themſelves deſperate, we allow " you to give Terms and Quarter, but in this " manner only, that Chieftains and Heritors or " Leaders be Priſoners of War, their Lives only " ſafe, and all other Things in Mercy, they ta- " king the Oath of Allegiance. And the Commo- " nalty taking the Oath of Allegiance, and rendring " their Arms, and ſubmitting to the Government, " are to have Quarter and Indemnity for their " Lives and Fortunes, and to be protected from " the Soldiers." After theſe were ſent additional Inſtructions of the 16th of January 1692; " which " contain Orders for giving of Paſſes, and for " receiving of the Submiſſion of certain of the " Rebels, wherein all to be notic'd to the preſent " purpoſe is, ſay the Lords Commiſſioners, That " therein his Majeſty doth judge it much better, that " thoſe who took not the Benefit of the Indemnity " in due time, ſhould be oblig'd to ſurrender upon " Mercy, they ſtill taking the Oath of Allegiance; " and 'tis added, if Maclean of Glenco, and that " Tribe could be well ſeparated from the reſt, it " will be a proper Vindication of the Publick Juſ- " tice to extirpate that Sect of Thieves." Which laſt Clauſe is dwelt much upon, by the Enemies to the Revolution, and King William who accompliſh'd it. But the Lords Commiſſioners in their Report vindicate his Majeſty in this Point; for after they have mention'd Secretary Stairs's Letters to Sir Thomas Levingſton, which he wrote as of himſelf; and by virtue of which Sir Thomas, and all thoſe that acted under him, proceeded, they add, Theſe Letters were no ways warranted by, but quite exceeded the King's aforeſaid Inſtructions; ſince the ſaid Letters, without any Inſinuation of any Method to be taken, that might well ſeparate the Glenco Men from the reſt, did in place of preſcribing a Vindication of Publick Juſtice, order them to be cut off, and rooted out. And theſe Letters of the Secretary Stairs, are, according to the Report, the only Warrant for the Execution committed on the Glenco Men. As to the King's Part in this Affair, the Parliament of Scotland were ſo jealous of his Majeſty's Honour, and ſo ſenſible of the Villany of the Reflections caſt upon him for it by his Enemies, that they Reſolv'd, Nemine Contradicente, June 24, 1695. " That his Majeſty's Inſtructions of the " 11th and 16th of January 1692, touching the " Highland Rebels, who did not accept in due " time of the Benefit of his Indemnity, did con- " tain a Warrant for Mercy to all without Excep- " tion, who ſhould take the Oath of Allegiance, " and come in upon Mercy; tho' the 1ſt Day of " January 1692, prefix'd by the Proclamation of " Indemnity was paſt, and that therefore theſe In- " ſtructions contain'd no Warrant for the Execu- " tion of the Glenco Men, made in February there- " after."

The Jacobites Account of it a villanous Lye.

We ſee here that the Lords Commiſſioners leave no other Warrant for that Execution, than the Maſter of Stairs's Letters; but Sir Hugh Dalrymple, Brother to that Secretary, publiſh'd a Pamphlet in his Vindication, and when that Pamphlet was complain'd of in Parliament, as reflecting on their Vote, as well as the Report of the Commiſſioners; Sir Hugh, a Member of the Houſe, acknowledg'd he wrote it, but that it was written before the Parliament's Vote, and he intended no Reflection on the Commiſſion. He alſo beg'd the Parliament's Pardon, but that hindred not their voting it to be falſe and calumnious. A.D.1695

This Report was ſuppreſs'd in King William's time, by the Influence of ſome near his Majeſty's Perſon; and the Perſons charg'd with the Glenco Execution, by the ſame means were not proſecuted. But in truth the proſecuting of Glenlion, whoſe Niece was then marry'd to Glenco's Son, and the Officers who obey'd the Letter of their Warrant, however they got it at Common Law, if cognizable by it, wou'd not have anſwer'd the end of the Proſecutors. We have already mention'd the Earl of Broadalbin, and muſt add concerning him, that the Lords Commiſſioners on the 10th of June preſented to the Parliament the private Articles agreed on in July 1691, between that Earl and Major-General Buchan, which being read, an Order was made for his Proſecution before them, and for his Commitment to the Caſtle of Edinburgh. On the firſt of October, he was brought to the Bar of the Houſe, and deliver'd in a Petition for time to bring in his Witneſſes; and a Week's time only was given him, at the end of which he was again brought to the Bar, when he deſir'd more time, and ten Days more were granted him, and the Proceſs afterwards put off to the next Seſſion.

In this Sir James Stuart the King's Advocate proſecuted the Fugitive Earls of Melfort and Middleton, and Sir Adam Blair, then in France; and they were fore-faulted for High-Treaſon. Now alſo were three Miniſters of the Synod of Aberdeen debarr'd from the Exerciſe of their Function, as were Mr. Burnet, Mr. Craven, Mr. Thompſon for refuſing the Oath of Allegiance, and the Aſſurance, and impriſon'd for it till they gave caution not to go on the North-ſide of the River: but their words were taken four Days after, and they were ſet at liberty.

On the 10th of October the King arriv'd at Margate from Holland; Sir Cloudeſly Shovel, with a Squadron of Men of War, having been his Convoy. His Majeſty lay that Night at Canterbury, and the next Day came to Kenſington, the People every where expreſſing a ſingular Joy for his ſafe and glorious Return.

The Parliament diſſolv'd.

Some time before it, Sir Edward Ward Attorney-General was made Lord Chief-Baron of the Exchequer, and that very Evening the King in Council, order'd a Proclamation to be iſſu'd for diſſolving the Parliament, and iſſuing out of Writs for calling a new one to begin at Weſtminſter, on Friday, Nov. 22. In the mean time his Majeſty took a Progreſs, and went firſt to Newmarket, October 17. where he receiv'd the Compliments of the Univerſity of Cambridge. From thence he went to Althorp in Northamptonſhire, the Seat of the Earl of Sunderland, whoſe Counſels and Converſation began to be more and more acceptable to his Majeſty. He from thence went to Caſtle-Aſhby, and made a Viſit to the Earl of Northampton. He did the ſame to the Earl of Montague at Boughton, and at both thoſe Places met with Royal Entertainment. He went to Stamford, October 28. and in his way took a View of Burleigh-Houſe, without ſeeing the Owner of it, the Earl of Exeter; and if it was the Earl's fault, I do not ſee what Pleaſure, he cou'd take in his Houſe ever after, having behav'd in it ſo unhandſomely towards the greateſt and beſt Prince in the World. His Majeſty din'd at Sir John Brownlow's at Belton, October 29, and the next Day went to Lincoln, and having heard the Cathedral-Service, purſu'd his Journey to Welbeck, the Duke of Newcaſtle's Seat in Nottinghamſhire; where every thing prepar'd for his Reception, was in the moſt grand and princely manner. Here

He takes a Progreſs.

A.D.1695 Dr Sharp, Archbiſhop of York, with his Clergy waited upon his Majeſty, Nov. 2. to congratulate his happy Succeſs and ſafe Return, expreſſing their Gratitude for his Majeſty's Care of the Church; which that very Biſhop, and thoſe very Clergy, declar'd to be in Danger in the next Reign, tho' the then Queen thought herſelf a much better Friend to it, than King William was. The next Day the King went to Broadgate, the Seat of the Earl of Stamford; and on the 4th of Nov. kept his Birthday at the Lord Brook's at Warwick-Caſtle. The next Day he din'd with the Duke of Shrewsbury at Eyford, and came that Evening to Burford, and three Days after to Woodſtock, where he lay at Mr. Cary's, an old Gentleman of near 100 Years old; who had been Servant to King James I. King Charles I. Oliver Cromwell, King Charles II. King James II. and was then Servant to King William: of this Cary I heard this pleaſant Story in his own Houſe: That King William being inform'd of a Humour of his in ſhewing his Pictures, deſir'd to ſee them, and pretending not to know whom they were drawn for, ask'd, of the firſt in Order, who that was. That, reply'd Cary, was my good old Maſter King James I. I ſerv'd him ſeveral Years? Who is the next? ſays his Majeſty. That Sir, reply'd Cary, is my good Maſter King Charles I. he was a good Maſter to me, let 'em ſay what they will of him? Pray who is the next? the King ſaid Why truly Sir, reply'd Cary, That's my Maſter Oliver Cromwell, he too was my very good Maſter; and ſo was the next there, King Charles II. and the next King James II. and ſo now is your Majeſty, whoſe Picture there is ſtill room for. Whether the King gave it him or not, I did not learn, but it was not there when this Story was told me. King William expreſs'd a good deal of Pleaſure, at the old Gentleman's Simplicity, in his way of ſetting out his Pictures, which it ſeems had been all given him.

Cary of Wood-ſtock's Diſcourſe with the King.

The King at Oxford. From Woodſtock his Majeſty came to Oxford, Nov. 10th; where he was met by the Duke of Ormond, Chancellor of that Univerſity, Dr. Adams, the Vice-Chancellor, and the Mayor, with other Doctors, Maſters, Aldermen and Chief Citizens, in their Academical and Ceremonial Habits. The King alighted at the Eaſt-gate of the Schools, and paſt directly to the Theatre, where a Noble Banquet was provided with Variety of Muſick. Col. Codrington, Fellow of All-Souls, expreſs'd the Thanks of the Univerſity, in an elegant Oration. He was the Son of Col. Codrington, Governor of the Leeward-Iſlands, of which himſelf alſo was afterwards Governor. He was alſo Captain of a Company of Guards, and behav'd very gallantly at the Siege of Namur. He was a Man of Learning and Wit as well as Bravery; the ſame to whom Creech, dedicated his Latin Edition of Lucretius with Notes, and who left a fine Library and 10000 l. in Money to his College. The Chancellor, on his Knees, preſented his Majeſty with a large Engliſh Bible, a great rarity where that Chancellor is now ſpending the Remains of his Life, among Monks and Friars in Spain; a Common-Prayer-Book; the Cuts of the Univerſity, and a Pair of Gold-fring'd Gloves. It was expected his Majeſty would have ſet down to the Banquet, but he did not; and indeed there was a Letter taken up in the Street at Oxford, intimating there was a Deſign to poiſon him. So he immediately took Coach for Windſor; declaring as a Reaſon of his ſhort ſtay, and his not going to ſee the Colleges, That his was a Viſit of Kindneſs, not of Curioſity, he having ſeen the Univerſity before.

On the 11th of Nov. his Majeſty came to Kenſington, and that Evening went to the Earl of Romney's Houſe in St. James's Square, to ſee the fine Fireworks which were play'd off there, prepar'd by that Earl, Maſter-General of the Ordnance, with whom he ſupp'd. In his Royal Progreſs, he appointed Sir Thomas Rokesby to be one of the Juſtices of the Common-Pleas, as alſo Sir John Powel, who had been one of the Barons of the Exchequer; and in his ſtead, Sir Littleton Powys was made Baron. A.D.1695

The New Parliament being chuſing in the mean time, there was little Appearance of a better than the former, by the Returns. The moſt remarkable of which, was that for the Univerſity of Oxford, who choſe Sir William Trumball, one of King William's Principal Secretaries of State, for one of their Repreſentatives. The Parliament met Nov. 22. and choſe Paul Foley Eſq; for their Speaker, which Choice promis'd not well, he being a diſguſted Man; whoſe Diſguſt was ſaid to have riſen from his not having been made a Privy-Counſellor, as the Speakers before him were wont to have been. Indeed the Harleys and Foleys, two Presbyterian Families of the Roundhead and Rigid Stamp, had now taken a Fancy to deſert the Brethren, and transfer their Zeal from the Conventicle to the Church; where it came to a good Market, as will ſoon be ſeen in this Hiſtory. The Speaker Foley being preſented to the King and approv'd by him, his Majeſty made the following Speech to both Houſes.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" IT is with great Satisfaction I meet you here this " Day, being aſſur'd of a good Diſpoſition in " my Parliament, when I have had ſuch full Proofs " of the Affection of my People, by their Beha- " viour during my Abſence, and at my Return.

" I was engag'd in the preſent War by the Ad- " vice of my firſt Parliament, who thought it ne- " ceſſary for the Defence of our Religion, and the " Preſervation of the Liberties of Europe. The " laſt Parliament with great Chearfulneſs did aſſiſt " me to carry it on; and I cannot doubt but that " your Concern for the Common Safety, will " oblige you to be unanimouſly zealous in the " Proſecution of it. And I am glad that the Ad- " vantages which we have had this Year, give us " a reaſonable Ground of hoping for further Succeſs " hereafter.

" Upon this Occaſion I cannot but take notice of " the Courage and Bravery, which the Engliſh " Troops have ſhewn this laſt Summer; which I " may ſay, has anſwer'd their higheſt Character in " any Age; and it will not be denied, that without " the Concurrence of the Valour and Power of " England, it were impoſſible to put a ſtop to the " Ambition and Greatneſs of France.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" I think it a great Misfortune, that from the be- " ginning of my Reign, I have been forc'd to ask ſo " many and ſuch large Aids of my People; and yet I " am confident you will agree with me in Opinion, " that there will be at leaſt as great Supplies requi- " ſite for carrying on the War by Sea and Land " this Year, as were granted the laſt Seſſion; the " rather, becauſe our Enemies are augmenting their " Troops, and the Neceſſity of encreaſing our " Shipping does plainly appear.

" The Funds which have been given have prov'd " very deficient; the Condition of the Civil Liſt " is ſuch, that it will not be poſſible for me to ſub- " ſiſt, unleſs that Matter be taken into your Care. " And Compaſſion obliges me to mention the mi- " ſerable State of the French Proteſtants, who ſuf- " fer for their Religion.

" And therefore, Gentlemen, I muſt earneſtly " recommend to you, to provide a Supply ſuita- " ble to theſe ſeveral Occaſions. I muſt likewiſe " take notice of a great Difficulty we lie under at " this time, by reaſon of the ill State of the Coin; " the redreſs of which, may perhaps prove a fur- " ther Charge to the Nation: but this is a Matter

" of

A.D.1695 " of ſuch general Complaint, and of ſo very great " Importance, that I thought fit to leave it entire- " ly to the conſideration of my Parliament. I did " recommend to the laſt Parliament, the forming " ſome good Bill, for the Encouragement and En- " creaſe of Seamen; I hope you will not let this " Seſſion paſs without doing ſomewhat in it, and " that you will conſider of ſuch Laws as may be " proper for the Advancement of Trade; and will " have a particular regard to that of the Eaſt-In- " dies, leſt it ſhould be loſt to the Nation. And " while the War makes it neceſſary to have an " Army abroad, I could wiſh ſome way might " be thought of, to raiſe the neceſſary Recruits " without giving Occaſion to complaint.

" My deſire to meet my People in a New Par- " liament, has made the opening of this Seſſions " very late, which I hope you will have ſuch Re- " gard to, as to make all poſſible Diſpatch of the " great Buſineſs before you, and will call to mind, " that by the long Continuance of the laſt Seſſion, " we did not only loſe Advantages which we might " have had at the beginning of the Campaign; but " gave the Enemy ſuch an Opportunity, as might " have prov'd very fatal to us. And I am the " more concern'd to preſs this, becauſe of the " great Preparations, which the French make to be " early in the Field this Year.

My Lords,

" I have had ſuch Experience of your good Af- " fections; and I have ſuch an entire Satisfaction " in the Choice, which my People have made of " you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, that I " promiſe myſelf a happy Concluſion of this Seſ- " ſion, unleſs you ſuffer yourſelves to be miſlead " into Heats and Diviſions; which being the only " Hope our Enemies have now left, I make no " doubt but you will entirely diſappoint them, by " your Prudence and Love to your Country."

Both Houſes of Parliament preſented Addreſſes of Thanks to his Majeſty, for his wiſe and healing Speech, and congratulated him on the glorious Succeſs of his Arms abroad; aſſuring him they would ſupport his Government againſt all his Enemies, Foreign and Domeſtick; and effectually aſſiſt him in the Proſecution of the preſent War, in which he was engag'd for the Safety of England, and Liberty of Europe. The whole Houſe preſented the Commons Addreſs, and his Majeſty's Anſwer was;

Gentlemen,

I heartily thank you, for the Marks you give me of your Affection: Our Intereſts are inſeparable, and there is nothing I wiſh ſo much, as the Happineſs of this Country, where God has plac'd me.

The Commons then addreſs'd the King to appoint a general Faſt; which was kept all over England, Wedneſday, 18th of Dec. when Dr. Haley preach'd before them in the Forenoon, and Dr. Williams in the Afternoon. The Houſe regulated Protections, and declar'd all void, except to their Menial Servants. And proceeding upon the Supply, Sir Thomas Littleton reported their Reſolutions. They gave in all, Five Millions, Twenty-four Thouſand, Eight Hundred and Fifty-three Pounds.

The Bill for preventing the clipping and counterfeiting the Current Coin, not anſwering to a full Redreſs of that Grievance, that Affair was brought into the new Parliament, to whom the King had recommended it in his Speech; and it muſt be remember'd, that the King's and Kingdom's Enemies propos'd great Matters to themſelves from the Deſtruction of Credit and Trade, which they doubted not wou'd ſoon be the effect of the ill State of the Coin; which they did all they cou'd to render ir-remediable, and warmly oppos'd all Propoſals that were offer'd to remedy it. This appears by a Paragraph in a Treatiſe, father'd on a Noble Lord, when it was publiſh'd in the Year 1701. A.D.1695

State-Tracts, Vol. III. p. 73.

" The next thing that occurs, is, to conſider the " miſerable Condition we were reduc'd to by the " clipp'd Money, and Riſe of Guineas to 30*s.* no " Story can furniſh us with ſo diſmal an Example. " Here our Enemies thought they had us ſafe; and " they judg'd pretty right: for if the Currency of The Faction " the clipp'd Money, and the monſtrous bulk of againſt " Guineas had not been overcome, they had been mending " ſure of our Necks under their Feet. Why then the Coin. " conſider, who were the Perſons that attempted " this ſtupendous Work: Who were thoſe that " were for re-coining the clipp'd Money, according to " the eſtabliſh'd Standard of the Mint, both as to " the Weight and Fineneſs, and for bringing down " Guineas to their intrinſick Value."

We know very well who were againſt it, Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave, Mr. Heneage Finch, Mr. Harcourt, Mr. How, Mr. Manſel, Mr. Gery, Mr. Granville, Mr. Hyde, Mr. Wyndham, Mr. Gwyn, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Verney, Mr. Tredenham, Mr. Rowney, &c. Names that will be found in all the Liſts of Voters againſt King William, his Government, and Liberty Eccleſiaſtical and Civil.

I was ſurpriz'd to find the following Pretences of this Party call'd weighty Reaſons by Biſhop Kennet, who had liv'd over the Experiment, and found there was nothing in it ſo ruinous and terrible as they wou'd have had it thought, &c. " This was no Their falſe " fit Juncture for re-coining the Money, while the Reaſons " Nation was engag'd in a burthenſome and doubt- againſt it. " ful War, by which the Kingdom had already " greatly ſuffer'd, and of which it grew every day " more ſenſible. That therefore the People, on " whoſe good Affections the Government ſo much " depended, ſhould not be provok'd by freſh Grie- " vances, greater than any they had yet felt; as " thoſe would certainly be, that muſt ariſe from " the calling in the Silver Coin. That if this was " done, however, things might be manag'd at " home, it were impoſſible to maintain either the " Commerce or the War abroad; for neither the " Merchant could be paid his Bills of Ex- " change, nor the Soldier receive his Subſiſtence. " That this was to lay the Axe to the Root, and " to dig up the Foundation of the Government. " That if this Deſign was proſecuted, Trade muſt " ſtand ſtill for want of mutual Payments, whence " ſuch Diſorder and Confuſion would certainly fol- " low, as would diſcourage and diſhearten the Peo- " ple in the higheſt manner, if not drive them to a " perfect Deſpair, as Deſpair would to the moſt de- " ſperate Extremities. That therefore the re-coin- " ing the Money at this time, was by no means " to be attempted without hazarding all."

Theſe weighty Reaſons, as the Biſhop calls them, and the Perſons that made uſe of them, the Country-Party, both alike Miſnomers, were indeed the very reverſe of Reaſon and Truth. They begin with declaiming againſt the War, which they had juſt voted to aſſiſt his Majeſty effectually in ſupporting; but which in reality they abhorr'd, as it was a means to reduce the exorbitant Power of France, after which there wou'd be no hope of ever having K. James again. They then inſinuate that the Supplies they had given for carrying on that War were Grievances, and the re-coining the Money would be a freſh one. And every Word after that, in theſe Reaſons of Weight, is contrary to what happen'd upon the re-coining. The Effects of which were better foreſeen by the Gentlemen who voted for it; at the head of whom appear'd Charles Montague Eſq; Chancellor of the Exchequer. They alledg'd, " The Miſchief wou'd be fatal, if a pre- Reaſons " ſent Remedy was not found out and apply'd; for it. " that by reaſon of the ill State of the Coin, the

" Ex-

*A.D.*1695 " Exchange already, was infinitely to the Nation's " prejudice. I do verily believe, that not one of the aforeſaid Country-Party, underſtood the Nature of Exchange abroad, and when the Nation got or loſt by it. " That the Supplies that were rais'd to main- " tain the Army, would never attain their end, " being ſo much diminiſh'd and devour'd by the " unequal Charge, and exorbitant Premiums be- " fore they reach'd the Camp. That this was the " unhappy Cauſe that Guineas advanc'd to thirty " Shillings, and Foreign Gold in proportion. That " therefore, to the Nation's great Loſs, not only " the Dutch, but indeed all Europe, ſent that " Commodity to this Market, and would continue " to do ſo till the Nation ſhou'd be impoveriſh'd " and undone by Plenty of Gold. That we muſt " exchange for their Gold, our Goods or our Sil- " ver, till at laſt we ſhould have only Guineas to " trade withal; which no body could think our " Neighbours would be ſo kind as to receive back, " at the Value they were at here. That therefore " this Diſeaſe would every day take deeper Root, " infect the very Vitals of the Nation, and if not " remedied would ſoon become incurable. That " our Enemies muſt be mightily intimidated by ſo " great an Action, and would ſooner be induc'd to " agree to honourable Terms of Peace, in caſe " they ſaw us able to ſurmount this Difficulty, by " the retrieving the ill State of the Coin; on which " their Hopes of the Nation's ſpeedy Ruin ſo much " depended, and that it would juſtly create a migh- " ty Eſteem abroad of the Greatneſs and Wiſdom " of the Parliament of England, which was able to " conquer ſuch an obſtinate and almoſt inſuperable " Evil, in ſuch a Juncture of Affairs."

Theſe Arguments were unanſwerable, and in an eſpecial manner by this Country-Party; who knew too little of ſuch Matters, to cope with Men ſo expert in the Finances and Trade: and was it not monſtrous to hear them ſpeaking againſt re-coin- ing, becauſe it wou'd deſtroy Trade, and deprive the Army of their Pay, at the ſame time, that the Officers and Merchants who were in the Houſe, were the moſt zealous for it? But in the next De- bate we ſhall find how well they were inſtructed in Matters of Commerce, which in truth they were ſeldom concern'd for, unleſs it were to gain ſome other Point by it. Witneſs the French Commerce Bill, by which as many of them, as were then Members of Parliament, wou'd ſome Years after have given up our Trade to France.

The next Queſtion being, whether the preſent Standard ſhould continue upon re-coining the Silver Money, it was agreed to. " The ſame Country- " Party was for raiſing it, alledging the Price of an " Ounce of Silver Bullion was advanc'd to Six " Shillings and Three Pence, and therefore the " Standard ought to be rais'd to an Equality. That " the raiſing the Standard wou'd prevent the Ex- " portation of our Coin; one may be aſſur'd, that whoever is at any time in this Tone, he knows no- thing of Traffick, and is to be harken'd to accord- ingly; " and the melting of it down, which of " late Years has been much practis'd, to the great " Prejudice of the Kingdom; and that it would " encourage People to bring in their Plate and " Bullion into the Mint." The Court-Party, ſays the Biſhop, who were for preſerving the old Standard, argu'd, " That as to the Price now rais'd to 6*s.* 3*d.* " it was impoſſible the Price of Silver cou'd riſe " and fall in reſpect of itſelf; but the Alteration " of the Value of Bullion, was meerly in relation " to diminiſh'd Money. For it was ſtill matter " of Fact, that with Five Shillings and Two Pence " of new mill'd Money, they could buy an Ounce " of Bullion; whilſt thoſe who bought it with " clipp'd Pieces, paid 6*s.* 3*d.*"

What follows is a Leſſon proper for all Country Politicians to learn, they being as yet in a State of profound Ignorance upon this Head. " That as " to the Argument of preventing the Exportation " of Money, by raiſing the Standard," Mr. Mon- tague's Friends ſaid, There was no way poſſible to keep our Money at home, but by out-trading our Neighbours; that is, by ſending them more Commodi- ties, or of greater value than thoſe we receiv'd from them.

*A.D.*1695

Silver a Commodi- ty to be traded with.

After theſe and other Debates, the Commons Reſolv'd, Dec. 10. " That all clipp'd Money be re- " coin'd, according to the eſtabliſh'd Standard of the " Mint both as to the Weight and Fineneſs; that the " Loſs of ſuch clipp'd Money ſhall be borne by " the Publick; that a Day be appointed, after " which no Crowns or Half-Crowns be allow'd in " any Payment; that another Day be appointed for " all Perſons to bring in their clipp'd Money, to " be re-coin'd into mill'd Money, and that a Fund " be ſettled for ſupplying the Deficiencies." After this, Mr. Montague reported the Form of an Ad- dreſs, " to deſire his Majeſty to regulate the Cur- " rency of clipp'd Money according to the fore- " going Reſolution;" which Addreſs was preſented to the King, who caus'd a Proclamation to be iſſu'd for that purpoſe; the Lords having already ad- dreſs'd his Majeſty to the ſame Effect. The Houſe of Commons preſented alſo an Addreſs to deſire his Majeſty would pleaſe to procure an Exemption from Duty for all Engliſh Goods, tranſported to the Netherlands, for the uſe of the Army. To which the King anſwer'd, What is deſir'd by the Commons, has been done in a good meaſure for ſeveral Years, and I will ſee what can be further done in it. The Bill for regulating the Coinage of the Silver Money, which had been prepar'd by Mr. Montague, Chancellor of the Exchequer, paſt the Houſe of Commons the 27th of Dec. with a borrowing Clauſe, and a Re- compence for all Perſons, who ſhould bring in clipp'd Money. On the 31ſt of Dec. the Com- mons reſolv'd to raiſe 1200000*l.* for ſupplying the Deficiency of the clipp'd Money, by the Win- dow-Tax, which was continu'd after the Expira- tion of the Term mention'd in it for that Supply, and appropriated to other uſes.

The Win- dow-Tax granted for the Coin.

The Proclamation for putting a ſtop to the Cur- rency of clipp'd Money, appointed ſo few Days, that an immediate ſtop was put to Trade; which the Commons took into Conſideration, and Re- ſolv'd, January 19. That the Recompence for ſup- plying the Deficiency of clipp'd Money, ſhould extend to all clipp'd Money that was Silver, tho' of a coarſer Allay than the Standard; that the Collectors and Receivers of his Majeſty's Aids and Revenues, be enjoin'd to receive all ſuch Moneys. That a Re- ward of Five Pounds per Cent. be given to all, that ſhall bring in either mill'd or broad unclipp'd Money, to be applied in Exchange for the clipp'd Money throughout the Kingdom. That a Reward alſo of Three Pence per Ounce, be given to all Perſons who ſhould bring in wrought Plate to the Mint to be coin'd. That for the ſooner bringing in the clipp'd Money to be re-coin'd any Perſon may pay in their whole next Year's Tax of Four Shillings in the Pound, in the ſaid clipp'd Money, at one convenient Time ap- pointed for that Purpoſe. That Commiſſioners be ap- pointed in every County, to pay and diſtribute the mill'd and broad unclipp'd Money, and the new-coin'd Money, and to receive the clipp'd Money. Theſe Reſolutions were form'd into a Bill, with a Clauſe to prohibit the melting down and Exportation of any Coin or Bullion, and to prohibit the uſe of Plate in Publick Houſes: Which was grown to ſuch an Extravagance, that one Alehouſe near the Royal Exchange, London, had in Silver Tankards to the Value of above 500*l.* The Bill juſt mention'd, had ſo many Amendments made to it by the Lords; that Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer was order'd

to

A.D.1695 to prepare and bring in another Bill, for remedying the ill State of the Coin of this Kingdom, which paſt both Houſes, and had the Royal Aſſent.

For the more expeditious re-coining the clipp'd Money that was brought to the Mint, there were Royal Mints erected in ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom, as at York, Briſtol, Exeter, Cheſter, Norwich. The Jacobites had conceiv'd great Hopes, that this Attempt would throw us into Confuſion, for they could think of no way of doing their old King's and their own Buſineſs, but by the Ruin of their Country; and it was ſaid their Confederate, the French King, ſhould ſay, If the Engliſh can do this at this time, they can do any Thing. The Engliſh did it, under the Government of King William their Deliverer of Immortal Memory. The old Silver Coin and other Bullion brought in for that purpoſe, was minted and mill'd; and in leſs than a Year's time, England that had for ſo many Years had the worſt Money, had then the beſt Money of any Nation in Europe; which threw the Faction and their Confederate into Deſpair, and put them upon reviving their former damnable Plot, to rid themſelves of ſo formidable an Enemy by Treaſon and Murder. The Scots Parliament having this Year paſs'd an Act, for erecting a Company to trade to Africa and the Eaſt-Indies; the Parliament of England took the Alarm, as if it had been a Project to deſtroy that Trade in this Kingdom. Both Lords and Commons preſented an Addreſs to the King againſt it, Dec. 17th, to which his Majeſty was pleas'd to anſwer, I have been ill-ſerv'd in Scotland, but I hope ſome Remedies may be found to prevent the Inconveniencies, which may ariſe from this Act.

Several Mints ſet up.

The French King's Saying of re-coining our Money.

An Addreſs againſt the Scots African Company.

The Houſe of Commons appointed a Committee to examine, by what Methods the ſaid Act was obtain'd; which I muſt confeſs I do not ſo well underſtand, as to clear it up to the Reader. The Methods for obtaining an Act of Parliament in Scotland, were much the ſame as thoſe in England. A Bill was brought into the Houſe, debated, rejected or paſs'd, and had or had not the Royal Aſſent. The Miniſters and Council of Scotland communicated what was thought in that Kingdom to be for its Advantage to their King, and it was their Duty ſo to do; and the King as Sovereign of that Independent Kingdom, had certainly a Care upon him to procure Advantages for his Subjects there, as well as for his Subjects in his other Dominions. Had his Majeſty's Miniſters ſunk any Parliamentary Applications of that kind, or given Advice to the King, contrary to the Senſe of his Parliament in that Kingdom; he had moſt certainly been ill-ſerv'd. But thinking in this Caſe, as one ought to do like a Scotſman, I do not ſee how a Miniſter cou'd do ill Service in communicating to his Maſter the Senſe of the Nation, for whoſe welfare the King employ'd him in his Service.

Conſiderations on his Majeſty's ſaying, he had been ill-ſerv'd in Scotland.

What happen'd afterwards in the Direction of the Affairs of the Company, ſo eſtabliſh'd at Edinburgh; and the Directors taking Subſcriptions, not only in England, but in Holland and Hamburgh, for carrying on a Trade, which they cou'd not carry on of themſelves, gave indeed too much Reaſon to the Engliſh Eaſt-India Company, and the Weſt-India Merchants, to be apprehenſive of great Detriment to their Trade, by this New Company's breaking in upon them, and letting Foreigners and Interlopers into the Commerce of England, by the Back-door of Scotland.

1696. The Committee of Commons having made their Report to the Houſe, and deliver'd a Copy of the Oath de Fideli, taken by the Directors of the Scots India Company, and of the Journal of their Proceedings, which, together with the Petition of the Engliſh Eaſt-India Company, having been maturely examin'd and conſider'd; they reſolv'd, January 26th, "That the Directors of the Com- A.D.1696

This Affair had anger'd ſo many People, and the Diſaffected had made their Advantage of it ſo far in increaſing their Number, that when the Commons took into Conſideration the Trade of this Kingdom, and had reſolv'd to erect a Council, for the better regulating and improving it with ſufficient Powers, it being debated whether the Members of that Council, which was to be nam'd by the Houſe, but not of Members, ſhou'd take an Oath acknowledging King William to be rightful and lawful King of England, and renouncing the Title of the late King James; it was rejected.

A Tory Negative.

His Majeſty came to the Houſe of Peers, Jan. 11. and gave the Royal Aſſent to an Act for enlarging the Times to purchaſe certain Annuities, and continuing the Duties on low Wines, &c. An Act for regulating Trials in Caſes of High-Treaſon; which had been ſeveral times brought into Parliament, and was never perfected till now, a few Days only before the Diſcovery of the moſt Deviliſh Conſpiracy, that ever was enter'd into on this ſide Hell, by Papiſts and Jacobites, to aſſaſſinate King William, and impoſe upon theſe Kingdoms a forefaulted King, with his inſeparable Companions, Popery and Slavery. The Benefit of this Act was claim'd and enjoy'd by ſome of the Conſpirators; and it was remark'd that thoſe Members of both Houſes, who were moſt zealous for its paſſing at this time, were of that Party who were moſt deeply concern'd in the illegal Trials and Executions under that King and his Brother.

The Bill for Trials in Caſes of High-Treaſon.

Before the King went to Holland, he had made a Grant to the Earl of Portland, of the Manors of Denbigh, Bromfield, Yale and other Lands in the Principality of Wales. The Warrant for this Grant coming to the Lords of the Treaſury, the Gentlemen of the Country had notice of it, that they might be heard, if they had any thing to ſay againſt it. Accordingly ſeveral of them attended, and were heard before the Lord Godolphin, Sir William Trumbal, Sir Stephen Fox, and John Smith Eſq; Chancellor of the Exchequer; the other Commiſſioner not being mention'd on this Occaſion.

Earl of Portland's Grant in Wales.

Sir William Williams, Son of a Doctor of Divinity of that Country, alledg'd, "That theſe Speeches againſt it.
"Lordſhips were the ancient Demeſnes of the "Prince of Wales. That the Welſh were never
"ſubject to any but God and the King. That in
"the Statute for granting Fee-Farm Rents, there
"was an Exception of Rents belonging to the "Principality of Wales, which imported that the

A.D.1696 " Parliament took thoſe Revenues to be unalienable. " That upon Creation of a Prince of Wales, there " were many Acknowledgments payable out of thoſe " Lordſhips; and tho' there was at preſent no Prince " of Wales, yet he hop'd to ſee one of the King's " own Body." Which cou'd not be, as long as the Princeſs Anne and the Duke of Glouceſter liv'd; they both having a Prior Right to any Iſſue of King William's.

Sir Roger Puleſton argu'd, " That the Revenues " of thoſe Lordſhips did ſupport the Government " of Wales, by paying the Judges and other Offi- " cers their ſtated Salaries; and if given away, there " would be a failure of Juſtice."

Mr. Price, a Lawyer of Herefordſhire, made a long and warm Speech againſt this Grant, which was much taken notice of, for ſome ſmart Reflections in it upon the Grant, and the Grantee. It gain'd the Gentleman the good-will of the People of Wales and the Marches, and he was ſome time after made one of the Barons of the Exchequer.

The Grant itſelf had no agreeable Aſpect, and the Lord Portland was blam'd by the King's Friends for procuring it of his Majeſty. The Diſaffected call'd him in deriſion our new Prince of Wales; and had the Gentlemen who ſpoke againſt the Grant, done it with more Decency and Temper, their Applauſe wou'd have been more general.

Mr. Price ſaid to this effect: That the Country was too great for a Foreigner to be Lord of it, and the People too great to be ſubject to him. He intimated that the Gentlemen of that Territory owing Allegiance to the King as Subjects, and Service to him as Tenants; if their Service was yielded over to another, their Allegiance might be in danger of doing the like: for, adds he, it is obſervable that Intereſt and Property have an Aſcendant over Duty. I ſhall not inſert this Speech, nor that Mr. Price made afterwards in Parliament, of which he was a Member, to the ſame purpoſe; they being too long for a Place here: and ſhall obſerve only, that when he had done ſpeaking, the Lord Godolphin, one of the Lords of the Treaſury, ſaid, Had not the Earl of Leiceſter theſe Lordſhips in Grant to him in Queen Elizabeth's time? Sir Robert Cotton anſwer'd, I believe I can give the beſt Account in that Caſe. The Earl of Leiceſter had but one of theſe Lordſhips, and that was Denbigh; he was ſo oppreſſive to the Gentry of the Country, that it occaſion'd them to take up Arms and to oppoſe him; for which three or four of my Wife's Relations, of the Salisburies, were hang'd. But it ended not there, for the Quarrel was kept ſtill on foot; and the Earl glad to be in Peace, and ſo granted it back to the Queen, and it has been in the Crown ever ſince. Then my Lord Godolphin rejoin'd, You have offer'd many weighty Reaſons, and we ſhall repreſent them to his Majeſty. The ſuperſeding of the Grant, did not ſatisfy the Gentlemen who oppos'd it; they brought the Affair into the Houſe of Commons by a Petition, ſign'd by Sir Thomas Groſvenor, Sir Richard Middleton, Sir John Conway, Sir Robert Cotton, Sir Roger Puleſton, Edward Vaughan Eſq; Edward Brereton Eſq; and Robert Price Eſq; the Gentleman before-mention'd, who ſpoke to it in Parliament in the ſame Stile, as before the Treaſury: And among other Things ſaid, That if he could conceive how the Glory and Grandeur of England was, or could be upheld by a poor landleſs Crown, and a miſerable neceſſitous People, he could then be perſuaded to believe that his Majeſty was well adviſ'd to grant away all the Revenues of the Crown, and that his Government would thereby be well ſecur'd, and his People beſt protected, when they had little or nothing left. This is one of the ſmart Touches before ſpoken of. I believe every one will agree, that the Grant of theſe Parcels of the Principality of Wales, was unadviſedly, or ill-adviſedly done, and that the Oppoſition was juſt and noble in all thoſe that had nothing in View, but the ſaving thoſe Lands from Alienation; but what need was there of inſinuating, there was reaſon to fear the People of all Britain, as well as of the Marches of Wales, wou'd become miſerable and neceſſitous, and that Poverty would be their beſt Protection under King William's Government? And what need was there of bringing the Dutch in by the Head and Shoulders into this Argument, unleſs to gratify the Reſentment of thoſe, who never forgave them for the Aſſiſtance they gave us at the Revolution? That Gentleman added, I confeſs my Thoughts are troubled with ſtrange Apprehenſions of our deplorable State; we are in a Confederate War, and ſome of theſe Confederates are Enemies to our Trade. Now let the moſt Impartial Engliſh or Welſhman judge, what the Dutch and the Confederates have to do with the Manor of Denbigh, and what the French Proteſtants in Soho and Spittlefields. But tho' every Babe in Politicks, knows the Strength and Riches of a Kingdom conſiſt in the Number of Inhabitants, and that we ſhould by all reaſonable Inducements, of which a Naturalization is a very cheap one, prevail with Foreigners to dwell among us; yet for fear of the Church, thoſe Foreigners not being Orthodox, as ſoon as they ſet foot on Engliſh Ground, the Party that oppos'd King William's Acceſſion to the Throne, and all Revolution Meaſures of Government, oppos'd always the Encreaſe of Trade and Power, by the Encreaſe of People. Therefore we find in this Speech about the Welſh Marches, as follows: Our Enemies in Trade, tho' planted amongſt us, ſome of the King's Council, ſome in the Army, and the Common Traders, have poſſeſs'd themſelves of the Out-skirts of this great City: We find ſome or other of them naturaliz'd, and others made Denizens every Parliament; we find Endeavours for a general Naturalization; we ſee moſt Places of Power and Profit given to Foreigners. Which was ſo far from Truth, that there was not one Place in ten all over England poſſeſs'd by Foreigners. But the next Words are ſo far from being true, or decent, or to the Purpoſe of the Grant of Lands in Shire Denbigh, that I am amaz'd to think the Speaker of them met with the leaſt Approbation in ſuch an Aſſembly. I foreſee that when we are reduc'd to extream Poverty, as now we are very near it; we are to be ſupplanted by our Neighbours, and become a Colony to the Dutch. There's enough of it; whoever has ſo much Patience as to read the reſt, may find it in Biſhop Kennet's Hiſtory; who calls it a Stout and Eloquent Speech. As to the Stoutneſs of it, 'tis of the kind of thoſe Cudgel-Players, that lay on upon the Basket when they can't touch the Head; and as to its Eloquence, 'tis of the kind which has no Soul to animate it, but Sophiſtry and Malignity, witneſs this Paragraph. The Subject ſtill is the Grant of ſome Lands on the Welſh Borders; I would have us to conſider, that we are Engliſhmen. He had in other Parts of the Speech, ſtood much upon his and the other Petitioners being Welſhmen, formerly the Terror of the Engliſh. And muſt like good Patriots ſtand by our Country, and not ſuffer it to become tributary to Strangers. He might with as much reaſon have ſaid, to the Man in the Moon. We have rejoyc'd that we have beat out of this Kingdom Popery and Slavery; and do now with as great Joy entertain Socinianiſm and Poverty. Monſtrum Horrendum! Where was the Den of this Dragon Socinianiſm? not in the Marches of Wales ſure! I am ſatisfy'd they knew no more of Socinianiſm there, than of Aurora Borealis. But thus it is with Men of a Party, when they would carry a Point, they care not whether what they ſay, is to the Queſtion in diſpute or not, if it ſtrikes home, and gives an ill Impreſſion of thoſe they are ill affected to.

The

A.D.1696 The House of Commons presenting an Address to his Majesty against the Denbigh Grant, he was pleased to express himself thus;

Gentlemen,

The King's Answer to the Commons about the Grant.

I have a Kindness for my Lord Portland, which he has deserved of me by long and faithful Services; but I should not have given him these Lands, if I had imagined the House of Commons could have been concerned. I will therefore recall the Grant, and find some other way of shewing my Favour to him.

The Address was presented the 22d of January, and a few days after broke out the horrid Assassination and Invasion Plot, just as it was about to be put in execution: And tho' we shall not find many of the Party beforementioned actually in the Conspiracy, we shall certainly find them pleading for the Conspirators.

The Tories were so ready to turn every Discovery of a Plot against King William into Ridicule, and to represent it as an Artifice of his Ministers, to sacrifice the harmless Papists and Jacobites to their Avarice and Revenge; that I think we ought not to omit any Opportunity to confirm such wicked Designs of theirs, by new Discoveries. And the following Account being communicated to me, by Persons of Integrity and Worth, it cannot but be acceptable to the Publick.

Capt. Ricards discovers a Design against the King's Life.

Capt. William Ricards, a Commander in the Navy Royal in King Charles II's Reign, having for some reasons quitted that Employment, and taken to a private one, which obliged him to live near the River of Thames, dwelt afterwards in St. Katherine's, a place much frequented by Dutchmen, whom he was very kind to, and often spoke well of at a Coffee-House in the Neighbourhood; which occasioned many Disputes with the Disaffected to the Constitution, who hated them for the very same reason he loved them, the Assistance they gave to our glorious Deliverer King William. Capt. Ricards taking it for granted that all Dutchmen were in the same Sentiments, with respect to the Revolution, made no distinction; but treated them all alike, with great Kindness and Hospitality, as Occasion offered. By this means he became intimate with one Bourne, who in conversation dropt several Expressions, which gave the Captain reason to suspect, that he knew something of treasonable and dangerous Import, if he was not engaged in it; and he sifted him so closely, that he at last opened himself more freely, and confessed that he had come to the knowledge of a traitorous Conspiracy against the King. After which, Mr. Ricards never left him till he went with him to Sir William Trumbal, one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, about the 20th of September, 1695, at what time his Majesty was expected to return to England, after the Reduction of Namur. Bourne gave sufficient Information to satisfy Mr. Secretary there was a secret Enterprize resolved upon; to execute which, several Persons lay concealed at Margate in Kent, where it was expected his Majesty would land; that these Men were provided with Fire-Arms, and had a Vessel for their Service, which lay off of Margate, the Master of which was one Twynam, lately dead. Upon this the Secretary of State, and Lords of the Council, thought it prudent to look farther into the matter, and see whether any such Persons could be found at that Place. To this end, they proposed to Capt. Ricards to go himself thither, having understood by him that he was a Native of that Place, and very well acquainted with it; they offered him whatever Assistance and Support he desired. Their Lordships had no difficulty to prevail with a Gentleman so well affected to King William, to undertake that Service; and the Earl of Romney, Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports, signed the following Warrant.

To all whom these Presents may concern.

Know ye, that the Bearer hereof, Capt. William Ricards, by command from me, is commissioned hereby to seize and apprehend several dangerous Persons, of whom you shall receive Notice by him. I therefore hereby require and command all Officers both Military and Civil, to be aiding and assisting to the said Capt. William Ricards, in effecting the same. Given under my Hand and Seal this 25th day of September, 1695. A.D.1696

ROMNEY.

Capt. Ricards took two Yachts, and a Company of Soldiers from the Tower, and without communicating his Departure to any one Person whatsoever, made down to Margate; pretending to spend a few Days with his Friends and Acquaintance there, whom he had not seen in many years: and that none of them might take it ill in particular, that he did not lodge at his House, he took Lodgings at Paul Hart's, the Posthouse, yet the most suspected Place in the Town for the Conspirators to be conceal'd in. Major Gregory, Tower-Armourer, was the only Man who came ashore with him, and tho' he made as diligent Search as could be done, without giving the Alarm to those that were concealed there, he at first made no Discovery, those Persons keeping close all day. The Wind was contrary, and kept the King back a Fortnight, and in that length of Time, Capt. Ricards found out that there were Persons concealed in the House, with some circumstances that were very suspicious. Five lodg'd in one Room, where was good store of Fire-Arms, and that Room very convenient for any sudden Attempt upon landing. He often heard them drink mysterious Healths in their midnight Revellings. 'Twas plain by their Discourse that there were others concerned, by whom they expected to be joined, as soon as they were ready for it; which fully convinced Capt. Ricards that he could not use too many Precautions, to prevent their executing their hellish Design. The Wind coming fair for his Majesty, he ordered the Officers of the Yachts ashore, and invited several of his Friends in the Town, which he could trust, to an Entertainment, under pretence of paying his Foy upon his Return to London the next day: and after he had entertained them till near midnight, he fasten'd the Door, and made known to the Company the Business he came for, and what he had done in it; that he had discovered several suspicious Fellows, who were concealed in that House, and he then shewed the necessity of securing their Persons before the King landed. He called in Paul Hart the Inn-Keeper, and clapping a Pistol to his Breast, threatned immediately to shoot him, if he did not discover who were the Persons concealed in such a Room in his Inn, and what was their Intent. Paul Hart presently owned their being there, and that they had been thus shut up in a Room for some time, but he knew not their Intent, nor any thing more of them, than that they ordered him to keep their being there a Secret; and that as soon as the Fleet which was to bring over the King appeared in sight, he was to knock at their Chamber-Door, and say Twynam is come. Capt. Ricards obliged Hart to go with him and his Friends directly to the Room these Fellows were in, to knock at the Door, and cry Twynam is come; upon which, it was immediately opened by an Irishman, who seemed to be the head of them; he had a Pistol in his hand, which Capt. Ricards laid hold on, and obliged him to drop it; and the Company breaking in at the same time, secured the rest in their Beds. He found a great many Fire-Arms, as Bourne had informed him, which were all loaden, and lay on the Table. The King landed in a few Hours after, and Capt. Ricards brought away the five Ruffians to London, where they were committed to Newgate, and having lain there some Weeks, they were let go; Bourne's Evidence being single, and not sufficient

to

A.D.1696 to convict them of Treaſon. Others of the Gang lay in and about Portſmouth, whither he was ſent to ſearch for and ſecure them; purſuant to this Warrant from Sir William Trumbal, one of his Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State.

Whereas Information has been given to me that ſeveral Perſons ſuſpected of dangerous and treaſonable Practices againſt his Majeſty and the Government, do frequently reſort to certain Places known to you:

Theſe are, in his Majeſty's Name, to authorize and require of you, taking to your aſſiſtance a Conſtable, forthwith to make ſtrict and diligent Search in ſuch Houſes, or Ships, as you ſhall think fit, for ſuch Perſons; and having found any of them, you are to ſeize and bring them, together with their Papers, before me, to be examined, and further dealt with according to Law.

In the due execution whereof, all Mayors, Sheriffs, Juſtices of the Peace, Conſtables, and all other his Majeſty's Officers both Civil and Military, whom it may any ways concern, are to be aſſiſting to you as there may be occaſion. And for ſo doing, this ſhall be your Warrant. Given at Whitehall the 6th of November, 1695.

WILL. TRUMBAL.

This matter could not be manag'd ſo ſecretly, but the Conſpirators had Intimation of it, and made their Eſcape before Capt. Ricards got to Portſmouth; but in their Hurry to get off, they left ſome Papers behind them written with a Cypher, containing treaſonable Matters. In one of theſe Papers was the Copy of the following Letter; and in another, the Cypher annex'd to it. The Letter is not ill written, and ſhews that the Writer was no idle Obſerver of what paſt.

This Cypher is of a much greater length, but one can make little of the reſt; it conſiſts chiefly of other Names for Church, Diſſenters, Parliament, Clergy, Army, Fleet, Portſmouth, Tower, City, Taxes, Soldiers, Arms, &c. In this Cypher there are ſome Names which give ground to gueſs that theſe Conſpirators were alſo in the Conſpiracy for the Invaſion and Aſſaſſination, diſcover'd ſoon after; as Lord Ailesbury, Sir John Fenwick, Goodman, Porter, and Caſſe, in whoſe Houſe was found the Traytor Friend; tho' High-Church thought him afterwards a very fit Perſon to repreſent them in Parliament for the City of London, to be an Alderman, &c. This Caſſe did not fail to vent his Malice againſt Capt. Ricards on all Occaſions, eſpecially in threatning him after Sacheverel's Sedition.

'Twas ſuppos'd that the aforementioned Ruffians acted in concert with ſome of the Aſſaſſinators at London, who were diſcover'd three Months after, and that Bourne knew more of their wicked Deſigns than he confeſs'd, or the Perſons ſeiz'd might have been convicted and puniſhed, and probably the Knot of thoſe Villains have been then broken.—Bourne, as ill as he deſerved it, had a Penſion of 100*l.* a year ſettled upon him; and that the Miniſters were well pleaſed with Capt. Ricards's good Service at Margate, appears by their employing him again at Portſmouth. But I cannot learn that he had any other Reward than an Offer of Knighthood, which he did not think himſelf qualified to accept of, and the Command of a Man of War, which requir'd a Qualification he could not comply with: ſo, to uſe the Words of my Information, He contented himſelf for the great Charge and Trouble he had been at for ſome Weeks, with the Satisfaction of having contributed to the Safety of the beſt of Kings.

In about three Months after Capt. Ricards return'd from Portſmouth, the Invaſion and Aſſaſſination Plot broke out.

The Aſſaſſination and Invaſion Plot.

The Steps towards the Invaſion were ſooner taken notice of than any Diſcovery or Suſpicion of an Aſſaſſination. His Majeſty told the Parliament that the French were augmenting their Forces, and 'twas ſoon perceiv'd that they were to ſupply the place of the Army, which they were to furniſh King James with, to attempt the Recovery of his abdicated Kingdoms. The French King and his Miniſters were made to believe that his Party in England were the Nine in Ten, as Mr. Harley's Tools made the High-Church to be, upon his thruſting himſelf into the Miniſtry; whereas at that time King William was more in poſſeſſion of the Hearts of the People, than any King of England had been ſince the Stuarts reign'd there; and the Reſtoration of King James was their Abhorrence, a few deſpicable Deſperadoes excepted. The French King, impoſed upon by the Informations of theſe wicked Men, ordered ſeveral Bodies of Troops to file off toward the Sea-Coaſt, which gave ſome Umbrage to the Confederates; eſpecially to the Dutch, who were apprehenſive they might be deſigned to inſult the Coaſts of Zealand. But the Deſign was quickly unravelled, for about the middle of February the Diſcourſe became publick in France, that their King intended to re-eſtabliſh King James upon his Throne; and that the Project was ſo well concerted that there was nothing wanting now but a fair Wind to waft him over. In order to this, King James took Poſt for Calais the 18th of February, where, as ſoon as he arrived, the Troops, Artillery, and Stores, were put on board with the utmoſt Diligence, while with great Impatience he expected News from England, to call him thither. So confident were the French of the Succeſs of this Enterprize, that the Duke of Orleans ſollicited the Duke of Savoy, his Son-in-law, to come into a ſeparate Peace with Lewis XIV. for that the Allies would ſoon be utterly overthrown; which referred to the Plot for killing the King of England, and invading the Kingdom. The Duke of Wirtemburg hearing of King James's coming to Calais, immediately diſpatched one of his Aid de Camps to give King William notice of it. The Prince of Vaudemont, who was then at Bruſſels with the Elector of Bavaria, ſent ſeveral Expreſſes to the King of England, by the way of Holland, on the ſame Errand; but the Duke of Wirtemburg's Meſſenger paſſing directly over to England from Newport with difficulty to eſcape the Enemy, came firſt to Kenſington, February 22, and acquainted his Majeſty, that the Duke of Wirtemburg had ſtopped all the Ships in the Harbour and Canal of Oſtend, as well as that of Bruges, that the Forces might be ready to be tranſported for his Service: and the Duke ordered his Meſſenger to declare, that in caſe he did not quickly hear from the King, he would run the Hazard of bringing them over himſelf. The States of Holland made the like Preparations at Sas van Ghent. But notwithſtanding all the Expedition us'd by the Duke of Wirtemburg's Aid de Camp, his Majeſty had ſome time before received certain Information, not only of the Invaſion, but alſo of the Conſpiracy againſt his Perſon, the blackeſt that ever was hatched in the Councils of Hell.

The Jacobites impoſe on the French King.

King James comes to Calais.

We have already obſerved more than once, that the Conſpirators had been at work ever ſince King James had been a Fugitive in France, to re-eſtabliſh him on the Throne ſome way or other, and that they never ſtuck at that of Murder, when propoſed in their treaſonable Cabals.

That this Invaſion and Aſſaſſination Plot was a Clue of the ſame Thread with that of Lancaſhire, will appear preſently; and if this had been as ill concerted, and as imperfectly detected as that was, the Jacobites would have turn'd it into Ridicule, as they did that; and the Party that were always railing at the Dutch, would not have been behind-hand with them in it. Parker, after he got into France, continued his Correſpondence with Porter and Goodman. The former, George Porter, had inherited the ſmall Fortune of his Family, but run thro' it.

Some Account of Porter, Goodman, and Charnock.

A.D.1696 Goodman was an Actor in King Charles's Reign, infamous for his leud Life, and invincible Impudence, exceeding even that of all other Players, in thoſe diſſolute times. He had been formerly tried for endeavouring to poiſon the Dukes of Northumberland and Grafton; but he got himſelf out of that Scrape, and accepted of a Commiſſion for a Troop in Col. Parker's Regiment of Horſe, as did alſo George Porter, upon which they qualified themſelves Capt. Porter and Capt. Goodman. Parker alſo admitted into his Confidence, Charnock, who went ſometimes by the alias of Robinſon; he was born and educated a Proteſtant, but chang'd his Religion to merit King James's Favour. He and ——— were the only Perſons who comply'd with that King's Order to the Fellows of Magdalen-College, which Compliance of his procur'd him the Dignity of Vice-Preſident, of which, and his Fellowſhip, he was outed after the Revolution, to make room for the Perſon that had been outed to make room for him: upon this he ſet himſelf with all the Faculties of his Soul, upon Contrivances to deſtroy the Government, and even the Perſon of the Governor, our Deliverer King William.

Parker the Contriver of the Aſſaſſination Plot.

To this Apoſtate, and Harriſon the Prieſt, Parker firſt communicated the Deſign to murder the King, of which he is thought to have been the firſt Contriver; and to have taken it up in England, when it was dropt in Flanders, upon Granval's being hang'd.

So far back as the year 1694, Capt. Waugh of Brentford, who had been ſome time at St. Germains, was ſent from thence to England, to give thoſe of them he had the moſt Confidence in, an Account, that their Friends in France thought the killing of King William the moſt effectual Means to reſtore their old Maſter: And in order to give them a full aſſurance of his Concurrence in the Fact, they ſhould have a Commiſſion from him to perpetrate it; and an Order to all his General-Officers then in England, to be aiding and aſſiſting in it. To corroborate this Aſſurance, Major Crosby came into England at the ſame time, and confidently affirmed that he ſaw the Commiſſion ſign'd, and under Seal, in France. This damnable Project was to have been executed that year, as appears by Lady Fenwick's Petition for a Reprieve for her Husband; but it miſcarrying ſome how or other, Waugh was ſent back by the Jacobites to St. Germains, to invite King James to England, upon promiſe of great Aſſiſtance here, to join with what he ſhould bring from France. This Waugh applying himſelf to Parker, he ſeemed not to think the promiſed Inſurrection ſufficient to ſupport their old Maſter in his Undertaking, unleſs the Prince of Orange, as the Traytors called the King of England, was removed out of the way; which Caryl, a Servant and Favourite of the Pretender's pretended Mother, join'd in with. But they ſpoke not out at firſt, as to the Blood-part, only touched on an Attempt to ſeize him, and carry him off to France: which was the Language they uſed to thoſe Wretches whom they tempted into the Plot, till they had drawn them ſo far in, that they could not well go back; and then they ſpoke out plain, firſt in a military Style, to attack the Prince of Orange at the head of his Guards, and this was King James's turn for it; and afterwards they owned the Deſign was to ſhoot him in his Coach, and in their horrid Mirth they added, We muſt not be afraid of breaking the Glaſſes. The Traytor Crosby aſſur'd the Conſpirators, he ſaw King James ſign the Commiſſion for the Aſſaſſination at St. Germains, and that it was ſent away from thence to England before he left that Place: which Commiſſion was to ſatisfy the ſcrupulous Conſciences of ſome of the Aſſaſſins, particularly Lowick and Rookwood, who ſaid they abhorr'd the Fact, but thought themſelves obliged to it, contrary even to their own Senſe, to obey Orders. Waugh being let into all the Secrets returns to England, with Inſtructions to aſſure the Jacobites who would engage in the Aſſaſſination, that this Commiſſion ſhould be ſent them, and thoſe Jacobites who were engag'd in the Invaſion, were aſſured of powerful Aſſiſtance from France, as ſoon as the Blow was given. That Crosby declared he ſaw the Commiſſion ſigned, was aſſerted by Sir John Fenwick, in a Paper annex'd to his Lady's Petition for a Reprieve, before mentioned. Tho' the Deſign miſcarried laſt year, they continued their Meetings; and one particularly, where were the Earl of Aylesbury, Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Friend, Mr. Cook, Mr. Charnock, Capt. Porter, Capt. Goodman. They din'd together, and then fell to the Buſineſs in hand, which was to conſult about the beſt way to reſtore King James; and all of them concurr'd in ſending a Meſſenger over to the abdicated King, to deſire him to procure 10000 Men of the French King, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons. Charnock was pitch'd upon to carry this Meſſage, but he ſaid he would not go upon a fooliſh Errand, tho' he bely'd himſelf in it; and therefore would know what the Company would do, if theſe French Forces could be procured: upon which, they all unanimouſly promiſed, if King James would bring them ſuch a number of Troops, they would meet him at the head of 2000 Horſe, wherever he would appoint them. Charnock deſired at another Meeting, that they would repeat and confirm this Reſolution of theirs, which they did very ſolemnly: upon which Charnock took his Journey into France. We have more than once made mention of the Conſpirator Crosby, who when he was in France talk'd ſo freely and particularly of the intended Attempt, that 'twas plain he was better acquainted with it than the Faction either imagined or deſired; he being a vain talkative Fellow. Parker was afraid he would be babbling, and wrote to Porter and Goodman about it, but they aſſured him they never thought Crosby fit to be truſted. Waugh told King James, that the Earl of Arran and the Lord Forbes were willing to be concerned in the Deſign to carry off the Prince of Orange; but when he return'd to England, and talk'd with them about it, they both refuſed to have any thing to do with him, tho' both of them were willing enough to have King James reſtor'd.

A.D.1696

Crosby declares he ſaw King James ſign the Commiſſion to the Conſpirators to kill King William.

They went ſo far in the Project for ſeizing the King's Perſon, that Charnock took a Journey to Deal, on purpoſe to hire a Ship to carry him, when they had got him, to France; and if they ſhould think fit rather to kill him than carry him away, the ſame ſhip was to receive them, and tranſport them thither; but their Deſign meeting with ſome Balk the year before, the Ship was not made uſe of. It will not be improper to give a few Hints of the Arts which the Faction put in practice to encreaſe their Number, and accompliſh their Ends; and I chuſe to take them from a Book printed for Thomas Bennet, Bookſeller in Paul's-Church-Yard, he being the ſame whom the late Biſhop Atterbury ſainted in the Funeral Sermon he preached for him; and we ſhall find a Confirmation of what has been ſaid of the Deſign of the Party, who were not indeed in the Aſſaſſination Plot, but were deeply engag'd in all other Plots, to diſtreſs and deſtroy King William's Government.

The Artifices of the Jacobites and Tories to increaſe their Faction.

"The Conſpirators endeavoured to inſinuate "themſelves into the Confidence of thoſe who were "diſſatisfied with the Court, and oftentimes made "uſe of them as Tools for carrying on of a Deſign, "of which they were wholly ignorant. They en-"deavoured to corrupt the Officers of the Fleet "and Army, and tamper'd with the Clerks and "Secretaries of thoſe who had been employed in "eminent Poſts under the Government, that by "their means they might get Intelligence of ſuch

"things

A.D. 1695 " things as they were desirous to know. Thus they " obtained an Account of the Naval Forces of one, " and a List of the Army of another. They were " sensible that the English were generally possess'd " with a natural Antipathy against the French; that " we had been for a long time under perpetual " Apprehensions of the growing Power of those " encroaching Neighbours; and that our Jealousy " and Aversion were extremely heighten'd since " the beginning of the War: and therefore to di-
Railing at the Dutch, one of them. " vert our Hatred and Suspicion to another Ob- " ject, they endeavoured to possess us with an ill- " grounded Jealousy of the Dutch, &c."

The Reader cannot forget what he found of this kind in the late Judge Price's Speech against the Grant of Lands in Wales to the Earl of Portland; and it will be well if he remembers this just Reflection upon the Enemies to our Protestant Constitution, wherever he meets with such ill-grounded Attempts, to create in us a Jealousy of our good Allies.

" Another of their detestable Contrivances, continues that Author, " was to make us forget, or at Railing at King William. " least to lessen our Esteem for our Deliverer. " 'Twas for this Reason they usually called him " the Dutch Prince, and sometimes had the Impu-
Another. " dence to speak of him in base and scurrilous " Terms, as when at one of their traitorous " Meetings, they squeez'd an Orange, and drank
Their damnable Jest. " a Health, To the Destruction of the squeez'd or " rotten Orange. 'Twas thus they were not a- " shamed to treat a Prince, who saved Europe by " his Courage and Conduct, &c."

Charnock's Journey to France did not answer the Faction's Expectation. He was told there, that the French King had not 10000 Men to spare, tho' in truth, he was then determined to assist King James with as great a Force, and Transports were secretly providing to take them on board: but the French Ministers thought the Necessity of keeping the Secret too great to trust Charnock and the Conspirators with it as yet. But when they had got a strong Squadron of Men of War, and 400 Transports in a Readiness at Calais, where 30 Battallions of French Soldiers attended King James's Motions; then they made no scruple of declaring, that the Most Christian King was resolved to restore his Britannick Majesty to his Dominions, at the Desire of his Subjects there. Thus in a Letter to the French Ambassador in Sweden, King Lewis wrote, My Troops are marching to the Coasts, and ready to embark, as soon as the News of an Insurrection in England shall confirm the Advices I have so often received, &c. that the Nation is generally dissatisfied with the Prince of Orange's Government; than which nothing could be more groundless. 'Tis plain, that the French King and the Jacobites in England were Dupes to each other. The French King promised them Armies and Fleets, and they assured him there would be a general Revolt, in favour of his Friend King James, upon their Appearance off our Coasts: whereas, had it not been for the Effusion of Christian Blood, which must necessarily have been the Consequence of such an Invasion, and which should be avoided by Christians as much as possible, without abandoning Religion, Liberty, and Property, good Englishmen had no fear of the Subversion of their Government. There were 7 or 8000 Regular Troops in England; there were 12 or 15000 Men of the Confederate Army, under the Duke of Wirtemburg, as ready to sail to King William's Assistance, as the French at Calais were to sail with King James; and the whole Body of the Militia and People in the Kingdom, the Faction only excepted, were as ready to fall upon the King's Enemies, as fast as they could come at them. The Project therefore was as weak as it was wicked, and must have ended in the Destruction of King James, and the Confusion of his

The French King and the Jacobites Dupes to each other.

Confederate; there being nothing that they could build upon for their Purpose, but the Death of King William, by which they hop'd to get something, if they could not get all; and the French were sure to find their Account in it.

A.D. 1696 The English in no fear of the French.

Sir George Barclay, a Scotchman, Lieutenant of the abdicated King's Guards, was in England when Charnock was in France, and had frequent Consults with Goodman and Porter, and the other Conspirators that were in the bloody part of the Business. Porter and Goodman told Barclay, that many well-disposed Persons lay under Discouragements for want of his Majesty's Commission to murder King William, or, in King James's own Phrase, to attack him in his Winter Quarters; the same thing as cutting his Throat in his Bed. Sir George Barclay commended the Delicacy of their Consciences, and the Prudence of their Conduct, in insisting upon such a Commission; and promis'd, when he returned to St. Germains, to use all his Interest that it might be no longer wanted. Accordingly he made a short tour to St. Germains, and returned in November 1695, with several Officers and Soldiers, and 800 l. in Money. We see what a Fund they had to carry on a War with the English Nation. He also brought with him a Commission from King James, all written with his own hand, as was then the common Report, to seize the Prince of Orange; and Sir William Perkins confess'd to a Committee of Parliament he had seen it. Some, to soften it, said the Commission was only to levy War against the Prince of Orange and all his Adherents. What a Farce are these Fools playing, before the Tragedy that was to be acted by them! A Commission to Goodman the Player and Keys, George Porter's Man, to levy War against the King of Great-Britain! It was such a sort of War as Borotski, the Polish Ruffian, levy'd against Mr. Thynne, whom he shot in his Coach in Pall-Mall. Without being censured as partial, we must observe that there is a Run of Stupidity, Frenzy, and Foolishness, in all the Counsels and Actions of King James's Faction. Could there be a Commission to seize the Prince of Orange with his Guards about him? or to levy War with him, and not a Commission to kill him, if the Conspirators met with Resistance? Of this, more in the Sequel.

King James writes the Commission himself. Life of King William, p. 449.

The Folly as well as Villany of the Faction.

Barclay had with him twenty-two Men of King James's Guards, besides Officers; some of them came before him, others followed him at several times, and under various Pretexts: One gave out he was going to continne his Studies in one of the Colleges in Scotland; another, that he was weary of the Service. Secrecy was particularly recommended, and enjoined to every one of them. And lest their Absence should be taken notice of, King James declared at his Levee, that it was his Pleasure none should presume to talk of their Departure; and that he would severely punish those, who should give him the least Occasion to believe they were more curious to enquire into his Affairs, than zealous to obey his Orders.

King James's High Tone in his low Condition.

Barclay being returned to London, met with Charnock first, and afterwards with Porter and Goodman, with whom he consulted how to put their execrable Design in execution. These Plotters engaged Major Lowick, Mr. Knightly, Mr. Bertram, Mr. Chambers, Mr. Rookwood, Durance a Walloon, Mr. la Rue, Mr. Cranburn, Mr. Kendrick, Mr. Grahme, Capt. Fisher, Mr. Sherburn, Capt. Waugh, Mr. Plouden, Sir William Perkins, Mr. Keys, Mr. King, Mr. Pendergrass, &c.

The Assassins.

But before we enter further into the Detail of this hellish Conspiracy, let us confirm it by a prior Discovery, which came timely enough to have put a stop to it, had sufficient Credit been given to the Discoverer; who was indeed too superficial in his Information, to deserve the Attention of so consummate a Politician as the Duke of Shrewsbury, then

A.D.1696 then Secretary of State, tho' the Event prov'd that he deserv'd more Encouragement. This Discoverer was Capt. Matthew Smith, who was once of the Inner-Temple, and Comptroller of that Society, which he left, and became Captain of an Independant Company at Windsor, and afterwards of a Company in the Duke of Norfolk's Regiment; but was dismiss'd the Service, on Suspicion of being in the late King's Interest. He was Nephew to Sir William Perkins, and in great Credit with the Party, from whom, and especially from his Uncle, he had always an Account of their Proceedings and Intentions. On the 1st of Dec. 1694, Smith inform'd a Person of Quality, that King James design'd to invade England, the Spring after the Battle of Landen; but his Party could not agree among themselves, occasion'd by his Declaration of the 17th of April 1693, in which it was thought proper to flatter the Church of England, with another Promise to stand by it, and maintain it in all its Rights: by which the Papists must have been excluded from Commands and Offices; and this so disgusted them, that they wou'd not at that time stir, leaving it to those who were call'd High-Church or Tories, to betray their Country to the French. It was obtain'd, as Smith said, by a Party call'd Compounders; who were for restoring King James or his pretended Son, by a Composition with King William, who was to hold the Crown for Life, and then King James, if living, or the Pretender, to retake the Possession of it: at least they were against restoring K. James by a French Army. At the head of these was the Earl of Middleton at the Court of St. Germains, and the Earl of Arran and others in England; but the Earl of Melfort and the Party of the Invasion and Assassination Conspirators, were for bringing back the old King with French Troops, and for a French Religion and Government in England. The Declaration we are speaking of, was thought by some to be contriv'd, written and printed in London, as we have already observ'd, and that Sir James Montgomery was the Author of it; but by Smith's Information it shou'd be the genuine Product of St. Germains, and 'tis not likely the Popish and Tory Jacobites would have fallen out about it, had it been only a Trick to make Proselytes among Protestants.

Capt. Smith's first Information of the Plot.

Papists and Tories quarrel about King James's Declaration in 1693.

The Compounders a Faction at St. Germains.

Smith, in the Prosecution of his Discoveries, drew up Interrogatories for the Examination of Captain Scudamore, and one Staples a factious Scoundrel, who liv'd in the Lodge at Woodstock Park, in the Service of the Popish Ranger. One of which was, Whether they were not daily with Capt. Charnock, alias Robinson, one of Col. Parker's Captains; and at the Cabals at Taverns, with Porter, Goodman, Charnock, &c? Mr. Smith gave also Information where to seize Arms, that were at Marston in Warwickshire, in Sir William Perkins his Uncle's House, of whom he gives this Character. He is no Papist, but I fear too much engag'd in their Interest; as to his being a Nonjuror, I do not know; he does not go to Church, and refuses to act as a Justice of Peace in his Country, and is under Indictment for not acting. He was near 20 Years a Six-Clerk in Chancery, and sold his Place for 6500*l. There are many of Quality in his Party, and no Man is in greater Favour with the late King, and more like to be great than himself, if there should be a Change.*

Smith's Information.

An Account of Sir William Perkins the Assassin.

In May, when Charnock was sent to France, Smith said, The Party are now in great Hopes, that there will be a speedy Change of the Scene, and an Attempt will be made for an Invasion. And in December before the Discovery of the Assassination Plot, he gave Information, That the Toulon Fleet would be out and make their way to Brest, and if the English Fleet was not out by the middle of February, he fear'd they wou'd execute their Design. That King James had put most of his Officers away from him, to have them in England, to do him Service here; and on the 23d of the same Month, he said, The Malecontents had receiv'd Instructions to prepare and be in a Readiness, for the Toulon Fleet wou'd make their way to Brest. That New-Year's-Day, according to the French Account, is the Day intended for their Sailing, and if possible before the Business of the Coin be settled. This Affair is yet communicated to a few, and some Commissions are come over. He added, That he had us'd his Endeavours to be employ'd by the Jacobites at St. Germains, but they answer'd, his Service would be expected here. He also boasted he had made Holmes one of the Conspirators his Friend; and in a Postscript to one of his Lettters writes, Just now the Person that brings over the Letters was with me, confirms the Business, and tells me the Instructions are communicated but to a few Persons; and that at the King's Court it is hardly discours'd of, they being resolv'd to keep the Matter private, until they are ready to put it in execution. The Forces intended for the Invasion, are not to march till the Fleet is out at Toulon; and they are to make no stay on the Coast, but immediately embark. He inform'd me, he carry'd three Letters to the Lord Arran last Summer, who gave him three Guineas a-time; Sir John Friend a Citizen, half a Crown a-time. But now Capt. Hambleton delivers the Lord Arran's Letters. There is one Capt. Neal, who is a Person of great Intelligence, and Capt. Charnock has private Instructions about the intended Descent.

A.D.1696

On the 9th of January, Smith writes thus; I once more humbly offer it as my Advice, that a due Provision and Care be taken to undermine the Designs that are now hatching against the Government, &c. As to the Descent, I have good reason to believe the Truth of it. 'Tis now again repeated by a positive Command to have all Things in Readiness. This Affair is communicated but to a few Persons, and carry'd on with the greatest Secrecy; the French King having been so often betray'd, as they term it, and thereby oblig'd to alter his Measures, by reason of the Folly of the Jacobites here. I was charg'd with being Partial, when I call'd them Fools, but that is not the only wrong Charge I have been expos'd to, by sticking close to Truth and the Constitution, in opposition to the Enemies to both. Captain Smith adds, Yesterday I was desir'd to get a List of the Forces and Colonels Names, here it was enquir'd into, what Number of Guards usually attend the King when he goes abroad? The Intention of this I do not yet know, I believe it is of a bad Consequence, therefore it's necessary to double the Number, and that quickly too. Mr. Holmes came from Sir William's this Week, by reason of the Express, and their great Expectations from abroad? There were never in this Reign more Designs against the Government than now. As I have engag'd that nothing can be done of a bad Consequence, without my getting a Knowledge of it; so nothing shall be wanting, if his Majesty will support my Expence.

It is plain by this Account, that Smith knew enough, and told enough to deserve Encouragement; and tho' Ministers are often sollicited for Rewards for trifling Informations, yet methinks, when the Conspirators began to inquire into the Number of the Guards, it was time to look about, and a little Money wou'd not be thrown away in supporting the Informer's Expence. Men of large or easy Fortunes will not enter into such Designs, either as Principals or Accessaries; and those only that are engag'd in them, as the one or the other, are proper to dive into the bottom of them, and detect them. This is no cheap Work, and Men in narrow Circumstances cannot carry it on at their own Charge; there are so many ways to save the Publick round Sums, that good Policy forbids Statesmen to be sparing of small ones in such extraordinary Cases. Besides, if Smith, or any one else, mixes some Trifles with his Intelligence, such sort

A.D.1696 ſort of Wares, ſhould be taken in groſs and not ſifted; and we ſhall ſee preſently that the Duke of Shrewsbury, who was then Secretary of State, was in his way of thinking, when other Conſpirators had confirm'd Smith's Diſcoveries, which he continu'd in the following formal Information, the 19th and 20th of January.

A Deſcent is reſolv'd to be made upon England, and will be put in execution as ſoon as poſſible; in order to it, Commiſſions are come to ſeveral here, Forces are moving towards the Coaſt, and a great quantity of Arms are brought down to Bretagne to be tranſported hither. I am inform'd the Forces will be 30000 Men. There is one Major Holmes, come over with particular Inſtructions about it, as he did about the La Hogue Buſineſs, and I underſtand he is ſoon to return with an Account of the Poſture of Affairs here; Sir William Perkins has a Commiſſion. One of Holmes's Inſtructions was to procure ſome Deys from Rotier in the Tower, to ſend over to King James to coin ſome mill'd Money, to pay his Army when he is landed in England.

Smith ſeem'd now in haſte, and four Days after declar'd, There never was a greater Blow intended againſt the Government; what I have next to communicate will be ſurprizing, and I am ſure will merit the greateſt Reward. He obſerv'd it was reſolv'd upon, when the laſt Expreſs came away, that Holmes ſhould ſtay in England; he was ſeconded by Sir George Barclay in all things. And it is further evident, that the intended Aſſaſſination was by particular Order of the late King, by reaſon the Number of Guards that attended his Majeſty, was ſent over to him. The 17th of February, he ſaid, The Storm now coming is ſo violent, concerted and ſudden, that it will be a great Work to prevent it, And the 20th of February, he diſcover'd that Sir John Friend had receiv'd a Commiſſion; that Sir William Perkins had employ'd him to ſollicite Mr. Cr—v—n, to be a Lieutenant-Colonel; that Sir W—m D—x—, and Mr. P—rf—y, had had a Meeting with Sir William Perkins, at the Angel-Inn in Leiceſter. That Sir George Barclay was come over from France, and had daily Conſultations with Major Holmes; that they had a Deſign upon the King at Kenſington, to ſurround the Guards and ſeize the King's Perſon. That Ferguſon was to be a Privy-Counſellor, and the Earl of Melfort a Principal Manager of theſe Undertakings. That he was on the 13th of February, with Mr. Charnock, at the White-Horſe-Tavern in Norfolk-Buildings, where Charnock preſs'd him to buy a Horſe for the Service, of 40 l. Price. The ſame Day there was a great Entertainment at Mr. Braxton's in the Savoy, where were Sir William Perkins, Capt. Cripps, Mr. Ceely, Capt. Cary, Capt. Lewis, Capt. Neal, Thomas Lee the Meſſenger, Mr. Holmes, and Capt. Smith; and it was reported that two Days after the King was to be kill'd. To which Smith objects, he could not believe that was the Day generally agreed on, becauſe Cranburn was not taken in to be one of the Aſſaſſins till ſome Days after. The next Day Smith wrote in a Letter to the Duke of Shrewsbury; the Toulon Fleet is now out, but the Affair of the greateſt Expedition, and not yet communicated but to few, and they to be Undertakers, is to carry off the King, and that quickly too; there will be at leaſt ſixty Commiſſion'd Officers to do it. When they have beat the Guards, they are to force the King to ride with them, and a Veſſel is ready to carry him to France. The Order, as they ſay, is not to abuſe his Perſon; and when the King is there, for the Veſſel will be over in a few Hours, while the Kingdom is in a Conſternation for the Perſon of the King, then the French will appear, and bring over the late King. The Perſons that are to be Chief Actors are to be made Lords. There are daily Prayers made for the Accompliſhment of this great Deſign, and 40000 l. remitted for this and the Inſurrection.

Prayers made for the Aſſaſſination.

Nothing can be plainer, than that Capt. Smith knew who were the Conſpirators, in the Invaſion and Aſſaſſination-Plot, tho' he was not in the Depth of the Secret. The uſe I make of his Evidence, is only to prepare the way for more particular Diſcoveries, and to obſerve that there ſeems to have been too much good Husbandry in not ſupplying him with the Money he demanded, to buy the 40 l. Horſe, and to accouter himſelf for the Service with the other Conſpirators. It was but a ſmall Risk, and the Risk on the other ſide was infinite. The Death of the King and the Invaſion of the Kingdom did not, one wou'd think, admit of ſuch a thought as Thrift, eſpecially when 50 or 100 l. wou'd have ſatisfy'd the preſent Exigence. Be that as it will, Smith's Information made little Impreſſion on the Duke of Shrewsbury, who thought it too looſe and general; and his Majeſty, who knew of it, did not think better of it, for it was neglected and ſo was the Informer. A.D.1696

Ill Husbandry in the Miniſter of State.

The Earl of Portland receiv'd full Information of the Conſpiracy, the 17th of February, from Capt. Fiſher, and it was ſo particular, that he thought fit to acquaint the King with it. His Majeſty did not take notice of it, becauſe Fiſher nam'd neither Time nor Place; and notwithſtanding Fiſher's Story, he gave Orders for Hunting, February 22d, the Day appointed by the Conſpirators, for the Execution of their bloody Purpoſe, and he cou'd not have avoided the Blow, had it not been for a ſpecial Act of Providence: for the Day before, my Lord Portland, having been viſiting his Daughter the Counteſs of Eſſex, was going directly to Kenſington; but he call'd to mind he had appointed a Man to come to him about ſome Buſineſs that Evening, ſo he return'd to his Lodgings at Whitehall; where he found the Perſon he went to ſpeak with, and another Man waiting for him, who told him he had an Affair of very great Importance to communicate to his Lordſhip, who bid him ſtay till he had diſpatch'd the other Perſon; which when he had done, the Man came up cloſe to him, and ſaid bluntly, Pray my Lord, get the King not to hunt to-morrow, for if he goes, he will be murder'd. This Man was Mr. Pendergraſs, an Iriſhman and a Papiſt, who inſiſted as a Condition of his larger Diſcovery, that he ſhould not be made uſe of as an Evidence; but the King talking to him himſelf, remov'd that Scruple; and he became afterwards a good Proteſtant, a good Subject, a Baronet, and a Colonel of a Regiment, at the head of which he was kill'd, in the Battle of Tanieres. Mr. de la Rue at the ſame time, made the ſame Diſcovery to Brigadier-General Leviſon, as did another Conſpirator to Sir William Trumbal. All which Informations, from different Quarters, confirm'd their Truth, and gave his Majeſty juſt Reaſon to take care of his Safety. In the mean time Smith, who knew nothing of all this, went on with his Diſcovery, which ripen'd with the Plot, and promis'd to give Informations of the Conſpirators Perſons and their Numbers, and to be equally engag'd to know the Day and Time; that he might prevent their Deſign, which he was ſure he cou'd do if he was aſſiſted. In the ſame Letter, he gave notice of the Arrival of Montagu Brown Eſq; King James's Secretary, from St. Germains. As to carrying the King to France, he ſays, Tho' the manner the Conſpirators gave out among themſelves of carrying the King into France was impracticable, no one but muſt infer, their Deſign was to kill his Majeſty; this Method was propos'd, I preſume, rather to ſoften the Matter, that they might not by too blunt a Declaration ſtartle any of their Creatures from proceeding in ſo horrid a Deſign.

Fiſher informs the Earl of Portland of the Plot.

Pendergraſs's Diſcovery.

La Rue's to Brigadier Leviſon.

On the 17th of February, he wrote that Ferguſon was in the Plot, and was call'd upon to equip. On the 18th of February, he gave a larger Account of the Invaſion-Plot, and the Deſign againſt the King's Life, with the Names of ſeveral of the Conſpirators,

Ferguſon in this deviliſh Conſpiracy.

A.D.1696 ſpirators, as Sir George Barclay, Major Holmes, Capt. Charnock, Capt. Porter, &c. and begg'd that the King might be intreated not to uſe his Diverſion of Shooting for ſome time; he was anſwer'd, What would you have the King coup'd up? He reply'd, Sir, I think it will be ſafe for the King not to hunt or ſhoot for a Day or two, when ſuch a Deſign againſt his Life is reſolv'd on, and to be put in Execution with the firſt Opportunity. He then propos'd how the Conſpirators might be taken, that when the King went out to hunt and they fix'd to go, of which he wou'd give notice, the King ſhou'd not return the ſame way, but ſend a Coach and Guards back, and order another Party of Guards to follow them out of Town. Smith ſaid, the Conſpirators would not let him into the whole Secret, becauſe he was not prepar'd to be an Actor, being deny'd Money to buy Horſe and Arms, upon his Application for it. His Information of the 19th of February was pretty full, but the Matter was then well known at Court: he ſaid, the Conſpirators have got a Number of Officers about 50, all or moſt of them Roman Catholicks, who are to undertake the Seizure, and have, in order to it, bought up Horſes and Furniture. He added, "I was with my Intelligencer, "when he went to buy Furniture as directed, and "I further examin'd him how this could be put in "execution, the difficulty being great for ſo great "a Number to appear and go out together. He "aſſur'd me, that Difficulty is paſs'd over as thus; "it is reſolv'd upon the Intelligence they expect of "the Day the King is to hunt or ſhoot, to diſpoſe "themſelves after this Method, to inn by two or "four at ſeveral Inns in adjacent Villages, habited "like Country Gentlemen, and upon the Day "and Time of the King's taking his Pleaſure to "meet together and perform their Deſign. They "conclude that when the Matter is perform'd, it "will ſo amuſe the Government, that thoſe who are "at the head of it, will not be able in 24 Hours "to tell what courſe to take, and that in leſs time "they ſhall have carry'd the King away, or grip'd "him, as they call'd it. Beſides this Body, they "are to have 25 Footmen in Ambuſcade; and "upon Concluſion of this damnable Conſpiracy, "the Mob was to have been ſtirr'd to riſe in ſeveral "parts of the City; while the Gentlemen retreated "to their ſeveral Counties to make Inſurrections there: during which Hurly-Burly, the French "Fleet was to have brought over King James. "The Perſons particularly employ'd, are theſe; Sir "George Barclay, who is made a Major-General, "and to command the Conſpirators as Chief Officer, Major Holmes, Capt. Boyſe, Mr. Chambers, "Captain of a French Privateer, Capt. Porter, "Capt. Charnock, &c. This is an Affair reſolv'd "on, and I dare ſay will be put in Execution; I "am told I muſt be employ'd in Warwickſhire."

This Boyſe had a Commiſſion given him in the latter part of Queen Anne's time, and was ſent to Newfoundland to take poſſeſſion of Placentia, and that part of the Iſland which was to be deliver'd up by the French. No body will queſtion Smith's being acquainted with the Plot in general, and with enough of it, to have prevented the Execution of it, had he been hearken'd to: but he complain'd that little regard was had to what he ſaid; nay, he made his Complaint to the Houſe of Lords, intimating that the Duke of Shrewsbury intended to ſtifle his Informations. But the truth was, Smith ſpoil'd the Buſineſs, by being perpetually teazing his Grace for Money; and the Duke's Behaviour at and after the Revolution, did not admit of the leaſt Suſpicion of what Smith charg'd him with. True, when his Grace afterwards left England, went to Rome and marry'd an Italian Papiſt; when he gave into the Harleyan Meaſures, for breaking the Confederacy, and giving up the Fruits of a hundred glorious Victories for an inglorious and deſtructive Peace; the Speculations of People took another turn. Smith complain'd to the Lords, and their Lordſhips ſent to the Duke, then in the Country, to know what paſt between him and Smith, which his Grace acquainted them with in the following Letter to my Lord-Keeper, A.D.1696

Eyford, 15 Jan. 1695.

"My Lord,

"HAving receiv'd the Commands of the Houſe "of Lords, to lay before their Lordſhips "what Letters I receiv'd from one Smith in February laſt, or in caſe I had kept none, then to "acquaint the Houſe with what I can remember "was contain'd in them: I am very ſorry not to "be able ſo fully to comply with their Lordſhips "Directions, as I wiſh I could. For having heard "long ſince, that this Man did pretend to great "Merit for his Diſcoveries, and had on ſeveral "Occaſions in a very unhandſome manner com-"plain'd of me; I did then endeavour to collect "what Letters he had ſent me, that I might judge "how his Intelligence appear'd when put together, "for as it came to me, I could make little of it. "But I found, I could retrieve ſo few, and thoſe "generally of an old Date, when I had more value "for his Intelligence than I had afterwards; that I "am almoſt certain I have none of thoſe Letters "left, which their Lordſhips deſire to ſee. I ſhall "therefore apply myſelf to give them the beſt Account of what he did inform, that is moſt material at this time; which I am the better able to "collect, becauſe ſeveral things he then mention'd "fell out ſo true, that I was ſurpriz'd how he "could know them, and not more; till I underſtood "he had his Intelligence from one Hewet, a Youth, "that liv'd with Major Holmes's Brother, I think, "and was about that time often employ'd to wait "on Sir George Barclay; by which means he had "Opportunity to gueſs or overhear Particulars, "which otherwiſe I ſuppoſe he might not be truſted with. I remember in Winter, Smith writ "very poſitive of an Invaſion intended from France, "which was to break out at the Arrival of the "Toulon Fleet; and that many Gentlemen of "Quality, and Officers, were ſent from St. Germains on that Deſign. He nam'd Sir Henry "Browne, my Lord Montacute's Brother, at one "time; at another Sir George Barclay, Holmes, "Counter and others. Then he gave Hints of ſome "great Deſign, which he ſhould ſoon diſcover the "bottom of; and afterwards grew more particular, "that it was to ſeize the King's Perſon, and nam'd "Barclay, Charnock, Holmes, and others as employ'd "in the Villany; and that at the ſame Hour this "was to be executed, there was to be a general "Riſing in all the Counties of England. He was "different in his Accounts about the manner of "ſeizing the King; ſometimes Mr. Latin's Lodge "near Richmond was to be attack'd, and the Walls "ſcal'd by Foot whilſt he was there. Sometimes "an Attempt of the like nature was to be made at "Kenſington Houſe; and at other times the King "was to be ſet upon, going to or coming from Hunting. Near to the Day the Aſſaſſination was intended, he was very earneſt for Money to buy a "Horſe and Equipage, upon which I deſir'd Mr. "Vernon to talk with him, if he knew of his own "Knowledge any Perſon engag'd in ſuch a Deſign; for being never able to bring any thing in "Confirmation of what he aſſerted, from whom "he had it, or what time it was to be executed, "I ſuppos'd there was no Truth in the Story; or if "there were, I might poſſibly have ſet him out to be "engag'd in it. He gave Mr. Vernon no Satisfaction upon diſcourſing with him; but proceeded "in his Promiſes to him, that nothing could be attempted, but he would give him or me an Account of it. When the whole was brought to "light, Duke of Shrewſbury's Letter to the Lords about Smith. A.D.1696

A.D 1696 " light, and it appear'd he was not enough in the " the Secret to have prevented it; I intended not- " withſtanding to have done ſomething for him, " and at his own deſire conceal'd his Name, to give " him an Opportunity, as he pretended, to appre- " hend Chambers. In the mean time I had an Ac- " count, that in very publick Places, he began to " threaten he would complain of me to the Par- " liament; whereupon I neither thought it ſafe nor " decent to have any more to do with him.

" What I receiv'd relating to the Attempt on his " Majeſty's Perſon or the Invaſion, I always gave " the King an Account of it, whilſt I was able to " wait on him; but being much indiſpos'd, I had " his Majeſty's leave to go into the Country for " a few Days, where I remain'd, till I was com- " manded back, upon the happy Diſcovery of that " horrid Deſign.

" This, my Lord, is all I can collect to the Sub- " ject their Lordſhips are pleas'd to command. I " beg the Favour it may be communicated to the " Houſe, and am,

" My Lord,

Smith an Acquaintance of Dr. Drake's.

One Secret there remains ſtill in this Matter, which is, that Smith was as well an Acquaintance of Dr. Drake as of Hewet; of the Publiſher of the High-Church Memorial in Queen Anne's Reign, as of the Publiſhers of King James's Declaration in King William's; by which we may ſee what an Agreement there is between the Enemies to our Conſtitution, whether High-Church or Papiſts.

I ſhall ſhorten my Account of this execrable Conſpiracy, as I take it from Publick Memoirs, having been ſo long upon it already.

Several Contrivances for the Aſſaſſination.

There were ſeveral Projects propos'd by the Conſpirators to execute their helliſh Deſign againſt his Majeſty's Perſon. At firſt it was thought beſt to ſeize or kill him at Kenſington, by attacking his Guards and firing his Palace in the Night. Another Propoſal was to murder him, when he ſhou'd come on Sunday to St. James's Chappel; two or three and thirty of the Conſpirators were to attack the Guards, which uſually do not exceed twenty-five, while ſix Men on Foot ſhou'd ſhut Hyde-Park-Gate, and the reſt aſſaſſinate the King 'Twas agreed alſo to kill the Coach-Horſes juſt as they were entring into the Park; that the Paſſage being ſtopp'd, the Guards might not be able to come up till the fatal Blow was given. After that was done, the Conſpirators reſolv'd to retire immediately to the Tower, which for that end they propos'd to ſurprize; but that Propoſal was found to be ſo impracticable, even by theſe Madmen, that they laid it aſide. Another and more feaſible one, as they imagin'd, was to ſhoot his Majeſty as he came from Hunting. The King had a Houſe at Richmond, where he uſually went to hunt every Saturday; near that Place there is a little Park that reaches to the River's ſide; the Thames on the one ſide, and the Park Pales on the other, forming a kind of Defile, or narrow Lane, about 150 Paces long, in the middle of which there is a Gate, that hinders Coaches or Horſes from paſſing that way; and here it was, the Conſpirators reſolv'd to ſhoot the King. Several Perſons on foot well-arm'd were to be plac'd in Ambuſcade behind the Hedges and Pales; when the King's Coach had paſt the Gate, it was to be ſhut upon the Guards that follow'd him, the Coach was to be ſtopp'd by killing ſome of the Horſes; and the Pales were to be ſaw'd ſo far, that they might be broken down as ſoon as they enter'd upon Action. In the mean time, ſome Horſemen were to attack ſix or ſeven of the Guards that go before the Coach; and the Party that lay in Ambuſcade were to fire on the Body of the Guards that were ſtopp'd at the Gate, that the Aſſaſſins might have time to murder his Majeſty, and thoſe who were with him. After which, ſuch of the Conſpirators as were on horſeback, ſhould immediately diſperſe, and thoſe of the Ambuſcade who were to act on Foot, dreſt in Countrymen's Habits, were to make their Eſcape to the River-ſide, where there was to be a Boat lying ready to receive them. Some of the Villains went to view this Place, which was approv'd; but Sir George Barclay's Money did not hold out to raiſe a ſufficient Number of Horſe, to carry off thoſe that were to lie in Ambuſcade; ſo that Deſign was rejected. A.D.1696

The Deſign reſolv'd on moſt practicable.

The laſt and determin'd way was to kill the King as he return'd from Richmond, at a Place between Brentford and Turnham-Green, in a Bottom where the Ground is mooriſh and uneven; there's a Bridge where ſeveral Roads meet and croſs one another; on the North ſide a Road goes between Eling and Brentford; on the South there is a Lane that leads to the River; at the Bridge the Road grows narrow, having on one ſide a Foot-Path, and on the other a tall and thick Hedge. They could not have choſen a more convenient Time or Place for doing this damnable Deed. The King us'd to return late from Hunting, and to croſs the River at Queen's-Ferry by Brentford, with five or ſix of his Guards; it was alſo his Cuſtom to go into the Boat without coming out of his Coach, and as ſoon as he landed on the other ſide, the Coach drove on without ſtaying for the reſt of the Guards, who cou'd not croſs the River till the Boat return'd to fetch them. In the mean time, his Majeſty with that ſmall Attendance wou'd quickly have arrived at the Bridge, and conſequently have fallen into the hands of his Murderers; who were to be divided into three Parties, one to come from Turnham-Green, another from the Lane that leads to the River, and the third from the Road between Brentford and Eling. Never did Counſel hatch'd in Hell form a more practicable Project, had not our good God, whoſe Cauſe King William fought for, interpos'd, and put it into the Hearts of ſome of the Conſpirators to diſcover it. One of theſe Troops were to attack the five or ſix advanc'd Guards in Front, and another in the Rear, while eight or ten detach'd Men aſſaulted the Coach, where his Majeſty wou'd have been murder'd before the Guards he left on Surry ſide of the River, cou'd have come up to his Aſſiſtance.

After the Aſſaſſination the Aſſaſſins were to have kept together till they came to Hammerſmith, where they intended to ſeparate and get to London by ſeveral Roads; hoping to lurk there during the general Conſternation, till they ſhould be freed from Danger by the ſudden landing of the French. Porter, King and Knightly, were ſent by them to view this Ground, and upon their Report, the horrid Work was finally agreed upon. Sir George Barclay complaining Money was ſhort, Charnock undertook to provide eight Men ready mounted and arm'd, and Sir William Perkins five; Barclay being oblig'd to buy or hire about 20 Horſes to mount the Men King James ſent from France, to levy War againſt the King of Great-Britain, the Cant for knocking him on the head. Porter and Rookwood had the Command of the two Parties that were to attack the Guards; and Sir George Barclay, Lieut. Col. of King James's Guards, undertook to head the Aſſaſſins that were to ſtrike the Blow. A ſhameleſs Impoſition on common Senſe, to aſſert that King James never ſign'd a Commiſſion to Barclay and his Accomplices to kill King William; and yet to own, as they alledg'd, that Barclay and his Accomplices had a Commiſſion to attack him, in this or any manner that might

A.D.1696 might deſtroy him under the Pretence of levying War againſt his Perſon, which Sir William Perkins own'd he had ſeen, as by the Votes of the Houſe of Commons, April 2, 1696. And why ſhould there be any doubt of it? Was it a new thing for King James to be privy to Deſigns againſt the Life of his Son-in-law and Nephew, the Prince of Orange, as he and his Conſpirators told the King? Was he not acquainted with Grandval's Plot, for which the Plotter was hang'd in Flanders? And yet we ſhall ſee preſently how his Religion permitted him to pravaricate with God and Man, with reference to this Commiſſion.

King James in the Secret.

One of the Conſpirators was ordered to wait at Queen's-Ferry till the Guards appeared, and then immediately to give notice to the reſt, that they might have Time to prepare themſelves, and take their reſpective Poſts, while the King was paſſing the River. They had omitted nothing that might ſerve to ſecure and facilitate the Execution of their Attempt. They had viſited all the Inns about Brentford and Turnham-Green, and the Places where they might ſet up their Horſes till the King came back from Hunting. They had alſo two Spies, or Orderly Men, who were poſted at Kenſington; one of them, Chambers, was to give notice when the King went out, and the other, Durant, to bring an Account when the Guards began to march. There was ſome Difference among the Conſpirators about the Terms and Expreſſions of King James's Commiſſion. Some of them acknowledged, after they had confeſs'd their Crime, that the Order to kill the King was poſitive and plain; others ſaid it was as above, only to levy War againſt him. As if it was not the very ſame thing to warrant a Perſon to levy War againſt the Perſon of another, and to warrant him to murder him; unleſs there was an Exception to his Perſon in ſuch a Commiſſion, which the moſt impudent of all theſe Traytors never once pretended?

The Fifteenth of February was pitched upon for the Execution of this deviliſh Parricide. To prevent Suſpicion, they diſpos'd themſelves in ſeveral Parts of the Town. Barclay and Rookwood expected the Signal in Holborn; Porter and others waited for it at the Blue-Poſts, an Eating-Houſe near Charing-Croſs; Charnock reſolved to accompany Porter, either becauſe he miſtruſted him, and intended to animate him by his Example, or becauſe he thought Porter would take care to expoſe himſelf as little as poſſible, as King, who was hang'd with him, ſuſpected. But this was an odd ſort of a Buſineſs for Cowards to engage in. Thus they lay in expectation of News of the King's Departure for Richmond; but his Majeſty did not go out that Day, Saturday the 15th of February, at which Diſappointment, ſome of the Conſpirators were ſo alarmed, that they ſneak'd off, and left the reſt in the Lurch. Thus Plowden, who came purpoſely to Town to act under Porter, went back into the Country; Kendrick pretended he was diſabled by a Fall, and appeared for ſome Days with his Arm in a Sling; Sherburn ſtarted ſo many Scruples, that the Conſpirators did not preſs him farther. But at laſt, concluding their Deſign was not diſcovered becauſe they were not ſeized; Sir George Barclay, Sir William Perkins, Capt. Porter, and Goodman, met on the 21ſt of February, and reſolved to go on with their bloody Work the next Day, Saturday the 22d of February; the Morning of which they ſpent in impatient Expectation of Advice from their Orderly Men, of the King's being gone to hunt. Charnock, who for ſome Days had been very uneaſy, and full of Jealouſy and Suſpicion, ſent a Man to Porter for a Liſt of thoſe who were to act in this Aſſaſſination; he ſeemed particularly to doubt La Rue. The Liſt was ſent to him, with La Rue's Name at the head of the reſt, and he ſent it back again, after he had inſerted the Names of thoſe whom he was to furniſh. Mr. Pendergraſs, before ſpoken of, was to have been of Porter's Company. They had ſent for him out of the Country, and aſſign'd him a remarkable part in the Aſſaſſination. Porter had a Musketoon that carry'd 6 or 8 Bullets, with which Pendergraſs was to ſhoot at the King; and then it was they made that impious Jeſt, Be not afraid of breaking the Coach-Glaſſes. The Conſpirators being diſappointed a ſecond time, the moſt daring of them could not help diſcovering their Fears, eſpecially when Keys acquainted them that the Guards were come back all in a Foam; and that there was unuſual Muttering among the People: this threw them all into the moſt terrible Conſternation; they immediately diſperſed, and each of them provided for himſelf as well as he could, by Flight or Concealment.

A.D.1696

The Conſpiracy diſcovered, and the Conſpirators fly.

Some of the Conſpirators fall off.

We have already mentioned the Diſcoveries made by Fiſher, Pendergraſs, and La Rue, to which we muſt add, Fiſher went to the Earl of Portland the 10th of February, five Days before the Time appointed for the Execution of the intended Enterprize, which he acquainted him with; and three Days after, gave his Lordſhip an Account not only of the Deſign itſelf, but alſo of the Method and Order of the Execution; but peremptorily refus'd to mention the Names of the Actors: which made the King conclude it was a Story, invented to fright him with a falſe Alarm. But the very next Day before the horrid Deed was to be perpetrated, February 14, Mr. Pendergraſs came to the Earl of Portland, and confirmed Fiſher's Diſcoveries by his own; to which he added, My Name is Pendergraſs, I am an Iriſhman and a Catholick. They ſent for me out of the Country, without acquainting me with the Reaſon why they ſent for me. They afterwards endeavoured to engage me in the Deſign, but I was ſtruck with Horror at the firſt Propoſal, and immediately reſolved to diſcover it. My Religion is accus'd for authorizing and encouraging ſuch Actions, but for my part, I abhor ſuch Principles, tho' in all other reſpects I am a true Catholick. I would have gone ſtrait to Kenſington, to make the Diſcovery to the King himſelf, if I had not been afraid of being ſeen and taken notice of by the two Orderly Men, whom the Conſpirators kept in that Place: and the Nature of the Buſineſs requiring all poſſible Diſpatch, I thought I could not make my Addreſs to a Perſon who would be more careful than your Lordſhip: Who left no Means unattempted to perſuade him to name the Conſpirators, which he reſiſted with an invincible Conſtancy; declaring, he would never be prevail'd with to injure his Friends, or betray thoſe to whom he had been formerly obliged.

Pendergraſs's Speech to the Earl of Portland.

When my Lord Portland came to Kenſington, which, notwithſtanding all the haſte he could make, was very late, he found the King was already retir'd, and had given the neceſſary Orders for Hunting and Shooting the next Day. And even the new Confirmation he received of the Conſpiracy to murder him, could ſcarce prevail with him to alter his Reſolution; ſo ſecure was he in his Virtue, and the Greatneſs of his Mind: At laſt he was overcome by the Earl's repeated Importunities. And in the mean time the number of the Diſcoverers increaſed, and another of the Conſpirators confirmed theſe Informations by freſh ones to Sir William Trumbal, Secretary of State, who had already received Advice that the French were bringing together a great Number of Troops and Tranſport-Ships, for ſome extraordinary Deſign, which they kept very ſecret; but in all probability the Storm was like to fall upon England. La Rue alſo, in his Diſcovery, gave Brigadier Leviſon a very particular and circumſtantiated Account of the whole Intrigue, of which a Hint is given before. And his Majeſty, convinced by ſo many Diſcoveries, by Perſons not in concert with one another about it, of the Truth of their Informations, ordered the Earl

King William ſecure in his Virtue.

A.D.1696 Earl of Portland and Sir William Trumbal to make a more exact Enquiry into the Progreſs and Circumſtances of the Deſign. But their Enquiries had not the deſired Effect. The Earl of Portland thought, if Mr. Pendergraſs and La Rue gave Information of it to the King, before unexceptionable Witneſſes, it might ſerve to convict the Criminals when they were brought to a Tryal; and therefore he adviſed, that his Majeſty ſhould ſpeak to them himſelf firſt, to try whether they could be brought to enter into Particulars, and name the Conſpirators. Accordingly he ſpoke to Pendergraſs and La Rue ſeparately; to Pendergraſs before the Earl of Portland and the Lord Cutts; to La Rue, in preſence of that Earl and Brigadier Leviſon. Having aſſured them he eſteemed their Perſons, and was extremely pleaſed with their Proceedings, he told them, He owned himſelf obliged to them for the Care they took to preſerve his Life; but deſired them to conſider, the Service they had done him by diſcovering the Conſpiracy, could be of no uſe to him, ſo long as they concealed the Names of the Conſpirators; that he could neither puniſh, nor ſo much as convict the Criminals; that the People would never be perſuaded to believe, that ſeveral Perſons had diſcover'd a Conſpiracy, which they either could not or would not juſtify; that on the contrary, they would imagine he had invented a Sham-Plot, to deſtroy his Enemies, which would render him odious to all the World; that ſo general and imperfect a Diſcovery would expoſe his Honour, without ſecuring his Life. Theſe Arguments ſucceeded, and conquered the Obſtinacy of La Rue; he could no longer reſiſt the awful Eloquence of an injured Monarch, but fully acquainted his Majeſty with the Names and Deſigns of the Conſpirators. Which however Mr. Pendergraſs did not do, till he heard that Capt. Porter, who had engaged him in the Plot, had by an allowable Stratagem, been frighted into a Diſcovery, and accuſed him. He then thought himſelf diſcharged from any Obligation of Honour, and therefore became an Evidence at Charnock's Tryal.

The King's Diſcourſe with Pendergraſs and La Rue.

His Majeſty communicated the Information he had received to his Cabinet-Council, telling them, he had for ſome time neglected the Advices of a Conſpiracy againſt his Perſon; but being now fully convinced of the Truth of it, he would not tamely ſuffer himſelf to be aſſaſſinated: he added, I am informed the French are preparing to invade the Kingdom; but I hope God will enable me to fruſtrate all their Deſigns.

We have obſerved, that Captrin Boyſe was taken into Service by the Harleyan Miniſtry, and we muſt obſerve, that Bevil Higgons has lately diſtinguiſhed himſelf as well as he could, by writing againſt the Biſhop of Salisbury's Hiſtory of his own Times. There was a Thouſand Pounds Reward offered for every one of theſe Conſpirators that ſhould be brought to juſtice; and it was ſaid, more than one of them ſhared the Money with their Friends, who took them for that purpoſe; there not being Evidence againſt them ſufficient to convict them. Be that true or falſe, the Liſt ſhews they were not worth the Money that was bid for them, otherwiſe than as they were to be Examples to deter others from the like treaſonable and horrible Practices.

A.D.1696 Bevil Higgons in the Proclamation.

Preparations againſt the Invaſion.

The Forces in England were ordered to be in a Readineſs to march; Troops were alſo tranſported from Flanders; and a Train of Artillery was prepared to attend them. The vigilant Admiral Ruſſel repaired immediately to Deal, to take upon him the Command of the Fleet, which by a particular Providence had been detained many Weeks in the Downs by contrary Winds, and which was ſoon reinforced by other Men of War from the River, and twelve Dutch Ships from Spithead. Thus in five or ſix Days time, the Admiral ſtood over directly for the Coaſts of Calais and Dunkirk with ſixty Men of War, and ſtruck Terror and Amazement into the Enemy. The abdicated King made faſter haſte back to St. Germains than he had made to Calais; and the French Troops and Tranſports that were got together for invading England, remained uſeleſs in their Towns and Harbours.

Admiral Ruſſel's Diligence.

In the mean time, the Lord Cutts, with ten or a dozen choſen Fellows out of the Guards, made Search for, and ſeized ſeveral of the Conſpirators; againſt whom the Nation in general were ſo enraged, on the Diſcovery of the Conſpiracy, that it is certain the Populace would have done them Juſtice, if the Hangman had not.

Upon the publiſhing of the Proclamation, George Hains, one of the Aſſaſſins that were ſent from St. Germains to obey Sir George Barclay's Orders, reſigned himſelf to Sir William Trumbal, and confeſs'd the double Deſign, to kill the King, and invade the Kingdom. One Horn, if his Name is not miſtaken for Hains, who came alſo from King James's Court, depos'd he had been an Enſign under that King in Scotland, and had ſince ſerved in the ſecond Troop of Guards in France; that about the 14th of January, 1695, the late King ſent for him and Michael How his Comrade, and in the Queen's Bedchamber told him, he had now an Opportunity of doing ſomething for him, as a Reward of his faithful Services. Which, by the way, was to ſend him to England to be hanged, or cut in pieces. That he ſhould be provided for when he got there, if he followed Sir George Barclay's Orders; that he and his Comrade ſhould have Money for their Journey, of Mr. Caryl the Queen's Secretary: and that the King further told him, he ſhould find Sir George Barclay every Monday and Thurſday between ſix and ſeven at night, in Covent-Garden Square, and ſhould know him by a white Handkerchief hanging out of his Pocket; that when he was in England he muſt go by the Name of his Comrade, and his Comrade by that of Guinny. He added, that Col. Parker, that Blood-hound, ſo deeply dipp'd in Grandval's Aſſaſſination-Plot, was preſent when King James talk'd thus to him, and carry'd him and his Comrade to Caryl, who paid them ten Lewis-d'Ors apiece, as enough to defray their Expences to England: and if they ſhould be wind-bound, Parker ſaid he would write to Preſident Taff at Calais, to ſupply them with what they ſhould have occaſion for. Let any impartial Man judge after all this, whether it was poſſible that ſuch a villainous Deſign as killing a great Prince, could be carry'd on by Sir George Barclay, Lieutenant of King James's Guards, and his Maſter not conſent to it nor know it? nay, that the abdicated King himſelf ſhould pay and ſend over the Aſſaſſins, and give them Inſtructions how to find out their Cap-

King James's Diſcourſe with the Aſſaſſins before he ſent them from France.

A.D.1696 tain, Sir George Barclay, and to do what Barclay bid them, without being privy, or conſenting to the Buſineſs he went to England for? Yet after this diabolical Conſpiracy was diſcovered, and all Europe, as well as all England, were ſtruck with Horror and Aſtoniſhment, all but Lewis XIV. who had been cunning enough to have his Name kept out of the Queſtion; then did King James think fit to profeſs his Innocence and Ignorance in this Matter, to Erizzo, the Venetian Ambaſſador at Paris, in theſe Words; The Winds have diſconcerted my Meaſures, no truer than his other Speeches, for it was the Diſcovery of the Plot, and Admiral Ruſſel, that diſconcerted his Meaſures, to land in England, and betray'd my beſt Hopes; but I ought, as I do from my Heart, to acquieſce with the divine Will. As to any Attempt upon the Perſon of the Prince of Orange, I am wholly ignorant; and tho' to face an Enemy at the head of his Troops, in my Opinion, can never be reputed an Aſſaſſination, I do ſwear I know nothing of it; and I deſire you would impart this firm Truth to the Senate. He further added, That he very well underſtood the Intereſt of Princes, and therefore he was not concerned at their Embaſſy to the Prince of Orange; to which, the Conjuncture of the Times, the Commerce of their People, and a War with a moſt potent Enemy, had mov'd them; and he ſhould always have it freſh in his Memory, that the Republick was the firſt that congratulated his Acceſſion to the Throne, and the laſt that acknowledg'd the preſent Poſſeſſor of it. Which is no truer than the reſt, for the King of Poland came lagging after with his Acknowledgment, as the Great Duke of Tuſcany had done a little before, and all of them upon his Majeſty's glorious Campaign of Namur.

King James denies it to the Venetian Ambaſſador at Paris.

The Diſcovery of the horrid Conſpiracy being now compleat, his Majeſty thought fit to communicate it to his Parliament in the following Speech, February 24.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The King's Speech about the Plot and Invaſion.

I AM come hither this Day upon an extraordinary Occaſion, which might have proved fatal, if it had not been diſappointed by the ſingular Mercy and Goodneſs of God; and may now, by the Continuance of the ſame Providence, and our own prudent Endeavours, be ſo improved, as to become a ſufficient Warning to us to provide for our Security againſt the pernicious Practices and Attempts of our Enemies.

I have received ſeveral concurring Informations of a Deſign to aſſaſſinate Me; and that our Enemies are at the ſame time very forward in their Preparations for a ſudden Invaſion of this Kingdom; and have therefore thought it neceſſary to loſe no time in acquainting my Parliament with thoſe things in which the Safety of the Kingdom, and the Publick Welfare, are ſo nearly concern'd, that I aſſure myſelf, nothing will be omitted on your part, which may be thought proper for our preſent or future Security.

I have not been wanting to give the neceſſary Orders for the Fleet; and I hope we have ſuch a Strength of Ships and in ſuch a Readineſs, as will be ſufficient to diſappoint the Intentions of our Enemies. I have alſo diſpatched Orders for bringing home ſuch a number of our Troops, as may ſecure us from any Attempt.

Some of the Conſpirators againſt my Perſon are already in Cuſtody, and Care is taken to apprehend ſo many of the reſt as are diſcover'd; and ſuch other Orders are given, as the preſent Exigency of Affairs abſolutely require at this time, for the Publick Safety.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

Having now acquainted you with the Danger which hath threatned us, I cannot doubt your Readineſs and Zeal to do every thing which you ſhall judge proper for our common Safety; and I perſuade myſelf we muſt be all ſenſible how neceſſary it is in our preſent Circumſtances, that all poſſible Diſpatch ſhould be given to the Buſineſs before you.

This Speech ſo affected the two Houſes of Parliament, that they agreed to wait upon the King that very Evening at Kenſington, with this humble Addreſs, February 24th, 1695. A.D.1696

The Parliament's Addreſs upon it.

"WE your Majeſty's moſt loyal and dutiful Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, having taken into our ſerious Conſideration, what your Majeſty hath been pleaſed to communicate to us this Day, think it our Duty, in the firſt place, to give your Majeſty our moſt humble Thanks, for having acquainted your Parliament with the great Danger your ſacred Perſon hath been ſo nearly expos'd to, and the Deſign of an Invaſion from our Enemies abroad. We heartily congratulate your Majeſty's happy Preſervation, and thankfully acknowledge the ſignal Providence of God in it; and at the ſame time declare our Deteſtation and Abhorrence of ſo villainous and barbarous a Deſign. And ſince the Safety and Welfare of your Majeſty's Dominions do ſo entirely depend on your Life, we moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty to take more than ordinary Care of your Royal Perſon. And we take this Occaſion to aſſure your Majeſty of our utmoſt Aſſiſtance to defend your Perſon, and ſupport your Government, againſt the late King James, and all other your Enemies, both at home and abroad; hereby declaring to all the World, that in caſe your Majeſty ſhall come to any violent Death, which God forbid, we will revenge the ſame upon all your Enemies, and their Adherents. And as an Inſtance of our Zeal for your Majeſty's Service, we will give all poſſible Diſpatch to the Publick Buſineſs. And we make it our Deſire to your Majeſty, to ſeize and ſecure all Perſons, Horſes, and Arms, that your Majeſty may think fit to apprehend upon this Occaſion."

To which hearty Addreſs, the King returned this agreeable Anſwer;

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I thank you heartily for this kind Addreſs. On my part, you may be aſſured that I will do all that is within my Power for the Conſervation of this Kingdom, to which I have ſo many Obligations. I will readily venture my Life for the Preſervation of it, and recommend myſelf to the Continuance of your Loyalty and good Affections.

The Houſe of Commons agree upon an Aſſociation.

The ſame Day the Houſe of Commons order'd a Bill to be brought in, to empower his Majeſty to ſecure and detain ſuch Perſons as his Majeſty ſhall ſuſpect are conſpiring againſt his Perſon and Government: As alſo a Bill to continue the ſitting of the Parliament after his Majeſty's Death, till the next Succeſſor ſhall diſſolve it. They voted an Addreſs for a Proclamation, to baniſh all Papiſts from the Cities of London and Weſtminſter; and agreed upon this Form of Aſſociation, to be ſign'd by all the Members that came to the Houſe:

WHereas there has been a horrid and deteſtable Conſpiracy form'd and carry'd on by Papiſts and other wicked and traitorous Perſons, for aſſaſſinating his Majeſty's Royal Perſon, in order to encourage an Invaſion from France, to ſubvert our Religion, Laws, and Liberty: We whoſe Names are hereunto ſubſcribed, do heartily, ſincerely, and ſolemnly profeſs, teſtify, and declare, that his preſent Majeſty King William is rightful and lawful King of theſe Realms. And we do mutually promiſe and engage to ſtand by and aſſiſt each other, to the utmoſt of our Power, in the Support and Defence of his Majeſty's moſt ſacred Perſon and Government, againſt the late King James and all his Adherents. And in caſe his Majeſty come to any violent or untimely Death, which God forbid, we do hereby further

A.D.1696 ther freely and unanimouſly oblige ourſelves, to unite, aſſociate, and ſtand by each other, in revenging the ſame upon his Enemies and their Adherents, and in ſupporting and defending the Succeſſion of the Crown, according to an Act made in the firſt Year of the Reign of King William and Queen Mary, entitled, An Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and ſettling the Succeſſion of the Crown.

This Aſſociation was on the three following Days ſigned by all the Members who came to the Houſe. And becauſe ſome others had abſented themſelves upon pretence of Health or Buſineſs, but in reality to avoid ſetting their Hands to an Acknowledgment of King William's being Rightful and Lawful King, it was ordered, February the 27th, "That "ſuch Members of the Houſe who had not al- "ready ſign'd the Aſſociation, ſhould do it by "Monday Fortnight, or declare their Refuſal, not- "withſtanding their Leave to be abſent." When the appointed Day came, the Names of ſuch Members were call'd over, as were abſent upon the laſt Call of the Houſe, and ſeveral of them being ſtill abſent in the Country, or ill in Town, ſignifying their Intentions to ſign the Aſſociation, were excuſed their Attendance. And the Speaker was order'd to write to ſuch Members as were in the Country, and had not ſign'd the Aſſociation, or declar'd their Refuſal ſo to do, to know what they would do, and to return their Anſwer by the firſt Opportunity. The Clerk of the Houſe was to attend ſuch Members as were ill in Town, with the ſaid Aſſociation, in order to their ſigning the ſame, or receiving their Anſwer or Refuſal. Moſt of the abſent Members ſeeing themſelves ſo preſs'd, and the Nation at that time in ſo great a Ferment againſt the Diſaffected, thought it prudent to comply, and either to ſubſcribe the Aſſociation, or to promiſe to do it upon their firſt coming up to Town; tho' it was againſt the Inclination of too many of them, and ſome of them refuſed to ſign it at all. The Names of theſe do as well deſerve Remembrance, as the Names of any Perſons before them, who diſtinguiſhed themſelves by their Hatred to Liberty, to their King and their Country, and therefore let them live here as long as this Hiſtory.

Did the Marquis of Normanby, the Earl of Nottingham, and Biſhop of Rocheſter, &c. underſtand our Conſtitution or love the Church better than her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs Anne of Denmark, or the Prince her Husband? of whom read in the Gazette of April 2d, Their Royal Highneſſes the Prince and Princeſs of Denmark, having given particular Directions for tendring the Aſſociation to all their Servants; the ſame was accordingly ſign'd by them, and this Day preſented to his Majeſty by the

The Princeſs Anne's Servants ſign the Aſſociation.

A.D.1696 the Right Honourable my Lord Berkley, and other Principal Servants of their Royal Highneſſes.

Of thoſe that chearfully ſubſcrib'd this Proteſtant Aſſociation, the Number is ſo great, that to give the Names of them, we muſt give a Liſt of the greateſt Part of the two Houſes of Parliament; above Four Hundred Members of the Houſe of Commons voluntarily and heartily ſet their Names to it, and it is to be obſerv'd that in the larger and richer Counties, as York, Devon, Kent, Eſſex, Norfolk, Suffolk, there are very few Refuſers to be met with; but in the little County of Oxford, notwithſtanding the Loyal Leſſons of her Univerſity, there are but two Subſcribers, Sir William Trumbal, and Sir Thomas Littleton, out of Nine Members. The Aſſociation was ſubſcrib'd by near 70000 Hands in the County of Suffolk, and by near a Million all over England; but it muſt not be forgotten that while it was debated in the Houſe of Commons, the French lay at Calais with an Army and Fleet ready to invade us, and then did the Party who have aſſum'd the Name of High-Church, uſe all their Rhetorick and Intereſt to debauch others, from their Duty to the King and Love to their Country. Thoſe of them that were Members of Parliament, made Speeches to diſſuade them from agreeing to the Aſſociation. One Inſtance of which we muſt not omit: When the Houſe of Commons had appointed a Day on purpoſe for the ſigning of it, the Avenues to the Houſe were that Morning beſet, and ſeveral of the Members not left to the Freedom of their own Wills; but the little Arguments and Addreſs of the Party, were made uſe of to hinder their voluntary ſigning this Aſſociation. One of the moſt eminent of them ſtudy'd the Point with great Induſtry, and fram'd an Opinion to ſtartle the more Unwary; which was, That by the Statute of Henry VII. Subjects are indemnify'd in taking an Oath to, or fighting for a King de Facto, but the Aſſociation is not within the Statute, but an Overt-Act of Treaſon againſt the King de Jure, and puniſhable as ſuch, when he ſhall be reſtor'd. The ſame Men, on the breaking out of the Aſſaſſination Plot, did what they could to ſtifle it; at one time they told the People, Now all is diſcovered, and the Government ſafe, there's no need to make any Laws for its further Security: at other times, they very gravely pretended, That ſo many were engag'd in it, it was adviſable to connive at it, and not proſecute it any farther.

Near 70000 ſubſcribe it in Suffolk.

The Faction endeavour to ſtifle the Plot.

The Commons preſent their Aſſociation to the King.

On Friday, April 3, the Houſe of Commons in a Body, preſented their Aſſociation, with their Subſcriptions to it, to his Majeſty, with an humble Requeſt, that he would be pleaſed to order that Aſſociation, and all other Aſſociations by the Commons of England, to be lodged among the Records in the Tower. His Majeſty was pleaſed to ſay in anſwer:

His Majeſty's Anſwer.

Gentlemen,

I take this as a moſt convincing and moſt acceptable Evidence of your Affections. And as you have freely aſſociated yourſelves for our common Safety, I do heartily enter into the ſame Aſſociation, and will be always ready with you and my good Subjects, to venture my Life againſt all who ſhall endeavour to ſubvert the Religion, Laws, and Liberties of England. And I will take care that this and all other Aſſociations preſented to me, be lodged among the Records in the Tower.

The next day the Houſe Reſolved, "That who-"ever ſhall, by Word or Writing, affirm, that the "Aſſociation enter'd into by any Member of this "Houſe, or any other Perſon, is illegal, ſuch Per-"ſon ſhall be deemed a Promoter of the Deſigns "of the late King James, and an Enemy of the "Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom." The Houſe of Lords alſo preſented their Aſſociation to the King, and the Example of both Houſes of Parliament was followed by all the Corporations of the three Kingdoms. A.D.169[illegible]

The Houſe had the Day before Reſolved, upon a Report of the Examination and Confeſſion of Sir William Perkins and Sir John Friend, that a Bill be brought in for the better Security of his Majeſty's Perſon and Government; the heads of which ſhould be, 1. That ſuch as ſhall refuſe to take the Oaths to his Majeſty, ſhall be ſubject to the Forfeitures and Penalties of Popiſh Recuſants Convict. 2. That a Penalty be inflicted on ſuch as ſhall by writing, or otherwiſe, declare, that King William is not Lawful and Rightful King of theſe Realms; or that the late King James, or the pretended Prince of Wales, or any other Perſon, than according to the Act of Settlement of the Crown, hath any Right to the Crown of theſe Realms. 3. To ratify and confirm the Aſſociation enter'd into by all his Majeſty's good Subjects, for the Preſervation of his Majeſty's Perſon and Government. 4. That no Perſon ſhall be capable of any Office of Profit or Truſt, Civil or Military, that ſhall not ſign the ſaid Aſſociation. 5. That the ſame Penalties be inflicted on ſuch as come out of France, as upon thoſe that go thither. The Houſe of Commons taking into Conſideration that part of his Majeſty's Speech, at the Opening of this Parliament, which related to the Civil-Liſt, and to the diſtreſs'd Proteſtants driven from their Country, by the Perſecution in France under Lewis XIV. it was reſolv'd March 17, that a Fund be ſettled for raiſing 500000 Pounds for the Civil-Liſt, and 15000 Pounds a year for the French Proteſtants. The King had made mention of the latter to the laſt Parliament, but they did not fall in with it; the Majority was influenc'd by High-Church, and Charity is the very reverſe of her Principles, if really ſhe has any. This too is a Paſſage that will be charg'd with Partiality, of which I muſt clear myſelf by the Opinion of others, and I chuſe that of a Foreigner, who muſt be ſuppos'd to have leaſt Biaſs in his Deciſion. Comme les Toris, qui n' aiment gueres les Proteſtans etrangers dominoient dans cette Aſſemblée, ſes Remonſtrances furent inutiles. "But as the Tories, ſays "Monſ. de Cize, who do not love foreign Proteſ-"tants, prevail'd in that Aſſembly, his, the King's, "Remonſtrances were to no purpoſe."

Loyal Reſolutions of the Commons.

15000 l. a year ſettled on the French Proteſtants.

One would think, by the Prevalency of the Landed Intereſt, that the Party aforeſaid had the major Vote in this Parliament alſo; but it was occaſionally only, and to carry a Point which did not directly affect King William's Government; as was the Caſe of the Land-Bank, a Chimæra of Dr. Chamberlain's Invention, under the Patronage of Mr. Robert Harley, who gave ſmall Hopes of Merit to the Lord High Treaſurer's Staff, by the Share he had in procuring the Act for it, and the Succeſs which attended it. The Project was to raiſe two Millions 564000 Pounds upon the Security of a Land Company, who were to lend Money upon nothing but Land-Security, or to the Government. The Bank petition'd againſt it, but that did not hinder its paſſing; and the great Houſe in Queen-Street, late the Lord Conway's, was taken for the Office, where proper Officers attended, to carry on ſo notable a Work; which, like the Bubble of the Brook, ſwell'd with the Wind, and burſt again with it in an inſtant; to the great Mortification of the ſaid Mr. Robert Harley, who had been at no ſmall pains to carry it ſo far as into an Act of Parliament.

The Land-Bank; A Project of Mr. Robert Harley's.

The Honorary Hiſtory of this year is very barren, affording little more than the inveſting the Duke of Glouceſter with the Enſigns of the Order of the Garter; the making the Lord George Hamilton Earl of Orkney; and the Lord John Murray, eldeſt Son to the Marquiſs of Athol, Secretary of State for Scotland, in the place of the Lord Stairs, who had incurr'd the popular Odium by the

Glenco

A.D.1696 Glenco Buſineſs, which in the Opinion of many, he had not thoroughly clear'd himſelf of, though by means of the Earl of Portland and Mr. Carſtairs, who were his Friends, he had too powerful a Protector at Court, to fall into other Diſgrace for it.

A Bill about Elections of Members of Parliament rejected.

The Act to regulate Elections of Members to ſerve in Parliament, paſs'd both Houſes, but had not the Royal Aſſent, when his Majeſty gave it to ſeveral other Bills, moſt of them private ones, April 10. Upon this the Houſe of Commons ſhew'd ſome Reſentment againſt thoſe that adviſed the King not to paſs that Bill. The Queſtion was put April 24, That whoſoever adviſed his Majeſty not to give his Royal Aſſent to the Bill for further regulating Elections for Members to ſerve in Parliament, which paſt both Houſes, is an Enemy to the King and Kingdom. But the Majority finding by the Warmth with which the Party abovemention'd eſpous'd the Affirmative, that it was intended to make a Difference between the King and Parliament, did not only put a Negative upon the Queſtion by near 150 Voices, Noes 219, Yeas 70; but it was order'd, that the Speaker do with the Votes print the Queſtion, together with the Numbers of the Affirmative and Negative.

Three Days after, the King gave the Royal Aſſent to An Act for the better Security of his Majeſty's Perſon and Government, and other Bills, and clos'd this Seſſion with the following Speech to both Houſes.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" YOU have ſhewn ſo great Concern for my " Perſon, and Zeal for my Government, and " have done ſo much for the Preſervation of the " one, and for the ſtrengthening of the other, by " the good Laws which have been made, and by " the Supplies you have provided for the ſeveral " Occaſions of this Year, that the late Deſigns of our " Enemies are, by the Bleſſing of God, like to have " no other Effect, than to let them ſee how ſtrictly we are united; and to give me this Occaſion " to acknowledge your Kindneſs, and to aſſure " you of all the Returns which a Prince can make " to his People.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" The Neceſſity of Affairs require my Abſence " out of the Kingdom for ſome time; I do earneſtly recommend to you, that in your ſeveral " Stations, you will be aſſiſting thoſe whom I " ſhall leave to adminiſter the Government; " and that you will be careful in preſerving the " publick Peace of the Kingdom."

Then the Lord-Keeper, by his Majeſty's Command, prorogued the Parliament till Tueſday the 16th of June.

Bills dropp'd.

To have done with this Seſſion, we muſt mention ſome Bills which were brought in, but did not paſs the Houſe; as 1. The Bill for regulating Printing and Printing-Preſſes. 2 A Bill for reverſing a Judgment againſt Sir William Williams in 2 Jac. II. for what he did as Speaker of the Houſe of Commons. 3. A Bill for ſettling and regulating the Eaſt-India Trade. 4. Another to regulate the Trade to Africa. 5. A Bill to confirm the Earl of Torrington's Grant. 6, 7. Two Bills to veſt in the Crown all forfeited Eſtates in England and Ireland, and to vacate all Grants made thereof. 8. A Bill to prevent Stock-jobbing. 9. A Bill for preventing Papiſts from diſinheriting their Proteſtant Heirs.

Upon publiſhing the Proclamation for diſcovering and ſeizing the Conſpirators, before ſpoken of, Porter, Bertram, Boyſe, Goodman, Pendergraſs, and de la Rue, came in voluntarily, and they all far'd the better for it; but Robert Charnock of Magdalen-College, Oxford, was ſuch an abandon'd Parricide, that meeting Bertram accidentally at Lincoln's-Inn Back-Gate, he ſaid to him, I am informed there are Warrants out againſt us; and we had as good, if you will come to my Lodging, go up to Kenſington, and do the Work at once. Mr. George Harris, one of the Perſons whom King James ſent out of France to obey the Orders of Sir George Barclay, and was actually engag'd in the Aſſaſſination, reſign'd himſelf to Sir William Trumbal, and inform'd him of all he knew, concerning the double Plot, to kill the King, and invade the Kingdom. A.D.1696

Charnock for killing the King after the Diſcovery.

Several of the Conſpirators who were apprehended, were brought to their Tryal, convicted, condemn'd, and executed; the three firſt of theſe were, Charnock, late of Magdalen-College, Oxon; Thomas Keys, late a Trumpeter, then Servant to Capt. Porter; and Edward King, late a Lieutenant in the Service of the abdicated King. Charnock behav'd with great Boldneſs at his Tryal, and, tho' very unſeaſonably, ſeemed to affect much to ſhew his Parts, and even his Law-Learning; the Vanity of which was the more ſurprizing, becauſe the Treaſon and Murder were prov'd plainly upon him by a Cloud of Witneſſes. King and Keys ſaid leſs than Charnock, but ſpoke as much to the Purpoſe. After a full and fair Hearing, they were all three found guilty, March 11, and executed a Week after at Tyburn. Before they were turn'd off, Charnock and King deliver'd each a Paper to the Sheriff; Charnock's was to this effect, " That to avoid Diſ- " traction, and be as compos'd as he could, he " thought it the better way to deliver his Mind " in writing to the Sheriffs, at whoſe liberty he " left the Publication of it, and that he had been " as ſhort therein as could be. That as for the Inyaſion intended by King James, he preſum'd e- " very body was ſatisfied of it; and he own'd, that " to facilitate the ſame, he himſelf, and ſome o- " thers, had agreed upon the Undertaking of at- " tacking the Prince of Orange and his Guards, " for which he then ſuffer'd. That he thought " himſelf oblig'd to it by all imaginable Ties, both " of Conſcience and Honour, to declare, that as " for any Order or Commiſſion from King James " for aſſaſſinating the Prince of Orange, he never " ſaw or heard of any; but had frequent Aſſurance " of his having rejected ſuch Propoſals when they " had been offer'd. He confeſs'd he had heard " there was a Commiſſion come for levying War, " which was natural to believe, if King James was " in ſuch a Readineſs to come as was reported; " but he declar'd, if there was any ſuch Autho- " rity as that, he never ſaw it. As to what regard- " ed the Body of the Roman Catholicks, he muſt do " them juſtice, and he durſt be poſitive in it, that " they had no manner of Knowledge of that " Deſign; neither did he believe it was communi- " cated to any other Party of ſuch as were repu- " ted King James's Friends, but carry'd on merely " by a ſmall Number, without the Advice, Conſent, or Privity of any Party whatſoever. He " concluded, with deſiring Forgiveneſs of all he " had offended or injur'd, and dy'd in perfect " Charity with all Men." A.D.1696 Charnock, King, and Keys hang'd.

Charnock's Paper.

Lieutenant King acknowledg'd, " he was by the " juſt hand of God brought to that Place of Ex- " ecution, in Puniſhment of all his Crimes, and " particularly of that he was condemn'd for: but " he hop'd he was ſenſible of his Wickedneſs, and " that God would be merciful to him, thro' the " Merits of his Redeemer: and being further ſenſible that he was to anſwer the Truth of what he " ſaid before the Tribunal of God, he declared, in the ſame manner as Charnock had done, " That " he never ſaw any Commiſſion of King James's, " to authorize the intended Aſſaſſination; neither " did he know of any Order or Commiſſion; neither was the Deſign communicated to any Body " of Men, either Catholick or Proteſtant; and that " he did not engage therein upon Preſumption of King's.

*A.D.*1696 Owns his Crime.

" any King-killing Principles that could justify the " Undertaking, but from his own Rashness and " Passion, for which he begg'd of God Forgiveness. " And that he hop'd that such Persons as thought " the Misfortune of their Imprisonment or Trou- " ble was deriv'd from his being engag'd in that " Enterprize, or such to whom it had any way " given Slander, would pardon him, as he heartily " forgave others."

Keys deliver'd but a very few Words of seeming Penitence, and said nothing of the Fact, either one way or other. And it is obvious, that Charnock prevaricated with God and Man in his last dying Speech, for he own'd he had heard of a Commission from King James to levy War against the Person of the Prince of Orange, which was the Phrase in fashion among them, but never of any Commission to cut the Prince's Throat.

Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins try'd.

Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins were brought to their Tryal the 23d of March, before

Sir John Houblon, Lord-Mayor of London,
Lord Chief-Justice Holt, Mr. Justice Nevil,
Lord Chief-Justice Treby, Mr. Justice Rokesby.

The Attorney-General Sir Thomas Trevor, and the Sollicitor-General Sir John Hawles, and Mr. Cowper, and Mr. Montagu, King's Counsel, manag'd the Cause for the King. Friend's Jury consisted of considerable Merchants and Tradesmen, as,

Mr. Thomas Clarke,
Mr. Thomas Emms,
Mr. Henry Hunter,
Mr. Thomas Pool,
Mr. Peter Parker,
Mr. Samuel Jackson,
Mr. Nathaniel Long,
Mr. John Child,
Mr. William Walker,
Mr. John Sherbrook,
Mr. William Prince.
Mr. Joseph Morewood.

The late Lord Trevor open'd the Indictment, That Sir John Friend did accept of a Commission from the late King James, for raising a Regiment of Horse, in order to join the French Forces that were to invade this Kingdom: that there were several Meetings between him and several other Persons, in which it was resolv'd to send Mr. Charnock to France, to desire the late King James to prevail with the French King, to send a Number of Men from France, and to assure him, that Friend, with others, would be assisting in the Invasion, with a good Number of Men and Horses when they came: that he did accordingly raise Men, and provide several Arms; that he listed Men, and had them in a readiness to join the French Forces; Captain Brice Blaire was to be Friend's Lieutenant-Colonel, one Sclater was to be his Major, Everard, Richardson, Vernalli, and Cole, were to be his Captains. Sclater was a Parson's Son, and he engag'd to bring in so many Nonjuring Parsons as should form an entire Troop. I shall only add a Word or two of the late Lord Trevor's Speech at the opening the Indictment, they being very à propos. " About Janu- " ary last Sir George Barclay came over from France " with several Troopers, pretending to be dis- " charg'd; and they enter'd into a Conspiracy to " assassinate the King, and to prepare for an Inva- " sion; that was to be done first, to facilitate the " Invasion, which was immediately to follow upon " it: and they thought they should not have a good " Assurance of Success so long as the King liv'd. " And I hope every body will take notice how pre- " cious that Life is to be accounted of by us, when " the Success of their Conspiracy depended upon " the taking that Life away."

A Troop of Nonjuring Parsons to be rais'd by Friend.

Could one have imagin'd, that a Gentleman so just in his Sentiments, would ever have fallen off so far as to make one in the Harleyan Scheme, so contrary to all Revolution, and other good English Principles? Capt. Porter and Lieutenant-Colonel Blaire, being the Evidence for these treasonable Facts, the Jury wanted little Instruction for their Verdict of Conviction; for nothing could be more positive and plain. Friend, as Lord Trevor observ'd, knew of the Assassination Plot, but did not approve it, saying, It would be a Disservice to the late King James's Affairs; however, he did not stick at Meetings with the Conspirators, Charnock and Barclay, and being let into the hellish Secret, never discover'd it. Perkins was to furnish five or six Fellows mounted for the Assassination, as well as to raise a Regiment of Horse for the Invasion; which was as fully prov'd upon him, as the other treasonable Facts were upon Friend. So the next day, March 24, these two Malefactors receiv'd Sentence of Death together. Friend had very little to say, but that he was a good Churchman, and brought Mr. Hoadley who kept a great Boarding-School at Clapton in Hackney Parish, where Sir John Friend liv'd, to prove it. This Mr. Hoadley being Father of the Right Reverend the present Bishop of Winchester, and the most Reverend the present Archbishop of Dublin, I will repeat what he said:

I believe, my Lord, Sir John Friend is a very settled Protestant of the Church of England; I have frequently discours'd with him upon it: I have a couple of Children that are his Nephews, on whose account I am forced several times to wait upon him, and trouble him. He hath often said, he would never be in a Plot; and which makes me the better remember it, his Words were, " If you catch me in " the Corn, put me in the Pound." And so indeed it came to pass, he was caught in the Corn, and put in the Pound.

Another Clergyman, one Lupton, Sir John Friend's Chaplain, gave Evidence, that he read the Common Prayers in his House since the Revolution, and that Sir John was present when King William and Queen Mary were pray'd for. But the Lord Chief-Justice Holt said to that, I have known a great many Men that go to Church, and are present at the Prayers; but whether they join with them or no, I know not. But now you are to consider, whether or no Sir John Friend, being a Protestant, he would not be in a Plot, because he said so, is such an Argument as shall make you disbelieve the Credit of the Evidence.

Perkins and Friend examin'd by a Committee in Newgate.

While Friend and Perkins lay under Condemnation, a Committee was appointed by the House of Commons to examine them; and on April 2, the Lord Marquis of Winchester reported to the House, That the Committee had been yesterday at Newgate, and had sent for Sir William Perkins, and Sir John Friend, severally, and acquainted them with the Order of the House, and according thereunto did examine them. That Sir William Perkins own'd his being privy to the Assassination, and his being in Company when it was discours'd of, at two or three Meetings, and thinks it was a Fault that he did approve of it. That he had received Hints several times of King James's Design of coming over, and particularly now, and was resolv'd to serve him whenever he came, with himself and Friends, thinking that he had Wrong done him, and that it was his Duty to help him whenever he could. That he consulted not with any, but those that he could engage, and he had an Influence upon. That he guess'd he could have been able to have brought in the Number of a Troop; but that he would never redeem his own Blood, at the Expence of theirs that he had drawn in. That since Christmas he did see a Commission, which he understood to be King James's, directed to his loving Subjects, to levy War against the Prince of Orange, and all his Adherents: he believes it was sign'd by King James; that it had a Seal to it, and that he saw it in the hands of a Friend, which he desir'd not to name; but he believes he is not in England. And that Sir John Friend, on his Examination, denied knowing any thing of the intended Assassination, but express'd his Abhorrence of it. He confess'd he was at the two Meetings men- tion'd

A.D.1696 tion'd at his Tryal, and that the Perſons named to be preſent, were there likewiſe: and that Charnock was ſent to France from one of theſe Meetings, to acquaint King James, that if he would come over with 8000 Foot and 2000 Horſe, that 3 or 4000 Horſe would be ready to join him here; of which he did engage to furniſh about 200.

The next day, April 3, Sir William Perkins and Sir John Friend were drawn on a Hurdle to Tyburn, where the former ſpoke to this effect:

Perkins's laſt Speech.

" That being then in a Diſpoſition of Charity, " he ſhould make no Complaints of the Hardſhips " upon him, but muſt mention the Falſeneſs of " Mr. Porter's Evidence againſt him, that he ſhould " own to him, that he had ſeen and read a Com- " miſſion from the King, to levy War upon the " Perſon of the Prince of Orange; whereas the Te- " nour of that which he ſaw was general, and di- " rected to all his Subjects, to raiſe and levy War " againſt the Prince of Orange and his Adherents, " and to ſeize all Forts and Caſtles, &c." Mind the quibbling of this dying Traytor: Did not he, and all the Aſſaſſins, underſtand by that Commiſſion, that they were authoriz'd to ſhoot that Prince in his Coach, or otherwiſe to deſtroy him, whenever they had an Opportunity?

" He own'd he was privy to the Deſign upon the " Prince, tho' not to act in it; and was fully ſatiſ- " fied, that very few or none knew of it, but thoſe " who undertook to do it. He acknowledg'd, and " thought it was for his Honour to ſay, that he " was entirely in King James's Intereſt." A mi- ſerable Wretch, juſt going to be turn'd off the Ladder, for the moſt damnable piece of Villany a wicked Man can be guilty of, to talk of his Ho- nour! and to add, " as being firmly perſuaded of " the Juſtice of his Cauſe; and look'd upon it as " his Duty, both as a Subject and an Engliſhman, " to aſſiſt him in the Recovery of his Throne, " which he thought he was depriv'd of contrary to " all Right and Juſtice, taking the Laws and Con- " ſtitution of his Country for his Guide." The ſtupid, as well as the execrable Traytor! Had he been an Officer in the Court of Chancery twenty Years, and did he know no better, than that the Laws and Conſtitutions of England warranted his committing Murder on the ſacred Perſon of a Pro- teſtant Prince, to ſerve the Ends of a Popiſh one? He concluded, " that he was of the Church of Eng- " land;" and ſo forgiving, and deſiring to be for- given, the Hangman did his Duty.

Friend's laſt Speech,

Sir John Friend, after a ſhort Preface concerning his own Sincerity, in reſpect of what he had to de- liver, ſaid, The Cauſe he was brought thither to ſuf- fer for, he firmly believ'd was the Cauſe of God. He firmly believ'd, that the inviting King James with a French Popiſh Army to invade this Proteſtant King- dom, and to deſtroy the Religion and Laws of his Country, which muſt be the neceſſary Conſequence of his being reſtor'd by a French and Popiſh Army, to be the Cauſe of God, and true Religion; and to the utmoſt of his Knowledge and Information, agreeable to the Laws of the Land, which he had evermore heard to require firm Duty and Allegiance to their Sovereign, and that as no Foreigner, neither could any domeſtick Power alienate their Allegiance; that it was altogether new and unintelligible to him, a home-ſpun Brewer of the Suburbs, that the King's Subjects could depoſe or dethrone him upon any Ac- count, or conſtitute any that had not an immediate Right in his place. He thought they ought not to do that; and ſurely, when it was done, to aſſiſt him in the Recovery of his Right, was juſtifiable, and their Duty. And that he believ'd, however things went for the preſent, nay, he heartily pray'd, that he ſhould one Day be reſtor'd to his rightful Throne and Domi- nions. That as for any ſudden Deſcent of King James, for the Recovery of his Dominions, he declar'd he had no certain Knowledge of it, neither could he tell what Grounds there were to believe it, ſo little Reaſon had he to be in a Readineſs for it. He ſuppos'd it was not expected he ſhould endeavour to clear himſelf of the Aſſaſſination, which was not the thing alledg'd againſt him, though it was mention'd, through what means he knew not, and inſinuated to his diſadvan- tage, for which he forgave all that were inſtrumental therein, and did the ſame to all that were acceſſary to the taking away his Life, which he look'd upon to be their Misfortune, and not his own. He declar'd himſelf to be a Member, tho' an unworthy one, of the Church of England, which ſuffer'd ſo much at that time for its ſtrict Adherence to Loyalty. A ſtaring Falſhood! The Church of England, if it conſiſts of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Dignitaries, and Cler- gy, and of the King and two Houſes of Parliament, and ninety-nine in a hundred of all Proteſtants in England, did not ſuffer at that time in the leaſt, but was in the moſt flouriſhing Condition, under their Deliverer and Defender King William. If by the Church of England he meant the Troop of Nonjuring Parſons whom he had liſted in the abdicated King's Service, they did not ſuffer for their Loyalty, but for Treaſon and Sedition. He added to the Law and Chriſtian Principles for which he ſuffer'd and died, that he had Charity for Men of all Profeſſions; the very contrary of which was true, if his Conduct in his former Life was to guide us, he being a great Perſecutor of Diſſenters, and as ſuch, had ac- quir'd the Favour of the Duke of York before he was King, was made a Commiſſioner of the Exciſe, and got into that King's Parliament, as a Burgeſs for Great-Yarmouth. He had among all Profeſſions found upright, ſincere Perſons; and he hoped and de- ſir'd it might not be taken as an uncharitable Cen- ſure, or undue Reflection, that he reflected on the Legality of Popiſh Evidences, ſince he had been ad- viſed to do ſo for his better Security, upon the Foun- dation of a Statute-Law. Then he exhorted the Members of the Church of England, to be conſtant to the Principles and Practice of it; ſeemed to be much ſatisfied with his preſent Sufferings, which he chearfully underwent, in certain Hope of a Reſurrec- tion to eternal Life. He begg'd of God to forgive and bleſs the ſinful Nation, to preſerve the Church, to comfort the diſtreſs'd King, and reſtore him to his Rights, as well as his miſled Subjects to their Al- legiance; to bleſs the Queen and Prince of Wales, and ſo concluded, with begging the Remiſſion of all his Sins.

A.D.1696

Falſhood in it.

The two Traytors have the Church-Abſolution given them at the Gal- lows, by Collier, Cook, and Snatt.

Mr. Jeremy Collier, a Non-juring Parſon, with Cook and Snatt, two others of his Brethren, ſolemn- ly abſolv'd Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins before they were hang'd, by pronouncing the Ab- ſolution of the Church, as in the Viſitation of the Sick. The Impiety and Impudence of theſe Prieſts ſhock'd all Men of common Senſe, Honeſty, and Modeſty; and it was the general Deſire of the Peo- ple, that ſome corporal and exemplary Puniſhment ſhould be inflicted upon them: and on the 7th of April, my Lord Chief-Juſtice Holt repreſented to the Grand Jury in the Court of King's-Bench, the ſhameful and pernicious Practices of thoſe three abſolving Prieſts; upon which the Grand-Jury made a Preſentment to the Court, " That Collier, Cook, " and Snatt, Clerks, did take upon them to pro- " nounce and give Abſolution to Sir William Per- " kins and Sir John Friend, at the time of their Ex- " ecution at Tyburn, immediately before they had " ſeverally deliver'd a Paper to the Sheriff of Mid- " dleſex, wherein they had ſeverally endeavour'd " to juſtify the Treaſons for which they were juſt- " ly condemn'd and executed: And that they the " ſaid Collier, Cook, and Snatt, had thereby coun- " tenanc'd the ſame Treaſons, to the great Encou- " ragement of other Perſons to commit the like " Treaſons, and to the Scandal of the Church of " England, eſtabliſh'd by Law, and to the Diſtur- " bance of the Peace of the Kingdom." The Court

of

*A.D.*1696 of King's-Bench immediately order'd an Indictment to be preferr'd againſt them, and Cook and Snatt, two of thoſe Abſolvers, were ſent to Newgate for ſuſpicion of High-Treaſon and Treaſonable Practices: but as King William's Government was ever expos'd to Inſults and Injury, by too much Lenity and Moderation; ſo now its Enemies reproach'd it, with doing no more to thoſe Prieſts than throwing them into Goal, not becauſe it cou'd not, but becauſe it durſt not; as if the Name of Prieſt was ſo formidable in England, as to confound the Law, and make even Juſtice tremble. Jeremy Collier kept out of the way, and was ſo impudent as to publiſh ſeveral Papers to juſtify what he and his Brethren in Cloth and Iniquity had done; but the Reverend Fathers of our Church, the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, publiſh'd a Declaration againſt that wicked Practice of theirs. The firſt Paragraph of which relates to Friend:

Who are indicted for it, but not puniſhed.

The Archbiſhops and Biſhops Declaration againſt it.

" As to the Paper before-mention'd, we cannot " but obſerve that in that Part to which Sir John " Friend is entitl'd, among many other Things there " deliver'd, as his private Opinion, for which " we muſt leave him to God; there are ſome " things concerning the Church of England, to the " great Diſhonour and Reproach of it." This refers to the Aſſertions in it of the Doctrines of the Church, in direct Oppoſition to the Revolution, and the Government built upon it; ſuch as the Divine Indefeaſible Hereditary Right to the Crown; ſuch as Paſſive-Obedience and Non-Reſiſtance, made uſe of only in favour of King James and his pretended Son's Title; and preach'd and aſſerted in Addreſſes and Pamphlets, during the Harleyan Miniſtry, with the utmoſt Effronterie, purpoſely to invalidate the truly Divine Right of the Royal Houſe of Hanover, now glorioufly Reigning; for Vox Populi, Vox Dei, is an Eternal Truth. What the Biſhops ſay next, alludes to thoſe wretched Schiſmaticks that perform their Rebellious Rites in ſeparate Congregations, calling themſelves the Church of England. " That venerable Name is by the Author " of that Paper appropriated to that Part of our " Church which hath ſeparated itſelf from the " Body, and more particularly to a Faction of them " who are ſo furiouſly bent upon the reſtoring of " the late King, that they ſeem not to regard by what " Means it is to be effected; we have a ſad Inſtance " of it in this very Perſon, who, as was depos'd " at his Trial, was privy to the horrid Deſign of " Aſſaſſination, and yet neither diſcover'd it, nor " ſhew'd any diſlike of it, but as he was afraid it " might ruin King James and his Affairs; and was " ready alſo, together with Others of the ſame " Chriſtian Principles, as the Author of his Paper " is bold to call it, to act in conjunction with " an Army of French Papiſts, for the Ruin of their " Country, and the Extirpation of that Religion, " which they themſelves do profeſs."

They condemn the Schiſmatical Church of England.

The Jacobite Faction ſet in a true Light.

There's nothing in the World that ſets this Jacobite Faction in a truer Light, that ſhews more plainly their deviliſh Hypocriſy and notorious Inconſiſtency. They are for the Church, and yet out of Principle do thoſe Things that would infallibly deſtroy it. They are for reſtoring the Engliſh Conſtitution by a Conqueſt of Frenchmen, and ſecuring our Proteſtant Church by an Army of Papiſts. The Biſhops farther ſay,

" As for Sir William Perkins, who alſo profeſs'd " to die in the Communion of the Church of Eng- " land, we cannot think he meant any thing elſe " by it, than that he adher'd to the ſame violent " Faction, that had withdrawn themſelves from " our Publick Aſſemblies ſome time before their " Death; which makes us the leſs wonder to find " in both their Papers, ſo light and even favoura- " ble mention of that moſt inhuman Deſign of " Aſſaſſinating his moſt Sacred Majeſty, and eſpe- " cially in that of Sir William Perkins, who tho' he " was publickly convicted of having engag'd ſo " many in that horrible Sin; yet after all could " think to clear himſelf of it, with this wretched " Excuſe, 'Tis true, I was privy to the Deſign upon " the Prince, but was not to act in it." *A.D.*1696

Their Lordſhips then ſhew the Irregularity, as well as the Wickedneſs of the Abſolving Prieſts in their ſo doing, and that it was contrary to the Rubrick they ſo ſhameleſſly abus'd. Their Declaration was ſign'd by Dr. Thomas Tenniſon, Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Dr. John Sharp, Archbiſhop of York.
Dr. Henry Compton, Biſhop of London.
Dr. Nathaniel Crew, Biſhop of Durham.
Dr. Peter Mew, Biſhop of Wincheſter.
Dr. William Lloyd, Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield.
Dr. Thomas Sprat, Biſhop of Rocheſter.
Dr. Simon Patrick, Biſhop of Ely.
Dr. Gilbert Ironſide, Biſhop of Hereford.
Dr. John Moor, Biſhop of Norwich.
Dr. Richard Cumberland, Biſhop of Peterborough.
Dr. Edward Fowler, Biſhop of Glouceſter.
Dr. Robert Grove, Biſhop of Chicheſter.
Dr. ————, Biſhop of St. Aſaph.
Dr. Burnet, Biſhop of Salisbury.
Dr. Kidder, Biſhop of Bath and Wells.

And the other Biſhops who were not in Town to ſign this Declaration, were of the ſame Sentiments; and this ſhews how fooliſh and vain, as well as Rebellious and Impious, theſe Schiſmaticks are; that in defiance of our Religion and Laws, call themſelves the Church of England, but are in truth a bold deſperate Faction, who would be a ſhame to any Church, nay to any Religion in the World.

Rookwood, Lowick and Cranburne, try'd, condemn'd and executed.

On the 21ſt of April, Brigadier Rookwood, probably of the ſame Blood, as well as Name with one of the Gunpowder Plot, ninety Years before this Aſſaſſination Conſpiracy; Major Lowick, and Mr. Cranburne, three other Conſpirators, were brought to their Trial: and it was remark'd then, that they were the firſt who had the Benefit of the Statute, made this very Seſſion, to regulate Trials in Caſes of High-Treaſon: According to which a Copy of their Indictment was deliver'd to them; and Sir Bartholomew Shower, who had left the Conventicle eight or ten Years before, and two other Lawyers of his Party, undertook their Defence. This is another Paſſage that will ſurely be cenſur'd as Partial, and therefore let us produce what Authority we have for the Truth of it; the rather, becauſe it will ſerve to enlighten this dark Scene of Hiſtory.

Tory Lawyers plead for them.

Il y eut des Conſpirations pour aſſaſſiner le Roy, ſays a French Hiſtorian, & pour le dethroner, mais ce ſeroit a tort que l'on en rendroit les Tories reſponſables. On voit ſeulement que les Parricides choiſiſſoient toujours leurs Avocats parmi les gens de ce Party. On voit que les Nonjurants declaroient que ces Miſerables avoient agi ſelon les Principes de l'Egliſe Anglicane. " There were Conſpiracies to aſſaſſi- " nate the King, and to dethrone him, but it wou'd " be wrong to make the Tories anſwerable. 'Twas " only obſervable, that the Parricides pick'd their " Advocates out of that Party; and the Nonjurors " declar'd that thoſe Villains acted according to the " Principles of the Church of England, but the " moſt illuſtrious Prelates of that Church juſtify'd " her in this Matter." The Evidence againſt theſe three Conſpirators giving full Satisfaction to the Jury, they were convicted and condemn'd. Great Interceſſion was made by ſome Noblemen for the Life of Lowick, but whether with the ſame view as others interceded for Charnock, we cannot decide. Cranburne petition'd to be tranſported, but they were all three executed April 29. Cranburne died a Proteſtant, as he was pleas'd to call himſelf, ſpoke much to the Spectators, and ſaid he ſuffer'd for

A.D.1696 for his Loyalty. Rookwood and Lowick, Papiſts both, behav'd more decently and modeſtly than Cranburne, who glory'd that he ſuffer'd for a Righteous Cauſe. Lowick own'd he would have aſſiſted King James, if he could, when he landed, tho' not concern'd in the other Buſineſs of the Aſſaſſination. Rookwood quibbl'd again, ſaying he knew of no Commiſſion of King James's, to authorize the Aſſaſſinating the Prince of Orange; but they all knew of a Commiſſion to ſhoot him, or ſtab him, or beat out his Brains, or deſtroy him any how, after the manner of deſtroying Men in Battles, and Sieges, Combats and Skirmiſhes, whether with or without Guards, within Doors or without Doors, which was call'd levying War in the Abdicated King's Commiſſion. Rookwood added, So far as I was concern'd therein, it was in obedience to the Command of my ſuperior Officer; and the Prince of Orange as a Soldier ought to have conſider'd my Caſe, before he ſign'd a Warrant for my Death. Sure never was ſuch Wrongheads ſtuck upon Poles before; if his ſuperior Officer had commanded him to commit Sacrilege in a time of Peace, as it was then in England, tho' there were Wars abroad, wou'd it have been a good Plea to ſave him from the Gallows?

Their Behaviour at the Gallows.

Mr. Cook, Son of Sir Miles Cook, one of the Six Clerks in Chancery, and Mr. Knightly, were the laſt of the Conſpirators who were try'd this Year; but tho' they receiv'd Sentence of Death, yet ſuch was his Majeſty's unparallel'd Clemency, that Cook was only baniſh'd; and Knightly having freely confeſs'd the Fact, was pardon'd.

Cook and Knightly condemn'd. Cook baniſh'd, Knightly pardon'd.

I hinted a little before, that Interceſſion had been made to ſave Charnock, not for any Merit of his, by Penitence and a juſt Senſe of his Crime, but for ſhewing a Diſpoſition to make an ample Diſcovery of the Acceſſaries, as well as Principals in this double Plot; which I am afraid wou'd have brought in too many of thoſe above-mention'd, whom the French Hiſtorian calls Tories; there being not a few of them in the King's Council and Favour, as ill as they deſerv'd it of him. But as this will be partial with a vengeance in the Opinion of thoſe Men, I chuſe to uſe the Words of an Author, ſaid to be Noble, when his Treatiſe was publiſh'd. He is ſpeaking of the Conduct of that and the oppoſite Party.

" Who were thoſe that appear'd moſt affectio-
" nate, and were moſt tenderly touch'd with the
" Diſcovery of the Plot in 1695; who promoted
" the Aſſociation, and were for going into the Exa" mination of it without Reſerve? Who were thoſe
" that preſs'd to ſave Charnock, becauſe he knew
" all, and offer'd to diſcover; and who were thoſe
" that ſollicited without ceaſing, to get him hang'd
" that they might ſtop his Mouth? Who were thoſe
" that were Advocates for all the Jacobite Tray-
" tors, and that ſtifled the Diſcovery, and pro-
" cur'd the Names of thoſe to be conceal'd, that
" were concern'd in it, or that had got Pardon, or " made Terms with King James? Again, their Ma-
" lice is in perpetual Motion, either in Action or
" Conſult, poiſoning the World with the helliſh O" pinions they ſhew'd againſt the Government.
" Their Libel of laſt Summer, under the Name of
" Charnock's Letter, is the moſt execrable Paper
" that ever ſaw the Light. The poor Duke of Glou-
" ceſter was hardly cold in his Grave, when this
" Monſter came wet out of the Preſs. It impu-
" dently acknowledges the late Plot, and defends
" the intended Aſſaſſination, as a thing lawful, neceſ-
" ſary and juſt. The Author tells us, the Publica" tion of it was referr'd to a proper Seaſon. As ſoon
" as the dear young Prince was dead, and thereby
" one of the Branches of our Settlement cut off;
" that it ſeems was the proper Seaſon to ſpread this
" Doctrine of Devils, and to raiſe the Infernal Spirit
" of the Party to murder the beſt of Kings. He tells " us, Such Offers formerly made, had always been
" rejected by King James, but it may be reaſonably
" preſum'd, that what his Majeſty had for ſome
" Reaſons rejected, he might not be diſpleas'd at
" the doing of it another time." Sure this is ſuffi-
cient to convince any ſober Mind, that King James and his Faction did think Murder a laudable Practice, and took pleaſure in Parricide, elſe he cou'd never at any time be pleas'd with it. A.D.1696

Charnock hang'd, to prevent further Diſcovery.

The Aſſaſſination juſtify'd by the Faction.

The Parliament being prorogu'd, his Majeſty prepar'd for his croſſing the Water; but before his Departure he was pleas'd at ſeveral times to beſtow Honours and Preferments on ſeveral Perſons of Diſtinction and Merit.

Honours and Preferments.

Sir John Thompſon Bart. was made Lord Haverſham; Sir John Lowther of Lowther, Lord Viſcount Lonſdale. His Majeſty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon

John Combs Eſq; Chief-Juſtice of Cheſter.
Col. Willoughby Chamberlain of Barbadoes.
Charles Turner Eſq; of Lynn-Regis.
Edward Willis, Owen Buckingham Eſqrs; Sheriffs of London.
Alexander Rigby Eſq; a Leghorn Merchant.
William Milard Eſq; Sheriff of Bedfordſhire.
Charles Morley Eſq; Burgeſs for Hindon in Wilts.
George Hanger Eſq; Sheriff of Gloceſterſhire.
John Elwill Eſq; Burgeſs for Bereallſton in Devon.
John Robinſon Eſq; Burgeſs for Sudbury in Suffolk.
Theodore Janſſen of London, Merchant.

Signor Soranzo, one of the Venetian Ambaſſadors, to whom alſo, as had been uſual in former Reigns, he preſented his Sword.

Thomas Wheate Eſq; of Glympton in Oxfordſhire, and Richard Blackham of London, Merchant, were made Baronets.

Chriſtopher Muſgrave Eſq; was made Clerk of the Ordnance.

James Lowther Eſq; Clerk of the Delivery of the Ordnance.

His Majeſty was alſo pleas'd to appoint the great Officers of the Crown, and Commiſſioners of Trade and Plantations.

The Earl of Bridgwater.	Abraham Hill Eſq;
Earl of Tankerville.	John Lock Eſq;
Sir Philip Meadows.	John Pollexfen Eſq;
William Blaithwait Eſq;	John Methuen Eſq;

To be Commiſſioners for Encouraging, Improving and Protecting of the Trade of this Kingdom, and Plantations, ſince term'd Lords of Trade and Plantations. Mr. Popple a Merchant was made Secretary to the Commiſſion. And on May 1. his Majeſty was pleas'd to declare in Council, that he had appointed

Lords Juſtices.

The Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Dr. Tenniſon;
The Lord-Keeper, Sir John Somers;
The Earl of Pembroke;
The Duke of Devonſhire;
The Duke of Shrewsbury;
The Earl of Dorſet;
The Lord Godolphin;

} To be Lords Juſtices of England, for the Adminiſtration of the Government during his Abſence.

The next Day his Majeſty went from Kenſington, and lay at the Houſe of Capt. Ball, near Margate, where he was detain'd two Days by the Wind and Weather; he then went on board the Elizabeth, commanded by Vice-Admiral Aylmer, landed at Orange-Polder, May 7. and came about Midnight to the Hague.

Before we enter upon the Tranſactions tending towards a Peace this Year, we muſt remember that the Generals and Miniſters of the Allies in Holland and Flanders, who had been in the utmoſt pain for his Majeſty's ſafety, on News of the damnable Conſpiracy to aſſaſſinate him: were in as much Joy upon News that the Conſpirators were diſcover'd and

A.D.1696 brought to Punishment. Prince Vaudemont, and the other Generals, resolv'd to make an Attempt, that might in some measure revenge upon the French, the Invasion they design'd against England. After several Orders and Counter-Marches given to the Garrison of Namur, the greatest Part of them were order'd to march with Provision for six Days, and being join'd by several other Troops, they cross'd the Maese on the 4th of March, and were follow'd the next Day by the Horse under the Command of the Earl of Athlone, and Major-General Cohorn; and having cross'd the River Leile, the Earl with one Part of this Body march'd towards Dinant, while Cohorn with the rest set down before Givet; and having got all Things ready, he fir'd upon the Place with Bombs and red-hot Bullets, March 16. which burnt the Forage, and at the same time a certain Number of Soldiers were commanded to enter the Town with lighted Flambeaux in their Hands, who fir'd the Cazerns and other Edifices, where the Magazines of Oats and other Provisions lay, which were all utterly destroy'd with the loss of 10 Men only of this Body of Troops, consisting in all of about 40 Squadrons, and 30 Battalions. Not long after, Sir Cloudesly Shovel sail'd out of the Downs, with several Men of War and Bomb-Vessels, to chastise the French for their pretended Invasion, from their Neighbouring Coast. Being come to Calais, Capt. Bembow, notwithstanding the vigorous Opposition from the Enemies Boats and Half-Gallies, threw between 3 and 400 Bombs, most of which fell in the Town, and amongst the Transport-Ships, that had been provided to land King James and his French Auxiliaries in England. The Expence of this Bombardment was probably as great as the Damage done the Enemy by it: However, there were several Houses in the Town, and Ships in the Port burnt; but that was not the main thing intended by it, it was to let the Confederates and all Europe see, that Lewis the XIV. who had been talking big in most of the Courts of it by his Ministers, of his Royal Intention to restore King James to his Dominions, cou'd not preserve his own from the Vengeance of that Power which he had fruitlessly provok'd. 'Tis remarkable that there was in Calais, if there is not still, a Cross and Oratory, rais'd upon a Shell, which stuck in the Market-Place, where in Wartime at least, they were wont to pray against the Fury of English Bombs.

The Allies burn the French Magazine at Givet.

Calais bombarded.

The Discovery of the Plot, and the Proceedings of the Parliament upon it, spun out so much time, that the King cou'd not prevent the Enemies taking the Field in the Netherlands before him. And indeed himself did not think it prudent to leave his Dominions, while Sir George Rooke was at Cadiz with a strong Squadron of Men of War, to have an eye on the Motion of the Thoulon Squadron, and hinder if possible their Junction with that at Brest. Sir George had Orders to return and join the English Fleet upon Discovery of the Plot, and he safely reach'd the Coast of England, towards the latter-end of April, to the great Joy of the Nation, who were apprehensive that the Brest and Thoulon Squadrons might join and intercept him, and indeed the latter was not far behind him; for before the Junction of Sir George Rook's Squadron with other Men of War in the Downs cou'd be so well accomplish'd, as to be ready to meet the Squadron from Thoulon, or that from Brest, to hinder their joining, the former were got safe into Harbour. Tho' the French Army were more in Number than the Allies, and took the Field before them, yet the latter being re-inforc'd by the coming up of the Germans, wou'd have been in a Condition to have made good their Ground, if not to have gain'd upon the Enemy, had not the common Scarcity of Money kept both the Confederate and French Armies pretty quiet.

A.D.1696

The French suffer'd by reason of the general Poverty of their Kingdom, and the English, which included the Confederacy, on account of calling in the Coin. The Poverty of France might probably be exaggerated by the Allies, but it most certainly was disguis'd by the French; whom we must needs own to be the best People in the World at Appearances. Let us only bring to mind the Progress of the French King's Arms in the Netherlands; and we find that notwithstanding the immoderate Praises bestow'd by his Panegyrists on his own Valour, as well as that of his Soldiers, there was really nothing decisive in any of his boasted Victories. He gain'd the Battle of Flerus, but what Gain was it? Nay, what was that of Steinkirk, and even the greatest of his Gains, that of Landen? We have seen that wise Prince, whatever Airs he gave himself, cou'd build nothing on them, but a continual waste of his People's Blood and Treasure for a Town or two, which cost him more keeping than the Revenue of it was worth, and even that Town or two wou'd doubtless follow the Fate of Namur, the most valuable of them all. If the Allies shou'd in any succeeding Campaign act with the Vigour they did in the last, as he had all the Reason in the World to expect; he had therefore but two Things to resort to in this Extremity. The one was that desperate and dangerous Attempt against England, if not against the Person of the King. The other was a Peace, and tho' the Jacobites laugh'd at the Hint of it, as a Scheme not practicable, without restoring their Abdicated King; yet Men of Penetration were very well satisfy'd, the French King had no other way to disintangle himself from his ruinous Union with King James, and to put a stop at least to the growth of his People's Miseries.

The French King's Conquests exaggerated.

Inclines to Peace.

Lewis XIV. address'd himself first to the Dutch, to feel their Pulse as to a Treaty, imagining with good Reason, that a Trading Nation wou'd have a quicker Ear for such a Proposal than another, or than England, which tho' a Trading Nation, had more Demands upon him for Satisfaction for Injuries than the Hollanders. As soon as he came to a Resolution to acknowledge King William's Title to the Crown of England, which was almost as soon as it was known in France, that Sir George Barclay, and the late King James's Life-Guard had not murder'd him, Monsieur Calliere was sent from Paris to the Hague, with Proposals for a Treaty; which appearing to have somewhat in them of a Foundation for an Honourable Peace, the States Ministers gave him a favourable Reception, but wou'd not grant him a Passport, nor have Conference with him, without the Consent of his Britannick Majesty. The French Agent had positive Orders not to acknowledge King William, till he had good Assurances of the Peace; and as the Dutch wou'd enter into no Negotiation without the King's concurring in it, an immediate stop wou'd have been put to it, had not Calliere, who was loth to leave Holland, found out an Expedient, which was, that the States and he should not come to a final Conclusion; but if they found Reason to agree upon any Point, that the same should be communicated to their Allies. To which the Dutch readily agreed, and demanded as Preliminaries of the Treaty, the Restitution of Lorain, and of the Towns of Strasburgh and Luxemburgh. Monsieur Calliere granted both in his Master's Name, but upon Condition that Lorain shou'd be restor'd to the Duke of that Name on such Terms only, as had been agreed to at Nimeguen. This was oppos'd by the President Canon, the Duke of Lorain's Minister in Holland, under Pretence that when his Master enter'd into the Grand Alliance, the Allies engag'd never to conclude a Peace, till he had full Satisfaction done him; urging that if the Duke's Dominions were not restor'd to him, but upon the Terms of the Peace of Nimeguen, he shou'd rather be a Loser than

The Dutch Demands as Preliminaries to a Treaty.

A.D.1696 than a Gainer by the Confederacy, ſince he could have made a better Bargain with the French King, before he enter'd into the War: but theſe Reaſons were not weighty enough to hinder the Progreſs of the Pacifick Negotiations. For the French King having been in Poſſeſſion of that Duke's Dominions during the whole Courſe of the War, the Duke's entring into it gave the Allies no more real Advantage, than the Credit of his Name could give. There's no need of ſubtiliſing, and breaking open the Cabinets of Princes, to find out what Motives the Confederates, and their Enemy the French King, had to accept of the Mediation of the King of Sweden, in order to a Treaty of Peace. Both Parties were undoubtedly weary of a War, which was like to be determin'd by the longeſt Purſe, and not by the longeſt Sword. The King of England, who of himſelf was the leaſt diſpos'd to it, was tir'd with the continual Din of the Taxes, which the Tories, as the French Author calls them, were always buzzing in his and the People's Ears, with the Clamour of the Loſs of Trade, and the Handle which theſe two unavoidable Conſequences of War, gave the Diſaffected to encreaſe their Party, and perplex his Government. This induc'd his Majeſty to come into the Sentiments of the Dutch, with reſpect to entring upon a Treaty; and by the wiſe Management of the Baron Lilleuroot, the Swediſh Ambaſſador in Holland, the Matter was brought to ſuch a Maturity, that it was agreed to name Plenipotentiaries to bring it to Perfection.

The Tories force King William to a Treaty.

Small Events in the War this Year.

The ſmall Advantage obtain'd by the Duke de Vendoſme over the Spaniſh Army in Catalonia, is hardly worth mentioning, the Spaniards loſing but 300 Men, and the French 200.

As little was done on the Rhine this Campaign; and on the ſide of Italy, the French contented themſelves with the ſeparate Peace into which they had drawn the Duke of Savoy, by letting him into the Secret of the Deſign againſt England, and threatning to ſtrip him of all his Dominions the next Campaign, if the greateſt Power the French King could raiſe for it, could effect it. However, one may very reaſonably imagine, that the Temptation of marrying his Daughter to the Dauphin's eldeſt Son, was the ſtrongeſt Motive, to a Prince who made his Intereſt and his Ambition the Meaſure of his Actions. The Earl of Galway, the King of England's Ambaſſador at Turin, had a watchful Eye on that Court; and the more, becauſe he conceiv'd a Jealouſy of ſome clandeſtine Negotiation. To prevent his diſcovering it, the Duke of Savoy went to viſit the Lady of Loretto, with a ſmall Retinue, which made the Earl ſtill more jealous; the Duke being by no means a Bigot, and his Highneſs not admitting him to accompany him, confirm'd his Lordſhip in that Jealouſy: ſo he ſent Spies after him, who, with all their Induſtry and Dexterity, could diſcover no Traces of a Treaty, which the Duke concluded and ſign'd at Loretto, by the Mediation of the Agents of Rome and Venice. By this Treaty the French King reſtor'd to the Duke of Savoy all that had been taken from him in the laſt War, as alſo Pignerol demoliſh'd; gave him four Millions of Livres, and engag'd to aſſiſt him with 8000 Foot, and 4000 Horſe, and contracted for the Marriage of his Grandſon the Duke of Burgundy with the Duke of Savoy's Daughter. The Duke of Savoy's Miniſters being reproach'd with entering into ſeparate Negotiations, excus'd it, by ſaying, Their Maſter lay under a Neceſſity of doing it, to prevent his utter Ruin; and ought not to have let ſlip a Conjuncture, which brought ſuch ſingular and happy Advantages to his Family. But my Lord Galway was not ſatisfied with this diſingenuous Excuſe, and could not forbear to ſay in the Duke's Preſence, Such Principles were imbib'd by the Example and Hereditary Inconſtancy of his Anceſtors; nor did he fail of remonſtrating upon the Ingratitude of the Duke's Conduct, who had receiv'd ſuch large Subſidies from the King of England, and the States of the United Provinces. A.D.1696

Duke of Savoy makes a ſeparate Peace.

It was a good while before the Confederates and their Friends could digeſt this Duke's ſeparate Treaty, but his Behaviour in the ſecond Grand Alliance reconcil'd them to his Royal Highneſs's Character, and caus'd them to look upon him as one of the Defenders of the Liberties of Europe, againſt the Uſurpations of France. There was now a general Diſcourſe of a Peace between the other Confederates and France, grounded not only upon Calliere's Negotiations in Holland before mention'd, but upon Monſieur Dyckvelt's going to the King's Camp, juſt as News came of the Duke of Savoy's ſeparate Treaty. It was thought he went to his Majeſty to communicate the Steps that had been taken towards it, and receive his further Inſtructions about that important Affair: Dyckvelt making that Journey more than once, occaſion'd theſe Speculations.

In the mean time, the Naval Power of England continued to keep the Maritime Provinces of France in Terror and Alarm. Sir George Rook having reſign'd the Command of the Fleet to the Lord Berkley, his Lordſhip inſulted that Coaſt, and in the beginning of July landed ſome Men on the Iſland of Guoy. The Fleet came to an Anchor off Belle-Iſle, and the Barges and Pinnaces were immediately mann'd, and order'd to land upon Horeal, one of the Iſlands call'd the Cardinals, which they did without any Oppoſition from the Inhabitants, or the Garriſon in the Fort; they made themſelves Maſters of it, and burnt the Town of Horeal. They had the like Succeſs on Hodicke, another of thoſe Iſlands. On the 5th of July, three Engliſh and two Dutch Men of War, with the Long-boats of other Ships, and 700 Soldiers and Mariners, were ſent to join the Men at Guoy, who with their Aſſiſtance deſtroy'd twenty Villages, kill'd and carry'd off 1800 Head of black Cattle, and took 20 ſmall Veſſels. While this was doing, Sir Martin Beckman, with the Bomb-Veſſels, and a Squadron of 16 Men of War, under the Command of Capt. Mees, arriv'd before St. Martin's, a trading and wealthy Town in the Iſle of Rhee, going in with French Colours, which they took down when they anchor'd: Sir Martin began the Bombardment in the Evening, and that Night and the next Day fir'd about 2000 Bombs and Carcaſſes, with ſuch ſucceſs, that the greateſt part of the Town was burn'd down, or miſerably ſhatter'd.

Some Engliſh land in France.

The French, at laſt, recover'd their Surprize, and brought Cannon and Mortars down to the Shore, from whence they fir'd furiouſly on the Engliſh and Dutch Ships; the Commanders of which, contenting themſelves with the Execution their firing had done in the Town, bore away towards Olonne, where they had but little Succeſs, through a Miſtake of the Situation of the Place. Theſe Bombardments were not generally approv'd, as not anſwering their Expence, and being of no Benefit to the Engliſh, whatever Damage they did the French. But theſe were very poor Reaſonings; the Expence was abundantly anſwer'd, by the vaſt Charge the Enemy was at, in keeping a multitude of Men all along the Coaſts, to defend them in caſe of a Deſcent; and the little Damage that was done, was in ſo terrifying a manner, that the Inhabitants on thoſe Coaſts were in perpetual Fear of greater, and had no Conſolation from the Thought of their Monarch's invincible Power.

Tho' we have not enter'd far into the Hiſtories of Scotland and Ireland, as not being our principal Deſign; yet 'tis neceſſary to touch upon them, as they come in our way.

Scotland.

On the 8th of September the Parliament of Scotland met at Edinburgh, and the Lord Murray, lately created Earl of Tullebardine, his Majeſty's High Commiſſioner, made a Speech to them, on occaſion

*A.D.*1696 sion of their Meeting, as did also the Lord Polwarth, Lord High-Chancellor of that Kingdom. Was it not surprizing to find an Earl of Tullibardine among the Rebels, under that Arch-Rebel the Earl of Mar, nineteen Years after? But we find no such Degeneracy in the noble Family of Polwarth, as firm now in good Protestant and Revolution Principles, as when King James was fore-faulted by the Scots Convention for his illegal and tyrannical Government. The King's Letter being read, all the Members sign'd an Association, the same in substance with that in England, and an Act was order'd to be brought in, to oblige all Persons in Places of Trust to sign it; as also an Act for securing their Religion, Lives, and Properties, in case his Majesty should come to an untimely Death: both which Acts were great Checks upon the Designs of the Enemies to the Government, for which reason, the villainous Author of the Memoirs call'd Lockhart's, but not his writing, says, This Parliament was made up of a Set of Men of the same Stamp and Kidney, old forfeited Rebels, and Gentlemen of no Fortune, Respect, or Favour in the Kingdom. Another Sample of the Integrity and Modesty of the Jacobite Faction!

The Association past there.

Ireland. The Lord Deputy Capel dying in Ireland, after a long Sickness, the Council, pursuant to an old Statute, elected Charles Porter the Lord-Chancellor, to be chief Governor of the Kingdom, till his Majesty's Pleasure was known. This Gentleman had render'd himself obnoxious to the Country Party, in the latter part of King Charles the Second's Reign, by his Attachment to the then Court, and good Englishmen were puzzled to find out what new Merit he had to recommend him to the Favour of King William; which indeed was sufficient Cause for the Council of Ireland to place him in the Government: upon which he was congratulated by both Houses of Parliament; and not long after, August the 14th, the Earls of Montrath and Drogheda were declar'd Lords-Justices of that Kingdom. On the 8th of December Sir Charles Porter was seiz'd with an Apoplectick Fit, and dy'd immediately.

The Parliament there having pass'd a Bill transmitted from England, entitled, An Act for confirming several Out-lawries and Attaidters; as also for vesting in his Majesty the Estates of those who were dead in Rebellion, there, or in Foreign Parts: and being now jealous it might be prejudicial to the Protestants, they address'd the Lords-Justices, and told them, Least any thing should be construed to prejudice the Protestants, whose Interests were never intended to be injur'd thereby, they therefore besought their Excellencies to transmit into England those Heads of a Bill which they had prepar'd, and therewith presented to their Excellencies, for saving the Estates, Rights, Titles, and Possessions, of Protestants, from being prejudic'd by the said Act. And they unanimously, earnestly, and humbly entreated their Excellencies to recommend the same so effectually to his Majesty, that it might be return'd to them that Session, in order to be pass'd into a Law.

To which their Excellencies were pleased to answer, "They believ'd the whole Kingdom was satisfied that the King desir'd nothing more than "the Good of his Protestant Subjects; the Orders he had been pleas'd to give them being express to that effect, and they had reason to hope, it had been observ'd how exactly they had follow'd "these Orders; that they should always continue so to do, and in that Case particularly should be very careful to represent to his Majesty the Preservation of the Interest of his Protestant Subjects, to the end that no one of them might suffer by that Law, which they did believe so advantageous to the Protestant Interest in general."

The Parliament of Ireland pass'd also an Act for banishing all Papists exercising Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, and all Regulars of the Popish Clergy out of the Kingdom; another to confirm the Articles of Limerick; and a third to prevent Protestants intermarrying with Papists. All which were sign'd the 27th of September, and then the Parliament was adjourn'd. *A.D.*1696

The Lords-Justices in England did all that was possible to preserve the Peace, and to maintain the Honour of the Nation in his Majesty's absence. They appointed a general Fast to be observ'd on Friday June 26. They issued a Proclamation for apprehending the famous Pirate Henry Avery, and his Crew, who had not only taken a huge Hulk belonging to the great Mogul, or one of his petty Kings, having an Indian Princess and a great Treasure on board, but had committed many other Piracies in those Seas, to the great prejudice of the English East-India Company and Trade. This Robber afterwards made a sort of Settlement in the Island of Madagascar, and had at one time as many resolute Fellows about him, as Romulus had with him, when he trac'd out the Walls of Rome; but as such Rogues never agree long together, and are incapable of Subjection to the necessary Laws of Society, his Followers left him gradually, till at last he found himself almost alone upon that Island, and from thence got Passage to England, as some report; as others, to Ireland: but whether it was the one or the other, it is agreed on all hands that the Remains of the Plunder which he brought with him, were by him entrusted with a Person who cheated him of so much of it, that he died in Want, a Death much too honourable for him. In August the Lords-Justices publish'd a Proclamation for apprehending William Berkenhead, who being committed to Newgate for High-Treason, had made his Escape; and another in September for apprehending Capt. William Winter of Dymock in the County of Glocester, and several other Clippers and Coiners.

Dies in Want.

There being no likelihood of any Action in the Field, his Majesty left the Command of the Army to the Elector of Bavaria, about the latter end of August, and went to his usual Diversion of Stag-Hunting, in the Neighbourhood of his Royal Palaces of Dieren and Loo. On the 14th of September his Majesty set out from the latter, accompanied by the Duke of Zell, a most excellent Prince, Grandfather to our present Sovereign, whom King William respected as a Father, and lov'd as a Brother. The next Day he went to Cleves, where he was magnificently entertain'd by the Court of Brandenburgh, who were come thither on purpose to receive his Visit. Here his Majesty staid two Days, and then returning to Loo, was there three Days after visited by the Electoral Prince of Brandenburgh. On the 14th of October, the King after a short stay at the Hague, embark'd on board the William and Mary Yacht, attended by several other Yachts, and a Squadron of Men of War, under the Command of Vice-Admiral Aylmer. His Majesty landed at Margate two Days after, and arriv'd the same Evening at Kensington; where he was presented with a Congratulatory Address from the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of London, and conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood on John Johnson, Goldsmith, one of the Aldermen, and John Wolfe and Samuel Blewet, the two Sheriffs. On the 18th of September, the King was pleas'd to appoint Serjeant Blencow to be one of the Barons of the Exchequer, in the room of Baron Turton, who was remov'd to the King's-Bench, on the Death of Mr. Justice Gregory. His Majesty also fill'd up the See of Chichester, vacant by the unfortunate Death of Dr. Grove, with Dr. Williams, the most worthy Rector of St. Mildred in the Poultry.

The King returns to England.

Honours and Preferments.

On the 20th of October, his Majesty met his Two Houses of Parliament at Westminster, and made the following Speech to them.

My

A.D.1696

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Have call'd you together, as ſoon as was poſſible, and I think it a great Happineſs that this Year hath paſt without any Diſadvantage abroad or Diſorder at home, conſidering our great Diſappointment in the Funds given at your laſt Meeting, and the Difficulties which have ariſen upon the recoining of the Money.

"This is ſo convincing a Proof of the good Diſpoſition of my Army, and of the ſteady Affections of my People, that I cannot but take notice of it with great Satisfaction.

"Our Enemies have not been without Hopes that ſuch a Conjuncture might have prov'd fatal to us. But as they have fail'd in thoſe Expectations, ſo I am fully perſuaded that your Unanimous Proceedings in this Seſſion, will make them for ever deſpair of an Advantage from any Diſagreement among ourſelves. It muſt be confeſs'd, that the Buſineſs which you have before you will be very great, becauſe of the neceſſity of ſupplying former Deficiencies, as well as making Proviſions for the next Year's Service.

"And upon this Occaſion it is fit for me to acquaint you, that ſome Overtures have been made in order to the Entrance upon a Negociation for a General Peace: But I am ſure we ſhall agree in Opinion, that the only way of treating with France, is with our Swords in our Hands, and that we can have no Reaſon to expect a ſafe and honourable Peace, but by ſhewing ourſelves prepar'd to make a vigorous and effectual War. In order to which, I do very earneſtly recommend to you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, That you would conſider of raiſing the neceſſary Supplies, as well for maintaining the Honour of Parliaments, as making good the Funds already granted, and for carrying on the War the next Year, which I think ought not to be leſs, than what was intended to be raiſed for that Purpoſe the laſt Seſſion.

"I muſt alſo put you in mind of the Civil Liſt, which cannot be ſupported without your Help; and the miſerable Condition of the French Proteſtants does oblige me to mention them to you again.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"It may deſerve your Conſideration, whether there do not ſtill remain ſome Inconveniencies relating to the Coin, which ought to be remedied: And I hope you'll find out the beſt Expedients for the Recovery of Credit, which is abſolutely neceſſary, not only with reſpect to the War, but for carrying on of Trade.

"I am of Opinion, that there is not one good Engliſhman, who is not entirely convinc'd how much does depend upon this Seſſion; and therefore I cannot but hope for your Unanimity and Diſpatch in your Reſolutions, which at this time are more neceſſary than ever, for the Safety and Honour of England."

Of King William's Speeches.

Whoever was conſulted in forming and drawing up of King William's Speeches, the Wiſdom and Spirit of them were his own; and there are in them a Temper and Complacency, which cannot but affect all that heard or read them, let the Neceſſity of his Affairs oblige him ever ſo often to call upon his Parliament for Supplies, towards carrying on a War in which he engag'd by their Advice. The Difference between this Government and that of the Princes who reign'd immediately before him, may be conceiv'd in part even by their Speeches. The little Deference thoſe Princes ſhew'd to Parliaments, on almoſt all Occaſions, was a Proof of their Diſpoſition to get rid of them, and rule without them, whenever it was in their power; as the Complacency and Temper in King William's Speeches were Proofs that he look'd upon himſelf as the Father of his People, who cou'd not well avoid making him ſuitable Returns of Duty and Affection. Accordingly the Houſe of Commons voted, Nemine Contradicente, That they would ſupport his Majeſty and his Government againſt all his Enemies both at Home and Abroad, and that they would effectually aſſiſt him in carrying on the preſent War againſt France; and that an humble Addreſs ſhould be prepar'd to be preſented to his Majeſty, purſuant to the ſaid Reſolution: which Addreſs, as follows, was drawn up by Mr. Montague Chancellor of the Exchequer.

A.D.1696

The Commons Addreſs drawn up by Mr. Charles Montague.

May it pleaſe your moſt Excellent Majeſty,

"THIS is the Eighth Year in which your Majeſty's moſt Dutiful and Loyal Subjects, the Commons in Parliament aſſembled, have aſſiſted your Majeſty with large Supplies for carrying on a juſt and neceſſary War, in Defence of our Religion, Preſervation of our Laws, in Vindication of the Rights and Liberties of the People of England, which we have hitherto preſerv'd; and by the Bleſſing of God, upon your Majeſty's Conduct and good Government, will ſtedfaſtly maintain and entail upon our Poſterity.

"This hath coſt the Nation much Blood and Treaſure, but the Hopes of accompliſhing ſo great and glorious a Work, have made your Subjects chearfully ſupport the Charge. And to ſhew your Majeſty and all Chriſtendom, that the Commons of England will not be amuſed or diverted from their firm Reſolutions of obtaining by War a Safe and Honourable Peace; we do in the Name of all thoſe we repreſent, renew our Aſſurances to your Majeſty, that this Houſe will ſupport your Majeſty and your Government againſt all your Enemies both at Home and Abroad, and that they will effectually aſſiſt you in the Proſecution and carrying on the preſent War againſt France."

This very acceptable Addreſs was preſented to his Majeſty the 23d of October, who was pleas'd to return this moſt gracious Anſwer:

Gentlemen,

The Continuance of your Zeal and Affection is the Thing of the World I value moſt, and I will anſwer it by all the ways I can think of, and will make your Good, and the Safety of the Nation, the principal Care of my Life.

The Houſe of Commons taking into Conſideration the great Affairs recommended to them from the Throne; The further remedying the ill State of the Coin; The providing a Supply for the next Year's Service, and the reſtoring of Credit; proceeded on the firſt and the laſt together, and Reſolv'd on the very firſt Day of their Meeting, That they would not alter the Standard of Gold or Silver in Fineneſs, Weight or Denomination; and that they will make good all Parliamentary Funds, ſince his Majeſty's Acceſſion to the Crown, that have been made Credits for Loan from the Subject. The Circulation of Guineas having been obſtructed of late by reaſon of the want of other Coin, and the Act made the laſt Seſſion to take off the Obligation of coining Gold; a Bill was order'd to be brought October 22. For giving leave to import Guineas, and to coin Gold at the Mint. While Guineas for want of Silver Coin were current at 30*s.* a-piece, the Dutch and other Foreigners ſwept their Countries of all that were there, and ſent them away to England; where they laid them out in the moſt Merchantable Wares at Market Price, or a little above it, and conſequently made a gain of their Guineas, of almoſt as much as the then Currency of them was at above their real value, which was ſo much Loſs to the Engliſh; and to prevent this Inconvenience, the beforemention'd Bill paſt. But now that the value of Guineas was reduc'd to little more than the real Value,

A.D.1696 that Reaſon againſt the bringing of them in from Holland, Hamburgh, &c. ceas'd. A Pamphlet had been publiſh'd, intitl'd, An Account of the Proceedings of the Houſe of Commons, in relation to the re-coining the clipp'd Money, and falling the Price of Guineas; which the Houſe cenſur'd as falſe, ſcandalous, and ſeditious, and deſtructive of the Freedom and Liberties of Parliament, and order'd it to be burnt by the Common Hangman. It was a terrible Mortification and Diſappointment to the Diſaffected, whether Jacobites or Murmurers, that the Buſineſs of the Coin paſs'd off ſo peaceably and happily; and they ſpar'd for no pains, either in Writing or Talking, to perplex and expoſe the Schemes for remedying the ill State of it, and for reſtoring Credit. But the continuing the Standard and Value of Money, was thought to be owing in a great meaſure, to an Excellent Treatiſe, written by the celebrated John Locke Eſq; the greateſt Philoſopher of the Age. It was call'd, Some Conſiderations of the Conſequences of the lowering of Intereſt and raiſing the Value of Money, in a Letter to a Member of Parliament. This Famous Author, who was a Pillar and Ornament of Learning and Polite Literature, was turn'd out of his Student's Place, at Chriſt-Church, Oxon, by Dr. John Fell the then Dean, juſt ten Years before, which ought never to be forgotten; and as long as it is in Memory, the Merit of the Publiſhing the Lord Clarendon's Grand Rebellion, will not be ſo much for the Honour of that Houſe, as the turning Mr. Locke out of their Society for his good Engliſh Principles will be their Shame.

Mr. Locke's Treatiſe of the Coin uſeful in altering it.

He was turn'd out of Chriſt-Church, Oxon.

The Houſe of Commons being informed of a Printed Paper, entitl'd, A Summary Account of the Proceedings upon the happy Diſcovery of the Jacobite Conſpiracy; Reſolv'd, "That the Printing the "Names of the Members of their Houſe, and re- "flecting on them for their Proceedings in Parlia- "ment, was a Breach of the Privileges of that "Houſe, and deſtructive of the Freedom and Li- "berties of Parliament."

On the 3d of Dec. his Majeſty came to the Houſe of Peers, and gave the Royal Aſſent to an Act for Importing and Coining Guineas and Half-Guineas; an Act for the further remedying the Ill State of the Coin; an Act relating to the Duties on Low Wines. The Commons voted a Supply of 2372099 l. for the Maintenance of 40000 Seamen, &c. 1597882 l. for maintaining 89440 Land-Men, &c. 123000 l. to make good the Deficiency in recoining the hammer'd Money, and the Recompence to be given for bringing Plate into the Mints to be coined. All which was rais'd by a Capitation-Tax, Three Shillings in the Pound Land-Tax, and a Duty on Paper, Paſtboard, Vellum and Parchment, imported or made in England.

Acts paſt.

Supplies granted.

The greateſt Difficulty the Parliament had to ſtruggle with, was the reſtoring of Publick Credit, and particularly that of the Bank, which was then become a common Concern, the State having ſuch Aſſiſtance from it, and the Notes of the Bank were then at 20 per Cent. Diſcount, as the Author knew to his Coſt, having a large Sum impos'd upon him in Bank Notes at par, by certain vile Extortioners in the City, when they were diſcounted at indeed above 20 per Cent. Loſs. The Story of this Villany being too particular for Hiſtory, will be explain'd elſewhere, for a Caution to others to beware how they fall into the Claws of ſuch Harpies. All Tallies and Funds ſettled by Parliament bore the like ruinous Diſcount, nay in ſome remote Funds, the Loſs was 50 or 60 per Cent. and this great Loſs of Credit was owing chiefly to that miſerable Scheme of a Land-Bank laſt Year, the hopeful Contrivance of Mr. Robert Harley, which did not produce one Penny of above Two Millions and a Half, with which that moſt excellent Contriver had charg'd it.

Bank Notes 20 per Cent. Diſcount.

Mr. Robert Harley's Blunder of the Land-Bank Funds deficient.

On the 29th of Nov. the Commons Reſolv'd, That a Supply be granted to his Majeſty, to make good the Deficiencies of Parliamentary Funds; which upon an exact Eſtimate were found to amount to Five Millions, One Hundred and Sixty Thouſand, Four Hundred Pounds. A Sum that ſeem'd little leſs than Infinite, at a time when the Nation was involv'd in a War, at the yearly Expence of Five or Six Millions. For the ſecuring the Diſcharge of theſe Deficiencies, and making good whatever Tallies were ſtruck upon them; Mr. Montague, Chancellor of the Exchequer, had prepar'd a feaſible Scheme, which the Parliament approv'd of, by continuing ſeveral Duties ariſing not only by the Cuſtoms, and Tonnage and Poundage, but by Impoſitions on Paper, &c. as above-mention'd, on Marriages, Births and Burials, Windows, &c. from the time of their Expiration by former Acts, to the firſt Auguſt 1706; and appointed all the Monies ariſing thereby to be a General Fund, for making good the ſaid Grand Deficiency; and in caſe of Failure, to make good that alſo out of the Funds to be ſettled the next Seſſion of Parliament after the 1ſt of Auguſt 1706. This went a great way towards lowering the Diſcount upon all Tallies, Debentures and Exchequer Payments; and the Engraftment of a Million Stock more upon that of the Bank by new Subſcriptions, at 8 per Cent. Intereſt, to be paid by Tallies and Bank-Notes, did in a few Weeks reduce thoſe Notes to par; as the Circulation of two Millions Exchequer Notes of 5 l. and upwards, at 7 ½ per Cent. Intereſt, current in the Revenue, ſerv'd inſtead of ſo much Gold or Silver Coin; and in a few Weeks alſo became preferable to it, on account of the Intereſt they bore. This Project alſo came from Mr. Montague, who was diſmiſs'd not many Years after, and Mr. Harley the Projector of the Land-Bank, made Chancellor of the Exchequer. People cou'd hardly believe what they ſaw in a very little while come to paſs, that theſe ſurprizing and beneficial Schemes wou'd take effect, amidſt ſuch a Scarcity of, and Demand for Money; or that the Bank and the Funds wou'd ſo ſoon, and ſo eaſily recover their loſt Credit, as they did all by degrees; and then thoſe that had oppos'd, rally'd and cenſur'd Mr. Montague's Projects, as chimerical and impracticable, contented themſelves with calling 'em in groſs a Fortunate Temerity; whereas in truth the Succeſs was more owing to Forethought and Foreſight than to Fortune.

On the 12th of December, his Majeſty was pleas'd to appoint the Earl of Pembroke, the Lord Viſcount Villiers, and Sir Joſeph Williamſon, who had been lately ſworn of the Privy-Council, to be his Ambaſſadors Plenipotentiaries for the enſuing Treaty of Peace; and they choſe Matthew Prior, who had been Secretary to the Lord Durſley, Ambaſſador in Holland from the then King of Great-Britain, to ſerve them in that Capacity. This Mr. Matthew Prior was firſt bred a Vintner at Charing-Croſs, by an Uncle of the ſame Name, who took him from Weſtminſter School, to bring him up to his Trade. But his Genius for Poetry breaking thro'the Cloud of his Education, with a Brightneſs that charm'd the Earl of Dorſet, Patron of the Muſes; his Lordſhip ſpoke of it in ſuch a manner to Mr. Prior's Uncle, that he was ſent to Cambridge, and his great Patron continuing his good Offices to him on all Occaſions, put him into a way of Life which wou'd have made him a great Man, had the Endowments of his Mind for other Things been equal to that for Poetry, and had its Purity been equal to that of his Stile.

Tho' Sir John Fenwick's Affair began at the latter end of the laſt Year, I chuſe to begin this with it, becauſe it was carry'd on a pretty way in it, and then concluded in his Death. He was taken at New Romney in Kent, going by an alias Thomas Ward, and from thence brought up to London, where he was at firſt committed to the Tower, and then to Newgate. All Friends muſt be made, my Lord Devonſhire may perhaps, by my Lady; my Lord Godolphin, and my Lord Pembroke by my Lady Montgomery; Mr. Nelſon by the Biſhop of Canterbury; my Lord Arran might engage his Brother Selkirk to uſe his Intereſt with Keppel. I believe if my Lord Carliſle would go, it were beſt before my Trial, or elſe they will cut me ſhort for want of time. If he can prevail with him for a Pardon, he will procure it as well before my Trial as after; at leaſt he may prevail for a Reprieve, till ſome can come over to him: My Lord alſo will have an Opportunity to engage Bentinck, the Earl of Portland, and get my Lord of Eſſex to join with him. I cannot think what elſe to ſay, but the great Care muſt be the Jury; if two or three could be got that wou'd ſtarve the reſt: that or nothing can ſave me. Money I know would do it, but alas that is not to be had, nor ſhall I get enough for Counſel. I beg of you not to think of being ſhut up with me; I know it will kill you, and beſides I have no ſuch Friend as you to take care of my Buſineſs; though it would be the Comfort of my Life, the little time it laſts, to have you with me; and I have this only Comfort now left, that my Death will make you eaſy. My deareſt Life grieve not for me, but reſign me to God's Will. You will hear as ſoon as they bring me to Town, where they put me, and then I would have a Servant or ſome-body with me; I am interrupted, ſo can ſay no more now. Engage Sir John Lowther, the new Lord, who has more Intereſt than any body. Let my Lord Scarſdale, engage Jermaine, to engage Overkirk for me. Speak to my Lady Arlington, if my Trial could be put off till the King comes back, there would be more Opportunity to ſollicite him."

In this Letter Sir John Fenwick pretends to have a very great Affection and Tenderneſs for his Lady, Aunt to the Earl of Carliſle, mention'd in this Letter; but it may well be ſuſpected that his Diſtreſs, and the need of her Relations Aſſiſtance to get him out of it, if poſſible, had that Effect on his Paſſion, which was diverted not long before by an Amour with Mrs. Laſſels an Actreſs, who appear'd in Mourning, as if ſhe had been his Relict after his Death. This part of his private Life is no Digreſſion, conſidering we ſhall find him valuing himſelf much upon his Religion, which with his laſt Words he ſaid, taught him his Loyalty, that is, it made him a Jacobite.

The above-cited Letter being deliver'd to one Webber, the Companion of Sir John Fenwick's Flight, was intercepted by the Mayor of Romney, and brought to the Lords Juſtices. Sir John, who thought it had gone ſafe, as he intended it, deny'd before their Lordſhips every thing he was charg'd with, upon which the Lords produc'd the Letter, telling him, He was of another mind when he wrote that Paper. This ſo confounded him, that he had nothing to ſay, but laying it down ſhew'd all the Marks of Shame and Confuſion. Webber, who was Fenwick's boſom Friend, Companion and Sollicitor, we ſhall find to be taken into Service and Pay by the Harleyan Miniſtry, which will we hope without Partiality give one a juſt Idea of the Men. Biſhop Kennet tells us in his Hiſtory, " There " was another Expedient of double Dealing, ſug- " geſted to Sir John Fenwick, by a Perſon, who " though he had been a great Inſtrument in the " late Revolution, yet to gratify a private Reſent- " ment, adviſ'd Sir John to ſet up a Counterplot, " by impeaching ſeveral of the King's beſt and " heartieſt Friends." Whether he meant Robert Ferguſon or Mr. John How, he miſtakes as to great Inſtrument. For King William never truſted Ferguſon with his Secrets, nor was How any further inſtrumental in the Revolution, than by joining the Prince of Orange at Exeter. Be it who it will, the Advice was as weak as wicked, and haſten'd the bringing the Knight's Caſe into Parliament. He had deliver'd a Paper to the Government, wherein he ſaid in general, There were in England a ſettled Number of Perſons to manage King James's Affairs. And being afterwards put upon to name thoſe Perſons, and to deſcend to particulars; he gave in another Writing, wherein among other Things he pretended, That the Duke of Shrewsbury came again into the Office of Secretary of State, by the Operation and Conſent of King James, with whom the Duke was in Treaty before he laid down the Seals. That the Lord Marlborough had promiſ'd King James ſome Service, which had inclin'd King James to promiſe him his Pardon. That the Earl of Bath was to betray Plimouth into the hands of the French King. That Admiral Ruſſel and the Lord Godolphin were alſo in King James's Intereſt. And that Commiſſary Crawford had ſent over to France a Liſt of the Forces of England. General Talmaſh and Sir Ralph Delaval were alſo inſerted in his Paper, as in a Correſpondence with the St. Germains People. This monſtrous Impoſture ſtartled not only the Court, but the King himſelf at firſt hearing of it; but it was ſo prepoſterous and incredible, that tho' it gain'd Fenwick ſome time, yet it prov'd fatal to him in the end, by raiſing the Indignation of all good Engliſhmen, both within doors and without againſt him. And as neither himſelf nor his Adviſers cou'd think it wou'd ſerve his Turn long, they took a ſurer Courſe by tampering with Cardel Goodman the Actor, who was a Viva Voce Witneſs againſt him, and gave him a round Sum of Money to run away to France; which he did, and was there hurry'd away to Pignerol, or ſome other Fortreſs on the Borders of Savoy, where he was kept in Confinement for fear of his getting back into England again. Goodman being thus ſpirited away, Fenwick's Emiſſaries practis'd the ſame with Capt. Porter, and Clancy an Iriſh Papiſt Peruke-maker in Covent-Garden offer'd a large Sum and Penſion, if he wou'd withdraw as Goodman had done. Porter ſeem'd to hearken to the Offer, nay, he took a good Part of the Money, but with the Privity of the Miniſtry, whom he had all along acquainted with Clancy's Practice.

Goodman ſpirited away.

Porter being now the only Evidence Viva Voce, Fenwick's Friends began to ſpeak of his Caſe, as a very hard one, and to inſult the Government for not bringing him to Trial, or diſcharging him; and their daring Speeches and wicked Acts to prevent his falling into the hands of Juſtice, rous'd at laſt the Reſentment of his Majeſty and his Parliament. The King gave Admiral Ruſſel leave to acquaint the Houſe of Commons with the Proceedings

A.D. 1697 ings relating to Sir John Fenwick; and Sir William Trumbal, Secretary of State, alſo acquainted them, that his Majeſty had given leave for the Informations Sir John had given, to be laid before them; which was done accordingly, Nov. 6. and Fenwick being brought to the Bar of the Houſe, the Speaker Paul Foley Eſq; inform'd him, the Houſe expected a full Diſcovery of all he knew, for they look'd on his Informations as the Contrivance of others, as they had good reaſon to do, when in one of the Papers ſign'd by him he had the Confidence to ſay, King James thought himſelf ſure of the Army by means of the Lord Marlborough; and of the Fleet by means of Killegrew and Delaval. But not having the face to charge Sir Cloudeſly Shovel with Diſaffection, he own'd Delaval and Killegrew ſaid, Shovel was not to be ſpoke to, but they would ſecure him, and let the French Fleet ſail by. He added, The Lord Brudenel is out 6000 l. That he did not write to King James in Perſon, but his Wife did. As to his own Correſpondence with the abdicated King, he confeſs'd he had two Letters from him and no more; he ſaid further, That being coming in his Coach from Hyde-Park, he met General Talmaſh in his, in St. James's Street, that the latter beckon'd to him to go into St. James's Court; that they came out of their Coaches and took a turn or two there, at which time Talmaſh whiſper'd him, we ſhall ſerve both on the ſame ſide. He added, Brigadier Mayne promis'd to come over to King James's Intereſt in Ireland; and he ſaid, Indeed I wonder he did not. He confeſs'd, Lieutenant-General Kirk had given King James the ſame Aſſurances. That Sheerneſs was to be ſecur'd by the Deputy-Governor; that the Lord Montgomery was in the Plot, and had been with him about it ſeveral Times. That ſeveral great Lords, as the Duke of Shrewsbury, the Earl of Marlborough, the Lord Godolphin, Admiral Ruſſel, &c. had accepted of Pardons from King James. Every Word of this pretended Information and Confeſſion is notoriouſly falſe, except what relates to the Lord Montgomery. Fenwick being preſt by the Speaker to make a ſincere Confeſſion, he complain'd, he had been very hardly dealt with, for whatever he had ſaid, the Anſwer was ſtill, 'tis not ſatisfactory. One can ſcarce forbear laughing at his hard Uſage, after all that he had ſaid, amounted to no more than a ſtring of Falſities, which every Man that heard muſt be aſham'd of. Upon his perſiſting in it, that he had no more to ſay, a Motion was made for leave to bring in a Bill to attaint Sir John Fenwick of High-Treaſon; and after a Debate the Houſe divided, Yea's 179, No's 61. Sir Thomas Trevor, then Attorney-General, was order'd to prepare and bring in the Bill, which I ſuppoſe was not mention'd in the Preamble to the Patent, upon his being made a Peer, at the ever-memorable Creation, a little before the Utrecht Peace, and a little after Sacheverel's Sedition.

Counſel for the King.

Sir Henry Gould.	Sir Salathiel Lovel.

Counſel for Sir John Fenwick.

Sir Thomas Powis.	Sir Bartholomew Ruſſel.

After Sir John Fenwick was again brought to the Bar of the Houſe of Commons, the Bill of Attainder was read, and Sir Henry Gould firſt ſpoke to the Charge againſt him, as to his Conſpiring a French Invaſion, which had been prov'd before the Grand-Jury, by the Oaths of Goodman and Porter; but Goodman, as has been hinted, being ſpirited away, it was the Reaſon that Fenwick was not try'd at the Old-Bailey, as well as Charnock and the other Traytors. Sir Henry Gould explains the Matter further, thus; Here ſtands our Matter, here was an Indictment found according to the Law you made laſt Seſſion of Parliament by two Witneſſes, to one Species of Treaſon againſt Sir John Fenwick; we have one of theſe Witneſſes here Viva Voce: but Sir John Fenwick hath protracted his Trial by frequent Aſſurances of making a Diſcovery. He had been try'd in courſe, without theſe Applications, and found Guilty. Sir Salathiel Lovel, ſpoke to the ſame purpoſe; and then the Evidence being about to be call'd in, Sir Thomas Powis objected that Sir John Fenwick had no Notice that Evidence would be heard againſt him, ſo as to provide his Witneſſes alſo. He had not a Witneſs to provide, yet this renown'd Lawyer takes on him to trifle thus with the moſt auguſt Aſſembly in Europe, to give a handle for Debate to the Party in the Houſe, that were determin'd to defend Fenwick in every Article that was offer'd againſt him. Sir John had had the Vote of the Houſe, nay the Copy of the Bill ſent him; he had petition'd for Counſel and it was allow'd him, and did neither he nor his Counſel imagine that Witneſſes wou'd be heard to prove the Allegations in the Bill?

Sir Thomas Powis trifles in his Pleading for him.

Mr. Speaker told Sir Thomas Powis and Sir Bartholomew Shower, the Houſe wou'd not allow them to queſtion the Power of Parliaments to paſs Bills of Attainder when they thought it requiſite; of which this Houſe, continues he, are more proper Judges than any private Perſon. Here the Speaker, Mr. Paul Foley, determin'd the Matter in favour of the Bill; for the Houſe being the proper Judges, did ſo determine it, and Sir Thomas Powis expreſt himſelf much to the ſame purpoſe: I ſhall very carefully obſerve the Directions you give me, which I hope we ſhould not have ſtood in need of, but have behav'd ourſelves as becomes us, and not have drawn in queſtion the Power of Parliaments; I never had a Thought of doing ſuch a Thing. But the Faction without doors did loudly exclaim againſt that unqueſtionable Power of Par-

The Speaker Mr. Foley decides the Matter for the Bill.

*A.D.*1697 Parliaments in this Caſe; they urg'd that it was unprecedented, tho' if they had known ever ſo little of Hiſtory, they wou'd have met with ſeveral Attainders even without Hearing. Was not the Duke of Monmouth's of that kind; which this very Gentleman Sir John Fenwick ſollicited with ſo much earneſtneſs, being then one of the Knights of the Shire for Northumberland, as was the Rebel Forſter afterwards, that he got it read thrice and paſs'd in a Day? Whereas it was pretended, that never any Man had ſuffer'd for a Crime committed before the Law for its Puniſhment was made. That Objection was remov'd by the Inſtance of the Biſhop of Rocheſter's Cook, who, for poiſoning ſome of his Domeſticks, was condemn'd to be boil'd to death alive, by an Act made after the Crime was committed Temp. Hen. VIII. Upon the Nun of Kent's Impoſture, the Parliament adjudg'd thoſe that had abetted her to be guilty of High-Treaſon, and ſeveral of them were attainted in the ſame Reign. The Duke of Somerſet, King Edward VI's Uncle, was condemn'd upon a Depoſition read in Court: yet notwithſtanding all thoſe Examples the Diſaffected had nothing more in their Mouths than that it was without Example. What is ſaid here is not to give any Countenance to the Condemnation of Perſons by extraordinary Means, when the ordinary would not condemn them. Such Inſtances are and ſhould be very rare, and never but when the Legiſlature is oblig'd to interpoſe for the ſafety of the Government, when the Crime is enormous, and the Criminal has been either inſtrumental in quaſhing the legal Proof of it, as was Fenwick's Caſe, or it is ſo Self-evident, that there is not the leaſt room to doubt it; which was his very Caſe alſo. No-body in the World doubted of Fenwick's Guilt; his Advocates could not deny that Goodman, whom his Emiſſaries ſpirited away, had ſworn it before, as the Law requir'd, and Porter was ready to ſwear it then. All own'd Fenwick was certainly a Traytor, and had conſpir'd to reſtore King James by a French Power. Every Nation has a laſt and ſovereign Reſort in all Caſes of Emergency, ours is in the King and the two Houſes of Parliament; yet ſo zealous were Fenwick's Party for the Liberty of the Subject, tho' he and they had ſo lately been in a Plot to deſtroy all Liberty, that they cou'd not bear to hear of any ſtep ever ſo little out of the way, becauſe the Security of King William and the Proteſtant Religion was concern'd in it.

Fenwick most zealous for attainting the Duke of Monmouth.

The Counſel on both ſides being heard as to the hearing of the King's Evidence, Sir John Fenwick and his Counſellors were order'd to withdraw, and it was debated in the Houſe very warmly on both ſides of the queſtion; James Montague Eſq; afterwards Lord Chief-Baron of the Exchequer, ſaid the Truth of the Matter in a few Words: The Conſequence of allowing the King's Evidence, was the allowing of Fenwick's. And his Counſel pretending they had no notice of Evidence to be heard, nor were prepar'd with theirs, Fenwick deſires time to get them ready; I am not ſurpriz'd, ſays Mr. Montague, to hear Sir John Fenwick deſire time; for giving him time, is giving him Life. Nor for his Counſel to tell you his Witneſſes are not ready, 'tis a common Excuſe. But as common as it is, Sir Francis Winnington, Robert Price Eſq; Nicholas Hooper Eſq; Mr. Brotherton, Mr. Heneage Finch, Mr. Simon Harcourt, pleaded earneſtly for the Priſoner, and aſſerted things quite contrary to what was aſſerted in the ſame Debate, by Sir Thomas Trevor, Sir John Hawles, Mr. Sloan, William Cowper Eſq; Serjeant Whitaker, and Mr. Montague, all Gentlemen of the Long-Robe; and all of equal Reputation with the beſt of their Antagoniſts. Mr. Simon Harcourt ſaid at the opening of his Speech, If Sir John Fenwick's Buſineſs muſt be done, I hope we ſhall do it like rational Men; inſinuating plainly enough, that the Court was reſolv'd to have this Man's Blood, Right or Wrong, Reaſon or not Reaſon, why elſe muſt his Buſineſs be done? Why elſe did he hope, and not depend upon its being done with Reaſon? His doing it with Reaſon, was proceeding according to the Forms of Weſtminſter-hall, which if the Government could have proceeded upon at that time, what need of a Bill of Attainder? This he and all that ſpoke on his ſide knew as well, as that Friend was hang'd and Goodman run away. And the Gallant and Eloquent Lord Cutts, ſaid in two or three Words, all that cou'd rationally be ſaid to the Point; I conceive it a thing to be wiſh'd, that every Gentleman that ſpeaks upon this Occaſion, would apply himſelf more cloſely to Subſtance, and leſs to Forms. I mean to Forms conſider'd meerly as Forms, for it ought to be true Reaſon that is convincing to you, and you ought not to tie yourſelves to any Forms on this Occaſion, but ſuch as are grounded upon Reaſon; and really I have not heard any Thing that fell from any Gentleman that ſhews his doubt of the Nature and aggravating Circumſtances of the Crime of the Priſoner. Which is the whole of the Argument then in Debate, the Houſe by voting the Bill declar'd themſelves Judges. Mr. Foley the Speaker explain'd the ſenſe of the Houſe to the Priſoner and Counſel. They agreed to that Explanation, by which the Houſe declar'd they were not to be bound by the Common Rules of Weſtminſter-hall; and yet all who ſpoke on Fenwick's ſide, were perpetually labouring to bind the Houſe by them, knowing full well that Goodman's being bought off and withdrawing, had ſav'd him from Conviction and Puniſhment by thoſe Forms; which had there been no want of, wou'd have render'd the Bill rather impertinent than unprecedented.

Lord Cutts.

Sir Edward Seymour, whoſe Character was the Reverſe of Literature, dropt ſomething out of the Roman Story concerning Catiline's Conſpiracy, and of Cethegus's vindicating him; which was much taken notice of, coming from a Perſon, of whoſe Learning the Houſe had no great Opinion; and Lieutenant-General Mordaunt, ſaid in anſwer to him, after having extoll'd his Reading, That the worthy Member who ſpoke laſt, had omitted one Particular of his Hiſtory, which was, that Cethegus was a Fellow-Conſpirator with Catiline; a Circumſtance too well known not to occaſion ſome Mirth, as did what Sir Edward ſaid afterwards, being a Pun much below the Manner of Gentlemen, eſpecially in ſuch an Aſſembly. If there had been no more, ſaid he, than the Enacting Clauſe, it would have done Sir John Fenwick's Buſineſs with a Witneſs, or rather without a Witneſs. As to the Hardſhips in Sir John Fenwick's Caſe, mightily inſiſted upon by ſome Members, it was anſwer'd by others, and none came cloſer to the point than Hugh Boſcawen Eſq; The great thing, ſaid he, which ſome Gentlemen ſay we muſt take care of, is the Blood of a Man. Does any one ſay he is innocent? no; but we muſt have ſome way or other that he muſt not be brought to his Trial. I deſire, as Engliſhmen, you will not only take care of the Life of one Man, but of the Life of the King, of the Lives of our Wives and Children, and all our Families; what will they ſay without Doors? Mr Robert Harley ſeconds Mr. Simon Harcourt about doing Fenwick's Buſineſs; Let him deſerve never ſo much, ſays Mr. Harley, yet he does not deſerve to die unjuſtly by your hands. Not a Soul there but believ'd him Guilty of High-Treaſon, and the worſt ſort of High-Treaſon a Traytor could be guilty of, a Conſpiracy to bring in the implacable Enemies to our Religion and Liberty, and to betray our Country to the French; not a Soul there but believ'd the Parliament had the Power of Attainting him for it: how then could he die by that Power unjuſtly, when the Treaſon againſt the King and Kingdom was ſo clear againſt him, that not one Member in the Houſe had the leaſt Doubt of his Guilt. The Queſtion having been debated till very late at night,

Sir Edward Seymour.

Mr. Simon Harcourt.

A.D. 1697 was at last carried in the Affirmative, that the King's Witnesses should be heard. The first Evidence was Capt. Porter, who prov'd Fenwick was present at two Meetings to send Charnock to France for a French Army of 10000 Horse and Foot. The Lord Montgomery was at one or both of those Meetings, but I know not how it happen'd, he came off better than the rest of the Conspirators, and liv'd to take upon him the Title of Duke Powis, which he had no other Right to, than the abdicated King, who had no Right to any thing in England, could give him. Porter prov'd also that Chancy the Irish Peruke-Maker tamper'd with him to withdraw, as Goodman had done, paying him 300 Guineas down in hand, and promising him a Bill for 300 more, and 300 l. a year to be paid him in France, one hundred Pounds of which was to come from the Lord Bruce's Father, the Earl of Aylesbury, one hundred Pounds a year from the Lord Montgomery, and one hundred Pounds a year from Sir John Fenwick; that my Lady Fenwick had been with him about it, and he had seen a Letter from her Husband to King James, wherein Sir John desir'd that King to pardon Porter, because his running away was to serve the Lords Aylesbury and Montgomery, and himself. One Roe also prov'd that he had been tamper'd with to get Goodman out of the way, by Deighton, who was then at the Bar of the House as Fenwick's Sollicitor. The Record of Clancy's Conviction was then read, so careful were the King's Counsel to have every thing appear as clear as the Sun at Noon in a fine Day; they offer'd to read also Goodman's Examination before Secretary Vernon, but a Cry was presently made against that by Sir John Fenwick's Advocates, under pretence that Depositions were never heard in Evidence: which was answer'd so plainly by Mr. Sloan, that one cannot but pity the Poverty of those Arguments that had been made use of against it. Mr. Manly said, Every one that had look'd into the A, B, C, of the Law, knew that Examinations before Justices were never read. To which Mr. Sloan replied, I believe I may save a great deal of Trouble in this Matter; for those Gentlemen at the Bar that made the Objection, speak without Book, but I speak by Book, having my Lord Chief-Justice Hales's Pleas of the Crown in his hand, I think he was past his A, B, C, of the Law; I know not how far this Gentleman is advanced in his Pleas of the Crown in that part, where he shews what is Evidence to the Petit-Jury; he says, first, By the Statute 1 & 2 Philip and Mary, c. 13. The Justice hath Power to examine the Offender and Informer; and so he goes on in several Particulars, and then he says, These Examinations, if the Party be dead or absent, may be taken in Evidence. It was not pretended that such an Examination was of equal Authority with Evidence Vive Voce; but the House of Commons being Judges of the Fact, and to give Judgment according to their Consciences, they, who were not tied down by Rules, ought surely to hear what would be allow'd to a common Jury, to guide their Judgment in the like Case, according to Judge Hales; yet all that pleaded for Fenwick would hear of nothing, but the usual Forms at Sessions and Assizes, where because the Reading of Examinations was not commonly practis'd, therefore the House must not hear the Information of an absent Witness, prov'd to be withdrawn on purpose to prevent his giving Evidence Viva Voce. In this Debate we find in the same Tone again Mr. Robert Harley, and Mr. Simon Harcourt. Mr. Harcourt said, If you were to pick all the Absurdities out of the Trials in the late Reigns, you could not pick out more than have been endeavour'd by the King's Counsel to be impos'd upon you this Day. Intimating that Jefferies had as much Power as the House of Commons, and that the Legislature was as much bound by Rules, as that infamous Judge should have been. Next comes Mr. Robert Harley, and he truly cries out, Here it is that the Boundaries are establish'd for the Laws and Liberties of Mankind, and this is an Observation that is found in History, that those that have broke their Bounds down, it hath return'd upon them to their Prejudice: Let us not out of Hatred or Zeal against a guilty Man, lose our own Innocence. At last the Question was put, whether Goodman's Information should be read, and the House divided, Yeas 218, Noes 145. A.D. 1697

Evidence against Fenwick.

Mr. Simon Harcourt and Mr. Robert Harley again.

The Substance of Goodman's Information about the Assassination and Invasion Plots.

THat he and Porter had held a Correspondence with Parker while he was in England, and after he was in France, by the means of Charnock of Magdalen-College, Oxon; that he had a Commission for a Troop of Horse from King James, as had also Capt. Porter, Sir William Perkins, Mr. Charnock, Sir Henry Sheers, and Mr. H. That he and Porter took a House in the Chase, for the Convenience of Stabling for their Horses, and for their private Cabals; that Charnock told him, the Sign for the Invasion would be when the Toulon Fleet should join the Brest Fleet; that Porter had sent Arms into Lancashire; that Charnock came to him, and said he had something to propose to him, desiring him to go along with him, which he did, and was carried by him to one Mr. W—, who said he expected a Commission from King James to seize King William; that he had several Meetings with Charnock, Porter, and others; that the Subject of their Discourse was about the surprizing the King as he came from Richmond, and after several ways proposed for that purpose, he particularly ask'd, Suppose the King were in our power, what then? for we ought to have regard to some End or other in such an Undertaking, and I am not willing to offer any thing to his Person. Mr. W. said, He might have a Coach, and convey him away, adding, I am sure of a Fort to be deliver'd to me; Goodman thought he mention'd Deal. This Matter hung some time for want of King James's Commission to seize King William; and Goodman demanded to have a Pardon in case of an Accident, which not coming when it was first expected, the Assassination Plot was a while suspended. In the mean time there were several Meetings, about sending over Proposals to King James, at which Sir John Fenwick assisted, as also did the Lord Aylesbury, who had been himself in France. Sir John Fenwick, as Goodman confess'd, us'd to send over a List of the Forces, how they were quarter'd, what were in Garrison, and what were otherwise dispos'd of. But tho' Sir John Fenwick's Zeal was very good, yet his Care it seems was deficient; for his Lists being imperfect, the Assassin Parker wrote to Goodman to try to get true ones; which the latter did, by bribing Gibson, a Clerk in the Commissary Office, who gave him Lists frequently, and Goodman sent them to France.

The Substance of Goodman's Evidence.

Goodman's Information was not only read in the House of Commons, but had been given to the Grand Jury who found the Bill against him; Sir Bartholomew Gracedieu and Mr. Mead gave Evidence, that his Confession was the same before them as in the Information, and that Sir John Fenwick particularly promis'd, there should be 2000 Horse ready to join the French Army.

The next thing produced at this Hearing was, the Evidence that had been given at Cook's Tryal; every Step of this Proceeding was debated, and the Clamour against it the same, that it was not agreeable to the Rules in Westminster-Hall. This had been answer'd over and over again; and indeed, I never met with such a Flux of Tautology in any Arguments, as in those made use of by Sir John Fenwick's Advocates.

Coll. Granville and Sir Richard Temple were the first that oppos'd the hearing of Cook's Record, and in

A.D.1697 in answer to the latter, Sir Thomas Mompesson said, This Gentleman complains this was never done; when the Duke of Monmouth was impeach'd, the Bill was read three times in one Day, and Sir John Fenwick mov'd for the Impeachment. After Coll. Granville, spoke three Revolution-Men on the same side, which was quite contrary to the Cause they had espous'd, when they declar'd for the Prince of Orange; as Mr. John How, Mr. Simon Harcourt, and Mr. Robert Harley. Says Mr. Harcourt, 'Tis not in the power of Men to offer any thing more absurd. If there be Books, Practice, Precedent, or any thing to justify it, I will sit down. Mr. Harcourt knew full well it was not offer'd as Evidence, but as Mr. Sloan said, This is no sort of Evidence against Sir John Fenwick, but our Question is about a Witness that is withdrawn, and to know what he said: and how he was believ'd when he was here, we have seen already. My Lord Cutts reply'd also, very pertinently, to Mr. Simon Harcourt; If the worthy Gentleman that spoke last, had made out all his Propositions, with Clearness equal to the Assurance with which he reported them, they would have more Weight. Against the admitting of Cook's Record to be read, spoke further, Mr. Robert Price, Mr. Pelham, Sir Christopher Musgrave, Sir Marmaduke Wyvill, and even Sir Thomas Trevor, who was then Attorney-General, and Mr. Edward Harley, Brother to Mr. Robert Harley. Mr. Edward thought fit to say, I would not have it said, that under the Reign of King William any thing was done contrary to the Law and Constitution of the Nation. For the Reading of Cook's Record, spoke Sir John Hawles, Sollicitor-General, Dr. Oxenden, &c. and upon the Question the Division was, Yeas 181, Noes 110.

My Lord Cutts charges Mr. Simon Harcourt with Assurance.

The Record being read, and a Debate arising about examining Witnesses as to what Goodman swore at Cook's Tryal, the old Story of Westminster-Hall is trump'd up again by Mr. Manley, Son of honest Major Manley, an old Round-head, Mr Robert Harley, Son of Sir Edward Harley, another old Round-head, Mr. John How, Mr. Gery, Sir Christopher Musgrave, Sir Godfrey Copley; but Mr. Sloan, Sir Thomas Littleton, John Smith Esq; having fully answer'd their stale Objections, it occasion'd another Division, Yeas 180, Noes 102.

Then Mr. Collins and Mr. Cooper, two of the Jury who convicted Cook, gave the House full Information of what Goodman swore at the Trial of Cook; that Sir John Fenwick was with the other Conspirators at the Meeting in Leaden-hall-Street, where 'twas agreed to send Charnock to France. The next Evidence was Sir John Fenwick's Letter to his Lady, before cited, and if there wanted those many Proofs of his Guilt, this Letter is enough to convince his best Friends that nothing should have sav'd him, for he himself said there, that nothing could; which imply'd, that he by his own Judgment deserv'd to die by the Laws of our Constitution.

After the reading of this Letter, his Council, Sir Thomas Powys and Sir Bartholomew Shower, who were Counsel against the seven Bishops, desir'd time till the next day, to make Obsevatiens on what had been said against their Client, which was granted; but they were order'd to examine their Witnesses for him, if they had any, that Night: Sir Thomas Powys frankly own'd, that truly they had no Witnesses at all, against so much Evidence of Fenwick's Treason produc'd by the King's Counsel.

The only Objection his Advocates could make to this Prosecution, was, that it was an extraordinary one; and that he ought to have been tried at the Old-Baily, as he would have been, and convicted, and executed, Months before this, had not his Emissaries brib'd Goodman to go off, that he might not confirm the Evidence he had given against Fenwick in his Examination by Secretary Vernon, and at Cook's Trial, both upon his solemn Oath. It remain'd therefore to clear that Matter to the House, which Mr. Secretary Vernon did, by proving Fenwick's Prevarications to protract his Trial till Goodman was out of the Kingdom. Mr. Vernon's Speech on this Occasion contains so many curious things, that I shall insert it entire, as he spoke it to the House of Commons, before the Bill was read the second time, in presence of the Counsel on both sides, and the Prisoner, Sir John Fenwick. A.D.1697

Mr. Secretary Vernon's Information.

" IF I understand the Counsel for the Bill aright, said Mr. Vernon, that which they did appeal to me for, was about the protracting of Sir John Fenwick's Trial, and upon what Pretence it was. The Account, Sir, that I can give of it is this; That Sir John Fenwick's Trial was put off, will appear best from the frequent Adjournments of the Sessions at the Old-Bailey, for six or seven Weeks together; for when Sir John Fenwick was committed to the Tower, which was, as I take it, on the 19th of June, there was, I believe, a Sessions to be held soon after; for, as I remember it, the first Application that my Lady Mary Fenwick made for the putting off Sir John Fenwick's Trial, was upon the 30th of June, and the Petition was, that he might have some Friends come to him, to advise him how to make his Application to the King. On the 30th of June, or about that time, my Lady Mary Fenwick did first propose, that somebody should be sent over from Sir John Fenwick to the King, upon some Matters of Importance, but did not declare what they were, but only that she was told there were such Matters, and she had a proper Person to send, and would acquaint the Lords-Justices with the Man, if he might have Leave to go. But afterwards my Lady Fenwick said, she could not provide a Person so soon. And, I think, the 2d of July she came and offer'd to go herself, saying, if it was not as much for the King's Service, as Sir John Fenwick's Benefit, she would not undertake the Journey. She had Leave to go, and would have capitulated, that the Trial should be put off till she return'd; but the Lords said, when she would return would depend upon her Pleasure; but they would write to the King at the same time, and give notice of her Intention, and that the Trial should not go on till they had an Answer to their own Letter. There was a Passage order'd her in the Royal Transport Ship, then going to Holland; and my Lady Mary Fenwick desir'd to speak with Sir John in private, in order to her Journey. The same Night she came back again, and said, she had consider'd of it, and would not go; and several Reasons she gave for it. Upon the 7th of July there was a noble Lord that was in the Commission for the Administration of the Government, said, he had an Application made to him from another noble Peer, my Lord Carlisle, who desir'd that he would go to Sir John Fenwick, for he had been very earnest to speak with him. That noble Lord did acquaint the rest of the Lords-Justices with it, who acquiesc'd in what he thought fit to do in the matter.

" He went the same day to Sir John Fenwick, and the next day the Lords-Justices meeting again, he told them he had been with Sir John Fenwick, and that Sir John Fenwick had told him he had sent to the King, for he did not allow it should be otherwise communicated. My Lords then thought it was very fit to stay for the King's Answer. This was the 7th of July, and by what Accident I know not, no manner of Account came till the 7th of August that the Letter was receiv'd; but the 7th of August the Letter was acknowledg'd to be receiv'd, and the Answer that came to it was, that the King had not receiv'd any great Satisfaction by the Message. I know " not

A.D.1697 " not what it was, but that Sir John Fenwick ſhould " be tried; but withall, that noble Lord acquaint- " ed the Lords-Juſtices, that the King was pleas'd " to write to him, that what Sir John Fenwick had " to ſay ſhould be ſent to him in Writing. It hap- " pen'd at that time that the Judges were upon their " Circuits, and there being the King's Directions " to receive what Sir John Fenwick had to ſay in " Writing, that noble Lord did undertake to go again " to Sir John Fenwick, and I ſuppoſe he did receive " ſomething from Sir John Fenwick which he ſent " to the King. When the Anſwer to that came, it " was September, and that noble Lord was at the " Bath, and ſo it requir'd a little time to hear from " him. Then it happen'd, that the King's Direc- " tion was, that what Sir John Fenwick had ſent to " the King, he ſhould prove it, and he ſhould like- " wiſe ſhew his Ingenuity in confeſſing what he " knew of any other Deſigns againſt the Govern- " ment. On the 10th of September, as I take it, " I was directed to go to the Tower, and to ac- " quaint him with the Meſſage from the Lords- " Juſtices. Sir John Fenwick's Anſwer was, that he " had no more to ſay, or Words to that effect, and " he muſt prepare for his Defence as well as he could, " but if he could ſpeak with that noble Lord, he " ſhould be glad to do i ; but he was not come from " the Bath, and Direction was then given for his " Trial again. In the mean time that noble Lord " came to Town, and he went to Sir John Fenwick, " and brought an Account from him, that Sir John " Fenwick would prove to the King, and make out " what he had ſaid, and was ready to give the Lords- " Juſtices Satisfaction. Upon that I was ſent to " Sir John Fenwick, and I carried the Meſſage in " Writing, which you may ſee when you pleaſe, " and it was to ask him, whether he was willing to " make out by Proof what he had already ſaid to " the King, and whether he was ready, in compli- " ance with the King's Directions, to give the " Lords an Account of what he knew of any De- " ſigns againſt the Government. I carry'd Sir John " Fenwick this Meſſage, and he return'd an Anſwer " in Writing, that he was ready to make out to the " King what he had ſaid, and would acquaint the " Lords with all the Matter, that he had not ob- " ſerv'd to the King; and the Trial was put off as " to that time: and before the Anſwer from the " King came, it was, I believe, the Beginning of " October."

The Informations he gave have been talk'd of before, and were a high Aggravation of his Crimes, being a treaſonable, but falſe Charge, againſt his Majeſty's beſt Friends, and moſt faithful and able Servants, with a deſign to create Suſpicions of them, and deprive the Government of the Benefit of their Services. What were the Contents of his Informations, has been hinted already, and will further appear, by the Speeches of ſeveral Members of the Houſe of Commons, in behalf of themſelves or their Friends, immediately after the Evidence againſt Fenwick was heard.

Admiral Ruſſel. I think this may be a proper time to ask Queſtions; if ſo, I think myſelf enough concern'd to trouble you with one or two. I think in the Paper that hath occurr'd, I am mention'd; theſe are the Queſtions I deſire to have ask'd, What Proof he hath of this? Whether ever he ſaw, and what Proof he hath that I ſent Capt. Loyd over? And that I gave him a Liſt of the Ships? And that I ſaid we could not fit out 30 Ships in May? And whether or no, ſince this Revolution, he hath had any Converſation with me?

Coll. Crawford. What that honourable Perſon ſays, calls me up. My Name is mention'd in Sir John Fenwick's Paper. I deſire you would ask him why he mention'd me in his Paper, as he hath done? And that you would require him to make Proof of what he ſays in relation to me. A.D.1697

Coll. Godfrey. I deſire ſome Queſtions may be ask'd him in relation to a noble Lord, my Lord Marlborough; if he be guilty, I would have it known, and I would as willingly have it known, if he be innocent, as I believe it will ſo appear. I would have him ask'd, whether, ſince the Beginning of this War, or from the time of the King's Landing, Sir John Fenwick did ever ſpeak to him in publick or private, or ever did write to him, or receive any Meſſage, by word of Mouth or Letter, from my Lord Marlborough? He ſays, that ſome Service he had promis'd King James, which inclin'd him to promiſe that noble Lord a Pardon, I would know what that Service was? And in relation to his ſending Loyd to France, whether he can by any body elſe make that appear?

Coll. Crawford. That Gentleman hath put me in mind of one ſhort Queſtion; I deſire it may be ask'd him, whether ever he convers'd or ſpake with me in his Life?

Mr. Bridges. Whether Sir John Fenwick hath any body but himſelf to ſupport the Hearſay he hath given an Account of, I deſire a Queſtion may be ask'd him in behalf of the Duke of Shrewsbury, What Proof he has, that the Duke of Shrewsbury came into the Office of Secretary of State again, by the Operation and Conſent of King James?

Mr. Vernon. I deſire a Queſtion may be ask'd previous to that, becauſe 'tis ſo in Time, how he knows that noble Lord was in Treaty with King James, before he went out of the Secretary's Office, when he was firſt there?

Coll. Granville. I deſire he may be ask'd, what Proof he can give that my Lord of Bath was to betray Plymouth into the hands of King James, or the King of France, or whatever elſe my Father is accus'd of in this Paper?

Here Mr. Robert Harley interrupted the Gentlemen who ſpoke in behalf of themſelves or their Friends; and Mr. John How gave the Houſe to underſtand, he look'd on theſe Requeſts as Grimace, giving a broad hint, that he believ'd Fenwick's Information to be true; which doubtleſs was no more in his Thoughts, than ever it was in mine, that he himſelf was ſincere and diſintereſted. It may be poſſible, ſaid he, that Sir John Fenwick may never have ſeen any of the Perſons nam'd in the Paper, and yet all in his Paper be true. Was this Sophiſtry become ing a Senator, and this Partiality a Judge? for ſuch was every Member in the Houſe, as to Fenwick's Guilt. Becauſe it was barely poſſible for ſuch a thing to be, ſhould a wiſe and honeſt Man have urg'd Poſſibility againſt Probability almoſt as certain as Proof? There was ſcarce a Man of common Senſe and common Honeſty in the Kingdom, who had heard of Fenwick's Informations, and did not believe them to be an Artifice, tho' a very ſorry one, to delay Time, and perplex the Government. Sir John Fenwick's Anſwers, when he was examin'd as to the Matters ſhew it; yet the Party were loth to loſe ſo fair an Opportunity to blacken the King's moſt faithful Counſellors; and therefore many Whiſpers went about as to the Validity of the Evidence: nay afterwards, when Sir John Maclean was in the Tower, this wicked, incredible Buſineſs was reviv'd. 'Twas given out, Sir John declar'd the Miniſters at St. Germains and ſome at St. James's were agreed, that King James himſelf was come into the Compounding Scheme; that King William truly was to reign as long as he liv'd, and then his Father-in-law, if he ſurviv'd him, to be his Succeſſor as well as Predeceſſor; if not, his pretended Brother-in law was to ſucceed: That Pardons had been, or were to be interchang'd, and Fenwick's After-Plot was ſaid to be the Baſis on which this extravagant Project was built, to create Jealouſies in the Minds of King William and his People, of his trueſt and greateſt Friends and Servants. It highly con-

A.D.1697 concern'd the Gentlemen accus'd, to clear themſelves of ſo villainous a Scandal; yet what a turn does Mr. John How give to the Care they took to have their Innocence vindicated by themſelves, their Relations and Friends! There is ſomething in that turn of his ſo ſhocking to ingenuous Minds, who conſider, he himſelf believ'd, if he did not know, every Word in Fenwick's Information to be falſe, that the Story ſeems a Diſgrace to Humanity itſelf, ſhewing it to be capable of ſo much Malice and Falſhood.

The next Member who propos'd a Queſtion to be put to Sir John Fenwick, was,

Mr. Boſcawen, who deſir'd he might be ask'd, what Proof he had of what he ſaid in that Paper concerning my Lord Godolphin?

Lord Conings by. I do intend to take care of my Lord Godolphin. There is a hard Reflection upon that noble Perſon. But, under favour, I think you muſt let Sir John Fenwick know you have ſuch a Paper, and then ask him in general, what Proof he hath to the Particulars of that Paper? and then you will do Injuſtice to no-body.

Sir Ralph Delaval. I find I am nam'd in this Paper that Sir John Fenwick hath given. I deſire that part that relates to me may be read to him, and that he may give a Reaſon why he hath ſaid ſo of me and Mr. Killegrew?

Lord Walden. There is another mention'd, and that is Commiſſary Crawford. I deſire he may be ask'd, what Proof he hath that he gave Mr. —— a Liſt of the Army?

Theſe were all the Members who deſir'd Queſtions might be put to him, in behalf of themſelves or their Friends.

Lord Cutts ſaid upon this head, I think there is no one Perſon that he hath nam'd, but is eminently known, or believ'd, to be in the Intereſt of the Government; and none but what are in ſome Place of Truſt and Employment; then I think it highly neceſſary to know, how it comes to paſs that he hath had ſo much Converſation with Perſons of that Character, and none with thoſe People that he hath been ſeen daily to converſe with; and if he hath, why he hath not diſcover'd them, as he has done the reſt?

Mr. Harley ſtickles for Fenwick, notwithſtanding his falſe Accuſations.

Notwithſtanding the monſtrous Abſurdity, as well as Malice, in Fenwick's Informations, Mr. Harley and Mr. Manley continued to ſtickle for him; but Sir John was order'd to be call'd in, and examin'd to his Paper. Mr. Montague, Chancellor of the Exchequer, clos'd his Speech concerning it with theſe remarkable Expreſſions; I take theſe Matters to be falſe, but I ſhall have ſome Queſtions to ask him, to what I believe will prove true: intimating doubtleſs, what was intimated in the beginning of Fenwick's Caſe, that Mr. John How, and others of his Party, knew more of Fenwick's Information-Plot than they durſt own.

Mr. How and others know more of them than they durſt own.

When Sir John Fenwick was come into the Houſe, the Speaker, Paul Foley Eſq; ask'd him in the firſt place, what he knew of my Lord Godolphin; he alſo recommended to him to deal candidly with them in that Matter. To which he anſwer'd;

Sir John Fenwick. I am under a double Proſecution, Sir, for my Life; I know not but what I ſay may turn to my Prejudice. I hope the Houſe will not think it Obſtinacy in me. And ſince this Houſe have done me the Honour to hear me by my Counſel, I hope they will pleaſe to conſider what they have ſaid.

What a wretched Evaſion was this? Could his ſaying what he knew of my Lord Godolphin affect him, as to his conſpiring a French Invaſion? The Speaker preſs'd him again to deal candidly, and he had recourſe again to Evaſion.

Sir John Fenwick. Sir, I am under Proſecution for my Life, and I hope the Houſe will pleaſe to conſider, that I know not what Inconvenience may come upon me by it; and I hope the Houſe will excuſe me, for I do it not out of Obſtinacy, but for my own Preſervation.

The Speaker continued to preſs him to deſerve the Favour of the Houſe by ingenuous Anſwers to the ſeveral Queſtions he ſhould put to him. The truth is, he knew nothing at all of the pretended Correſpondence between the noble Perſons mention'd in his Informations and King James. He was not obſtinate, as he ſays, but he was falſe, and would have been perjur'd had he ſworn to his Paper. Had he known any thing againſt them, he would have told it faſt enough, for it could have done him no harm; on the contrary, the Merit of ſo important a Diſcovery would have been ſerviceable to him, and have procur'd him the Favour of the Houſe. Being preſs'd a third time, he ſaid; A.D.1697

Sir John Fenwick. I hope the Houſe will not put me upon any thing that may hurt myſelf. I ſhould be ſorry to incur the Diſpleaſure of this Houſe; but I hope they will conſider my Condition. And I am ſure the Juſtice and Honour of this Houſe is ſuch, that they will not preſs any Man to do any thing that may hurt himſelf.

Upon this he was order'd to withdraw, and the Bill was read a ſecond time, which occaſion'd a long Debate, Fenwick's Friends ſtill inſiſting on the Uſages of inferior Courts, the Abſurdity of which is extremely provoking; that Matter having been ſufficiently diſcuſs'd and determin'd in the preceeding Debates and Votes, and the Reader will obſerve in the Sequel, the Argument was given up by thoſe who were moſt in Sir John Fenwick's Intereſt. Sir Thomas Powis was not contented with what he had ſaid, at the beginning of the Trial, to the Authority of the Parliament in Attainders, he explains himſelf farther at the cloſe of it; I do not ſpeak, ſays he, in Oppoſition to the Power of Parliaments, for I know very well that our Lives and Eſtates, and all that we have, are ſubject to Acts of Parliament. And again, I do agree that there are Caſes, where Perſons have been attainted, without being admitted to be tried; and then he goes on to inſtance them, as the Gentlemen for the Bill did very often. And Sir Bartholomew Shower added, No queſtion but in all Governments there is ſome Supreme Power; and by our Conſtitution 'tis lodg'd in King, Lords, and Commons. So that the Matter turns on Sir John Fenwick's Guilt; and neither his Friends, nor his Counſel, pretended he was not Guilty.

Fenwick's Counſel in a manner give up his Cauſe.

I ſhall proceed now to take notice of the Debate previous to the Commitment of the Bill. Some of Fenwick's Friends durſt not avowedly defend him, without complementing the Court; others ſeem'd to defy the Government, and make it appear they pleaded for Fenwick rather out of Spite to the Court than Concern for him.

Sir Thomas Dyke ſaid, The Pretence of the Bill being for the Preſervation of the King and Government, if I thought it was really ſo, I ſhould be heartily for it. Sir Thomas would not ſtand to call in queſtion the Power of Parliaments, if he imagin'd there was any Danger in an Invaſion of 8000 French Foot, 2000 French Horſe and Dragoons, and 2000 Engliſh Papiſts and Jacobites, well mounted and arm'd, to be headed by Sir John Fenwick: let any one judge then, whether the Preſervation of the King's Perſon was not to be conſider'd in the Puniſhment of ſuch a Traitor. Mr. Newport went upon the old Topick, the Forms of Weſtminſter-Hall, and the Tenderneſs Parliaments ſhould have for the Lives of thoſe, who had no Tenderneſs for their Religion, Laws, Liberties, Properties, and Lives; which would have all been at the Mercy of French, Iriſh, and other Papiſts, had Fenwick's Plot ſucceeded. I ſpeak not this, ſaid Mr. Newport, on account of Sir John Fenwick; I know him not, he is a Stranger to me, tho' I am not to his Character, and that I hear is none of the beſt. Sir Thomas Dyke.

As for thoſe who urg'd in this Caſe the want of Precedents, I refer them to what Mr. Simon Harcourt ſaid with the ſame Air my Lord Cutts ſpoke

A.D.1697 of; There have been many Precedents, and many have been mention'd, and if I thought it worth while I could mention as many more you have not heard of. Thus the Affair of Precedents was given up by him, and after he had harangu'd ſome time on the Practice of the Common Law, my Lord Cutts took him up again thus; Since I think you are here upon a quite different foot, I ſhall not follow him, becauſe I would not unneceſſarily detain you. To which I ſhall add, what his Lordſhip ſaid to thoſe, who would have extenuated the Crime, and conſequently cenſur'd this extraordinary Method of puniſhing it. The Conſpiracy of which Sir John Fenwick to me appears guilty, is not only againſt the Life of the King, not only to depoſe the King, not only a Conſpiracy to raiſe a Rebellion; but at the ſame time to contrive an Invaſion from France, and bring in a Foreign Power. I know not what better Expreſſion to tell my Thoughts in, than by uſing a Term which Phyſicians uſe in ſome deſperate Caſes; they tell you there is a Complication of Diſtempers, and I think this is a Complication of Treaſons. Again, I will be bold to ſay, I do verily believe there is not one Gentleman within theſe Walls, nor that walks the Streets, not a living Soul that doubts of his Crime. Yet tho' the Power of Parliaments to puniſh is acknowledg'd; tho' there are ſo many Precedents, tho' the Preſervation of the King and Kingdom was concern'd, the Party will not have Sir John Fenwick ſuffer, either becauſe he had ſo faithfully follow'd Inſtructions in his After-Plot, or becauſe they would not balk the Spirit of the Conſpirators upon another Occaſion. Mr. John How ſaid, Sir, as to what you have been told, if it were known how we give our Opinions who are againſt this Bill, the People would not chuſe us again, I am not afraid of that; I have heard this often, and yet I find the People I live amongſt, uſe me better and better every Day, and I believe, Sir, they will deſire to uſe me, when they will lay other Men aſide. The Modeſty and Pertinence of which are equally remarkable. Sir Edward Seymour having, as has been hinted, ſhewn his Claſſical Learning in a former Debate, ſhew'd in this his Bible Learning; and having intimated the want of Evidence to prove the Fact upon Goodman's running away, he added, Suſannah had been in a bad Condition if one Witneſs and Circumſtantial Evidence would have made her Guilty. Mr. Brotherton, another of Fenwick's Advocates, would not have had the Bill paſs, becauſe he had found out another way to try Fenwick with one Witneſs only; and that was by our old obſolete Statute for a Trial by Combat; that Sir John Fenwick and Capt. George Porter ſhould fight it out before the Earl Marſhal, and ſo the Tragedy be turn'd into a Farce. This worthy Member was ſo often interrupted by the Noiſe, that was made on account of the Novelty of the Argument, that he cou'd not proceed, and was forc'd to drop it.

Lord Cutts.

Mr. John How's vain Speech.

Mr. Brotherton, for a Trial by Combat.

Mr. Robert Harley, who ſpoke after Mr. Brotherton, ſaid, It is admitted that there have been Bills of Attainder paſs'd formerly, and your Authority is not under Diſpute, for the Legiſlature in all Nations have a Power lodg'd in them for the Safety of the whole: he added, Every Gentleman ought to have a Zeal for the Government, and I wiſh it was as viſible in every thing elſe. Why, nothing elſe was then in queſtion, and this fling at the Men in Place, was probably the Effect of his Ill-humour that he was not one of them. He went on, The Bill comes before you with a villainous ſcandalous Aſperſion on ſome great Men, tho' I know them not all, yet I have a great Value for them, and I would make the Caſe my own. He then inſinuated that he would oppoſe Fenwick's Bill, were it only for the ſake of thoſe Lords and Gentlemen he had accus'd; but then his Oppoſition was for fear ſuch a Precedent ſhould in time be turn'd againſt thoſe for whom he had ſo great a Value: Sir, ſaid he, I will not run into Precedents, but only becauſe it hath been told you, that the Precedents were made in one Reign by one Faction, and that the Attainders were revers'd in another Reign by another Faction. Here is one occurs to my Mind which hath not been touch'd, and is at leaſt of particular Inſtruction to me.

Mr. Robert Harley.

A.D.1697

There was a Caſe in Edward III's Time, a King had been depos'd, and barbarouſly murder'd. This ſure, cou'd not be intended for a Reflection on King William becauſe King James was depos'd, ſince the abdicated King was then alive, and as luſty as when the Pretender was begotten. There was no diſputed Title, but his Son was upon the Throne. Here the Caſe differs again, there was a Faction, as Mr. Harley knew very well, that did diſpute his Majeſty's Title, The notoriety of the Fact, continues he, and its heinouſneſs ſtirr'd up many Heats, which brought in an Attainder, and particularly of a very great Peer; but four Years after a Bill was brought in againſt the Earl of March, and one of the Articles againſt him was, that he had procur'd the Attainder of that Noble Lord, under pretence of ſome Letter or Paper that was ſign'd by him, which if it was ſo, ſays the Record, was an Evidence. Innuendo, Therefore you who are accus'd by Sir John Fenwick in the Letter or Paper ſign'd by him, have a care how you paſs this Attainder Bill, for as much as this Gentleman values you, he is afraid you may be ſerv'd the ſame ſauce, or elſe he wou'd not give the Bill ſo much Oppoſition. This I take to be the meaning of his myſterious Harangue, which he concluded thus; and I ment on it the rather, becauſe it ſhews that the Orator was then in a very good Humour with the Army; You muſt provide for the Government, and Armies muſt do it, when Courts are ſhut and Laws are ſilent; but 'tis hard to pervert the Methods of common Juſtice without any Neceſſity: I hope Gentlemen will not put a hard Conſtruction upon what I have ſaid, I have done it to diſcharge a good Conſcience. Cou'd any one there doubt of the Sincerity of the Man that ſaid it? The Debate laſted till 11 a-Clock at Night, Nov. 17th, and the Queſtion being then put, the Houſe divided, Yeas 182, No's 128. When the Committee of the whole Houſe took the Bill into Conſideration, theſe Words were added to it, Of which Treaſon the ſaid Sir John Fenwick is guilty, which Clauſe being not debated, on the 25th of Nov. the Bill was read the third time, and ſeveral Gentlemen ſpoke for and againſt its paſſing. Tho' Mr. Methuen, Father of that worthy Patriot Sir Paul Methuen, was for the Bill, he ſaid however, If Goodman had died, and there had been no other Reaſon for attainting Sir John Fenwick, but want of Evidence, I ſhould not have thought it ſufficient. But the Arts that were us'd to delay the Trial, to get Goodman and Porter out of the way, the Heinouſneſs of the Crime, the Aggravation of it by a villainous Information againſt his Majeſty's beſt Friends and Servants, and conſequently the neceſſity of puniſhing it, deliver'd the Criminal up to the Juſtice of the Legiſlature; which contains the Subſtance of the Argument for trying him in that manner. Sir Bartholomew Shower own'd there might be Reaſon to paſs an Act to make the Information Goodman had given and ſworn to, before he made his eſcape, valid in Fenwick's Caſe. Now if there was Reaſon to paſs ſuch an Act, it muſt ariſe from the neceſſity of puniſhing Fenwick for the Preſervation of the Government, and ſuch neceſſity warranted every Member of the Houſe of Commons, who believ'd him guilty, to give his Vote for the Bill; he acting in a Legiſlative Capacity, and not being ty'd up to the Rules of a Juryman. Some Gentlemen having objected to it, as fearing Fenwick's Caſe might be made a Precedent, Mr. Methuen juſt mention'd, made an admirable Speech in anſwer to it; Part of which was;

Mr. Robert Harley's groundleſs Parallel.

If

A.D.1697

Mr. Methuen's Speech.

If this Precedent will appear to Poſterity, upon the truth of the thing to be a Precedent, made of a Man notoriouſly guilty, of a Man that had deſerv'd this extraordinary way of Proceeding, and the general Reſentment of the Nation, and that nothing cou'd have hinder'd this Man from the Common Juſtice of the Nation, but his having endeavour'd to avoid it in this manner, and that it appears that you would not be put off ſo, but that your Indignation made an Example of this Man; I ſhall not be ſorry it ſhou'd appear to Poſterity: but I believe Poſterity will, as I think they ought, thank you for it. And as far as we are got into that Poſterity, almoſt 40 Years after, we do find that all good Engliſhmen do thank them for it, and have an Abhorrence for the Oppoſition they met with. Sir Godfrey Copley ſaid, he own'd he was one of thoſe that look'd upon Sir John Fenwick as guilty; but he cou'd not be for attainting him, becauſe there was no more but one Witneſs Viva Voce. This had been ſo fully and ſo often anſwer'd, that it is as trifling in Hiſtory, as it was in Argument to repeat it. Mr. Foley the Speaker's Son having enlarg'd on the ſame thing, the want of Evidence, ſaid, However I do believe in my own private Opinion as much as any body, that Sir John Fenwick is guilty; yet I am not for bringing his Blood on me, or my Poſterity, nor can I give my conſent to a Precedent for him to be hanged on ſuch Evidence.

Mr. Foley, jun.

Lord Cutts.

My Lord Cutts came to the Point, and one has Reaſon to believe, the only one which the Party that oppos'd the Bill had at heart. I don't doubt, ſaid his Lordſhip, but this Gentleman knows a great deal that he hath not laid before you. I would not be thought to preſs it as an Argument, that he ſhould be condemn'd becauſe he won't confeſs; but I will be bold to ſay, if he does know of a great many Perſons that have been concern'd in this Buſineſs; if he knows of a Riſing that was deſign'd when this Conſpiracy was to be executed, and it may be executed ſtill if Things be ripe for it; I ſay, though you keep him in hold, it will be an Encouragement to them to go on in their Cabals in buying Arms, &c. I think the Matter before you is no leſs than the Fate of England, and the Fate of Europe, and of all your Poſterity: I am ſure it is, and give me leave to ſay to you one thing that is Matter of Fact, there are thoſe Stories inſinuated abroad, and thoſe Matters of Fact aſſerted, with relation to a Conſpiracy, and reviling this Houſe, that are not fit for me to repeat, and your Enemies laſt Year, before the breaking out of this Conſpiracy, had the ſame ſort of Meetings, and the ſame Sort of Diſcourſe as they have now. What can give one a clearer Idea of the Deſign of thoſe who oppos'd the Bill? Why was it they acted ſo openly in favour of a Party, Enemies to the Government? What made them ſo inſenſible of the Nation's Danger, and ſo concern'd to ſave the Man, who had been ſo inſtrumental in bringing it into it?

Sir Charles Carteret fears it was a Sham-Plot.

Mr. Manley's rare Speech.

We ſhall find them in the ſame Diſpoſition all King William's Reign, and how ſome of them behav'd in the three laſt Years of Queen Anne, is too freſh and too ſtrong in our Memories to be forgotten. Sir Charles Carteret had a Scruple upon him, which did not enter into the Heads of many of Fenwick's Advocates; and that was, that becauſe Young had contriv'd a Sham-Plot againſt the Biſhop of Rocheſter, therefore the Aſſaſſination and Invaſion Plots might be a Sham too. It may be true, ſays he, that there was ſuch a Meeting, as Sir John Fenwick is accus'd of being at, and yet Sir John Fenwick might not be there. It has been happy for England, that the Deſigns againſt her Conſtitution ever ſince Queen Elizabeth's Death, have been carry'd on by Perſons with the ſame ſort of Heads upon their Shoulders. Mr. Manley was not contented to ſay, the Proceeding againſt Sir John Fenwick was contrary to the Forms of Common Law, but was alſo contrary to the fundamental Rules of Reaſon and Juſtice. The Nonſenſe of which is equal to the Aſſurance. Was it unjuſt and unreaſonable that a Traytor to his lawful King and Country, ſhould be brought to condign Puniſhment? Mr. Dolben was of the ſame Opinion, cloſing his long Speech about Precedents, Statutes and the like, with theſe Expreſſions; So that in a word becauſe the Bill of Attainder flies in the face of Statute Law, Common Law and Common Juſtice, therefore I am againſt it. It is worth obſerving, that Gentlemen in theſe Speeches, ſeem not to take notice of what others had ſaid before them, but have ſet Diſcourſes ready to anſwer their Purpoſe, as far as lay in their way of thinking, without Regard to what they had heard from others. Had not enough been ſaid of Statute Law, Common Law and Common Juſtice? Sir Edward Seymour did not only with great Scholarſhip, quote Latin, De non Apparentibus & non Exiſtentibus eadem eſt Ratio. But notwithſtanding Porter had ſworn that Sir John Fenwick had been at ſeveral treaſonable Meetings, yet the good Knight ſaid, Inſtead of two Witneſſes, you have no Witneſs at all; and his Reaſon is, that Porter having been himſelf in the Conſpiracy, cou'd not be a legal Witneſs. And if what he ſaid had been right, no Traytor could ever be puniſh'd; for who can be legal Evidence of Treaſon, but a Perſon engag'd in it? This Pretence had been made uſe of almoſt as often as any Criminal was brought to Trial, and an Accomplice, which is almoſt always the Caſe, witneſs'd againſt him. This learned Knight having quoted ſome Scriptural Texts out of Numbers and Deuteronomy; and compar'd thoſe that voted according to their Conſciences for the Bill, to Ravillac who murder'd Henry IV. of France, and Felton who ſtabb'd the Duke of Buckingham, proceeds:

A.D.1697

Sir Edward Seymour's Speech in Latin.

And quotes vile Hiſtory.

Speaks againſt the Lords.

Mr. Vernon's Speech.

You have been told it is expected from you by your Country, that you ſhould exert this Authority and Power; Sir, I would have been glad that in Caſes more reaſonable, we had exerted the Authority and Power of Parliaments. I wiſh it had gone to the preventing the debaſing and abuſing of your Coin; I wiſh it would be exerted, that we might not ſee ourſelves cheated, under Countenance of an Act of Parliament; but contrary to that, you are fond of being ſprinkled with the Blood of Sir John Fenwick. As long as the Government is not in danger, I believe the Country would be glad that their Blood might run ſecure in their Veins, and not be tapp'd upon every Occaſion to ſerve a turn. This is what they call the Flowers of Rhetorick in popular Aſſemblies, and are acquir'd better without Learning than with it. What Turn but that of the Publick Safety could be ſerv'd by tapping Sir John Fenwick? Was he the Envy or the Terror of the Miniſters? We ſee, continues the Weſt-Saxon Knight, how unbounded the Liberty the Lords take, is; They would become Maſters of all our Eſtates, and I would be very loth for my Eſtate to depend on the feeble Tenure of a Lord's Conſcience. He ſpares neither the Government, nor the Houſe of Lords; like Drawcanſir, he lays about him on all ſides, but that which he was engag'd in, for he ſays very little to the purpoſe. What had the Coin, what the feeble Tenure of a Lord's Conſcience to do with the Bill of Attainder in the Houſe of Commons? What Mr. Vernon ſaid upon it, carries with it ſuch a face of Truth and Reaſon, that it will give Satisfaction to every impartial unprejudic'd Mind. I don't find the Queſtion is, whether Sir John Fenwick is guilty, but whether there be any Evidence of his Guilt; and I ſhall tell you in ſhort my Opinion of that; I take the Proof of the Fact to be in general, ſuch a Demonſtration as the nature of the thing is capable of, and that is ſufficient to convince a reaſonable, honeſt, unprejudic'd Man of the Truth of what is aſſerted, when there is no manner of doubt left whether it is ſo or no, nor the appearance of any poſſibility

A.D.1697 possibility that it could be otherwise. I think there hath been that Proof in this Case, and therefore, in short, my Sense of it is, That whereas some Gentlemen think him guilty, but the Matter not prov'd, I think him guilty because it is prov'd, and there hath been no offer made to disprove it. Mr. Bromley said, I shall say nothing of the Power of Parliaments, which I have learn'd from my Lord Coke is so transcendent and absolute, as it can't be confin'd in any Bounds. And he wou'd have taken off Gentlemen from Voting for the Bill, by representing to them, that it was not brought in on account of the Danger the Government was in, but for the Vindication of some one honourable Person's Reputation; which was Reason enough with the Party to save Fenwick, on purpose to leave such a stain on that honourable Person's Character. As to the Danger of the Government, which was set forth so admirably well by my Lord Cutts, Mr. Harcourt declar'd, If any body could convince him there was such Danger, he promis'd him, if it was worth his time so to do, he would be his Proselyte and vote for the Bill. Pray mind here, I address to those well-ballanc'd Spirits, that accuse me of Partiality;

Mr. Simon Harcourt.

Mr. Harcourt notwithstanding the great Pains he had taken to prove the Novelty and Illegality of this manner of Proceeding, notwithstanding all that had been said, of its being contrary to the Forms in Westminster-hall, to Statute Law, to Common Law, to Common Justice, and Reason, and without Precedent: yet he at once knock'd it all on the Head out of his superabundant Loyalty to King William. For if any body could convince him of the Government's being in danger by a French Invasion, he protests he would be his Proselyte, and give his Vote for hanging Sir John Fenwick. Sir Richard Temple, tho' he voted against the Bill, yet had an Expression which show'd he was better dispos'd to the Government than most of those who voted with him, for he gave the due Term to the Abdication; You have depos'd King James for breaking in upon the Law.

Mr. Cowper.

I cannot help repeating, what that great Orator and Lawyer, Mr. Cowper said, with reference to the necessity of punishing Fenwick as a Traytor. Some Gentlemen have set a great Weight upon this Argument; say they, Sir John Fenwick is not a Man so considerable to endanger the Government. I admit it: They that have spoken for the Bill, have not, as I observe, made use of the contrary Argument; but as to that, this is what I lay my Finger upon in particular, 'tis plain he was to be General, and must know a great many Officers under him; and therefore I am satisfy'd he hath not made the Atonement to his injur'd Country that was in his power, and that he ought to have done; and I am satisfy'd that unless this Bill proceed against him with the greatest steadiness, you will have none of that Discovery. Here several Members made a Noise, and interrupted him, as not being able to hear any thing which press'd so hard on the Man they had been pleading for. The other parts of the Argument had been sufficiently canvass'd. It had been prov'd by twenty Members on the side of the Bill, that the Parliament had Authority to proceed against Fenwick by Attainder: It had been confess'd by their Opponents, the Evidence of his Guilt had been set forth so satisfactorily to the whole House, and indeed the whole Nation; that, as the Lord Cutts said, there was not a living Soul, who did not believe him guilty. The Danger of saving him had been exaggerated, and there remain'd only to shew that as mean a Man as some might look on him, with respect to the Assembly, who had taken on them to judge his Case, it was not unworthy of them; nor had his Behaviour been such as to deserve any Favour from them; but this was likely to affect Gentlemen: and since the Party cou'd not answer Mr. Cowper, they had recourse to Noise, which is the last Refuge where Argument is wanting.

Mr. Cowper, continu'd his Discourse thus, Don't let Gentlemen pervert this Argument, and say, will you hang a Man if he don't confess? No, but when I have heard such Proof that he is guilty of the worst of Treasons, and that he has aggravated his Crime in the manner he has done; I think he deserves to die, unless he will merit his Life by a useful Discovery of what he cannot but know. And I think it of the highest Importance to you that can be, that you should come to the further Knowledge of the other Branch of the Conspiracy, the meeting and joining with the French King's Forces in England. I think you are now in a proper Method to attain that Knowledge, and perhaps you may have a better Issue of this Bill than this Gentleman's Death; but if not, he will but pay that Debt which he manifestly owes to the Justice of his Country. Mr. Jeffery Jefferies, the Tobacco-Merchant, hop'd the Lords would take more care of the Matter than the Commons. Mr. Edward Harley thought the Bill to be against the Liberty of the Subject; and so he cou'd not vote for it: but his Sentiments had no Effect on those of the House. For the Question for the Bill's passing being put, it was carry'd in Affirmative. Yeas 189, Noes 156. The Commons pass the Bill.

A.D.1697

The Bill was debated as warmly in the House of Lords, as it had been in the House of Commons. Before the second Reading, Sir John Fenwick was brought to the Bar of that House, and ask'd what he had to say. He desir'd three Things:

1. That according to what had been first propos'd by the Lords, what he should say in that Court, might not be made use of against him in any Inferior Court, and also that he might have Assurance of it from the King.

2. That he might have a Pardon before he confess'd.

3. That he might not be made use of as an Evidence after it.

His Majesty having receiv'd an Address from the Lords for the first, was graciously pleas'd to grant it; the second was thought very extravagant, after he had dealt so disingenuously already, but was so far comply'd with, that he was told if he made such a Confession as would be satisfactory to that House, they would therein also interceed with the King; and they bid him be assur'd that they did not then doubt of the King's Favour, both as to the Pardon, and his not being made an Evidence. All his Pretences were trivial, he continu'd to dally with the Legislature, being fed with Hopes to the very last by the Party, that the Lords would not pass the Bill, in which however he found himself miserably mistaken; for tho' even the Duke of Devonshire, and several of the King's faithful Servants and Counsellors gave their Vote against it, 'twas in the House of Peers carry'd in the Affirmative. Yeas 68, Noes 61. The Lords pass it.

His Majesty's Clemency, of which he had render'd himself so unworthy, was the only thing he had now to have recourse to, and great Application was made to obtain it; but the Advice of his Majesty's best Friends was more successful. And on the 11th of January, his Majesty gave the Royal Assent to An Act to attaint Sir John Fenwick Baronet of High-Treason. A few Days before his Execution, his Wife carry'd a Petition to be presented to the House of Lords, for respite of it for eight Days, to which was annexed a Narrative, signifying, as he said in the Paper he deliver'd to the Sheriffs, that he had discover'd formerly a Conspiracy against the King's Life; but as he was not known to be the Discoverer, as it would have been a very easy way to save his Life, by assuming the Merit of another conceal'd Person, as he had been so far from repenting of his Acquaintance with that Treason, as to run into another, he had no reason to expect that his Crime with such detestable Aggravations should be forgiven. It was further alledg'd in the Petition, that he wanted the Assistance of a Divine. This

Plea

A.D.1697 Plea was a very plauſible one, and the Government offer'd him his Choice of all the Clergy in England that had taken the Oaths; and if that would not pleaſe him, that he ſhou'd make his Choice of all the Biſhops who had diſſented about the Bill of Attainder; all whom he would not admit. Then three or four Nonjuring Clergymen were offer'd him, but truly they had not Charity enough to do him the laſt Office; they would not come, pretending 'twas out of fear that the Oaths would be tender'd them. At laſt an Offer was made him of Dr. White the Nonjuring Biſhop of Peterborough; who it ſeems lov'd to be ſafe as well as the Inferior Nonſwearing Parſons; wherein they all ſhew'd a ſtrange Neglect of Sir John Fenwick in his laſt Moments, for they might well have imagin'd that the Government, which had ſo graciouſly given them Permiſſion to attend him, wou'd not have taken any advantage of their Attendance againſt them. From whence we may reaſonably conclude, that there was ſomething elſe deſign'd by the Petition for a reſpite of Fenwick's Execution; and it was ſaid afterwards, that the Intention was to have the Execution by that means put off to the 30th of January, for the eight Days reſpite wou'd have expir'd that very Day; and I muſt needs ſay, I am ſorry he was not humour'd in it.

Sir John Fenwick wou'd have dy'd the 30*th of* January.

Lady Mary Fenwick, finding all Application to the Lords in vain, apply'd to the King to emplore his Majeſty's Grace for her Husband; ſeveral Lords, Relations of the Noble Family of Carliſle, of which Lady Mary was, join'd with her in it, as far as it conſiſted with his Majeſty's ſafety and the welfare of his Government. The King looking on her as ſhe kneel'd before him, with Eyes of Compaſſion, and ſeeming to be ſo far affected with ſo moving a Figure, as to incline to Clemency; one of the Lords near his Majeſty's Perſon ſaid, Sir, this Lady is to be pity'd, but if the Conſpiracy had ſucceeded, England would have been to be pity'd much more; ſhe would not only have ſhed Tears like this afflicted Woman, but a Deluge of Blood would have flow'd from her, by the Maſſacre of the beſt Engliſhmen. And the good reaſoning of this Lord for making one of the chief Conſpirators an Example, gave a check to thoſe ſoft Emotions, which the ſight of a diſconſolate Lady in Tears, had rais'd in his Majeſty's great Mind, and perſuaded him to acquieſce in the Juſtice of the Nation; ſo Sir John Fenwick was beheaded on Tower-hill, January 28th. The Paper he deliver'd to the Sheriffs, containing nothing more remarkable than what we have given hints of already, I ſhall not inſert it at length. "He ſaid, he went not to the "Meeting in Leadenhall-ſtreet, with an Intention "to invite over King James; that he had not en"gag'd for any Number of Men, nor was provi"ded with Horſe and Arms; that he receiv'd "the Knowledge of the Things contain'd in his "Informations, by Letters and Meſſages from "France; that the Guilt of his innocent Blood is "brought on the Nation by his Death, and that "he was a Member of the Church of England." Which Evaſions and Prevarications ſhew'd that he neither practis'd, nor indeed knew the ſound Doctrines of that Proteſtant Church.

A Court-Lord's Advice to the King againſt Clemency to him.

His laſt Words.

I have been longer upon Sir John Fenwick's Buſineſs than upon any other, not only becauſe I had the Aſſiſtance of ſome Manuſcript Memoirs, as will eaſily be perceiv'd; but becauſe it ſhews the Spirit of the Party, Enemies to the Revolution almoſt forty Years ago; and will appear to be the ſame that has mov'd all the Springs and Wheels of that treaſonable Machine, Faction, ever ſince, tho' under different Pretences and Denominations.

The Houſe of Commons having now nothing to interrupt them, made Proviſion for the laſt Year's deficient Funds, being 84000 l. and purſuant to his Majeſty's Meſſage by Mr. Secretary Trumbal, granted a Supply of 515000 l. for the Civil Liſt. To raiſe which Sums, a Duty of 15 per Cent. was laid upon Leather, and a Duty upon Cyder, Perry, Mum, &c. A Duty upon all Hawkers and Pedlars, for Payment of Intereſt of the Iriſh Tranſport Debt. On the 6th of February, his Majeſty was pleas'd to conſtitute the Lord Viſcount Galway one of the Lords Juſtices of Ireland, and John Methuen Eſq; Lord-Chancellor of that Kingdom; about the ſame time the Earl of Portland was made Knight of the Garter; Sir Cloudeſly Shovel, Colonel of a Regiment of Marines, lately commanded by the Lord Berkley deceas'd; Edward Manſel of Carmarthenſhire Eſq; was created a Baronet; and the next day, March 18th, Dr. Richard Blackmore had the Honour of Knighthood conferr'd on him. The Houſe of Commons taking offence at an Advertiſement in a News-Paper, which touch'd a little on the Credit of the Exchequer Notes, and having order'd the Printer to be taken into Cuſtody; a Bill was preſented by Mr. Pulteney, to prevent the Writing, Printing or Publiſhing any News without Licence. This Act in the heat of their Reſentment was read the firſt time, but thrown out before a ſecond Reading; for the Miſchiefs occaſion'd by the Licentiouſneſs of the Preſs, cou'd not be remedied without making way for greater, by putting the Reſtraint upon it into the power of a hireling Licenſer, who wou'd ſurely be the Creature of thoſe that paid him. A further Impoſition being laid upon Coals for finiſhing and adorning St. Paul's Church; 'tis remembred by Biſhop Kennet, as an Honour the Houſe of Commons did themſelves; and I think they deſerve as much complementing for putting an end to that intolerable Inſult on the Juſtice of the Nation, in ſetting up Places of Shelter, for Fraudulent Bankrupts and Thieves, under pretence of being Debtors, ſuch as the Savoy, White-Fryers, &c. which Places were crouded with that ſort of Men, inſomuch that Houſes in thoſe filthy Corners, bore as good Rents as in ſome of the beſt Streets in the City. This Grievance the Parliament endeavour'd to redreſs, by an Act for preventing Abuſes in Priſons and pretended Privileg'd Places; as they did that of Stock-jobbing, as far as could be done by an Act, to reſtrain the Numbers and ill Practices of Brokers and Stock-jobbers.

Honours and Preferments.

Mr. Pulteney's Bill for licenſing the Preſs rejected.

Privileg'd Places put down.

A Bill being depending to reſtrain the wearing of all wrought Silks and Bengalls, imported from Perſia and the Eaſt-Indies, and all Callicoes printed or ſtain'd there; the Workmen of Spittlefields and Parts adjacent flock'd down to Weſtminſter in a tumultuous manner to preſs the paſſing it: which the Houſe of Commons voted to be a High Crime and Miſdemeanor, and order'd the Sheriffs and Juſtices of London and Middleſex, to ſuppreſs the ſaid Tumult; which the Maſter Weavers declar'd their deteſtation of, in a very Loyal Addreſs to his Majeſty, wherein they very heartily aſſur'd his Majeſty of their Fidelity and Affection, and their Readineſs to ſacrifice their Lives in Defence of his Royal Perſon and Government.

Weaver's Addreſs.

On the 16th of April, his Majeſty having given the Royal Aſſent to the Money-Bills, and ſeveral Publick and Private Acts; made the following Speech to the two Houſes.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

HAving given my Aſſent to the ſeveral Bills you have preſented to me, I am now to return my hearty Thanks for what you have done this Seſſions, which has been carry'd on with great Prudence, Temper and Affection.

At the opening of the Seſſion, I told you how ſenſible I was of the Difficulties to be ſtruggl'd with, which were of ſuch a nature, that I will freely own the Hopes I had of our being able to overcome them,

A.D.1697 were founded only upon the Wiſ dom and Zeal of ſo good a Parliament.

My Expectation has been fully anſwer'd, you have enter'd upon the Buſineſs with ſo much Chearfulneſs, proceeded ſo unanimouſly, and have at laſt brought Things to ſuch a Concluſion, that we may carry on the War with Succeſs, in caſe our Enemies do not think it their Intereſt to agree to an honourable Peace. And ſo effectual a Proviſion being made for the ſupplying the Deficiencies of former Funds, which is the beſt Foundation for re-eſtabliſhing of Credit, I doubt not but in a ſhort time it will have a very happy Effect, to the univerſal Eaſe and Satisfaction of my People. The Circumſtances of Affairs making it neceſſary for me to be out of the Kingdom for ſome time, I ſhall take care to leave the Adminiſtration of the Government, during my Abſence, in the hands of ſuch Perſons as I can depend upon.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I have nothing more to ask of you, but that you would carry down the ſame good Diſpoſition into your ſeveral Countries, which you have expreſt in all the Proceedings of this Parliament.

His Majeſty thought it not fit to touch upon any other Proceedings than what related to the main Affair, the Supplies and making good of Funds; for ſurely in that of Fenwick the good Diſpoſition of a great Number of them, was the ſame indeed which they carry'd down into their Countries, and brought back again to Parliament, to the great Diſquiet of himſelf and his Miniſters. The Parliament being prorogu'd till the 10th of May, the King prepar'd for his Departure for Holland; before which, he was pleas'd to appoint Sir Thomas Mompeſſon, Sir Charles Cotterel jun. and James Tyrrell Eſq; Commiſſioners for executing the Office of the Lord Privy-Seal, during the Abſence of the Earl of Pembroke, one of his Plenipotentiaries for the Treaty of Peace, between the Confederates and France, which was carrying on at Ryſwick, a Palace of his Majeſty's in Holland. Charles Earl of Mancheſter was appointed Ambaſſador Extraordinary to the Republick of Venice; Sir Lambert Blackwell, a Leghorn Merchant, was ſent Envoy to the Great Duke of Tuſcany; and Sir James Ruſhout, Ambaſſador Extraordinary to the Grand Signior. The Earl of Dorſet having reſign'd his Office of Lord-Chamberlain of his Majeſty's Houſhold; April 19. his Majeſty conferr'd that Place on the Earl of Sunderland, who was ſoon after ſworn of the Privy-Council. And People were generally puzzl'd in their Speculations on the Conduct of that Earl, who was now in as great Favour at Court, as he had been in the former Reigns; at which many Well-wiſhers to the Government murmur'd, as well as others. About the ſame time Sir John Somers, Lord-Keeper, was made Lord High-Chancellor, and Lord Somers, Baron of Eveſham in Worceſterſhire. On the 22d of April his Majeſty declar'd in Council, Thomas Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury; John Lord Somers, Lord High-Chancellor; Thomas Earl of Pembroke, Lord Privy-Seal; William Duke of Devonſhire, Lord-Steward of the Houſhold; Charles Duke of Shrewsbury, one of the Principal Secretaries of State; Charles Earl of Dorſet; Henry Earl of Romney; Robert Earl of Sunderland, and Edward Ruſſel Eſq; for whom a Patent was preparing to create him Earl of Orford, to be Lords-Juſtices of England. Goodwin Wharton Eſq; Brother to the Lord Wharton, was made one of the Lords of the Admiralty; the Lord Viſcount Galway, Earl of Galway; to whom in the Government of Ireland, were join'd the Marquis of Wincheſter, and the Lord Viſcount Villiers, as Lords-Juſtices of that Kingdom. The Earl of Stamford was made Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancaſter; and the Lord Wharton Chief-Juſtice in Eyre on this ſide Trent, and Lord-Lieutenant of Oxfordſhire; Ralph Grey Eſq; the Lord Grey's Brother, was appointed Governor of Barbados.

Earl of Sunderland made Lord-Chamberlain.

Sir John Somers made Lord High-Chancellor and Lord Somers.

Honours and Preferments.

A.D.1697 His Majeſty left Kenſington, April 24th, and lay that Night at Capt. Ball's Houſe near Margate. He went on board the William and Mary Yacht, about 11 a-Clock in the Forenoon, 26th of April. Sir Cloudeſley Shovel, with a Squadron of Men of War, convoy'd him to Holland, where he landed the next Day much indiſpos'd, the Sea never agreeing with his Majeſty; but after loſing ſome Blood at the Hague, he remov'd to Zuleſtein and thence to Loo for the Air.

King goes to Holland.

Having mention'd the Treaty of Peace and the Place where it was treated, it will not be improper to take notice, that there was ſome difficulty in ſettling the latter. The Emperor propos'd Mentz or Frankfort; the Dutch inſiſted upon a Place in Holland, and moſt of the Allies were either for Maeſtricht, Nimeguen or Breda: but towards the middle of January, Monſieur Calliere, by his Maſter's Order, mov'd that the Plenipotentiaries of the Allies ſhould reſide at the Hague, and thoſe of France at Delft; and that the Conferences ſhould be held at Ryſwick, equally diſtant from both thoſe Towns, which was agreed to by the Confederates. Thus after ſo many triumphant Boaſts of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's Reſolution, never to make Peace without reſtoring King James, that Immortal Man, as his Flatterers ſtil'd him, ſubmitted to ſend Ambaſſadors into the Heart of Holland to propoſe a Peace, and carry on a Treaty for it in King William's own Houſe. Yet ſo very ſilly were the Jacobites, as to laugh at the mention of a Peace with England, excluſive of King James; who they gave out was to have an Ambaſſador at the Treaty to take care of his Rights, ſuch as they were: but Men of better Heads and better Intelligence, knew that the French King was no more able to carry on the War longer than the Confederates, who had greater Reſources for recruiting their Troops than the French King; and as to Money, which ſeem'd to be the Ballance of it, if the Allies were reduc'd to great Streights, France was ſtill reduc'd to greater; and that King's Succeſs in the two laſt Campaigns, was far from being an Encouragement for him to continue it. The Place of Treaty being thus ſettled, the Preliminaries of it came into Debate, and were conncluded and ſign'd the 10th of February. By which Lewis XIV. agreed,

That the Dutcheſs of* Orleans ſhould not have Recourſe to open Force to maintain her Pretenſions, but might bring her Actions according to Law in relation to the Elector. XV. That the Caſtle and County of Veldens, ſhould be reſtor'd to their lawful Owner. XVI. That Biſweiller ſhould be given to the Count of Hanau. XVII. That the Seigniories of March, Marmoſy and Dagſtein, and the County of Dagsburgh, ſhould be deliver'd up to the Count of Overſtein. XVIII. That the Seigniories of Salms and Valkenſtein ſhould be given up to the Prince of Salms, or to their Proprietors, ſeeing the ſame was ſtill in queſtion. XIX. That the Seigniories of Latzenſtein and Altheim, ſhould be ſurrender'd to their Owners. XX. That Otmeller ſhould be given up to the Houſe of Naſſau. XXI. That the City and County of Montbelliard, Harcourt, Bainant and Chattelett, ſhould be put into Poſſeſſion of the Houſe of Wirtemberg. XXII. That Germeſheim ſhould be given up to the Elector Palatine, notwithſtanding any former Treaties to the contrary. XXIII. That the Principality of Orange, ſhould be given up to its Sovereign. Some of the Confederate Princes were not pleas'd with theſe Articles, thinking their Claims and Intereſts not ſufficiently provided for by them. Their Miniſters declar'd, that as to what concern'd the firſt Article, they agreed to it. But as to Strasburgh they further inſiſted, that it ſhould be reſtor'd with its Fortifications and Dependencies, and that no Equivalent ſhould be accepted. They allow'd of the third, fourth and fifth Articles, only they inſiſted that not only the City, but the County of Luxemburgh, and that of Chimay ſhould be given up; as they did, that the City and Caſtle of Dinant ſhould be yielded, together with the Dutchy of Bouillon, in the ſame State they were. They own'd themſelves ſatisfy'd as to the ſeventh Article, concerning the Re-unions, but not ſo with the Agreement about Lorrain; which they would have reſtor'd to the Duke its Sovereign without any manner of Reſtriction.

Tho' the King of Sweden, Mediator of the Peace between the Allies and France, dy'd the 5th of April; yet the Queen and Regency, who had the Adminiſtration of that Government, during the Minority of Charles XII. continu'd the Mediation, and diſpatch'd a new Commiſſion to Monſieur Lilienroot, the Swediſh Miniſter in Holland, for that purpoſe. In the mean time it was agreed by the Plenipotentiaries, that for the eaſier carrying on of the Treaty, all Ceremonies ſhould be laid aſide: and indeed it was very neceſſary to come to ſome ſuch Agreement, when there had like to have been a ſtop put to the Treaty, by a difference about ſo mean a thing as a Perriwig; one of the French Plenipotentiaries returning a Viſit in a Campaign Wig, which the Confederate Miniſters had made him in a Full-Bottom one. That the Titles any Prince took ſhou'd be of no conſequence; that the ſeveral Plenipotentiaries ſhou'd have free and ſecure Correſpondencies with the Princes their Maſters; that in order to this, blank Paſſports ſhou'd be given to each Party, for the Couriers diſpatch'd by them; as alſo for the Pacquet-Boats to and from England, and that the Powers of the reſpective Plenipotentiaries ſhould be on the ſame foot they were at Nimeguen.

We will not enlarge on the firſt Conferences, which were chiefly to ſettle Points of Forms and exchange Powers. On the 22d of May, the Imperial Plenipotentiaries deliver'd to the Mediator, the Demands of the Emperor and Empire, and ſome of the German Miniſters at the ſame time gave in the particular Pretenſions of the Princes their Maſters. After which, the Allies drew up a large Deduction in Juſtification of their Claims, of which they reſolv'd to give the French Ambaſſadors no Copy, till they had the King's Orders to propoſe theirs. But the French Plenipotentiaries having declar'd, they had nothing to ask or to pretend to, and that they were ready to anſwer the others; the Allies chang'd their Thoughts, and the French in the mean while had ſeveral Conferences with the Dutch about Commerce and a Ceſſation of Arms. The French ſeem'd very eager for this laſt Point, and the ſame was much preſs'd by the Mediator; who, upon the Spaniſh Miniſters declaring their Grievances, declar'd he was of opinion that nothing could more contribute to the Advancement of the Peace than the agreeing on a Truce by common Conſent: but other Matters intervening, this was not brought to a Concluſion. The Brandenburgh Miniſters did very much inſiſt, that all the Names of the Confederate Princes ſhou'd be expreſs'd, and particularly inſerted in the Treaty; and ſome of the Allies took it very ill, that the Pretenſions of the Empire were propos'd by the Emperor's Ambaſſadors, in his Imperial Majeſty's Name. To give them Satisfaction, Notification was made, that every one of the Allies was free to propoſe ſeparate Articles concerning his own Affairs, which was done accordingly. A.D.1697

The French Court abated nothing of their big Words and Looks at the ſame time that they were very deſirous to have an end put to the War, which they thought wou'd beſt be obtain'd by a warm purſuit of it. In order to this, they made their utmoſt Efforts in the Netherlands and Catalonia, where their Armies were more numerous than the laſt Year, and were in the Field before thoſe of the Allies; occaſion'd not only by the uſual Slowneſs of the German Troops in their march to Flanders, but alſo by his Britannick Majeſty's Indiſpoſition, which very much retarded the Operations for the Campaign; and the French gave out that they wou'd form the Siege of Namur, but they contented themſelves with that of Aeth, a Place France had reſtor'd to Spain by the Treaty of Nimeguen, a Place which in the laſt Confederate War, was term'd a Pigeon-houſe; but was now attack'd by an Army commanded by no leſs than three Mareſchals of France, Villeroy, Boufflers and Catinat, aſſiſted by Vauban famous for his Skill in fortifying, attacking and defending Towns. Upon Intelligence of the Motion of the French Army towards Aeth; King William, who was perfectly recover'd of his Indiſpoſition, immediately repair'd to his Army in Brabant, and had an Interview with the Elector of Bavaria, who commanded another Army at hand, to join his Majeſty upon occaſion. But the French Army wou'd have been ſuperior in Number to that of the Allies, had the Junction been made, and conſequently there was no likelihood of ſucceeding in any Attempt againſt the Enemy. Beſides, King William declar'd openly, he wou'd not ſacrifice the Life of one Man for the Relief of a Place, which the French muſt be oblig'd to give up by the Peace, and this was the Reaſon why the Governor ſurrender'd it ſo ſoon, being loth to loſe many Men in the Defence of a Town which was by no means tenable againſt ſo great an Army, as the three Mareſchals of France had under them, and which the Enemy was not likely to keep many Months after they had taken it. Add to this, that King William having Information that the French Mareſchals had a Deſign upon the City of Bruſſels, his Majeſty was not willing to move from a Camp where he cover'd that City from Inſult, and diſappointed the concerted Meaſures of the Enemy; whoſe Diſappointment in the Netherlands was little in compariſon to that in

*A.D.*1697 in Poland, where on the Death of King John Sobieski, the French King by the Intrigues of the Queen Dowager of Poland, and the Cardinal Primate, the former a French Woman, and the latter a Penſioner of France, thought to have impos'd the Prince of Conti on that Kingdom. To accompliſh this, the Prince of Conti was ſent away with a great Treaſure, and large Remittances were made to the Abbot de Polignac, the French Ambaſſador in Poland, to bribe the Palatines and Vayvods who were not in the French Intereſt. The Abbot diſtributed his Money as laviſhly, as if it had been rather to reward the Service done, than to engage them to do it. Prince James Sobieski, eldeſt Son to the late King of Poland, was thought at firſt to ſtand fair in the Competition for the Crown; but the abominable Avarice of his Father, who ſold his Favours like Wares in a Market, had ſo alienated the Minds of the Poles from his Family, that there appear'd to be room for another Competitor; and another appear'd in a very little while, whom nobody ſuſpected to have any thoughts of the Crown of Poland. The Elector of Saxony, being powerfully recommended to the Emperor by his Britannick Majeſty, took a Journey to Vienna in the beginning of the Spring, under colour of conferring with his Imperial Majeſty, about the Operations of the Campaign in Hungary; where 'twas given out he wou'd again command the Imperial Army this Year; but the true Intent of his Journey was to concert Meaſures with the Emperor for his aſcending the Throne of Poland; the way to which was made the eaſier, by his renouncing the Proteſtant Religion, and reconciling himſelf to Popery; which he had privately done ſome time before, that his Religion might be no Obſtacle to his Ambition. 'Tis probable King William knew of that Reconciliation, without which he knew well it was impoſſible for him to obtain the Crown he had recomended him to; and that it was previous to ſome other Scheme, which requir'd him to quit the old Religion he was born and bred in, and cou'd ſurely receive no manner of Satisfaction by the Reaſonings of Romiſh Prieſts, in preferring Idolatry to Chriſtianity. The Elector in the mean time gather'd together a great Body of Troops, which gave Jealouſy to the Court of Brandenburgh, who did the ſame to prevent a Surprize; but upon his marching towards the Frontiers of Poland, with Intention, as was then given out, to ſtand Candidate for that Crown, all other Speculations ceas'd. The Elector found Money enough to engage a Majority of Votes in his Intereſts, and having an Army at hand to ſupport his Friends, Partizans of the Houſe of Auſtria, he was proclaim'd King by the Biſhop of Cujavia. The Cardinal Primate alſo proclaim'd the Prince of Conti, who was come as far as Marienbourg in Poliſh Pruſſia; but having no Troops to oppoſe the Saxons, and the Money he brought with him, eight Millions of Livres, being pretty well gone, he thought his beſt way was to return to France; by which means the Elector of Saxony acquir'd the Poſſeſſion of the whole Kingdom of Poland. During theſe Tranſactions, the French made themſelves Maſters of Barcelona, and the greateſt part of Catalonia; but the Germans on the Rhine were in a Condition to act offenſively, if their Vigour in Council had been equal to that in Action. However, this Effort of theirs made the French Court the more inclinable to Peace; for they ſet a greater Value on the Ground they loſt or got on the ſide of the Empire, than on that of Spain. But the Miniſters of Sweden and Denmark at Ryſwick having declared to thoſe of France, that their Maſters would be conſtrain'd to join their Forces to thoſe of the Allies, to cut off by the Sword all the unneceſſary Difficulties rais'd by France to protract the Negotiation; the French Plenipotentiaries gave in their Project of Peace July the 20th, founded on the beforemention'd Treaties of Weſtphalia and Nemeguen; the main Articles of which, relating to the Empire, were, an Offer to make void ſeveral Re-unions made on that ſide by the Chambers of Metz and Beſancon, and the Sovereign Council of Briſac, ſince the Treaty of Nimeguen; to reſtore the City of Strasburgh, or to give as an Equivalent the City and Caſtle of Friburgh, and Towns of Briſac and Philipsburgh, with the Fort of Kehl, in the Condition they were at preſent; to demoliſh the Fortifications of Hunninghen on the other ſide of the Rhine; to reſtore Lorrain to the Duke of that Name in the ſame manner it was offer'd in the Treaty of Nimeguen, that is, in the ſame Condition it was poſſeſs'd by Duke Charles in 1670, and the City of Nancy upon certain Conſiderations, with the demoliſhing of ſeveral Places, ſuch as Mont-Royal, Traerbach, &c. As for the Spaniards, the French offer'd to give them the City and Country of Luxemburgh, and the County of Chimay, or in lieu of them ſome other Places hereafter to be nam'd, for which there was a Blank left in the Project. That all Re-unions ſince the Treaty of Nimeguen ſhould be made void; that the City and Caſtle of Dinant ſhould be deliver'd up to the Biſhop of Liege; and that all other Places taken on both ſides during the War, ſhould be reſtor'd. The Spaniards ſeem'd not diſpleas'd with the Project, as to what related to them; but the Imperial Miniſters ſhew'd in their Anſwer, that it was not at all to their liking, which the French did not much regard, their chief Aim being to give Content to the other Confederates, that ſo they might draw them off from their Engagements with the Emperor and Empire. A piece of Policy ſo often practis'd by France, that it was the more eaſy to be guarded againſt; but the Allies were ſo weary of the War, that they could by no means be deaf to the Voice of Peace, whenever their Ears were charm'd with it.

The Miniſters of Sweden and Denmark declare their Maſters will join the Allies, if France does not make Peace.

Upon the 17th of Auguſt an extraordinary Conference was held at Ryſwick, which laſted a whole Day, and the Miniſters treated by word of Mouth, and not by Writing, as was at firſt agreed upon; the French King conſenting to the former, as the ſhorter way: and his Diſappointment in Poland having made him a little more tractable. The Spaniards, who had no other way to ſave Barcelona, were very preſſing to have the Peace ſign'd on the Conditions offer'd by France; but the Germans valued themſelves on their Superiority on the Rhine, which however they did not ſo improve as to incline the French to make any Alterations to their Advantage in the Project of Peace; which being ſpun out by Formalities, and Conferences at Ryſwick, to a greater Length than King William thought conſiſtent with the Urgency of the Affair, his Majeſty reſolv'd to ſhorten as much of it as related to himſelf, by a quicker way of negotiating it. The Confederate Army was then encamp'd at Cockleberg, near Bruſſels, and that under the three Mareſchals of France, not far from thence, at Iſeringuen and Peperingen: and the Earl of Portland having receiv'd the King's Commands and Inſtructions, demanded, as from himſelf, according to Biſhop Kennet, a private Interview with the Mareſchal de Boufflers; which being readily granted, tho' other Accounts make the Mareſchal de Boufflers the firſt Mover in this Interview, the two Generals met on the 10th of June, at an equal Diſtance from their reſpective Camps, attended by the ſame number of Guards, and accompanied by ſeveral Officers of Note. This preliminary Conference was ſoon follow'd by three others, in one of which, the Earl of Portland inſiſted, that King James and his Family ſhould be ſent out of France, which the Mareſchal would not yield to, but came eaſily to agree that King William ſhould not be diſturb'd in the Poſſeſſion of the Crown. The French King had before that imparted to King James, the Neceſſity of making

Conference between the Earl of Portland and the Mareſchal de Boufflers.

A.D.1697 making things up with the Prince of Orange, but that he would always allow him the yearly Sum of 600000 Livres, for which the abdicated Monarch return'd him Thanks; but added, that in any future Treaties, he would not consent any Propoſals for his Maintenance ſhould be made or accepted, which might be an Argument of his Submiſſion; and that he was at leaſt reſolv'd to tranſmit the Succeſſion of his Title to his Son, in hopes of a better Fortune. Great Civilities paſs'd between the Earl of Portland and the Mareſchal de Boufflers, from whence thinking Men began to conclude, that they were coming to a good Underſtanding, with reference to an Accommodation of Matters between their Maſters. Indeed, at the laſt of the three above-mention'd Conferences, after they had been ſome time in the open Field, the Earl and Mareſcal retir'd into a Houſe in the Suburb of Hall, where they had Pen, Ink, and Paper, and in an Hour adjuſted ſeveral Points, which the Plenipotentiaries at Ryſwick would not have agreed upon in a Year. On the 2d of Auguſt the two Negotiators ſign'd the Paper they had drawn up ſome Days before; upon which, his Majeſty left the Army the next day, and went to Dieren, from whence he diſpatch'd the Earl to the Hague to acquaint the Congreſs, That as for what concern'd his Majeſty and his Kingdoms, all Matters were ſo adjuſted with France, that this would occaſion no Delay in the General Peace; and therefore he earneſtly preſs'd the other Allies, and particularly the Emperor, to contribute all that in them lay, towards the concluding ſo great a Work.

They agree on Terms of Peace between England and France.

A vain Conceit of the Compounding Scheme.

The Jacobites were terribly mortified at the Report of the Conferences between the Earl of Portland and Mareſchal de Boufflers; but to ſupport themſelves under their Deſpair, they flatter'd themſelves that ſomething like the Compounding Scheme was then agreed upon: which vain Conceit was given into by ſome of his Majeſty's beſt Friends, as if a Stipulation was made for his peaceable Poſſeſſion of his Dominions during Life, and his being acknowledg'd as King of Great-Britain by the French King; and upon his Demiſe, the late King James or his Son, to ſucceed in the Britannick Monarchy. But as there was not the leaſt Ground in Fact, for ſuch a fooliſh Imagination; ſo it appear'd to be as groundleſs as abſurd, three Years after, by his Majeſty's effectual promoting the Settlement in the Proteſtant Line. Others reported, that the Earl of Portland and the Mareſchal de Boufflers had only agreed that King James's Queen ſhould have her Dowry paid her by England, in ſuch manner as if her Husband was really dead, but that afterwards ſhe refus'd to accept it; whereas ſhe only refus'd to give a Receipt for it, wherein King William was mention'd with all his Regal Titles. Deeper Politicians went farther two years after, and pretended that in theſe Conferences between the Earl of Portland and the Mareſchal de Boufflers, the firſt Foundation was laid of the famous Treaty of Partition; and it is not unlikely, but ſomething of that kind was then propos'd and conſider'd. The French Plenipotentiaries having declar'd that they would not be bound by the Offers they had made for the Concluſion of the Peace, any longer than the 20th of September; the Engliſh, Spaniſh, and Dutch Plenipotentiaries, after long Conferences with the French all that Day, ſign'd the Treaty a little after midnight, as did alſo the French, in preſence of the Imperial and Electoral Miniſters; who were ſo far from conſenting to it, that they requir'd the Mediator to enter their Proteſtation, That this was the ſecond time that a ſeparate Peace had been concluded with France, meaning that of Nimeguen for one, wherein the Emperor and Empire had been excluded; and that the States of the Empire, who had been impos'd upon thro' their own Credulity, would not for the future be ſo eaſily perſuaded to enter into Confederations; As if they had ever confederated but for their own Preſervation;

Speculations about the Conferences between Portland and Bouffiers.

The Treaty ſign'd.

as if they could have ſo long been able to keep the French out of the very Bowels of the Empire, without a Confederacy. The truth is, all the other Confederates maintain'd great Armies, at a third part of the Charge which England muſt have been at to raiſe, tranſport, and ſubſiſt them in foreign Countries. Beſides that the Purſe of England was always ready to anſwer the neceſſary Occaſions of the others, for carrying on the War, and that the others had little or no Loſs by Trade; an Article which coſt the Engliſh more than moſt of the Allies expended in this War againſt France. The Dutch argued as the Engliſh did, and there was no manner of reaſon why the Emperor and Princes of Germany ſhould, for Demands which they could not ſupport, oblige England and Holland to be at an Expence of Blood and Treaſure, of much more Value yearly, than all their Demands amounted to? The Spaniſh Plenipotentiaries, particularly Don Bernardo de Quivos, replied by way of Excuſe, that he had a long time been made acquainted with his Catholick Majeſty's Pleaſure, not to delay the ſigning of the Treaty, according to the Tenour of the Articles, which had been agreed upon; and if he had obey'd thoſe Orders, the French would not have taken Barcelona: but that having defer'd the Concluſion of the Treaty, at the perſuaſion of the Imperial Miniſters, he had given the French time to make themſelves Maſters of that important Place, which Succeſs emboldn'd their Plenipotentiaries to change their Language; and thereby he had himſelf run the hazard of incurring his Maſter's Diſpleaſure. Indeed, it was the common Opinion then, that the Engliſh and Dutch could, if they had ſo pleas'd, have prevented Barcelona's falling into the hands of the French; but that they knowing the Spaniards were influenc'd by German Counſels, and therefore would not come into the Terms of Peace which France had offer'd, did ſuffer the French to make that Conqueſt, to induce Spain to a Compliance; and it had the Effect they intended. A.D.1697

King James's Manifeſto's rejected at Ryſwick.

We have hinted that the late King James's Friends were ſo ſtupid, as to give out, that though the Treaty of Peace was carry'd on in King William's own Houſe, yet he would certainly be oblig'd by it to reſtore his Dominions to King James, who was himſelf ſo full of his Royalty and Rights, that he at firſt demanded Place for his Ambaſſadors to aſſiſt at the Congreſs; but when that would not go down, even at the French Court, he caus'd a Memorial to be drawn up, containing a ſummary Account of the Reaſons that ſhould engage the Confederate Catholick Princes to promote his Reſtoration: an Expoſtulation of the Injuries done him; and a Proteſtation againſt what was done at Ryſwick, as null, in reſpect to the Violation of his Rights. But a French Hiſtorian and a Papiſt writes, Les Allies ne firent pas la moindre Attention, the Allies took no manner of notice of King James's Manifeſto: he adds of that abdicated Prince himſelf, qu' il ni eſtoit eſtime ni aime que de peu des Perſonnes, &c. but few People lov'd or eſteem'd him, becauſe there were few but what believ'd that he was fitter a thouſand times to make a Monk than a Monarch. Annales de la Cour, &c.

Another Memorial to the ſame purpoſe was drawn up for the Proteſtant Confederate Princes, and King James finding the French Plenipotentiaries ſhy in the Matter, and not willing to meddle with his Manifeſto's, and at laſt abſolutely refuſing it, he in vain attempted by his Agents to get them to be receiv'd by the Confederate Miniſters, who would not take any notice of them, or look upon them, otherwiſe than as waſte Paper. But whilſt theſe notable Scriptions were in diſcourſe, and before it was known what Reception they would meet with, King William did not think fit to be entirely ſilent, under ſo falſe and virulent a Charge againſt him, of Injuſtice and Uſurpation, as was contain'd in the St. Germains Memorials; ſo he was pleaſed to direct an

A.D. 1697 Anſwer to them, in which he explain'd himſelf upon every Particular. Himſelf examin'd the Draught, which he afterwards ſent to ſome of his wiſeſt Miniſters, and no Prince had then wiſer, to be carefully reviſ'd and corrected; which being done, it was reſolv'd to have Engliſh, Latin, and French Copies of it prepar'd for Publication: but upon advice that the Memorials of King James were rejected at the Congreſs, as ſo much Trifling and Impertinence, it was thought moſt prudent to ſink that Anſwer to it which was in his Majeſty's Name, and put out another, much the ſame in effect, but as from a private Perſon; but even that was thought to be giving the late King's Memorials more Credit than they had yet met with in the World: and the laſt Reſolution was, to leave them to the Fate of all Papers of the like importance, to Contempt and Oblivion, which was the reaſon that no more was heard of King William's Anſwer to King James's Memorials, 'till it was publiſh'd by a noble Author in the year 1705, under this Title, A Memorial drawn by King William's ſpecial Direction, intended to be given in at the Treaty of Ryſwick, juſtifying the Revolution, and the Courſe of his Government, in anſwer to two Memorials that were offer'd in King James's Name.

King James deſpis'd in France.

King William's Anſwer to theſe Manifeſto's.

'Twas pleaſant to read in theſe Memorials, how much the Confederate Princes were bound by former Treaties with him, who had notoriouſly broken the grand one of Nimeguen, by entring into a League with the French King in violation of it, directly contrary to the Obligation of Guaranty, which was laid on him by that Treaty; which was the Cauſe of all his Miſeries, as the Emperor told him, in a Letter he writ him after the Revolution: but every thing he ſaid and did to recover his abdicated Rights was pleaſant, when there was nothing of Blood in it. I am ſatisfied the Reader will not be diſpleas'd with a few Paragraphs of the Anſwer to his two Manifeſto's, in which particularly the Matter of the Abdication, or the Senſe in which King James is ſaid to have abdicated, is more fully explain'd, than in any other Vindication of the Revolution; having referr'd to the Tract itſelf for that full Explanation, I ſhall inſert only the Concluſion.

King William's Defence of the Revolution.

" In ſhort, to ſum up the whole matter, and to " end this Point, which is the main Point; if the " Charge contain'd in the Act of Settlement againſt " the late King be not true, or conſiſts only of " little imaginary Grievances, as he ſaid in his Ma- " nifeſto, the People were in the wrong to invite " the Prince over, and he was abus'd by them; or " if he knew the Truth, he was in the wrong to " come, and there was no reaſon for preſſing the " late King to call a Parliament, and the uneaſy " Circumſtances he was brought into, were Hard- " ſhips put upon him: And if on the ſudden he with- " drew himſelf only to breathe a little, and to give " his People time to cool, and think on what they " were a doing, this was not altogether ſo very " ſtrange; and it were leſs ſtrange, if he was " forc'd or frighted to be gone, which might ſhew " rather no great Courage than want of Right on " his ſide. And upon theſe Suppoſitions, the Peo- " ple, inſtead of filling the Throne as they did, " ſhould have pray'd him to return, and ask'd only " a general Pardon.

" But on the other hand, if the Facts be true, " and of ſuch Importance as is pretended, and that " there was no room for Remedies, the People " had reaſon to invite the Prince over, and the " Prince had reaſon to come; and it was Goodneſs " in them, to ask only a Redreſs in Parliament, " and Security for the future. And if King James " refuſed this Redreſs, and perſiſted to refuſe it, " and thereupon many left him, and he brought " himſelf into lamentable Circumſtances; and ra- " ther than get out of them by doing his People " Juſtice, would get out of them his own way; or " being frighted by the Ghoſts and Sayings of his A.D. 1697 " Anceſtors, or by the Whiſpers of ſome nearer " him, choſe to throw all up, and withdraw him- " ſelf: the People of England had all the rea- " ſon in the World to abandon him, as he had a- " bandon'd them, and ſince he would not have " them with Laws, to have Laws without him, " and provide for themſelves, as they had done to " their great Honour and Happineſs, and for a laſt- " ing Monument of their Wiſdom and Spirit, and " a Pattern to their Poſterity. Nor needed they " any Statute to take care of themſelves, no more " than one that is ſick needs a Statute to ſend for " a Phyſician. What if the Royal Line ſhould fail? " Nature, and Self-Preſervation, the Reaſon of the " thing, the Conſtitution, and whole Statute-Book, " are the Law, when the Law or All is at ſtake. " Nor are Precedents in ſuch Caſes more neceſſary " than Statutes; and were good Precedents want- " ing, they ought to be made, for they muſt begin " one time or other: But this Nation had for Pre- " cedents, the Practice of their Anceſtors, and of " all Free-People in the like Circumſtances, when " they had Strength enough to ſave themſelves: " but if the Party inſiſt, as they do, for Precedents " that will quadrate in every thing, it is ſufficient at " preſent to aſſure them, that when they find ſuch " Precedents for King James's Part in the Revolu- " tion, whoſe Obſtinacy no Age can parallel, if they " go not back to Pharaoh's, who was indeed an " Original, which one would have thought none " could ever have copied after; however, I ſay, if " they find compleat Parallels for King James's " Part in the Revolution, others will find as exact " ones for their Parts in it too. It is true, Prece- " dents in favour of Publick Liberty are of late " become very rare, but this made it the more ne- " ceſſary, and more ſeaſonable to revive them by " a ſignal Inſtance, ſuch as the Revolution; which " will, at leaſt during this Age, keep both Prince " and People in mind of what they owe, the one to " the other, and the other to themſelves and their " Poſterity. So far is the Revolution from being a " bad or dangerous Precedent, as is alſo pretended, " that it can only be one for the like Caſes, for " which it appears it will be a good one; and the " Party is deſir'd to bring an Inſtance, either from " ancient or modern Hiſtory, that even any Nation, " much leſs one compos'd of Factions of different " and contrary Intereſts, and ſo unanimouſly and " deliberately, and with ſo little Heat or Reſent- " ment, take Arms againſt their lawful Sovereign, " as this Nation did, but when they had juſt Cauſe " to do it. 'Tis ſtrange if the Revolution be bad, " and every thing like it good."

What follows, relates particularly to the glorious Character of our Deliverer King William, and the Houſe of Naſſau, the Champions of Publick Liberty; and is an Homage paid to their immortal Memory, in which all good Britons and good Proteſtants will acquieſce.

The Character of King William and the Houſe of Naſſau.

" But to conclude, the Prince, (ſince his preſent " Majeſty) againſt whom chiefly all this Duſt is " rais'd, wanted not Precedents for his Part in the " Revolution, he being deſcended of thoſe, who by " Revolutions ſav'd Europe more than once. God " choſe them in their time to be the Inſtruments " of his Goodneſs to Mankind, in the great Work " of reſtoring the Cauſe of Liberty, that was al- " moſt loſt. They were his Vicegerents indeed, " in the nobleſt of his Prerogatives, thoſe he glo- " ries moſt in, his Care of the Poor and the Op- " preſs'd. God accepted of their Labours then, " and rewarded them, and it ſeems, is rewarding " them ſtill, by reſerving to their Poſterity the Ho- " nour of maintaining the ſame Cauſe, that was " lately in as great Danger as ever, but is now up- " on a Foot to maintain their Honour, and the " Honours of all thoſe that act honeſtly and ſincere-

" Writers of the Memorials vainly intimated."

When the late King's Friends were convinc'd that the French King had abandon'd him, contrary to the many publick Profeſſions he had made, that he would never ſheath his Sword 'till he had reſtor'd him; they turn'd their Rage againſt the moſt Chriſtian King, whom they libell'd and lampoon'd, for which ſome of them, particularly Tom Brown, were committed to Newgate; the ſame being a Violation of the new-made Treaty, between the two Crowns of England and France. Upon this, the Lord D——t wrote thoſe Rhimes,

The Jacobites rail at the French King.

If you order Tom Brown
To be whipp'd about Town,
Tate, Southern, and Crown,
Their Pens will lay down, &c.

And by his Lordſhip's Interceſſion the whipping part was diſpens'd with, and he was, after a ſhort Confinement, ſet at liberty.

The French Proteſtants in England and other Countries, who expected Deliverance from Perſecution by King William's Protection, were as much diſappointed by the Ryſwick Peace as were the Jacobites. The Refugees in London ſent their Caſe over to Holland to Monſ. Jurieu, the famous Hugonot Miniſter in that Province, who with his wonted Zeal for the Reform'd Religion, applied to King William, who directed the Dutch Plenipotentiaries to open that Matter at a diſtance to thoſe of France. The Dutch Miniſters follow'd his Majeſty's Orders, but the French King, Nerone Neronior, a greater Nero for Perſecution than was Nero himſelf, to whom this Overture was communicated, expreſs'd an inſuperable Averſion to it; urging, that as he did not pretend to preſcribe King William any Rules about his Subjects, ſo he expected the ſame Liberty as to his own, which he look'd upon as the great Prerogative of a Sovereign.

The Conferences continu'd at Ryſwick between the Imperial and French Plenipotentiaries 'till the 30th of October, when all things being agreed on, the Treaty was ſign'd two days before the Time limited by France was expir'd. And tho' the Peace with the Empire was not ſo advantageous to it, nor the Reſtitution of Lorrain in ſo ample a manner as was expected; yet it muſt be own'd that the Power of France was extremely reduc'd, if it be conſider'd that ſhe gave up many ſtrong Towns in Germany, particularly Briſac; that by the taking of Caſal, and the Peace with Savoy, ſhe had entirely loſt her Footing in Italy; that the ſame Barrier was left in Catalonia as before, and that there was a ſtronger Frontier in the Low-Countries, by her Reſtitution of all ſhe took ſince the beginning of the War, with the addition of Luxemburgh and Dinant. The French themſelves, who did not enter into the Views of their Monarch, were ſo ſenſible of this, and ſo little pleas'd with the Treaty of Ryſwick, that they made very ſevere Reflections on their Plenipotentiaries, Meſſieurs Harlay, Creci, and Calliere, whom they traduc'd in their Vaudevilles, and Lampoons upon them were publickly ſung in Paris, and over all the Kingdom of France; whilſt the Courage, Reſolution and Wiſdom of King William were celebrated and admir'd throughout all the World, to the ſhame of thoſe ungrateful Wretches, unworthy the Name of Engliſhmen, who, both Jacobites and Tories, malign'd his Glory, and diſturb'd his Government. One of the beſt Writers at that time in France ſaid, The Towns deliver'd up at the Treaty of Ryſwick, les Enemis n'euſſent pas repriſes en vingt Ans de Tems, the Enemy would not have retaken in Twenty Years time. The ſame Author ſpeaking of King William's chuſing the Earl of Portland to confer with the Mareſchal de Boufflers, ſays, Le Roy Guillaume, qui ſavoit tirer Avantage de tout, King William, who knew how to take Advantage of every thing, knew well that the Earl of Portland had at leaſt as good a Head as the Mareſchal de Boufflers; and it appears, by that Earl's Conduct at the Conferences he had with the Mareſchal.

A.D.1697 King William prais'd in France.

Before his Majeſty left Holland, he had an Interview with the Czar of Muſcovy. That Prince having form'd a Deſign to build a Fleet, not only to advance the Trade of his Empire, in the Baltick, but on the Black Sea, to annoy the Turks; and in order to it, reſolv'd to viſit the Maritime Powers, and acquire the neceſſary Knowledge for improving his Shipping and Navigation. To diſencumber himſelf of the Inconveniences of a numerous Imperial Train, he reſolv'd to travel incognito, among the Ambaſſadors, whom, to cover his Journey, he ſent to Holland and England. After theſe Ambaſſadors had had their Audience of the States-General at the Hague, they were admitted to that of the King of England at Utrecht, which being over, his Majeſty and the Czar met in a ſmall Gallery, into which they enter'd both at a time, out of the adjoining Rooms; and hearty Embraces and Complements being paſs'd on both ſides, they had a long Conference together about the Poſture of Affairs, wherein the Czar highly applauded his Majeſty's indefatigable Endeavours and conſtant Aim to reduce France within its ancient Limits. The two Monarchs had after this ſeveral other Meetings and Conferences, with as little Ceremony, and the like Tokens of Eſteem and Affection; in which the Czar communicated to the King his Intentions to go with his Ambaſſadors to England, and his Majeſty was pleas'd to order Sir David Mitchel, with a Squadron of Men of War, to be his Convoy. The Czar embark'd in a Yacht, and was mightily pleas'd with the Converſation of the Admiral, who gave ſatisfactory Anſwers to all his Maritime Queſtions, particularly as to the Puniſhments for Sailors that had deſerv'd Puniſhment. Admiral Mitchel, among other ways of Correction, naming Keel-hawling, the Czar deſir'd that it might be explain'd to him, not by Words, but by Experiment; which the Admiral excus'd, as not having then an Offender of the Kind that deſerv'd it. The Czar replied, Take one of my Men; but Sir David inform'd him, that all aboard his Ship were under the Protection of the Laws of England, and he was accountable for every Man there, according to thoſe Laws; with which his Czariſh Majeſty was ſatisfied. We muſt leave that Prince on his Journey, and return to our Hiſtory of England.

CHAP. IV.

From the Peace of Ryſwick to the Death of King WILLIAM.

Containing the Space of Four Years, Five Months, and Sixteen Days.

ON the 13th of Nov. King William landed at Margate, and at the Requeſt of the Citizens of London made his Publick Entry thro' the City, on the 16th of that Month; which was done in the moſt magnificent manner that had ever been ſeen there ſince the Reſtoration. The Lord-Mayor of London, Sir Humphry Edwin, rode bare-headed before his Majeſty's Coach, bearing the Sword; the Number of Perſons of Quality in Coaches and Six Horſes, all with gay and new Furniture and Equipage, ſeem'd to fill the Town from one end to the other. The Balconies of the Houſes were full of Ladies and Gentlemen, dreſt out to expreſs their Joy on this Happy Occaſion. The Lord-Mayor and Court of Aldermen ſoon after attended his Majeſty with a very Loyal Congratulatory Addreſs; and he was pleas'd to confer the Honour of Knighthood on Bartholomew Gracedieu and James Collet Eſqrs; the Sheriffs, Robert Bedingfield Eſq; Alderman, and Thomas Cuddon Eſq; Chamberlain of London.

On Friday, Dec. 3. the Parliament met at Weſtminſter, and his Majeſty made this Speech to both Houſes.

King's Speech to the Parliament.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" THE War which I enter'd into by the Advice of my People is, by the Bleſſing of God and their Zealous and Affectionate Aſſiſtance, brought to the end we all propos'd, an Honourable Peace; which I was willing to conclude, not ſo much to eaſe my Subjects from the Trouble and Hazard, as to free the Kingdom from the continuing Burthen of an expenſive War.

" I am heartily ſorry my Subjects will not at firſt find all that Relief from the Peace, which I could wiſh and they may expect; but the Funds intended for the laſt Year's Service, have fallen ſhort of anſwering the Sums for which they were given, ſo that there remain conſiderable Deficiencies to be provided for. There's a Debt upon the Account of the Fleet and the Army. The Revenues of the Crown have been anticipated by my Conſent for Publick Uſes; ſo that I am wholly deſtitute of means to ſupport the Civil Liſt; and I can never diſtruſt you'll ſuffer this to turn to my Diſadvan age, but will provide for me during my Life, in ſuch a manner as may be for my Honour, and for the Honour of the Government.

" Our Naval Force being encreas'd to near double what it was at my Acceſſion to the Crown, the Charge of maintaining it will be proportionably augmented; and it is certainly neceſſary for the Intereſt and Reputation of England, to have always a great Strength at Sea.

" The Circumſtances of Affairs abroad are ſuch, that I think myſelf oblig'd to tell you my Opinion, that for the preſent England cannot be ſafe without a Land-Force; and I hope we ſhall not give thoſe who mean us ill, the Opportunity of effecting that under the Notion of a Peace, which they could not bring to paſs by a War.

" I doubt not but you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, will take theſe particulars into your Conſiderations in ſuch a manner as to provide the neceſſary Supplies, which I do very earneſtly recommend to you.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" That which I moſt delight to think of, and am beſt pleas'd to own, is, that I have all the Proofs of my People's Affection, that a Prince can deſire; and I take this Occaſion to give them the moſt ſolemn Aſſurance, that as I never had, ſo I never will, nor can have any Intereſt ſeparate from theirs.

" I eſteem it one of the greateſt Advantages of the Peace, that I ſhall now have leiſure to rectify ſuch Corruptions and Abuſes, as may have crept into any Part of the Adminiſtration during the War, and effectually to diſcourage Prophaneneſs and Immorality: And ſhall employ my Thoughts in promoting Trade, and advancing the Happineſs and flouriſhing Eſtate of the Kingdom.

" I ſhall conclude with telling you, that as I have, with the hazard of every thing, reſcu'd your Religion, Laws and Liberties, when they were in the extremeſt Danger; ſo I ſhall place the Glory of my Reign in preſerving them entire, and leaving them ſo to Poſterity."

During the Negotiations of Peace, eſpecially towards the Concluſion of them, the Diſcourſe was general, what ſhould be done with the Army when the War was over, and almoſt as general was the Opinion that it ſhould be disbanded; the Conſideration of ſaving the Expence, blinded the Judgment of many well-affected Perſons, but the chief Movers in the matter were the diſaffected, ſome out of Inclination to King James, and others out of Diſguſt to King William. This was the Occaſion of exception being taken to that Expreſſion in his Majeſty's Speech, relating to the Land-Force, which was chriſten'd a Standing Army; and ſeveral Virulent Pamphlets were publiſh'd, as well as Speeches made againſt it, both alike full of Sophiſtry and Ill-Nature. It was obſerv'd, that the King's Speech was moſt acceptable to the Houſe of Lords, who in their Addreſs to his Majeſty, " Congratulated his happy Return, accompanied with the Bleſſings of a ſafe and honourable Peace, which, next under God, they were ſenſible was owing to his Courage and Conduct. That after the Hazards and Labours he had ſo long ſuſtain'd for the good of Europe, there wanted nothing but this to compleat the Glory of his Reign. They ſhould never be wanting in their Endeavours to aſſiſt his Majeſty in maintaining that Quiet which he had ſo glorioufly reſtor'd to theſe Kingdoms, and in contributing all they could to the ſafety of his Perſon, and the ſecuring the Peace and Proſperity of his Government."

The King's Forces call'd a Standing-Army.

Lords Addreſs.

We are told by a Right Reverend Hiſtorian, that ſome of the Commons thought certain Expreſſions in the King's Speech too Magiſterial; but thoſe Expreſſions being not mark'd out by him, renders what he writes a Riddle to his Readers, as is what he ſays a little after, that the Commonwealth Party in the Houſe were ſecretly driving at a Change of Government, and to that end join'd with the Country-Party againſt the Army. But who theſe Republicans were, is much more a Secret than their Deſign to ſet aſide King William, and ſet up a Commonwealth. The Commons Addreſs was not preſented to the King till ſix Days after he had made his Speech; and one may perceive by it, that the

Waters

A.D.1697 Waters had been troubled, but moſt certainly not by an Angel of Light.

The Commons Addreſs.

" WE your Majeſty's moſt Dutiful and Loyal " Subjects, the Commons in Parliament " aſſembled, who have ſo frequently waited on " your Majeſty, with the Tender of our Aſſiſtance " for carrying on the War, come now to congra- " tulate your Majeſty upon the happy Concluſion " of it, in a Peace ſo Honourable and Advantage- " ous to the Nation, as ſufficiently juſtifies the " Wiſdom of the Commons in Adviſing, and your " Majeſty's Conduct in the Proſecution of it.

" The Proſpect of the Benefits your People will " receive from this Peace is very pleaſing. The " Honour your Majeſty has reſtor'd to England, " of holding the Ballance of Europe, gives your Sub- " jects great Content: But what your Commons " are moſt affected and delighted with, is, that " your Majeſty's Sacred Perſon will now be ſe- " cure from thoſe many and great Dangers to " which you have ſo often expos'd it for our Sakes: " Nothing being ſo evident, as that your Majeſty's " Return in Safety, was a Bleſſing more welcome " to your People than Peace, and receiv'd with " greater Demonſtrations of Joy.

" We therefore with Hearts full of Affection, " Duty and Gratitude, do aſſure your Majeſty in " the Name of all the Commons of England; that " this Houſe will be ever ready to aſſiſt and ſup- " port your Majeſty, who by putting a Period to " the War, has confirm'd us in the quiet Poſſeſſion " of our Rights and Liberties, and ſo fully com- " pleated the glorious Work of our Deliverance."

His Majeſty's Anſwer was;

Gentlemen, nothing that relates to the Peace pleaſes me ſo much, as the Satisfaction you have in it. And as you have aſſiſted me in the War beyond all Expreſſion, I do not doubt but you will be as zealous in maintaining the Peace.

I ſhall not enter into Debate about the Land-Force, the Effect as well as the Reaſon proving that what King William ſaid of keeping it up was expedient, and even neceſſary at that Juncture. I ſhall tranſlate a few Lines out of a French Hiſtory, the Author being a Stander-by, ſaw more than thoſe that play'd. Apres la paix ceux qui étoient dans les Intereſts de la Cour, propoſerent d'entretenir une armée ſur pied. After the Peace, thoſe who were in the Court-Intereſt propos'd the keeping an Army on foot, which cou'd not but be well-pleaſing to the King, and there wanted not good Reaſons to ſupport it. 'Twas ſaid the Nation was not yet deliver'd from the Fears of the Jacobite Party; that King James was ſtill under the protection of the moſt Chriſtian King; that the latter had not yet broken one Regiment; and if England was left without Defence, ſhe would be once more at the Mercy of Lewis XIV. who was the declar'd Enemy of King William, the Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberty of Europe. This Reaſoning did not however ſatisfy the generality of the People: the Country-Party, as they call'd themſelves, who always look upon it as meritorious to oppoſe the Court; the Tory-Party who never lov'd the King nor his Government; ſeveral Whigs concur'd in Oppoſition to what the Court deſir'd; and the King had the mortification to ſee himſelf expos'd to the Inſults of all the Princes that might have a mind to renew the War.

French Author's Reaſons for the Army.

Before his Majeſty left Holland, he paid off and ſent home the Foreign Troops in his Service; and ſoon after his Arrival in England, had given Orders for diſbanding ſome of the National Troops, to give as little Umbrage as might be, and that the People's Liberty might appear to be in no danger; but that did not ſatisfy. For when the Commons came to conſider the King's Speech, they Reſolv'd, Dec. 11. That all the Land-Forces rais'd in the Kingdom, ſince the 29th of Sept. 1680, ſhould be paid off and diſbanded. Let us here take a View of this moſt formidable Army, which it was inſinuated the King wou'd have kept up to be a Bridle to Engliſh Liberty; and the following Liſt was then publiſh'd.

The Army on the Engliſh Eſtabliſhment conſiſted of about 5800 Horſe and Dragoons, and about 15000 Foot; out of which Number, if we take the Dutch, that none but National Troops might have been left on that Eſtabliſhment, there will remain Horſe and Dragoons 3900; and Foot 12300 or thereabouts: a doughty Army indeed, to throw all the good People of England into a Tremor even at a time when the King had juſt told them from the Throne in the moſt ſolemn manner, that as he never had, ſo he never would have, nor could have any Intereſt ſeparate from theirs; and this was really the Opinion of every reaſonable and honeſt Man in the Kingdom, who was not abus'd by Faction, or miſled by Pique. The King was well-inform'd of the ill State of the King of Spain's Health, and that there was no likelihood of his getting out of it. The Natural Conſequence of his Death, muſt be another War about the Spaniſh Succeſſion, which the French King would not fail to put in for, in the Name of one of his Grandſons; and the leaving King William without an Army, was an infallible way to confirm him in ſuch a Deſign. This was an Argument the pretended Country-Party cou'd not reach; it was too diſtant for them, and they had their hands on their Purſes: but when two or three Years after, Lewis XIV. acknowledg'd the pretended Prince of Wales, as King of Great-Britain, and ſeiz'd the Spaniſh Monarchy in Violation of all Treaties; the wiſeſt of them ſhook their Heads, and excus'd their Raſhneſs with a vain and ſtale come off, Who cou'd have thought it? Why, every Man who thought like a Man of Senſe and Honeſty, under no Influence but that of Love to his King and Country.

The Commons, to make the disbanding a little more plauſible, paſt a Vote, Dec. 13. That it be an Inſtruction to the Committee who were to conſider of the Supply, that they ſhould likewiſe conſider of a Gratuity to be given to ſuch Officers and Soldiers of the Engliſh Army who were or ſhou'd be disbanded; and at the ſame time order'd Mr. Hammond and Mr. Moyle, Gentlemen otherwiſe of a different Kidney, to bring in a Bill to enable Soldiers who ſhould be disbanded, to exerciſe their Trade, in any Town or Corporation throughout the Kingdom. Theſe two Gentlemen being thus coupled in this Vote, gives one a very lively Idea of the Temper of the Houſe at that time. Mr. Hammond was then Repreſentative for the Univerſity of Cambridge, and conſequently then in the ſame way of thinking with other Univerſity-Men. Mr. Moyle was a Corniſh Gentleman and Burgeſs, a warm Aſſertor of Revolution-Principles, but taking offence at ſomething ſaid or done by Mr. Charles Montague, Chancellor of the Exchequer, relating to himſelf, he join'd with thoſe that oppos'd the Court, and made now one of their Country-Party. The ſame ſeducing Counſels prevailing ſtill by this unnatural Coalition of Men of ſo different Principles, Biſhop Kennet tells us, that to provide for the Security of the Kingdom, when the Soldiers were return'd to their ſeveral Towns and Trades; a Bill was order'd to be brought in December 17th, To regulate the Militia, and make them more uſeful: and the next Day they reſolv'd, That Ten Thouſand Men are neceſſary for a Summer and Winter Guard at Sea, for the Year 1698.

Parties in the Houſe of Commons.

When they went upon the Supply, thoſe who lik'd King William's being King, tho' they did not like his Miniſters, came chearfully into all Ways and Means, that were propos'd to clear off the Army and Navy Debts, to make good Deficiencies of Funds; and ſettle one of 700000 l. a-year for the Civil Liſt during his Majeſty's Life.

Acts paſt.

On Friday, Jan. 14. the King gave the Royal Aſſent to an Act to prevent the Currency of hammer'd Money, and for re-coining it. 2. An Act againſt correſponding with King James and his Adherents. 3. An Act for impriſoning Counter and others for the Aſſaſſination-Plot, &c.

Before we proceed further in the Tranſactions of the enſuing Year, it is neceſſary to take a ſhort view of thoſe relating to Scotland and Ireland.

Scotland was now in a ſort of Ferment, occaſion'd by the Oppoſition their African and Weſt-India Company met with, in the proſecution of their Scheme for ſettling a Trade to Africa, and a Colony in America, of which mention is already made; and indeed 'tis not eaſy to reconcile the Treatment the Scots Company complain'd of with the Acts of Parliament, by which they were eſtabliſh'd. For King William, as King of Scotland, had certainly the Care of their Welfare upon him, as well as that of England; and if that Company eſtabliſh'd by his Authority in a Parliamentary way, was really for the welfare of that People; the Inconveniencies that the Engliſh might be brought into by it, ſeem to have been a more proper Subject for Conſideration before the Act paſt than afterwards. But as Partial, as the moſt Partial may term me; I ſhall not conceal either the Fact or my Opinion of it, let it bear hard where it will.

Scots African Company.

The Scotch, purſuant to their Act, endeavour'd by their Agents, to get Subſcriptions in England, Holland and Hamburgh; they met with Encouragement from private Perſons in all thoſe Places, but the State diſcountenanc'd them, at leaſt in England and Holland. The Engliſh and Dutch India and African Companies took the Alarm immediately, and a ſtop was put to the Subſcriptions the Scotch Agents

A.D.1698 gents were taking, and would in a ſhort time have compleated. At Hamburgh the 200000 Pounds propos'd for that Subſcription was thought too little by the Merchants there; which ſo offended the great Indian and African Companies in England and Holland, that they applied to the King to interpoſe in the Matter, and prevent Foreigners encroaching on their Privileges in Trade. Every body knows his Majeſty had two Lords near his Perſon who were Dutchmen, the Earls of Portland and Albemarle, who were favourably heard by him on all Occaſions, and 'tis ſuppos'd the Dutch Companies engag'd both thoſe Lords to repreſent the Diſadvantages their Trade would lie under by this new Project in Scotland; the Engliſh Companies had all the Lords of the Court to ſollicit his Majeſty in their favour; and thus preſs'd, as King of Great-Britain, and Stadtholder of Holland, by thoſe great Bodies of Merchants, what could the King do leſs, than permit his Miniſters at Hamburgh to preſent the following Memorial to the Senate? April 7.

The Engliſh Reſident at Hamburgh oppoſes the Scotch Company.

That they, the Miniſters of his Majeſty of Great-Britain, had, upon the Arrival of Commiſſioners for an Indian Company in Scotland, preſented at ſeveral times to their Magnificencies and Lordſhips, from the King their Maſter, that his Majeſty, notwithſtanding that the ſaid Commiſſioners endeavour'd to open to themſelves a Commerce and Trade to thoſe Parts, by making ſome Convention or Treaty with that City, had commanded them moſt expreſſly to notify to their Magnificencies and Lordſhips, that if they enter'd into ſuch Conventions with private Men, who had neither Credential Letters, nor were otherwiſe authoriz'd by his Majeſty, that his Majeſty would regard ſuch Proceedings as an Affront to his Royal Authority, and that he would not fail to reſent it. That their Magnificencies and Lordſhips had the Goodneſs to anſwer thereto by their Deputy, That they would no way enter into Commerce with the aforeſaid Commiſſioners, nor encourage them in any ſort; notwithſtanding, they ſaw with diſpleaſure, that without any regard to the Remonſtrances made by them in the Name of his Majeſty, the Inhabitants of that City forbore not to make Conventions and Treaties with the ſaid Commiſſioners, who durſt even erect a publick Office to receive Subſcriptions, as appear'd by the annex'd Print; and that it was not very credible, that Strangers would enterprize a Matter of ſuch Importance, without being ſupported by that Government.

Wherefore they made their juſt Complaints thereof to their Magnificencies and Lordſhips, beſeeching them in the Name of the King their Maſter, to remedy in time that which was begun; and to do it ſo effectually, as to prevent any Conſequences it might have, capable to diſturb the Friendſhip and good Correſpondence which they would cultivate, between England and the City of Hamburgh. That they wanted their Magnificencies and Lordſhips Anſwer in writing, to be tranſmitted to the King their Maſter. Subſcrib'd by Mr. Creſſet, his Majeſty's Envoy to the Houſe of Lunenburgh; and Sir Paul Rycaut, his Majeſty's Reſident in the City of Hamburgh.

One muſt needs think it a ſurprizing thing to the Citizens of Hamburgh, Men of as much Underſtanding as any in the Commercial World, to hear of Memorials deliver'd to their Senate, againſt their having Commerce with his Majeſty's own Subjects, in purſuance of a Law of his own making, but a few Months before; and they expreſs'd themſelves accordingly, in their Anſwer to this laſt Memorial. This Body of Merchants are in Hamburgh term'd the Commercii; and they happen'd to be aſſembled in their own Hall, when that Memorial was deliver'd to the Senate: upon Peruſal of which, they gave in the following Anſwer; "That they look'd "upon it as a very ſtrange thing, that the King of "Great-Britain ſhould offer to hinder them, who "were a free People, to trade with whom they "pleas'd: but were amaz'd to think, that he would "hinder them from joining with his own Subjects "in Scotland, to whom he had given ſuch large "Privileges, by ſo ſolemn an Act of Parliament." A.D.1698

The Hamburghers Anſwer.

Upon notice of this, the Scotch India Company's Deputies went immediately to the Senate, and briefly repreſented to them, That the Subſcribers, Deputies, and Directors of the Indian and African Companies of Scotland, underſtanding that his Majeſty of Great-Britain's Miniſters there, had preſented a Memorial to their Lordſhips, whereby they ſeem'd to quarrel the Powers that had been granted them by his Majeſty, and the Parliament of Scotland, to make Treaties of Commerce with any Foreign Prince or State, not in War with his ſaid Majeſty, for enlarging the Trade, and for the better Eſtabliſhment of the ſaid Company: That they pray'd their Lordſhips to communicate the ſaid Memorial to them, that they might take Meaſures accordingly.

The Scotch Company having well weigh'd the ill Conſequences of the before-mention'd Memorial of the Engliſh Miniſters, preſented an Addreſs to his Majeſty, in Words to this effect:

The Scots Addreſs to the King.

"WHereas by the 32d Act of the 4th Seſſion, "and 8th Act of the 5th Seſſion of his Ma- "jeſty's Parliament there current, as well as by his "Majeſty's Patent under the great Seal of that "Kingdom, that Company was eſtabliſh'd with "ſuch ample Privileges, as were thought moſt pro- "per for encouraging both Natives and Foreigners "to join in the carrying on, ſupporting, and ad- "vancement of their Trade; the moſt conſide- "rable of the Nobility, Gentry, Merchants, and "whole Body of the Royal Burroughs, had, upon "the Inducement and publick Faith of his Ma- "jeſty's ſaid Acts of Parliament and Letters Pa- "tent, contributed as Adventurers, in raiſing a far "more conſiderable Joint-Stock than any was e- "ver before rais'd in that Kingdom, for any pub- "lick Undertaking, or Project of Trade whatſo- "ever; which made it of ſo much the more uni- "verſal Concern to that Nation.

"That for the better enabling them to accom- "pliſh the Ends of his Majeſty's ſaid Acts of Par- "liament and Letters Patent, they had appointed "certain Deputies of their own number, to "tranſact and negotiate their neceſſary Affairs be- "yond the Sea, and to treat with any Foreigners, "of any Nation in Amity with his Majeſty, as "might be inclin'd to join with them for the Pur- "poſes aforeſaid.

"In the Proſecution of which Commiſſion to "their ſaid Deputies, veſted with full Power and "Authority, according to Law, they were not a "little ſurpriz'd to find, to the great Hindrance "and Obſtruction of their Affairs, that his Majeſ- "ty's Envoy to the Court of Lunenburgh, and Re- "ſident at Hamburgh, had, under pretence of ſpe- "cial Warrant from his Majeſty, given in a joint- "ſubſcrib'd Memorial to the Senate of Hamburgh, "expreſſly invading the Privileges granted to their "Company, by his Majeſty's ſaid Acts of Parlia- "liament and Letters Patent, as by the therewith "tranſmitted Copy will appear. That by the ſaid "Memorial they ſuſtain'd great and manifeſt Pre- "judices, ſince both the Senate and Inhabitants "of the ſaid City of Hamburgh were thereby, "contrary to the Law of Nations, expreſſly threat- "ned with his Majeſty's high Diſpleaſure, if they, "or either of them, ſhould countenance, or join "with them, in any Treaty of Trade or Com- "merce whatſoever; which depriv'd them of the "Aſſiſtance, which they had reaſon to expect from "ſeveral Inhabitants of that City.

"For Redreſs whereof, they did, in all Duty "and Humility, apply to his Majeſty, not only for "the Protection and Maintenance of their Privi"lege

A.D.1698 " lege and Freedom of Trade, but alſo for Repa- " ration of Damages, conform to his Majeſty's " ſaid Acts of Parliament and Letters Patent. They " conceiv'd themſelves legally and ſufficiently au- " thoriz'd, to treat with any Sovereign Potentate " or Eſtate, in Amity with his Majeſty, for the " Support and Advancement of their Trade; yet " they, by their Deputies, had only treated with " particular and private Merchants of the ſaid Ci- " ty of Hamburgh, without ever making any the " leaſt Propoſal to the Senate thereof; and they " humbly conceiv'd that to be the natural Right " and Privilege of all Merchants whatſoever, even " tho' they wanted the Sanction of ſo ſolemn Laws; " and that without ſpeedy Redreſs had therein, " not only that Company, but all other individual " Merchants of that Kingdom, muſt from thence- " forward conclude, that all their Rights and Free- " doms were, and might be farther, by their " Neighbours, violently wreſted out of their hands.

" That they therefore, to prevent the further ill " Conſequences of the ſaid Memorial to their " Company in particular, did make their moſt " humble and earneſt Requeſt to his Majeſty, that " he ſhould be graciouſly pleas'd to grant them " ſuch Declarations as in his Royal Wiſdom he " ſhould think fit, that the Senate and Inhabitants " of the ſaid City of Hamburgh, and all others that " were or might be concern'd, might be ſecur'd " from the Threatnings, and other Suggeſtions con- " tain'd in the ſaid Memorial; as well as to render " them ſecure under his Majeſty's Protection, in " the full Proſecution of their Trade, and free En- " joyment of their lawful Rights, and Privileges, " and Immunities, contain'd in his Majeſty's Acts " of Parliament, and Letters Patent."

The Scotch Secretaries Anſwer.

The King's Anſwer to the above written Addreſs, by the Right Honourable the Earl of Tullibardine and Sir James Ogilvy, Principal Secretaries of State.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

We are empower'd by the King to ſignify unto you, that as ſoon as his Majeſty ſhall return to England, he will take into Conſideration what you have repreſented unto him; and that in the mean time, his Majeſty will give Orders to his Envoy at the Court of Lunenburgh, and his Reſident at Hamburgh, not to make uſe of his Majeſty's Name or Authority, for obſtructing your Company in the Proſecution of your Trade with the Inhabitants of that City.

Sign'd at Edinburgh, the 2d of Auguſt. Tullibardine. Ja. Ogilvie.

When we write of the Affairs of Scotland before the Union, we muſt write of it as an independent Kingdom; and it will then appear very unaccountable, that the Laws made by their King for advancing their Trade in Scotland, ſhould meet with Obſtructions from the Miniſters of the ſame King; who indeed, as King of England, had the Care of the Trade of that Kingdom alſo incumbent upon him, which was thought in this Inſtance to be in danger of receiving Detriment by that of Scotland; and therefore as King of England his Majeſty could act no otherwiſe than he did. If it be alledg'd that the Scotch Acts, and the King's Letters-Patent, empower'd their India Company to treat with Foreigners, it may be retorted, that probably thoſe Expreſſions were intended to refer only to Princes and People in both the Indies and Africa, and were Words of courſe in ſuch ſort of Acts and Charters, which could by no means be interpreted to enter into Contracts with the Dutch and Hamburghers, for invading the Rights, Privileges, and Immunities of the Eaſt-India Companies of England and Holland. A.D.1698

No body can imagine that ſuch a Deſign would ever have been countenanc'd by King William, had it been explain'd to him in direct Terms, nor can it be imagin'd that his Majeſty's Miniſters in Scotland would, even after ſuch an Explanation, have adviſ'd their Maſter to have given the Sanction of his Authority to Laws in Scotland, which were apparently contriv'd for the Ruin or Damage of the Indian and African Companies in England and Holland; but the Scotch Company taking hold of thoſe general cuſtomary Expreſſions, did probably too raſhly puſh on their Negotiations with Foreigners, to admit them into the Indian and African Trade, by virtue of their Acts of Parliament and Charter.

It is not true, that the King was ſurpriz'd into Aſſent to the Act for eſtabliſhing the Scotch Company in the year 1695; for two years before that, an Act paſs'd in Scotland for encouraging of Foreign Trade, which was the Ground-work of the laſt Act and the Charter. I ſhall inſert part of it, to ſhew that what we have ſaid of the general cuſtomary Expreſſions, is not without Foundation. It was ſtatuted, that Merchants, more or fewer, may contract and enter into ſuch Societies and Companies, for carrying on Trade, as to any Subject of Goods or Merchandize, to whatſoever Kingdoms, Countries, or Parts of the World, not being at War with his Majeſty, where Trade is in uſe to be, or may be follow'd; and particularly, beſides the Kingdoms and Countries of Europe, to the Eaſt and Weſt-Indies, the Streights, and to trade to the Mediterranean, or upon the Coaſt of Africa, or elſewhere, as above; which Societies and Companies being contracted and enter'd into upon the Terms, and in the uſual Manner as ſuch Companies are ſet up, his Majeſty, with Conſent aforeſaid, did allow and approve, giving and granting to them, and each of them, all Powers, Rights, and Privileges, as to their Perſons, Rules, and Orders, that by the Laws are given to Companies allow'd to be erected for Manufactures, &c.

Scotch Act not got by ſurprize.

This Act paſſing in 1693, it cannot be pretended that the Act made in purſuance of it in 1695, was got by ſurprize; but did paſs as the Conſequence of the former Act, and with a View of carrying on a Guinea and Weſt-India Trade, as was at firſt given out: but the Scotch Company enlarg'd their Scheme, and propos'd an Eaſt-Indian as well as Weſt-Indian Trade, under Covert of theſe general Expreſſions in the Act; which was the Bait that caught the Hamburghers, and would have taken in great numbers of Subſcribers in England and Holland, had not a ſtop been put to it by both the Governments. The Scotch pretended they loſt 30000 l. by their Diſappointment at Hamburgh, but their greateſt Loſs was that of their two great Miniſters of State, the Marquiſs of Tweedale, who, for touching the laſt Act, when he had the Honour to repreſent his Majeſty on the Throne as Lord High-Commiſſioner, was diſgrac'd; tho' the touching of all Acts relating to Trade, was one of the cuſtomary Inſtructions to the High-Commiſſioner. And Mr. Secretary Johnſton, after ſo many Years ſpent in the Service of his King and Country, was remov'd from the Secretary's Office in Scotland, to make room for the Lord Tullibardine, a Title which his Son has carry'd with him to the Pretender. Let us ſee what was the Opinion of the Secretary's Countrymen on this Occaſion, and we find in State-Tracts: Nor was it the leaſt of our Misfortunes, that we loſt ſuch an able and faithful Miniſter of State, as Secretary Johnſton; and that too upon the account of his Affection to his Country in this Matter. We are very well ſatisfied, that his Majeſty, who advanc'd him to that Poſt for his Merit, and was ſo well ſatisfied with his Ability and Care, would ſcarcely have parted with a Miniſter Vol. III. p. 522.

A.D.1698 of that Gentleman's Faithfulneſs and Penetration, but by the Intrigues of ſome People at Court. I ſhall not enlarge on this ungrateful Subject, but only obſerve, that the Scotch Company finding no Alteration in the Conduct of the Engliſh Miniſters at Hamburgh, petition'd the Privy-Council of Scotland, and to that Petition annex'd another to the King, both dated the 22d of December, 1697. The Scotch Parliament preſented alſo an Addreſs to his Majeſty; but there were ſuch inſuperable Difficulties in reconciling the Proceedings of their Indian and African Company, to the Rights, Privileges, and Intereſts of the like Companies, long before eſtabliſh'd in England and Holland, when that Affair was more maturely conſider'd, many even of the Scottiſh Nation concluded, his Majeſty ought not to abandon the Intereſts of thoſe old Companies, to promote thoſe of the new Company in Scotland. And it was plain enough, that tho' the Scotch Company had reaſon to complain of their Loſſes, by the Interruption their Negotiations with Foreigners met with; yet the furious Cry againſt the King and Government on this account, was made by the Enemies to both, as was taken notice of in a Proclamation publiſh'd in Scotland, againſt a dangerous Deſign there, of getting a general tumultuary Petition for a Parliament, purpoſely to ſet that Nation in a Flame, and cauſe a Rupture between the two Kingdoms; which the Diſaffected doubted not would promote their ſecret Machinations in favour of the abdicated King, whoſe deſperate Cauſe could not be better ſerv'd, than by dividing the Proteſtants, both Engliſh and Scots, and increaſing his Party, with the addition of ſuch as they could deceive, and draw off from the preſent Government, under any pretence whatſoever. The truth is, the Company's Affair was become ſo popular in Scotland, that their Parliament could not keep themſelves from the Heats it occaſion'd in all Diſcourſe, which affected that Aſſembly as well as People without Doors; inſomuch that the Lord High-Commiſſioner thought it neceſſary to put a ſtop to their Proceedings, while in that Ferment, by adjourning the Parliament.

Ireland. The Lords-Juſtices in Ireland made a remarkable Speech to the Parliament there, September the 27th, wherein they recommended to them a Bill for encouraging the Manufactures of Linnen and Hemp; The Settlement of which, ſay they, will contribute much to people the Country, and will be found more advantageous to this Kingdom than the Woollen Manufacture; which being the ſettled, ſtated Trade of England, from whence all foreign Markets are ſupplied, can never be encourag'd here for that purpoſe; whereas the Linnen and Hempen Manufactures will not only be encourag'd, as conſiſtent with the Trade of England, but will render the Trade of this Kingdom both uſeful and neceſſary to England. And the Houſe of Commons in Ireland fell in ſo far with the Lords-Juſtices Sentiments, as to ſay in their Addreſs of Thanks to them, We ſhall heartily endeavour to eſtabliſh the Linnen Manufacture, and to render the ſame uſeful to England, as well as advantageous to this Kingdom. And we hope to find ſuch a Temperament, with reſpect to the Woollen Trade here, that the ſame may not be injurious to England. Yet, as about the Weſt-India Company in Scotland, the Diſaffected took hold of all Occaſions to inculcate how much more beneficial to that Kingdom, the Woollen Manufacture would be than the Linnen; and what a Hardſhip it was upon the People of Ireland, to be depriv'd the Privilege of working up their own Wool, and ſending the Cloth where they pleas'd, tho' to the Ruin of the Trade of that Nation, who ſo few Years ſince had been at the Expence of ſo much Blood and Treaſure, to ſave their Rights and Privileges, nay, their Religion, Lives, and Fortunes. But the Seeds of the Diſcontent thoſe factious Spirits ſow'd, by ſuch A.D.1698 falſe Suggeſtions, have had a Harveſt in all the Humours which other Incidents have produc'd in that Kingdom; and the Libellers never fail touching upon this Article of the Woollen Manufacture, as often as they are endeavouring to inflame the Minds of the Inhabitants, and foment Diviſions among them.

The Lords-Juſtices Speech for the Linnen Manufacture.

To return to the Tranſactions in England.

On Friday, January 14, the Houſe of Commons voted 350000 l. for Guards and Garriſons; as alſo a Supply to make good the Deficiencies of that which had been granted, to anſwer and cancel Exchequer Bills, iſſued, or to be iſſued, not exceeding 2700000 l. and a Supply for diſbanding the Army. The ſoftning Reſolutions, as the Hiſtorian terms them, relating to that diſbanding, were,

A Bounty of fourteen days Subſiſtence to every Foot Soldier and Non-Commiſſion Officer.

Six days full Pay to each private Trooper and Non-Commiſſion Officer, Horſe and Dragoons.

Half-Pay to Commiſſion Officers, being Engliſhmen born.

400000 l. to make good the Deficiencies of the laſt Year's three Shillings in the Pound Land-Tax.

940000 l. to make good the Deficiencies of the Subſidies and other Duties granted at the ſame time.

120000 l. for making good the Deficiency of the One Shilling in the Pound Land-Tax.

On the 1ſt of Febr. they reſolv'd, that 1254000 l. was neceſſary to clear the Arrears due to the Land-Forces, beſides 940815 l. for Subſiſtence; 28295 l. for Contingencies; 5000 l. for the General-Officers; and 75000 l. for the Guards and Garriſons; in all 2348302 l. and there was but 852502 l. in the Pay-Maſter's hands.

When they enter'd on Ways and Means to raiſe the Money they had given, they reſolv'd to lay an Aid of three Shillings in the Pound, by way of Aſſeſſment upon every County, in proportion to the Rates of the firſt four Shillings Aid, granted in 1691; which anſwer'd ſo well, that the purſuing that Method prevented all future Deficiency in the Pound-Tax. The next day they took into Conſideration the Account of what was due to ſome of his Majeſty's Allies, both for Arrears of Subſidies, and for Payment of Auxiliaries; and reſolv'd, that 180000 Rix-Dollars were due to the Elector of Brandenburgh; 250000 Rix-Dollars to the Landgrave of Heſſe-Caſſel; 121220 Rix-Dollars to the Dukes of Wolfenbuttle; 149997 Rix-Dollars to the Biſhop of Munſter; 50000 Rix-Dollars to the Dukes of Hanover and Zell; 25000 Rix-Dollars to the Duke of Holſtein; and 200000 Rix-Dollars to the King of Denmark. They alſo reſolv'd, that there was due to the Contractors for Bread and Forage, 177000 l. that 1392742 l. was due upon the ſeveral Heads of the Eſtimate of the Debt of the Navy; 204157 l. to the Office of Ordnance; 340708 l. for Tranſports for reducing Ireland; 125785 l. for other Tranſport-Service; and 49929 l. for quartering and cloathing the Army, rais'd by Act of Parliament in 1677, and diſbanded by another Act in 1679.

If this Houſe of Commons had proceeded in other things, with the Prudence, Temper, and Unanimity, they acted in providing for the Diſcharge of ſuch a prodigious Debt, it muſt have endear'd them and their Memory to all Lovers of their Country. They wiſely conſider'd, it was not practicable to pay it off all at once, and therefore voted, firſt, that the Debt due for clearing the Army, from the 1ſt of Auguſt, 1692, to the laſt day of September, 1697, amounting to 1254000 l. the Sum of 139066 l. be rais'd in the year 1698, which would clear the Army to the 1ſt day of April, 1693; ſecondly, that the Sum of 234050 l. be rais'd for the clearing of Subſiſtence to the Troops in England, between the 1ſt

A.D.1698 day of January 1696, and the first day of August 1697; thirdly, that 450816 l. be raised for clearing the Arrears of Subsistence to the Troops in Flanders, to the 4th day of October 1697; fourthly, that the Sum of 50000 l. be raised for the General-Officers; fifthly, that 137999 l. be rais'd for clearing the Arrears of Subsistence due to the Troops in Flanders, from the 4th of October 1697 to the last day of December; sixthly, that the Sum of 1100117 l. be rais'd for the Navy, to wit, 100000 l. for Wear and Tear, 600000 l. for Seamens Wages, in part of 1862809 l. due on that Score, 16889 l. due to the Register'd Seamen, 24000 l. for the Salaries of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, and other Officers, and for Contingencies; 28663 l. for the Half-Pay Sea-Officers, 90073 l. for Pensions to Superannuated Sea-Officers and Widows, 15927 l. for the Charge of the Yards, 848 l. for the Muster-Masters of the Out-Ports, 43399 l. for Wages to Ships and Vessels in ordinary, 19608 l. for Victuals of the Ships in ordinary, 32558 l. for Harbour and Moorings, 35848 l. for ordinary Repairs of the Navy, 55520 l. for the two Marine Regiments, and 37286 l. for the Charge of the Office for registring Seamen; seventhly, that the Sum of 60000 l. be allow'd for the Ordnance; and eighthly, that Provision be made towards Payment of the Principal and Interest of the Transport-Debt: all which Sums they resolv'd to raise in the year 1698.

Notwithstanding the Commons had so much Business on their hands, to make way for the disbanding of the Army, they found time to enquire into the scandalous Practice of false Endorsement of Exchequer-Bills, which were of mighty use in the Nation, by supplying the Scarcity of Money, during the re-coining of the Silver-Species. On the second issuing of those Bills out of the Exchequer, there was an Interest of seven Pounds twelve Shillings per Annum allow'd, after they had been paid in on any Branches of the Revenue, whereas at their first issuing out of the Exchequer they bore no Interest. This encourag'd several Officers in the Exchequer, the Customs, and Excise, to contrive together to get great Sums of Money, by false Endorsements on these Exchequer-Bills, before they had circulated about, and were brought into any Branch of his Majesty's Revenue. The most considerable Persons accus'd of this piece of Villany were, Mr. Charles Duncomb, Receiver-General of the Excise; Mr. John Knight, Receiver-General of the Customs; Mr. Bartholomew Burton, of the Excise-Office; and Mr. Reginald Marryot, one of the Deputy-Tellers of the Exchequer; which last, to procure a Pardon for himself, turn'd Evidence against his Accomplices. And upon full Proof of the Crime, Duncomb and Knight, who were Members of Parliament, were first expell'd the House, and then committed Prisoners to the Tower; Burton was sent to Newgate, and Bills were order'd to be brought in to punish them. By the Bill against Duncomb, a Fine was laid upon him amounting to near half the Value of his Estate, which was computed at 400000 l. and indeed, he had a little before purchas'd the great Manor of Helmsley in Yorkshire, of the Trustees for George Villiers, late Duke of Buckingham's Estate, at 95000 l. and paid the Money down, when the want of Coin was the most complain'd of. The Bill pass'd the House of Commons, notwithstanding the Attorney-General, Sir Thomas Trevor, warmly oppos'd it, and underwent hard Censures on that account, as well as for the Blunder in the Lord Powis's Outlawry, which sav'd his Estate. People generally wish'd Duncomb's Bill might have the same Success in the House of Lords; but the Votes being there equal, the Duke of Leeds gave his casting Voice for the rejecting it; and it was commonly reported, that Mr. Duncomb dispell'd the impending Storm by a golden Sacrifice. However, the Lords having set him at liberty, the Commons resented it, and remanded him to the Tower of London, where he continued to the end of the Session. The Bills against Knight and Burton had the same Fate, and the great Noise that this sort of Forgery had made in City and Country, was hush'd on a sudden, and no more heard of it.

About this time was reviv'd a former Clamour against Grants, referring chiefly to those of the Irish forfeited Estates, granted to several Persons by King William. But at first there was no Distinction of Grants in the propos'd Redress of this Grievance; those that were made by King Charles and King James II. were to be enquir'd into, in order for Resumption, as well as King William's; but the Earl of Rochester, Sir Edward Seymour, and other Leaders of their Party, being likely to be affected by carrying the Enquiry so far back, 'twas at last resolv'd to go no farther back than King William's Reign, whose Grants being generally bestow'd on such as were Friends to the Revolution, the Enemies to it could not look upon them but with Envy and Resentment; and on this, as on other Occasions, hiding these Passions of theirs under the Veil of Zeal for the Publick Good, many Revolutioners, out of Disgust or Weakness, were drawn in to join with them for a Resumption. Things not being ripe enough as yet, for so flagrant an Act of Partiality as to resume no Grants but King William's, a Bill was order'd to be brought in to make all Grants void, that had been made since the Restoration, and then they fell more particularly on the Grants of the Irish forfeited Estates; and because a Grant was found made to Mr. Railton, which Mr. Montague, Chancellor of the Exchequer, own'd to be for his Benefit, a warm Debate arose upon it, and Mr. Montague's Enemies, who were no Friends to the King and Government, mov'd that he should withdraw; which passing in the Negative, it was Resolv'd by a great Majority, that the honourable Charles Montague Esq; Chancellor of the Exchequer, for his good Services to this Government, did deserve his Majesty's Favour.

Some Historians dwell upon the Case of the Divorce which the Earl of Macclesfield sued, first in Doctors-Commons, against his Lady Anne, Daughter of Sir Richard Mason of Shropshire, and for which, in this Session, he procur'd an Act of Parliament. It was strange that there should be any Opposition at all to such a Bill, considering that the Earl's Wife had had two Bastard Children, during her Separation from him; and what the Bishop of Salisbury said in the House of Peers, of the Necessity and Lawfulness of such extraordinary Proceedings, did not seem to need much expatiating upon, when the Proofs of her repeated Adulteries were so notorious. She afterwards married one Brett, who was a sort of Director at the Playhouse, and the Earl married the Daughter of Mr. Harbord, who was Ambassador in Turkey, and of King William's Privy-Council.

The Earl of Macclesfield divorc'd

Some time before this, Sir William Trumbal resigning his Office of Secretary of State, the King bestow'd it on James Vernon Esq; who had been Secretary to the Duke of Monmouth, when he was in the Zenith of his Father King Charles's Favour. A Week after, Dec. 12. his Majesty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood on John Blencow Esq; one of the Judges of the Common-Pleas, Henry Hatfell Esq; one of the Barons of the Exchequer, Joseph Jekyl Esq; Chief-Justice of Chester, and William Simpson Esq; Cursitor-Baron of the Exchequer. The Promotion of the Earl of Sunderland to the Office of Lord-Chamberlain, not being well reliish'd by the generality of People, that Lord very prudently resign'd it, to avoid an Address to the King for his Removal. About the end of December, the Duke of St. Albans was sent to France to compliment the King and the Dauphin, upon the Duke of Burgundy's Marriage with the Princess of Savoy;

Several Bills being ready for the Royal Aſſent, his Majeſty came to the Houſe March the 7th, and paſs'd an Act for explaining the Mum Act; an Act for diſcharging the Arrears on ſeveral Annuities; an Act for all Retailers of Salt to ſell by Weight; an Act for preventing the Importation of Foreign Bonelace, &c. an Act to prevent the throwing and firing of Squibs; and to ſome private Acts. And upon the Houſe of Commons preſenting him with an Addreſs againſt Prophaneneſs and Immorality, his Majeſty put out a Proclamation againſt them. The Houſe alſo order'd Sir John Phillips and Mr. Edward Harley to bring in a Bill for ſuppreſſing all ſorts of Debauchery; but the Bill was clogg'd by a Clauſe of one of theſe two Members, which made not only Houſes of ill Fame, but even Hackney-Coaches, where Suſpicion might be had of unlawful Commerce between Men and Women, liable to the Law; Adultery was propos'd to be puniſh'd with Death. But inſtead of this Bill, another was ſent from the Lords, entitled, An Act for the more effectual ſuppreſſing of Atheiſm, Blaſphemy, and Prophaneneſs; to which the Commons agreed, after they had amended it. Biſhop Kennet, ſpeaking of theſe things, ſays, This gave a new Zeal to the worthy Perſons who had engag'd themſelves in voluntary Societies for the Reformation of Manners, who had ſoon after this, publick Meetings at Bow-Church, to animate the good Work; to which Dr. Calamy adds, and he might have added, at Salters-Hall, a noted Diſſenters Meeting-Houſe: and ſince the Diſſenters as readily gave their Aſſiſtance to it as any, by meeting, conſulting, contributing to the Charge of it, preaching, and giving Informations, &c. I don't ſee why it ſhould not be taken notice of. But I muſt needs own, I have almoſt always found the Clergy of our Eſtabliſhment very backward in doing ſo much juſtice to our reform'd Brethren, and that the latter have almoſt always been very ready to bear Teſtimony to the Merit of the Clergy of the National Church, when they have diſtinguiſh'd themſelves by their Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion.

This was a very good Deſign, ſays a contemporary Hiſtorian, tho' afterwards, in ſome reſpects, much chang'd and perverted.

Societies for Propagating the Goſpel.

About the ſame time the Society for Propagating the Goſpel in Foreign Parts, had its Origin, in which Undertaking Dr. Thomas Bray was very zealous and induſtrious, and went himſelf to America to promote it. But alas! ſuch is the Depravity of worldly and intereſted Minds, that both theſe laudable Deſigns have fail'd in the Execution. As to the Societies for Reformation, there have been ſuch Diſorders committed by thoſe they have employ'd in their Work, that they have been lately look'd upon rather as a Grievance than a Bleſſing; and as to the Society for Propagating the Goſpel in America, the Succeſs of it has born no manner of Proportion to the Charge and Expectation.

But there was at this time an Incident, which might well have been inſerted with the reſt, in what Biſhop Kennet calls his State of Religion; which will ſhew us what Spirit thoſe Men are of, who are Enemies to ſpiritual, as well as temporal Liberty. I copy Dr. Calamy in what follows:

" The War being now at an end abroad, an ill " Temper began too generally to appear at home. " The very Liberty of Diſſenters to worſhip God " in their own way, had all along been a Grievance " to many, and their bearing hard upon them at " this time, in ſeveral Inſtances, where the Act of " Indulgence had not formally reliev'd them, is " an Evidence, that if they did not revive all the " former Severities againſt them, 'twas not for " want of Good-will. Several at this time met with " Trouble for inſtructing Youth; among others, " Mr. Joſhua Oldfield, then Paſtor of a Congrega- " tion of Diſſenters in Coventry, who had, accord- " ing to Law, declar'd againſt Popery, and ſub- " ſcrib'd to the Doctrine of the Church of Eng- " land, contain'd in the eſtabliſh'd Articles, who " had alſo ſworn Allegiance to the Government, " and aſſociated for it, was, upon ſuſpicion of his " inſtructing Youth in ſome ſort of Learning, ci- " ted, on the 5th of October 1697, to appear in " the Eccleſiaſtical Court to be held at Coventry " on the 14th, for the Dioceſe of Litchfield and " Coventry. Where, upon the Judge's Charge of " teaching without Licence, he demanded a Copy " of the Articles againſt him, but was put off, and " forc'd to attend again for it twenty Miles off, at " Litchfield on the 26th; there he receiv'd a Libel " ex Officio for teaching without Licence, and with- " out Subſcription to the whole Book of Common- " Prayer, and Thirty-nine Articles of the Church " entire, contrary to the 77th Canon, tho' he was " not ſo much as accus'd as deficient in any other " Qualification requir'd therein, or as chargeable " with any other Crime whatever. His preſent " Anſwer was earneſtly ſollicited by the Judge, nor " could he obtain longer Time or nearer Place for " it, than the Court-Day following, November 5, " at Litchfield. He then anſwer'd by his Proctor, " and one of his Family being occaſionally preſent, " was by the Judge himſelf terrified with the Threat- " ning of Excommunication." I have hardly patience to repeat ſuch Stuff, and may well expect the Reader will be as much out of humour when he finds it here; but it being part of the Hiſtory of this time, and a Proof of the excellent Diſpoſition of ſuch ſort of Churchmen as this Litchfield Judge towards our reform'd Brethren, I could not perſuade myſelf to omit it. The Hiſtorian proceeds; " The Per- " ſon thus threatned, if he did not accuſe this " learned Man, avoided it by withdrawing himſelf " before the Hour appointed for his Examination. " But Mr. Oldfield coming to London, at a conſi- " derable

Acts pass'd.

" derable Expence, obtain'd a Prohibition in Form, " in the Court of King's-Bench, by which the " Prosecution was stopp'd, and the Ecclesiastical " Court had Information from his Majesty, That " he was not pleas'd with such Prosecutions."

Other Bills being ready for the Royal Assent, his Majesty came to the House of Peers, April 2. and pass'd An Act for disbanding the Army, paying Seamen, &c. for which they gave 1484015 l. An Act explaining some part of an Act made last Sessions for the better Relief of the Poor; an Act for the enlarging, repairing and preserving the Bridge and Key of the Borough of Bridgwater, in the County of Somerset; an Act for dissolving the Marriage, between Charles Earl of Macclesfield, and Anne his Wife, and to illegitimate the Children of the said Anne; and to several private Bills. The Commons proceeding to other ways and means of raising the Supply, resolv'd that a further Duty be laid on Coal and Culm, as also an Imposition of the fourth Part, on all Forfeited Estates and Beneficial Grants, in England and Ireland; since the Restoration. They continu'd the Capitation-Tax another Year; they laid a Duty on all Coals imported from Scotland, and other Parts beyond Sea, which certainly cou'd not amount to much. They doubled the Stamp-Duties; they continu'd the Duties on Coffee, Tea, Chocolate and Spices. They laid 20 d. a Bushel more upon Salt. They doubl'd the Duties on Lutestrings and Alamodes; and enlarg'd the Time for purchasing Parliamentary Annuities. They laid a further Duty on Sugar. And towards raising a Fund for two Millions, they made the Duties upon Salt and Stamp-Paper, &c. to continue to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, redeemable by Parliament.

New East-India Company erected.

These two Millions were subscrib'd for by certain Merchants, in Consideration of their having the Trade to the East-Indies settled upon them, and an Interest of 8 per Cent. The old East-India Company had lost much ground in the Opinion of the People, by clandestine and irregular Practices to procure a New Establishment by Act of Parliament. Sir Thomas Cook and Sir Basil Firebrace's corrupt Dealings for that purpose, were fresh in Memory; and their present Managers offer'd to advance 700000 l. at 4 per Cent. in Case an exclusive Trade was settl'd upon them. But a New Set of Merchants, Sir John Ward, Sir Francis Eyles, Sir Gilbert Heathcote, Mr. Samuel Shepherd, &c. having given Satisfaction to Mr. Montague, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the Scheme they laid before him, he fell in with it, and their Offer of two Millions at 8 per Cent was accepted. They propos'd that the Subscribers shou'd not be oblig'd to trade in a Joint-Stock; but if any Members of them, shou'd afterwards desire to be incorporated, a Charter should be granted them for that purpose. The House of Commons judg'd this new Overture not only to be more advantageous to the Government, but also very likely to settle the controverted Trade upon a better Foundation, than it was on before. Tho' in reality there was little Difference as to the controverted Trade, between the Old Company and the New. For tho' this Trade seem'd to be laid more open, by the Subscribers not being bound in a Joint-Stock; yet considering that of 2000000 l. there was above 1950000 l. subscrib'd for an Incorporation in a Joint-Stock, the remaining 40 or 50000 l. made no great Alteration in the Matter. A Bill being order'd to be brought in for settling this New Company; the following Resolutions were included in it: First, " That every Subscriber to the two Mil- " lions, might have the Liberty of trading yearly " to the Amount of the Sum he subscrib'd for, " or might assign over that Liberty to any other " Person. Secondly, That his Majesty be impower'd " to incorporate such of the said Subscribers as " shou'd desire the same. Thirdly, That the Pow- " ers and Privileges for carrying on the East-In- " dia Trade should be settled by Parliament. " Fourthly, That the said Subscribers shou'd enjoy " the said 8 per Cent. &c. till the same should be " redeem'd by Parliament. Fifthly, That every " Person subscribing 500 l. have a Vote, and no " Person to have more Votes than one. Sixthly, " That all Ships laden in the East-Indies should be " oblig'd to deliver in England. Seventhly, That " no Person that should be a Member of any " Corporation trading to the East-Indies, should " trade otherwise than in the Joint-Stock of such " Corporation. Eighthly, That 5 per Cent. ad " Valorem, upon all Returns from the East-Indies, " be paid by the Importer, to be plac'd to the Ac- " count of the Subscribers, towards the Charge of " sending Ambassadors, and other extraordinary " Expences."

A.D.1698

This Article refers to a Part of the Scheme propos'd to the Ministry; which was, that his Majesty wou'd be pleas'd to send an Ambassador Extraordinary to the Great Mogul, in whose Dominions the East-India Company had their chief Settlements and Factories, to notify the Establishment of this New Company, and desire his Protection and Favour. The Gentleman pitch'd upon for this Employment, was Sir William Norris, Member of Parliament for Liverpool, who had a very noble Allowance for his Equipage and Table; but the Old Company, who were in possession of the Settlements and Factories, so manag'd Matters in India, by their Factors and Agents, that not only the Vice-Roys on the Coasts, but the Emperor himself, receiv'd very ill Impressions of the Conduct and Designs of the New Company; and when Sir William Norris arriv'd there, it was three or four Months before he cou'd procure the necessary Passes and Convoys for the Court at Agra, of which at last he had Audience, but to very little purpose, being in no wise equal in Benefit to the Charges of the Embassy only, and the Ambassador dy'd in his Return homewards. The other Resolutions were,

Sir William Norris sent Ambassador to the Great Mogul.

" Ninthly, That over and above the Duties now " payable, a further Duty of One Shilling and Ten- " pence a Pound Weight, be laid upon all Wrought " Silks imported from India and Persia." Every one will imagine that such a Revolution upon the East-India Trade cou'd not happen without great Opposition from the Old Company, who petition'd against it; and the House had so much Regard to their Petition, on account of their Seniority, as to offer to settle this Trade upon them, if they wou'd accept it on the same Terms and Limitations, on which the other were contented to take it. But the Members of the Old Company, imagining they should be too hard for the New in India, and make them weary of a losing Bargain, rejected the Offer; and on June 25th, the Commons pass'd the Bill in favour of the New-Adventurers. The Old Company follow'd it to the House of Lords; where they were heard by their Council, Sir Thomas Powis, and Sir Bartholomew Shower, two notable Counsellors, who having distinguish'd themselves by pleading against the Bishops in the Reign of King James; had now a like Distinction by taking Fees in all the dirty Causes against the Government in King William's Reign: tho' the Old Company's Petition was not against the Government; yet the Bill for the New One was understood to be very much for its Interest, and therefore was oppos'd by all those that did not wish it well.

'Twas urg'd against the Old Company, that their Charter being become void by their Non-Payment of the Tax impos'd upon them by Parliament; they obtain'd a New Charter the 7th of October 1693, by indirect means, having that Year paid Eighty odd Thousand Pounds out of the Company's Stock

A.D. 1698 Stock for Special Service. That the Charter was conteſted before the Queen and Council, by thoſe they call'd Interlopers: At which hearing it was unanſwerably prov'd, that the King had no Power by Law to grant the Trade to ſome Perſons excluſive of others; that the Company's Affairs were then in ſuch a Condition, that it would be a plain Cheat to others that ſhould come in upon their Stock. They however, Law and Reaſon failing, had recourſe to other Methods, and great Sums of Money were diſtributed, as it was acknowledg'd before a Committee of both Houſes. Much more was alledg'd by the Advocates for a New Company againſt confirming the Old One, who offer'd at laſt to advance the Two Millions which they had before refus'd to lend, and were anſwer'd, that they did not make the Offer with Intention it ſhou'd take Effect, but only as an Amuſement to gain Time, and ſo to baffle the Bill: for when they agreed to ſubmit their Stock to a Valuation of 50 per Cent. they knew very well that others did not value it at near ſo much, and conſequently that the Subſcribers to their Stock muſt be bubbled in a good part of their Subſcription. The Lords maturely weigh'd the Reaſons on both ſides, and being ſatisfied that the Old Company's Propoſal was likely to prove ineffectual, by reaſon, ſays the Right Reverend Hiſtorian, that ſome of their Principal Members were known to have no great Affection to the preſent Government; they gave their Concurrence to the Bill, which on the 5th of July receiv'd the Royal Aſſent, and on the 14th of July the Commiſſioners appointed by his Majeſty for taking the Subſcriptions for raiſing the Two Millions, and for ſettling a New Eaſt-India Company, laid open their Books at Mercers-hall, in which, as well as in drawing and ſolliciting the Bill, the New-Adventurers were very much aſſiſted by Mr. John Gardner a Barbadoes Merchant, whom the New Company handſomely rewarded, and choſe to be their Secretary. Such was the Zeal which People of all Ranks, and even Foreigners, ſhew'd on this Occaſion, that in two or three Days the whole Sum and ſomething above it was ſubſcrib'd. Nay, it was generally thought the Subſcriptions wou'd have run to Two Millions more, had not the Books been ſhut up before Gentlemen, Merchants and others in remote Countries, and beyond Sea, cou'd make Remittances for the Sums they intended to ſubſcribe. The Diſpatch of ſo great a Work in leſs than three Days time, after the Nation had born a War, which coſt them Four or Five and Forty Millions, ſurpriz'd and amaz'd all the World. And as it greatly mortify'd all thoſe that were aſſur'd his Majeſty wou'd be diſappointed of this Supply; ſo it gave our neighbouring Nations an aſtoniſhing Image both of the Opulence of England, and the Strength of the Government.

Two Millions ſubſcrib'd in Two Days.

The 700000 l. a year which the Parliament ſettled on the King for Life, was to be paid out of the Hereditary and Temporary Exciſe, the Poſt-Office, and ſeveral Branches of the new Subſidies. The Duties laid on Glaſs-Bottles and Tobacco-Pipes, not producing the hundredth part of what they were given for, the Deficiency was made good by a further Duty on Whale-bone and Scotch Linnen imported. And there were ſo many Petitions againſt the beforemention'd Application of the fourth part of the forfeited Eſtates to the uſe of the Publick, that no Progreſs was made in the Bill for it. It was the Opinion of many, that the Petitions of the Grantees in King Charles and King James the IId's Reigns, were the chief Motives in the loſs of this Act; for when, next year, King William's Grants of the forfeited Eſtates in Ireland came under conſideration, whoever ſpoke againſt the Reſumption Bill, was heard with Impatience, if not with Indignation.

On the 16th of May, his Majeſty gave the Royal Aſſent to an Act for Duties on Coals and Culm; an Act for continuing the Duties on Coffee, Tea, Chocolate and Spices, to raiſe a Sum to diſcharge the Tranſport Debt; an Act for the better preventing the Counterfeiting the Coin, &c. an Act of Explanation concerning the aboliſhing of the Court of the Marches of Wales; the Arbitration Act; and that for Inland Bills of Exchange; the latter was owing to the Solicitation and Induſtry of Mr. Levermore, a Merchant of Exeter: An Act to naturalize the Children of ſuch Engliſh Officers and Soldiers, who were born abroad during the War, the Parents having been in the Service of the Government; an Act to take off the Reſtraint upon making Malt, on an old Statute; an Act for ſelling the Eſtate of Sir John Churchill, Knt. for payment of his Debts; which, tho' a private Act, I mention with ſome pleaſure; for as this Man thought there could be no greater Curſe than Poverty, ſo his Family's falling into it, was the juſt Reward of the Oppreſſion and Villany, by which he acquir'd even the Eſtate that was now to be ſold again, for the Payment of his Debts. He purchas'd the Lordſhip of Churchill in Somerſetſhire, which being his own Name, has miſled ſeveral Biographers in ſpeaking of the late Duke of Marlborough as a Deſcendant of the Churchills of Churchill, whereas this ſame Knight was the firſt and laſt Churchill of that Lordſhip, which had indeed been before in the Family of Jennings, of which was the Dutcheſs of Marlborough, the Duke's Conſort. This Sir John Churchill got into the favour of the Court, by being a chief Inſtrument of their arbitrary Meaſures, as far as it fell in his way, as a Lawyer, eſpecially when he became Maſter of the Rolls. And being at Churchill at the time of the Duke of Monmouth's Defeat at Sedgmore in the ſame County, he was very active in hunting out and deſtroying the poor Wretches, who after the Rout ſhelter'd themſelves in the Woods on the ſide of Mendip Hills, in his Neighbourhood; he took delight in chaſing them and ſhooting at them like Game, and made his boaſts of it in his drunken Revels. Such was the miſerable End of this cruel and unjuſt Man!

A.D. 1698 Acts paſt.

Five days after his Majeſty paſs'd the abovemention'd Bills, Complaint was made to the Houſe of Commons of a printed Book, entitled, The Caſe of Ireland being bound by Acts of Parliament in England, written by William Molyneux of Dublin, Eſq; the ſame with whom Mr. Locke held Correſpondence by Letters. In this Treatiſe the Author endeavouring to ſtretch his Argument to the Independency of Ireland upon England, and that ſo ſoon as four or five years after England had been at the Expence of many Millions of Treaſure, and a Sea of Blood, to ſave the Religion, and Liberties, and Properties of the People in Ireland, could not but give diſtaſte to the People in England; whoſe Repreſentatives preſented an Addreſs to his Majeſty, not only for the Diſcovery and Puniſhment of the Author, but that he would diſcourage all things which might in any degree leſſen the Dependance of Ireland upon England. To which his Majeſty was pleas'd to anſwer, I will take care that what is complain'd of be prevented, and redreſs'd as you deſire.

The Commons Addreſs about the Independency of Ireland.

Other Bills being ready for the Royal Aſſent, the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and gave it to the Act for the new Eaſt-India Company; to an Act for paying to his Majeſty, his Heirs, and Succeſſors, farther Duties on Stampt Paper, &c. an Act for raiſing the 700000 l. a year for the Civil-Liſt on Tunnage and Poundage, &c.

We ſhall cloſe this laſt Seſſion of this Parliament, as his Majeſty did, in the following Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

King's Speech.

A.D.1698 nour, and for the Support and Welfare of my People.

Every one of your Sessions have made good this Character. The happy uniting of us in the Association for our mutual Defence; the remedying the Corruption of the Coin, which had been so long growing upon the Nation; the restoring of Credit; the giving Supplies in such a manner for the carrying on the War, as did, by God's Blessing, produce an honourable Peace; and after that, the making such Provisions for our common Security, and towards satisfying the Debts contracted in so long a War, with as little Burden to the Kingdom as is possible; are such things as will give a lasting Reputation to this Parliament, and will be a Subject of Emulation to those which shall come after.

The great Things done by the Parliament.

Besides all this, I think myself personally oblig'd to return my Thanks to you, Gentlemen of the House of Commons, for the regard you have had to my Honour, by the establishing of my Revenue.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

There is nothing I value so much as the Esteem and Love of my People: And as for their sakes I avoided no Hazards during the War, so my whole Study and Care shall be to improve and continue to them the Advantages and Blessings of Peace.

And I earnestly desire you all, in your several Stations, to be vigilant in preserving Peace and good Order, and in a due and regular Execution of the Laws, especially those against Profaneness and Irreligion.

The Parliament was then prorogued to the 2d of August.

Earl of Portland's Embassy in France.

It is now proper to say something of the Earl of Portland's Embassy and Reception in France. His Majesty could not have pitch'd upon a Person better qualified to support the Character he had given him, with the greatest Splendor and Magnificence. The French Court and Nation had a great Opinion of his Lordship's Capacity and Merit, and as I have already observ'd, they said at Paris, with reference to the Negotiations of Peace carry'd on by that Lord and the Mareschal de Boufflers, that the Earl of Portland was more than a Match for the Mareschal. The Earl made his publick Entry into Paris the 27th of February, and in so splendid a manner, that nothing had been seen there like it before in the Reign of Lewis le Grand. The Earl was accompanied by the Lord Cavendish, the Lord Hastings, the Lord Paston, the Lord Woodstock, Mr. Fielding, Col. Stanhope; and also by the Lord Raby, Charles Boyle Esq; and Mr. Prior, Secretary to the Embassy: I rank the three latter together, because they afterwards were Instruments of the Utrecht Ministry and Peace, and gave into Measures which they would have declar'd an Abhorrence of, when they attended King William's Favourite in this glorious Entry; who had many other Gentlemen of our Nation attending upon him, as also a Gentleman of the Horse, twelve Pages, fifty-six Footmen, twelve led Horses, four Coaches with eight Horses, two Chariots with six: he was receiv'd by the Duke of Boufflers, and conducted to the Hotel of Ambassadors in Paris, through Multitudes of Spectators, who were astonish'd at the Grandeur and Opulenee of the English.

Two days after he was admitted to his first publick Audience, which, for a distinguishing mark of Honour, he had in his most Christian Majesty's Bed-chamber, and even within the Rails round the Bed, where the King stood, with the Dukes of Burgundy, Anjou, and Berry, his Grandsons, the Count de Thoulouse, his natural Son, the Duke d'Aumont, and the Mareschal de Noailles. My Lord Portland having made his Speech in French, and deliver'd his Credentials, the King answer'd him in very obliging Terms, both in relation to his Master and himself. Then the Earl presented to the King the English Noblemen and Gentlemen of his Retinue, which being over, he had Audience of the Dauphin, and the rest of the Royal Family; and by special Directions of the French King, all his Court shew'd my Lord Ambassador most singular Marks of Honour and Respect. On the 3d of March he receiv'd a Visit from the Prince of Conti, who not long after the most Christian King set up as Candidate for the Crown of Poland, and the same who had been a Witness of the glorious Actions of King William in the Flanders War, and declar'd he thought it very unjust, to contest a Crown with a Prince who defended it so well, and fought for it so gallantly, as the King of England had done. The same day his Excellency paid a Visit to the Duke of Maine, and Count of Tholouse, who return'd it not many days after. The Lord Ambassador was attended in all the Visits he made, by the same noble and numerous Train as at his publick Entry; his Table was open to Persons of Condition, and it was seldom that he din'd without the company of those of the First Rank, who admir'd the Plenty, Elegance, and Order of his Entertainments. His Excellency had frequently Surloins of English Beef sent him from Dover, which being landed at Calais, were dispatch'd thence by Messengers on purpose, to come fresh to Paris. This he did for the Honour of England. He had also quantities of the finest Herefordshire Cyder, that of Southam in Devon not being at that time so much in vogue; and of the finest Burton Ale, which was so fine, that the Custom-House Officers, on the Seine above Roan, said it was Vin d'Espagne, Canary, and would have stop'd it, had it not belong'd to his Excellency. Thus we see, that tho' the Earl of Portland was no True-born Englishman, for which he suffer'd not a little, from the Envy and Malice of the Enemies to England, in their Libels, Speeches, &c. he did more for the Credit of our Country, as well in small things as great, than has been done by any English Ambassador at the Court of France, both before and after him. A.D.1698

On the 12th of April, his Excellency, and those who had accompanied him in his other Visits, were entertain'd at dinner by the Duke of Orleans, at his House at St. Cloud, of infamous note in History, for being the Place where the Massacre of Paris was concerted.

A Week after he went to Versailles, and stay'd there four days, being lodg'd at the Hotel de Bouillon. The first day he was treated by the Mareschal de Boufflers, who in the Afternoon shew'd him the Water-Works in the Gardens. The next day he din'd with the Marquis de Livry, Master of the King's Houshold, and after Dinner had a long Conversation with the King in those Gardens, the Fountains playing all the while. And why may we not suppose it was then that Lewis XIV. open'd to the Lord Portland the famous Project for a Partition of the Spanish Monarchy? for he did it when his Excellency was Ambassador at his Court.

On the 21st of April, the Earl was entertain'd by the Duke de Beauvilliers, and after dinner view'd the House of Trianon, and the Park, and the next day he return'd to Paris. During his stay at Versailles, one of the Officers of the French King's Houshold shew'd Mr. Prior, Secretary to the Ambassy, the Royal Apartments and Curiosities, particularly those Paintings of Le Brun, wherein the Victories of Lewis the Great are delineated, with as much Lustre as if he had really fought Battles himself, and obtain'd Victories. The French Courtier ask'd Mr. Prior, whether King William's Actions were also to be seen in his Palace? No, Sir, replied the English Secretary, the Monuments of my Master's Actions are to be seen every where, but in his own House. Who could then have thought that a Man who spoke so justly and nobly of King William, in the French King's own House, should ten or

A.D.1698 or twelve years after be, in that ſame Houſe, a Tool for thoſe who abhorr'd that King's glorious Memory, on account of thoſe great Actions done by him, in the defence of the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty.

'Tis eaſy to imagine what a Mortification it muſt be to the abdicated King, and his poor Court at St. Germains, to ſee or hear daily what extraordinary Honours were paid to the Miniſter of the Prince, who ſat upon the Throne which he vainly call'd his. The Earl of Portland had it in his Inſtructions, to inſiſt on the removing of the late King to a farther diſtance from the Court of France; but Lewis XIV. who thought it was his Intereſt to keep fair with the Jacobites in England, whoſe Cabals and Machinations might one time or other be ſerviceable to him, would not make them deſperate, by that new Diſgrace put upon their abdicated Monarch; who in the diſmal ſituation of his Affairs, durſt hardly hope, that his Friend Lewis would refuſe the Earl of Portland ſo reaſonable a Requeſt: which however ſo happen'd, and King James's intended Retirement to Avignon was prevented, by aſſurance from the French King that he would never give ear to ſuch a Propoſal, notwithſtanding that his Excellency offer'd, in his Maſter King William's name, to give King James and his Queen an honourable Penſion, and eaſe the French King of one of 50000 Lewis d'Ors a year, which he paid King James, beſides ſmaller Penſions and Appointments to his Followers, amounting in all to an immenſe Sum, not ſo much to the liking of the People of France, as to that of the Diſaffected in England; for they ſtuck not to ſay in Paris, that their Blood and Treaſure were waſted, in the Cauſe of a King who was fitter for a Cowl than a Crown, as has been hinted before.

French King will not renounce King James.

The Earl of Mancheſter taking Paris in his way home from his Ambaſſy at Venice, he accompanied the Earl of Portland in a Viſit he made the Duke of Orleans at St. Cloud, May the 5th, and in the Evening they waited on the King at Verſailles, and were receiv'd with great Civility and Reſpect. Four days after they had the honour to dine with the Dauphin; and the next day the Earl of Portland had his publick Audience of Leave of the Royal Family, King William having nam'd his Brother-in-law, the Earl of Jerſey, who had been one of his Ambaſſadors at Ryſwick for the Treaty of Peace, to ſucceed his Excellency as Ambaſſador-Extraordinary at the Court of France. On the 15th of May the Earl of Portland din'd at Verſailles with the Mareſchal de Villeroy, who in the afternoon conducted him to Marly, to ſee the Gardens and Water-Works. The next day he went to Meudon, where he hunted and ſup'd with the Dauphin, and on the 17th return'd to Verſailles, where he had a private Audience of the King. The following days he continued to take his Leave of the Court; and there being a Review of the Houſhold Troops on the 27th of May, in the Plain of Archers, where the King, the Dauphin, the young Princes of France, and many Perſons of Quality were preſent, my Lord Ambaſſador went thither alſo, but unacquainted with the late King James's Intention to be there with his pretended Son; who, by his pretended Father's directions, endeavour'd to join Converſation with the Lord Woodſtock, the Earl of Portland's Son. But the Earl his Father having obſerv'd it, order'd the Lord Woodſtock to avoid him, as his Excellency himſelf did all thoſe that belong'd to the Court of St. Germains; tho' King James had caus'd it to be told the Earl of Portland, that he never pretended to make his Lordſhip anſwerable for the ill Uſage he receiv'd from him he repreſented. Such mean ſhifts was that abdicated Monarch driven to, only to have a little notice taken of him. He himſelf did all he could to engage the Lord Cavendiſh and the other Engliſh Noblemen to accoſt him, but it was to no purpoſe; I do not find that the Lord Raby, or Mr. Boyle afterwards Lord Orrery, ſhew'd him any more Reſpect than did Lord Haſtings or Col. Stanhope, whatever Diſpoſition they had afterwards, in the four laſt years of Queen Anne, and in King George the Firſt's Reign. A week after, my Lord Ambaſſador went to Verſailles, had a private Audience of the King in his Cloſet, and took his laſt Leave; as he did afterwards of the Dauphin, and the Duke and Ducheſs of Orleans at St. Cloud. The King ſent the Earl the uſual Preſent of his Picture ſet with Diamonds, but with this difference, that the Stones were worth three times as much as thoſe of other like Gifts; his Majeſty preſented him with all the Stamps and Prints engrav'd at the Louvre, conſiſting in twelve large Folio's: and his Excellency in return, made the King a Preſent of nine very fine Engliſh Horſes. On the 8th of June he left Paris, and went to Chantilli, a Houſe belonging to the Prince of Conde, where he was entertain'd in a ſplendid manner till the 11th, when he took his leave of the Prince, and proceeding on his Journey in his return to England, arriv'd at Kenſington on the 19th. The French Annales de la Cour, &c. make the Expence of this extraordinary Embaſſy to be 100000 Crowns only, but our Hiſtorians make it almoſt three times as much, 80000 l. and one of them writes, "That the Earl was ſo far from getting any thing himſelf by his Embaſſy, that on the contrary he found at his return, Mr. Keppel, who ſome time before was created Earl of Albemarle, had ſo advantageouſly improv'd his Abſence, as to become entire Maſter of his Majeſty's Confidence. This new Earl, at the King's coming over, was but Page to his Majeſty, 'till by his artful Inſinuations he was made Maſter of the Robes, in which Place he grew ſo far into his Majeſty's Favour, that the Earl of Portland did every day loſe ground. This Change did at firſt pleaſe the Engliſh and Dutch; the Earl of Albemarle having made ſeveral powerful Friends in both Nations, who out of envy to my Lord Portland, were glad to ſee another in his place. However, tho' the firſt became now the reigning Favourite, yet the latter did ever preſerve the Eſteem and Affection of King William, who ſtill employ'd him in the Management of moſt foreign Affairs, and in what related to Scotland." So Biſhop Kennet expreſſes himſelf, and this is what the Criticks call Subtiliſing in Hiſtory, the finding out hidden Springs for Counſels and Actions, which had riſe only in the Brains of the Hiſtorian. King William was a Prince of another ſort of Genius than are thoſe Princes who are govern'd by Favourites. He was his own Miniſter in all the greater parts of Government; as thoſe of War and Peace, forming Treaties and Alliances, which in the main, were the Effect of his own Wiſdom, Knowledge, and Experience; and he knew well the Merit of thoſe he employ'd in his Service. We have obſerv'd, that by the acknowledgement of the French, Enemies to him and his Friends, the Earl of Portland was ſuperior in Capacity to the Mareſchal de Boufflers, whom Lewis le Grand employ'd to negotiate with him the Treaty of Peace, which was concluded by them; and there was no Miniſter of State in Europe at that time, whoſe Character was more than equal to my Lord Portland's in Policy and Negotiation. King William was ſenſible of this, and as ſuch a Miniſter, he never loſt ground in the good Opinion nor good Graces of his Maſter. The Earl of Albemarle had been in his Majeſty's Service from a Youth; he was the Son of Pallant, Lord of Keppel in Guelderland, by a Daughter of Opdam, one of the chief Lords of the States in Holland; he attended King William into England as his Page of Honour; and being a young Lord of fine Addreſs and ſweet Temper, with a due

A.D.1698 due mixture of Heroism; it is no wonder his Majesty took pleasure in his Conversation, in the Intervals of State-Business; and in making his Fortune, who had so long follow'd his own, which the Bishop calls the making him Master of his Confidence, as if King William could subject himself to the Government of Favourites, as our King James I. did, or as Lewis XIII. of France did, of which that glorious King was no more capable, than of being an Instrument of the French King's ambitious Projects, as were the two last Kings of the Stuartine Line.

Count Tallard the French Ambassador's Entry at London.

On the 19th of March, Count Tallard the French Ambassador arriv'd at London, but did not make his Publick Entry till the 16th of May. It was rather fine and decent than numerous and splendid; as if he either despair'd of equalling that of my Lord Portland at Paris, and so wou'd not pretend to it, or did so like one who came rather for Business than for Shew, as the Bishop words it. On the 19th, he had his publick Audience of the King at Windsor, and was entertain'd at Dinner with great Magnificence.

Notwithstanding the Ryswick Peace, the Trade between England and France was not much encreas'd by it; the Parliament of England had laid so great Duty on all French Goods, which they appropriated to several Uses; that when Monsr. Phelipeaux, came hither as Commissary for regulating the Commerce between the two Nations, with the Commissary appointed by King William to treat with him, he cou'd make nothing of it. France drain'd us of our Money, in the Reigns of King Charles and King James II. to the Value of near 1200000 l. yearly, for Wine, Paper, Stuffs, Linnen, Silks, Salt, &c. which the English cou'd not purchase with their Exports; all their Goods being so burthen'd with Impositions in France. The Ministers of those two Kings wink'd at this shameful Loss to the Nation, for fear of giving offence to the French King, by putting a stop to it. But the Parliament did it effectually at the Revolution, by laying equal Burthens on the Commodities of France, which the English before the War were extremely fond of; but when they became dear by the high Duties upon them, and they had learnt to make a shift without them, by importing Wine from Italy, Spain and Portugal, Linnen from Holland and Hamburgh; by the Manufactures of Paper, Stuffs and Silks set up at home, and by our own Salt-Pitts: the English grew very cool in their Affection to a French Trade, and very averse to the purchasing it at so dear a rate as they did it before the Revolution, in which disposition it is probable they will continue as long as France continues to load our Cloth with such heavy Impositions, as to render it equal to a Prohibition. An Attempt was made after that bad Work at Utrecht, to put France in possession of some of those Advantages by our Trade, which she had lost in King William's Reign. But even then when the Ministers thought they cou'd not do enough to oblige the French King, and the Parliament was too much influenc'd by them; the House of Commons rejected the ruinous Treaty of Commerce with France, which they had prepar'd for them.

King William fond of the Duke of Glocester.

Makes the Earl of Marlborough his Governor.

It is time now to remember the belov'd Duke Glocester, who gave such Proofs of a forward Heroick Genius, that his Majesty grew extremely fond of him, and upon his ent'ring on the 10th Year of his Age, thought it proper to take him out of the hands of the Women, and appointed the Earl, afterwards Duke of Marlborough, to be his Governor, as well out of his good Judgment of the Man, as one perfectly well qualified for an Employment of so great Importance and Trust, as to gratify the Princess Anne of Denmark, the young Prince's Mother, who at that time put the greatest Confidence in my Lord Marlborough; who the same Evening was sworn of the Privy-Council; Dr. Burnet, Bishop of Salisbury, was appointed to be Preceptor to his Highness, having under him Mr. Willis, Chaplain to the King, and Mr. Prat, Chaplain to the Princess. The choice of Bishop Burnet to be the Duke of Glocester's Preceptor, is good Evidence that his Majesty had a just Esteem of that Prelate's great Abilities and Merit, and a sufficient Rebuke to such as have endeavour'd to represent Bishop Burnet, as one whom the King thought unworthy of his Confidence and Favour. A.D.1698

And Bishop Burnet his Preceptor.

His Majesty, on the 22d of June, appointed Charles Lord Cornwallis, to be Lord-Lieutenant of Suffolk; and on the 7th of July the Duke of Newcastle was install'd Knight of the Garter. On the 16th his Majesty declar'd in Council, That he had appointed Thomas Lord Archbishop of Canterbury; John Lord Somers, Lord-Chancellor; Thomas Earl of Pembroke, Lord Privy-Seal; William Duke of Devonshire, Lord-Steward of the Household; Charles Earl of Dorset and Middlesex; John Earl of Marlborough, Governor to his Highness the Duke of Glocester; Henry Earl of Romney, Lord-Warden of the Cinque-Ports; Edward Earl of Orford, First Commissioner of the Admiralty; and Charles Montague Esq; First Commissioner of the Treasury; to be Lords-Justices of England during his Absence. About the same time he granted the Dignity of a Baron of this Kingdom to Christopher Vane of Raby Castle Esq; by the Title of Lord Barnard of Barnard Castle, in the County Palatine of Durham. This noble Person was the Son of that Sir Henry Vane, who was murder'd with the Forms of Law in the Beginning of King Charles II's Reign. He cou'd not take the Title of Raby, because tho' it was his own House, it was born by another; the first Earl of Strafford of the Name of Wentworth taking it, when he was ennobled, out of pique to Sir Henry Vane the Lord Barnard's Grandfather, who found means effectually to shew his Resentment for a needless and provoking Affront, put upon him by one who assum'd the Character of a great Politician, but in this Action shew'd a Weakness which one would take to be the Effect, rather of a Woman's Anger than a Statesman's Wisdom. The King conferr'd the Dignity of Baronet on Thomas Powell of Broadway in the County of Carmarthen Esq; and on Samuel Clark of Snailwell in Cambridgeshire; and on the 19th of July, having din'd at Sittingborn, he proceeded to Capt. Ball's near Margate, where he lay that Night. The next Morning he embark'd in the William and Mary Yacht, under a Convoy commanded by Sir Cloudesly Shovel, and next Day late in the Evening landed at Orange-Polder, lay that Night at Hounslaerdyke, and went next Day to the Hague, where he assisted at the Assembly of the States of Holland, and that of the States-General, and gave Audience to several Foreign Ministers, particularly to the Envoy of Lorrain, who notified to his Majesty the Marriage of the Duke his Master, with Mademoiselle, Daughter to the Duke of Orleans.

King William arrives in Holland.

We are now come to the Negotiations for the famous Partition-Treaty before-mention'd, of which I shall only remark in this Place, that it was more for the Honour and Interest of England, and all the Confederates than that of Utrecht; which Queen Anne's Ministers impos'd on this Nation and our Allies, at a Time when the French King had by a thousand Defeats and Disgraces been reduc'd to so low a Condition, as to express his Fears of the Confederate Arms even in his Palace at Versaillies; where in complacency to those Fears, there was a talk of removing the Court to Lyons. Count Tallard the French Ambassador at London, was order'd to follow King William into Holland, and to solicite his Majesty on the Proposal made by the French King to the Earl of Portland. He accordingly waited on

The French King afraid of the Confederates.

A.D.1698 on his Majeſty at Loo, whither the King went Auguſt 6, attended by the Earls of Eſſex, Portland, and Selkirk, and other Perſons of Quality. Before he left England, his Majeſty communicated to the Lord Somers his Chancellor, the Overture that had been made for the Diviſion of the Spaniſh Monarchy, and now the French Ambaſſador preſs'd King William for an Anſwer to it; upon which, the King order'd the Earl of Portland to write a Letter to Secretary Vernon, wherein it was mention'd, that Count Tallard having declar'd that an Accommodation might be found out in relation to the Spaniſh Succeſſion, his Majeſty had founded France upon the Conditions; which were in ſubſtance, that the Electoral Prince of Bavaria ſhould have the Kingdom of Spain and the Indies, which St. John, and the other Negotiators of the Utrecht Peace, gave up chearfully to a French Prince, after almoſt all the Dominions of Spain in Europe had been recover'd by the Arms of the Allies. All that was excepted out of the Electoral Prince's Part of the Spaniſh Succeſſion, were Naples, Sicily, Sardinia, the Province of Guipuſcoa on this ſide of the Pyrenees, Fontarabia, and St. Sebaſtian, together with the Places in Tuſcany which were then in poſſeſſion of Spain; Milan was to be given to the Archduke Charles, his preſent Imperial Majeſty. King William alſo acquainted my Lord Somers by Letter from Loo of the 15th of Auguſt, that he had order'd Vernon not to communicate the Propoſitions made by Count Tallard to any other beſides himſelf, and to leave to his Lordſhip's Judgment to whom elſe he would think proper to impart them, to the end that his Majeſty might know his Lordſhip's Opinion on ſo important an Affair, which required the greateſt Secrecy, and wherein no Time was to be loſt, if it was fit this Negotiation ſhould be carry'd on. For which purpoſe his Majeſty commanded my Lord Somers to ſend him the full Powers under the Great-Seal, with the Names in blank, to treat with Count Tallard, which his Majeſty believed might be done ſecretly, that none but his Lordſhip and Vernon, and thoſe to whom his Lordſhip ſhould have communicated it, might have knowledge of it; and ſo that the Clerks themſelves who were to write the Warrants and the full Powers, might not know what it was. His Majeſty was pleas'd to add, that according to the beſt Intelligence, the King of Spain could not outlive the Month of October, and that the leaſt Accident might carry him off before that time.

King William's Letter to Lord Somers about the Partition.

The cloſe of this Letter was thus; I received yeſterday yours of the 9th. Since my Lord Wharton cannot at this time leave England; I muſt think of ſome other to ſend Ambaſſador into Spain; if you can think of any one proper, let me know it; and be always aſſured of my Friendſhip.

William R.

It was doubtleſs a very great Prejudice to the Common Cauſe, that my Lord Wharton could not then go Ambaſſador into Spain, there not being a Man in England ſo qualified, by his Penetration, Vigour, and Activity, to diſcover and fruſtrate the clandeſtine Intrigues and Negotiations of the Marquiſs de Harcourt, whom Lewis XIV. had then ſent Ambaſſador to Spain. My Lord Somers's Anſwer to his Majeſty's Letter was as follows;

Sir, Tunbridge-Wells, 28 Aug. 1698.

HAving your Majeſty's Permiſſion to try if the Waters would contribute to the Re-eſtabliſhment of my Health; as I was juſt got to this Place when I had the Honour of your Commands, I thought the beſt way of executing them would be to communicate to my Lord Orford, Mr. Montague, and the Duke of Shrewsbury, who before I left London had agreed upon a Meeting about that time, the Subject of my Lord Portland's Letter; at the ſame time letting them know how ſtrictly your Majeſty required it ſhould remain an abſolute Secret. A.D.1698

Since that time, Mr. Montague and Mr. Secretary are come down hither; and upon the whole Diſcourſe three things have principally occurr'd, to be humbly ſuggeſted to your Majeſty.

By what follows, we ſhall ſee how wiſely and faithfully this great Miniſter, and the other two Lords of the Council, adviſ'd their Maſter, in an Affair of equal Importance and Delicacy; and it is a ſhame to the Clamour that Party-Prejudice made againſt both the King and his Miniſters, about a Matter which the Leaders of the Party knew no more of, than of the Politicks of the Great Mogul, or Cham of Tartary, in compariſon at leaſt with the Knowledge of my Lord Somers and Mr. Montague in ſuch things, and their Good-will to the Publick Service. His Lordſhip proceeds:

Firſt, that the entertaining a Propoſal of this nature, ſeems to be attended with very many ill Conſequences, if the French did not act a ſincere part; but we were ſoon at eaſe as to any Apprehenſions of this ſort, being fully aſſured your Majeſty would not act but with the utmoſt Nicety, in an Affair wherein the Glory and Safety of Europe were ſo highly concerned.

The ſecond thing conſider'd was, the very ill Proſpect of what was like to happen upon the Death of the King of Spain, in caſe nothing was done previouſly, in providing againſt that Accident, which ſeem'd probably to be very near; the King of France having ſo great a Force in ſuch a readineſs, that he was in a condition to take poſſeſſion of Spain, before any other Prince could be able to make a ſtand. Your Majeſty is the beſt Judge whether this be the caſe, who are ſo perfectly inform'd of the Circumſtances of Parts abroad.

But ſo far as relates to England, it would be want of Duty, not to give your Majeſty this clear Account, that there is a Deadneſs and want of Spirit in the Nation univerſally, ſo as not at all to be diſpos'd to the Thought of entring into a new War; that they ſeem to be tir'd out with Taxes, to a degree beyond what was diſcern'd, 'till it appear'd upon the Occaſion of the late Elections. This is the truth of the Fact, upon which your Majeſty will determine what Reſolutions are proper to be taken.

That which remain'd was the Conſideration, what would be the Condition of Europe, if the Propoſal took place. Of this we thought ourſelves little capable of judging, but it ſeem'd that if Sicily was in the French hands, they will be entirely Maſters of the Levant Trade; that if they were poſſeſs'd of Final, and thoſe other Sea-Ports on that ſide, whereby Milan would be entirely ſhut out of Relief, or any other Commerce, that Dutchy would be of little ſignification in the hands of any Prince; and that if the King of France had Poſſeſſion of that part of Guipuſcoa which is mention'd in the Propoſal, beſides the Ports he would have in the Ocean, it does ſeem he would have as eaſy a Way of invading Spain on that Side, as he now has on the Side of Catalonia.

But it is not to be hoped that France will quit its Pretences to ſo great a Succeſſion, without conſiderable Advantages, and we are all aſſured your Majeſty will reduce the Terms as low as can be done, and make them, as far as is poſſible in the preſent Circumſtances of things, ſuch as may be ſome Foundation for the future Quiet of Chriſtendom, which all your Subjects cannot but be convinc'd is your Aim. If it could be brought to paſs that England could be ſome way a Gainer by this Tranſaction; whether it was by the Elector of Bavaria, who is the Gainer by your Majeſty's Interpoſition in this Treaty, his coming to an Agreement to let us into ſome Trade in the Spaniſh Plantations, or in any other manner, it would wonderfully endear your Majeſty to your Engliſh Subjects.

A.D.1698 It does not appear, if this Negotiation ſhould proceed, what is to be done on your part, in order to make it take place, whether any more be requir'd than the Engliſh and Dutch ſhould ſit ſtill, and France itſelf to ſee it executed. If that be ſo, what Security ought to be expected, that if by our being neuters the French be ſucceſsful, they will confine themſelves to the Terms of the Treaty, and not attempt to make farther Advantages of their Succeſs.

I humbly beg your Majeſty's pardon that theſe Thoughts are ſo ill put together; theſe Waters are known to diſcompoſe and diſturb the Head, ſo as almoſt really to diſable one from writing. I ſhould be extremely troubled if my Abſence from London had delay'd the diſpatch of the Commiſſion one day. You will be pleas'd to obſerve, that two Perſons, as the Commiſſion is drawn, muſt be nam'd in it, but the Powers may be executed by either of them. I ſuppoſe your Majeſty will not think it proper to name Commiſſioners that are not Engliſh, or naturaliz'd, in an Affair of this nature.

I pray God give your Majeſty Honour and Succeſs in all your Undertakings. I am, with the utmoſt Duty and Reſpect, Sir,

Your Majeſty's moſt dutiful, and moſt obedient Subject and Servant.

P. S. The Commiſſion is wrote by Mr. Secretary, and I have had it ſeal'd in ſuch a manner, that no Creature has the leaſt Knowledge of the thing, beſides the Perſons nam'd.

This Letter did not reach his Majeſty 'till after the firſt Treaty of Partition was ſign'd; for according to the French King's Powers to Count Tallard, it was concluded the 19th of Auguſt, N. S. twenty days before the date of Lord Somers's Letter. The Perſons commiſſion'd by King William were, the Earl of Portland, and Sir Joſeph Williamſon, who for paſt Services in King Charles IId's Reign, was winked at when the Affair of this Treaty came under Conſideration of Parliament; and my Lord Somers, who gave his Majeſty ſo good and faithful Advice, impeach'd; another Inſtance of the fair Dealings and good Intentions of thoſe that aſſum'd the Name of the Country-Party, but were in truth the Diſaffected Party, who lov'd not the King, nor any who lov'd and ſerv'd him.

The Commiſſioners appointed by the States-General were the Sieur Francis Verbolt, Count of Zutphen, Burgomaſter of Nimeguen; Frederick de Reede, Lord of Lier; Sir Antony Terlee, Lord of Burers; Anthony Heinſius, Penſionary of Holland; John Beeker, Burgomaſter of Middleburgh; John Vanderdoes, Lord of Bergenſtein; William Van Haren, Deputy of the Nobility of Frizeland; Arnold Lemker, Burgomaſter of Deventer; and John de Drews: all Deputies in the Aſſembly of the States-General.

The Preamble to Tallard's Commiſſion is very merry; after the King who gave it had been fifty years at war, to enſlave the free Nations of Europe. The deſire of maintaining the Tranquility of Europe, join'd with the Eſteem and Friendſhip we have for our moſt dear and moſt beloved Brother the King of Great-Britain, having induced us to form ſtricter Engagements than before with our ſaid Brother, &c. The Dauphin's full Powers are introduc'd in the like pleaſant manner: Whereas we propoſe to ourſelves to follow in all things the Example ſet us by the King, our moſt dear and moſt honoured Lord and Father, we would chiefly imitate him in the ſincere Deſire he has to maintain the Peace which Europe enjoys, &c. What tranſcendent Examples are both Father and Son, of the great Bleſſings which Princes of ſuch peaceable Diſpoſitions are to Mankind! Thoſe that are ever ſo little acquainted with the Characters of Foreign Miniſters, know by the Names of the Dutch Plenipotentiaries, particularly that of the great Heinſius, that there were not wiſer Men in Chriſtendom, nor Men who lov'd their Country, and underſtood its Intereſt better. The Intereſt of England was certainly inſeparable from that of the United Provinces, in preventing the French King's poſſeſſing himſelf of the whole Spaniſh Monarchy. Thoſe wiſe Stateſmen knew their Nation had been too much exhauſted by the late War, to be the leaſt diſpos'd to enter into a new one, about a thing ſo diſtant from common View as the Succeſſion to the Crown of Spain; and they judg'd very juſtly, that they could not be worſe by a Treaty, than they would be without one, and might perchance be the better, at leaſt they might gain ſome time by it, to look about them, and ſee what Aſſiſtance they might expect if they took other Meaſures. One cannot imagine that How, Packington, Bolles, &c. were equal to ſuch Stateſmen, in Judgment on the Affairs of Europe; or even that Mr. William Bromley, tho' afterwards a Secretary of State, made himſelf enough acquainted with them in his Travels, to know better than they did what King William and the States-General ought to do, for preſerving the Ballance of Power, and the publick Tranquility. Yet we ſhall ſee in the ſequel, that theſe Machiavels, in conjunction with Seymour, and ſome political Weſt-Country Fox-hunters, out-argued, or outvoted, all that had been, or could be ſaid for the Partition Treaty; the Subſtance of which was:

A.D.1698

" That the Peace of Ryſwick ſhould be confirm'd.

" That in conſideration of the ill ſtate of the " King of Spain's Health, and for preſerving the " publick Peace, in caſe the ſaid Prince ſhould die " without Iſſue, it was agreed, that the Kingdoms " of Naples and Sicily, with the Places then depending on the Spaniſh Monarchy, ſituate on the " Coaſts of Tuſcany, or the adjacent Iſlands, comprehended under the Names of Santo Stephano, " Porto-Hercole, Orbitello, Telamone, Portolongo, " Piombino, the Marquiſate of Final, the Province " of Guipuſcoa, particularly the Towns of Fontarabia and St. Sebaſtian, and eſpecially the Port- " Paſſage, and likewiſe all the Places on the French " ſide of the Pyrenees, or the other Mountains of " Navarre, Alava, or Biſcay, on the ſide of the Province of Guipuſcoa, with all the Ships and Gallies, " with the Appurtenances belonging to the ſaid " Gallies, ſhould be given, in conſideration of his " Right, to the Dauphin. The Partition.

" That the Crown of Spain, and the other Kingdoms and Places, both within and without Europe, ſhould deſcend to the Electoral Prince of " Bavaria; of whom his Father the Elector ſhould " be Tutor and Adminiſtrator, 'till he came of age.

" The Dutchy of Milan to be reſerv'd and allotted to the Archduke Charles, the Emperor's " ſecond Son."

This Treaty was to be communicated to the Emperor and the Elector of Bavaria, by the King of Great-Britain and the States-General; and if they did not agree to it, then his Proportion, ſo not agreeing, ſhould remain in Sequeſtration for a time, 'till things ſhould be brought to a Temperament. And in caſe the Electoral Prince of Bavaria ſhould come to inherit his ſaid Share, and yet die before his Father, without Iſſue, the Elector was to ſucceed him in thoſe Dominions, and his Heirs after him. The Dutchy of Milan alſo was, upon the refuſal of the Archduke to accept his Share, to be ſequeſter'd to, and govern'd by the Prince of Vaudemont, and after him by his Son, Prince Charles of Vaudemont.

We ſee by this Treaty, what infinite Obligations King William had laid on the Elector of Bavaria, who came in Perſon to Loo to pay his Acknowledgments to his Majeſty, for the Care he had taken of his Electoral Family's Intereſts in the late Treaty of Partition. Yet two years after he was Elector of Bavaria's Ingratitude.

ſo

A.D.1698 ſo ungrateful and unfaithful, as to deliver up to the French all the Spaniſh Netherlands, of which he had been made Governor by the Procurement of King William.

Soon after the concluſion of this Treaty, his Majeſty took a Review of the Dutch Troops near Arnheim, and on Sept. 20, went to Zell, to give a Viſit to the Duke of that Name. His Majeſty was received here with extraordinary Reſpects, as he had been in all the Places thro' which he paſs'd in his way thither. He was here waited upon by ſeveral neighbouring Princes and Princeſſes, particularly the Electreſs of Hanover, with the Electoral Prince, and the Princeſs his Siſter. Mr. Stepney, his Majeſty's Envoy-Extraordinary to the Elector of Brandenburgh, did alſo attend the King with Letters from that Prince.

The Electoral Family of Hanover viſit the King.

While the French Court were amuſing that of Great-Britain and the States-General, with the Partition Treaty, the Marquiſs de Harcourt, the French Ambaſſador in Spain, was playing another Game at Madrid. The Queen of Spain, who was Aunt to the King of the Romans, and conſequently entirely in the Intereſt of the Houſe of Auſtria, foreſeeing the Deſigns of the French King, had early concerted Meaſures with the Count de Harrach, the Emperor's Ambaſſador, to diſappoint them. She had not only got her Creatures into the King of Spain's Council, but alſo procur'd the Vice-Royalty of Catalonia, to be beſtow'd on the Prince of Heſſe-Darmſtadt, and the Government of Milan on Prince Vaudemont, who anſwer'd not her Expectation ſo well as did the Prince of Darmſtadt. It was propos'd to make Prince Eugene Vice-Roy of Navarre, by which means the Frontiers of Spain towards France, would have been in the hands of faithful as well as able Generals; but the Oppoſition that Propoſal met with in the Spaniſh Councils, not only hindred Prince Eugene's having that Command, but gave too plain Indications of the Influence of France in the Counſels of Spain. The Duke de Medina Celi was at that time Vice-Roy of Naples, and very juſtly ſuſpected not to be ſo well inclin'd to the Houſe of Auſtria, as to be left in that Government; however, being one of the moſt conſiderable Grandees of Spain, and moſt belov'd of the People, it was thought adviſeable to continue him where he was, for fear he ſhould more obſtruct the Deſigns of the German Party, if he was recall'd. In this ſituation were the Affairs of Spain, when the Marquiſs de Harcourt arriv'd there. His Inſtructions were, if he ſaw no Probability to have the Succeſſion ſettled upon one of the Dauphin's Sons, he ſhould endeavour at leaſt to hinder it from devolving on any of the Emperor's Children, on whom it was ſettled by the Will of Philip IV. Father to Charles XII. the then King of Spain. To awe the Spaniards into a Compliance, the French King made uſe of that piece of Policy, which he never fail'd to put in practice, when his Neighbours, in the falſe Security of Peace with him, had diſarm'd: he order'd 60000 of his beſt Troops to file off towards the Frontiers of Catalonia and Navarre, and ſent ſeveral of his Men of War and Gallies into the Ports of Spain. Thus ſupported, the Marquiſs de Harcourt began to ſpeak out, ſaying, Philip IV. had exerted his Power too far, in diſpoſing of his Crown againſt the Laws of Nature, and the Conſtitution of the Realm; that the Succeſſion did lawfully belong to his Daughter's Children, and not to his Relations four Degrees remov'd. What Jargon did the French Miniſters palm upon others with whom they had to do? The Laws of Nature had been renounc'd by that King's Daughter, and by her Husband the French King, or Nature had never produc'd any thing by that Conjunction. Harcourt ſaid further, the Dauphin, Son to Maria-Thereſa, the preſent King of Spain's Siſter, had three Sons; and if the Spaniards would fix their eyes on the ſecond of them, the Duke of Anjou, to be their King, he being ſtill as pliable as wax, they might eaſily mould him to the Cuſtoms and Manners of the Country. That if they were averſe to this Overture, the Electoral Prince of Bavaria, being Grandſon to a Daughter of Spain, the King of France would rather approve of him to ſucceed in the Spaniſh Monarchy, than any of the Emperor's Children; unleſs, as the Poles had often done, to cut off the Pretenſions of Foreign Princes, they would chuſe a Sovereign among themſelves, in which the King of France would protect them. This was meer trifling, and not to be impos'd on Babes in Politicks. My Maſter, continues Harcourt, never intended to unite Spain to his own Kingdom, but only to keep it from falling into the hands of the Houſe of Auſtria, who was already grown too powerful by her late Conqueſts in Hungary. The Queen of Spain, who had a watchful eye on the French Ambaſſador, who made it his buſineſs to thwart her Deſigns, did ſoon diſcover his fraudulent Practices; and therefore, under pretence that the Air of Madrid was prejudicial to her Husband's Health, ſhe carried him to Toledo, without allowing any Foreign Ambaſſador to follow him thither. The Marquiſs de Harcourt quickly penetrated into the Deſign of the Queen's Journey, and judg'd very rightly, that being ſole Miſtreſs of the King, ſhe might eaſily prevail with him to ratify King Philip IV's Will: in which Apprehenſion he was confirm'd, by the Count de Harrach's being no more to be ſeen at Madrid; and ſuppoſing he was gone to Toledo, he went immediately thither himſelf, under pretence of a feign'd Memorial, which he gave out he had receiv'd from his Maſter, with poſitive Orders not to communicate it to any beſides his Catholick Majeſty. The Queen was extremely ſurpriz'd at the unexpected Arrival of the French Ambaſſador, and caus'd her Husband to acquaint him, he had left the Cardinal of Corduba, one of the Queen's Creatures, at Madrid, to take care of Foreign Affairs during his Abſence, to whom he might have communicated his Memorial; and that he only came there to recover his Health, and not to trouble himſelf with Buſineſs. This pretended Memorial was, it ſeems, to offer to the King of Spain the French King's Aſſiſtance to raiſe the Siege of Ceuta, which the Queen was too wiſe to let her Husband accept, ſince by that means the French would have got what ſhe was endeavouring to prevent, Footing and Intereſt in Spain. Harcourt, after this unſucceſsful Journey, bethought himſelf of another Stratagem, and being return'd to Madrid, did ſo powerfully work on the Ambition of Cardinal Porto-Carrero, that he engag'd him in the Intereſt of France.

France intrigues in Spain.

A.D.1698

In July this year there was a Treaty concluded at Stockholm, between France and Sweden. Charles XII. of Sweden had lately ſucceeded his Father Charles XI. and the Miniſters of the young King ſeem'd to be led into this Negotiation, out of a conceit that it would ſupport the Character of Mediator, which the King of Sweden had maintain'd at the Ryſwick Treaty. But the ſecond Article of the Treaty of Stockholm, is as great a Farce, eſpecially on the part of the French King, as is the Cheats of Scapin; for the ſecond Article ſtipulates, That the Aim and Intention of this Treaty was to preſerve and ſecure the Common Peace, by ſuch Means as ſhould be judg'd proper and convenient. A reverend Prelate writes, It was comical to hear the French Miniſters in Foreign Courts talk of their Maſter's Endeavours to preſerve the Tranquility of Europe, when he ſeem'd the moſt forward to diſturb it, upon the firſt News of the King of Spain's Death. And the great Camp he order'd to be made at Compeigne, was only to let his Neighbours ſee how ready he was to fall upon them, if they offer'd to oppoſe him in his Deſigns signs upon the Spaniſh Succeſſion, tho' he gave out it was only to inſtruct the Duke of Burgundy in the Art of War, which that good Prince had another notion of, and thought it ſhould never be undertaken out of a Motive of Ambition only, and for the Glory of a Prince, who makes his Glory conſiſt only in his Power. The Archbiſhop of Cambray, his Preceptor, inſtructed him better than his Grandfather, or his Grandfather's Generals could do; and the Archbiſhop's Leſſons made an Impreſſion on him, which it is ſaid, his Grandfather was not well pleas'd with.

The Duke of Burgundy's true Notion of Glory.

His Majeſty's Journey to Zell caus'd as much Uneaſineſs in the Court of France, as the Camp at Compeigne gave the Allies; tho' the latter doubted not of the French King's Deſign, either to frighten them into a Compliance with him, or make an Eruption into the Spaniſh Netherlands. But King William's main View was to cement the Union of the Princes of Germany, by a Match between the King of the Romans and the Princeſs of Hanover, which was now agreed on, and ſoon after compleated; and alſo between the King of the Romans Brother, Charles the preſent Emperor, and a Princeſs of Brunſwick; which Marriages have cloſely allied the Imperial Family to the royal Houſe of Hanover. His Majeſty did his utmoſt in this Journey, to remove the Jealouſies which ſome Princes of Germany had conceiv'd of the growing Power of the Emperor, upon which the French Miniſters and their Emiſſaries were every where declaiming, after a ſtop was put to the War in Hungary, which had laſted fifteen years, and was now happily ended by the Peace concluded at Carlowitz in Hungary, between the German and Ottoman Empires, which was chiefly owing to the prudent Meaſures taken by King William and the States-General; to induce the Turks to incline to a Treaty, England had ſent ſeveral Ambaſſadors to Conſtantinople, as the Lord Chandos, Sir Daniel Harvey, and others; but none of them was ſo much conſider'd at the Ottoman Court as William Lord Paget, ſent thither by King William with that Character, and ſo eſteem'd by the Grand Seignior's Miniſters, that he prevail'd with the Sultan to accept of his Maſter the King of Great-Britain's Mediation, in the Perſon of his Ambaſſador, for a Treaty of Peace with the Emperor of Germany: in which Mediation the States-General join'd, by their Miniſter at the Ottoman Port, Monſieur Collier. The Lords Ambaſſadors Mediators arriv'd in the Turkiſh Camp near Belgrade, about the middle of Auguſt; but it was near three Months after, that they deliver'd to the Turkiſh Plenipotentiaries, the Preliminary Articles. Thoſe Plenipotentiaries had their Reſidence at Salankemen, famous for the Victory obtain'd there, by Prince Lewis of Baden, over the Turkiſh Army. The Imperial and Confederate Miniſters reſided at Carlowitz, and the Mediators between thoſe two Places. The Imperial and Turkiſh Plenipotentiaries caus'd ſeveral fair Tents to be ſet up on the Sides of the Houſe appointed for the Conferences. And by nine in the Morning, Nov. 12th, the former arriv'd at the Mediators Lodgings, whither the Turkiſh alſo repair'd about the ſame time, and from thence went together to the Houſe of the Conference. Here, after mutual Civilities, they took their Places in the midſt of the Tent, which had four Doors, two of them oppoſite to one another for the Entrance of the Mediators, and the other two for the Imperial and Turkiſh Plenipotentiaries. The Count of Ottinghen, one of the Emperor's Ambaſſadors, had the right of the former, and the Effendi or Chancellor of the Ottoman Port of the latter. The Mediators Secretaries, and thoſe of the Imperial Embaſſy were plac'd behind, and the Turkiſh Secretary ſat down before upon the Floor. The Conferences were open'd with the Pronunciation of theſe Words, God grant an happy Peace, and laſted from half an hour after Ten, till near Three in the Afternoon; when the Mediators and Plenipotentiaries went out in the ſame Order they enter'd. The main Matters in Debate, were the giving up of Teckely, and our Saviour's Tomb, or what is ſo call'd at Jeruſalem, the latter of which, the Ambaſſadors Mediators were doubtleſs not ſo much concern'd about, as the Emperor Leopold's Plenipotentiaries; the diſmantling of Caminieck, the ſurrendering of a Place upon the Black-Sea, the quitting of Azoph to the Muſcovites; and the Limits between the two Empires, and the Venetian and Turkiſh Territories, all which took up a great deal of time: but at length the Imperialiſts and Poles concluded their Part of the Treaty, on the 26th of January 1699, as the Venetians did a Month afterwards. The Concluſion of the Truce, between the Czar of Muſcovy and the Sultan was finiſh'd ſooner, on the 25th of December 1698. By this Peace the Emperor preſerv'd his Acquiſitions, and vaſtly enlarg'd his Territories. The Poles had the ſtrong Fortreſs of Caminieck, on their Frontiers, reſtor'd to them. The Muſcovites kept Azoph, and the Venetians had all the Morea, and ſeveral Fortreſſes in Dalmatia yielded to them. Inſomuch that it was computed that the Turks, by this Treaty, loſt the beſt half of their Dominions in Europe. And King Auguſtus of Poland, having brought the Cardinal-Primate to Reaſon, and compos'd the Troubles of Lithuania; an univerſal Peace ſeem'd to be ſettled throughout Chriſtendom; owing chiefly to the War, King William carry'd on with Lewis XIV. againſt his Univerſal Tyranny; and to his happy Endeavours to make that Peace univerſal, which he had obtain'd for his own Dominions, and thoſe of his Confederates. His Majeſty ſtaid late in Holland this Year, the better to inform himſelf, as to the Conduct of the French Court, with reſpect to the Spaniſh Succeſſion; for it is not to be imagin'd King William depended more on the Partition-Treaty, than he was forc'd to by a fatal Neceſſity, having no other way to put off the French King's immediate aſſerting the Right of the Dauphin, and taking the advantage of his being arm'd and in a readineſs to march for the Poſſeſſion of it. King William ſail'd from the Coaſt of Holland, December 1. and landed at Margate, December 3. There had been in his abſence a new Parliament choſen, wherein it was too viſible the diſaffected had rather gain'd than loſt ground. A French Hiſtorian writes, L'avantage que les Torys eurent dans l'Election, &c. "The Advantage which the Tories had in the Election of the Parliament choſen this Year, was "an Effect of the Diſpoſition the People were in. "King William met with more Obſtacles to his "Deſigns from this Aſſembly than from the laſt, "&c." The Univerſity of Oxford took a fancy to chuſe Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave for one of their Repreſentatives; tho' he was wont to be choſen by the Borderers in the Marches of Scotland. Notwithſtanding the prevalence of thoſe Tories in the choice of Members, they could not chuſe a Speaker. For Sir Thomas Littleton, a Gentleman of great worth, was choſen, and preſented to his Majeſty Dec. 9. who graciouſly approv'd him; and then made this Speech to both Houſes.

A New Parliament.

The Tories gain ground.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The King's Speech.

I Have no doubt but you are met together, with Hearts fully diſpos'd to do what is neceſſary for the Safety, Honour and Happineſs of the Kingdom, and that is all I have to ask of you.

In order to this, two Things ſeem principally to require your Conſideration.

The one is, what Strength ought to be maintained at Sea, and what Force kept up at Land for this Year. All I ſhall obſerve to you upon this Head is,

That

A.D.1698 That the flouriſhing of Trade, the ſupporting of Credit, and the quiet of People's Minds at home, will depend upon the Opinion they have of their Security; and to preſerve to England, the Weight and Influence it has at preſent on the Councils and Affairs abroad, it will be requiſite Europe ſhould ſee you will not be wanting to yourſelves.

The ſecond Thing, I ſhall mention to you as of great Conſequence, is the making ſome farther Progreſs towards diſcharging the Debts, which the Nation has contracted, by reaſon of the long and expenſive War. In this the Publick Intereſt, as well as Juſtice, is concerned: And I think an Engliſh Parliament can never make ſuch a Miſtake, as not to hold Sacred all Parliamentary Engagements.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

I do earneſtly recommend theſe Things to you, that you may provide ſuch Supplies as you ſhall judge neceſſary for theſe ſeveral Occaſions.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I think it would be happy if ſome effectual Expedient could be found for employing the Poor, which might tend to the great Encreaſe of our Manufactures, as well as remove a heavy Burthen from the People; I hope alſo you will employ your Thoughts about ſome good Bills for the Advancement of Trade, and for the further diſcouraging of Vice and Prophaneneſs: The Things I have mention'd to you being of common Concern, I cannot but hope for Unanimity and Diſpatch.

'Twas obvious to all thinking Men, not biaſs'd by Faction or Prejudice, that it was abſolutely neceſſary for England, to keep up a good Naval and Land-Force to be prepar'd againſt any Invaſion from France, contrary to the Treaty of Ryſwick; whether it was on the ſide of Spain or of the Netherlands. The Dutch, who doubtleſs are as good Husbands as the Engliſh, and as good Judges of their Safety and Intereſt, kept up their Forces; but tho' King William had parted with ſo many of his Troops, the new Parliament thought there were too many ſtill left, and reſolv'd, That all the Land-Forces of England in Engliſh Pay, exceeding 7000 Men, and thoſe conſiſting of his Majeſty's natural born Subjects, be forthwith paid and disbanded. And that all the Forces in Ireland, exceeding 12000 Men, and thoſe his Majeſty's natural born Subjects, be likewiſe forthwith disbanded. The prevaling Party deſcended ſo low in their Malice by theſe Votes, as to vent it in a particular manner againſt a Regiment of Dutch Guards, which, according to a French Hiſtorian, Avoient éte attaches a ſa Perſonne depuis ſon berceau; which had been attached to his Perſon even from his Cradle. There cou'd be no meaning in ſo ungenerous a Proceeding, unworthy the honeſt Character of Engliſhmen, but to affront the King, and let all Europe ſee the little regard they had for him, who had been ten Years fighting their Battles in Defence of their Religion and Liberty. Theſe ill-deſigning Men conſider'd not that by leſſening his Majeſty's Credit abroad, they leſſen'd their own Strength and Honour, which exiſted ſo eſſentially in the King's. The French Author adds, Le Parlement ſourd aux Raiſons du Roy, The Parliament deaf to the King's Reaſons, reduced the Army of England, which made the King very uneaſy; he being by that means deprived of all Help in caſe of an Attack. However, knowing the Genius and Humour of the Engliſh, he comply'd with his Parliament; and on the firſt of February, gave the Royal Aſſent to an Act for granting an Aid to his Majeſty for disbanding the Army, and ſpoke thus to both Houſes:

The Parliament againſt the regular Troops.

The Tories Ingratitude.

1695. The King's Speech at diſbanding the Army.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I Came to paſs the Bill for disbanding the Army, as ſoon as I underſtood it was ready for me. Though in our preſent Circumſtances there appears great Hazard in breaking ſuch a Number of Troops; and though I might think myſelf unkindly us'd, that thoſe Guards who came over with me to your Aſſiſtance, and have conſtantly attended me in all the Actions wherein I have been engag'd, ſhould be remov'd from me: yet it is my fix'd Opinion, that nothing can be ſo fatal to us, as that any Diſtruſt or Jealouſy ſhould ariſe between me and my People, which I muſt own would have been very unexpected, after what I have undertaken, ventur'd and acted for the reſtoring and ſecuring of their Liberties. A.D.1699

I have thus plainly told you the only reaſon, which has induc'd me to paſs this Bill: And now I think myſelf oblig'd, in Diſcharge of the Truſt repoſed in me, and for my own Juſtification, that no ill Conſequences may lie at my door, to tell you plainly my Judgment that this Nation is left too much expos'd.

It is therefore incumbent on you, to take this Matter into your ſerious Conſideration, and effectually to provide ſuch a Strength as is neceſſary for the Safety of the Kingdom and the Preſervation of the Peace, which God hath given us.

The Commons were ſo well-pleas'd with this healing Speech, that they immediately reſolv'd, That an humble Addreſs be preſented to his Majeſty, with the Aſſurances of this Houſe, That they will ſtand by and aſſiſt his Majeſty in the Support of him and his Government, againſt all his Enemies whatſoever; which was preſented accordingly, and the King return'd this Anſwer, Gentlemen, I take this Addreſs very kindly, I am fully ſatisfy'd of your Duty and Affection to me, and have no doubt but you will always act in the manner you have expreſs'd on this Occaſion. The Lords in their Addreſs, upon the paſſing the disbanding Act, preſented their moſt hearty Thanks to his Majeſty for it, and for the gracious Expreſſions in his Speech, That it was his Majeſty fix'd Opinion, that nothing could be ſo fatal to them, as that any Diſtruſt or Jealouſy ſhould ariſe between his Majeſty and his People. "As likewiſe for his great Care and Concern for "the Safety of the Kingdom upon all Occaſions; "aſſuring his Majeſty, that at all Times for the Safe- "ty of the Kingdom, and the Preſervation of the "Peace which God had given them, they would "aſſiſt and defend his Majeſty againſt all his Ene- "mies both at Home and Abroad." The King thank'd the Lords for their Addreſs, and finding both Houſes concurr'd in Opinion, as to the disbanding of the Army; his Majeſty gave effectual Orders for reducing it to the Number of 7000 Men, the Quota hardly of one of the ſmaller Princes of Germany, when an Army is levy'd in the Empire. The King took care to preſerve more Regiments of Cavalry than Infantry in proportion; Horſe being more ſerviceable on any ſudden Exigency than Foot.

The Parliament's Addreſs.

The ſtep King William took to diſpoſe the Parliament to find out ſome Expedient for the keeping the Dutch blue Guards, near his Perſon in England was, as I well remember, highly diſapprov'd by all his true Friends; who were ſenſible that the prevaling Party would rejoice at it, as a freſh Occaſion of ſhewing their Diſregard to what he deſir'd; and it was never known, that they were convinc'd by Reaſon, or ſoften'd by Compliance. 'Tis true, much Allowance was to be made, for his Majeſty's great Affection for that Corps, to whom in a great meaſure he own'd his Victory at the Boyne, where they were the firſt that paſs'd that River and attack'd the Enemy; and who had done him, and even this Nation, other ſignal Services. But Ingratitude is as inſeparable from Faction, as Cruelty from Tyranny. On the 18th of March, the King ſent a Meſſage to the Commons by the Earl of Ranelagh, not only ſign'd by himſelf, but all of his own Hand-Writing.

King William's Meſſage about the Dutch Guards.

Who are ill-us'd.

A.D.1699 WILLIAM R.

"His Majesty is pleas'd to let the House know, "that the necessary Preparations are made for "transporting the Guards, who came with him in- "to England, and that he intends to send them "away immediately, unless out of Consideration "to him, the House is dispos'd to find a way for "continuing them longer in his Service, which his "Majesty would take very kindly."

The Commons Address about them.

The Speaker having read this Message to the House, the Question was put that a Day be appointed to consider of it, which was carry'd in the Negative, and they resolv'd to present an Address to his Majesty, importing, "That the late dis- "banding gave great Satisfaction to the Subjects, and "his Readiness to comply with the punctual Exe- "cution of it, would prevent all Occasions of "Distrust or Jealousy between him and his Peo- "ple. That they were mightily troubled they "could not comply with what he propos'd in his "Message, and at the same time have a due Re- "gard to the Constitution he came over to restore, "and so often expos'd his Royal Person to pre- "serve; and had so often in his Declaration pro- "mis'd to send all Foreign Troops that came o- "ver with him back again: That as nothing could "make the Kingdom more happy, than an entire "Confidence between his Majesty and his People; "the best way to effect it was to trust his Sacred "Person with his own Subjects, who had so emi- "nently signaliz'd themselves in the late War up- "on all Occasions." To which Address his Ma- jesty was pleas'd to return this remarkable Answer:

The King's Answer.

Gentlemen,

I Came hither to restore the ancient Constitution of this Government, I have had all possible Regard to it since my coming, and am resolv'd, through the course of my Reign, to endeavour to preserve it intire in all the Parts of it.

I have a full Confidence in the Affections of my People, and am well assur'd they have the same in me, and I will never give them just Cause to alter this Opinion.

As to my Subjects who serv'd during the War, I am an Eye-witness of their Bravery, and of their Zeal for my Person and Government; and I have not been wanting to express my Sense of this to my Parliament, as well as upon other Occasions. I have all the reason to trust and rely upon them, that a Prince can have, and I am satisfy'd there is not a Man among them capable of entertaining a Thought, that what was propos'd in my Message proceeded from any Distrust of them.

It shall be my study to the utmost of my power, to perform the part of a just and good King. And as I will ever be strictly and nicely careful of observing my Promises to my Subjects, so I will not doubt of their tender Regards to me.

The Wisdom and Temper of his Majesty's Speeches were thrown away on a Set of Men, insensible of either, and resolutely bent to follow blindly the Dictates of their Passions, in opposition to his Government and Counsels. The Dutch Guards were soon after ship'd off for Holland, at Deptford; and it was a moving Sight to behold them marching from St. James's Park, thro' London Streets, taking a long farewel of the Friends they left in England with Kisses and Tears in their Eyes; many of them having English Wives and Children, following them into a Land strange to them, after their Husbands and Fathers had spent so many Years in the Service of that Country, out of which they were now driven. Whoever had seen this as I did, must be shock'd, to hear it said, that the driving them away thus, gave great Satisfaction to the People. As to the other Dutch Troops, there was not a Word said for them, and they were all gone pursuant to the King's Declaration; which the Party did not fail to twit him with. But so small a Number as one Regiment of 5 or 600 Protestant Soldiers, cou'd surely have occasion'd no Distrust or Jealousy between the King and his People. There were 3 or 4000 Britons almost always in the Dutch Army, as well in time of Peace as War, and 'tis amazing that the English shou'd be so jealous of a single Regiment of Dutchmen. The truth is, the Revolution stuck in the Stomachs of the Party. These Dutchmen had helpt to bring it about, and were an Eye-sore to King William's Enemies, who were indeed Enemies to their Country, and all that truly lov'd it. How grateful the breaking of so many good Troops in England was to the French Court, we might have seen by their Gazetteer's filling his Paper with the Disbanding Act, and speaking it with an Air of the greatest Satisfaction. A.D.1699

Acts pass'd.

On the 24th of March, his Majesty gave the Royal Assent to an Act to prevent the excessive distilling of Spirits from Corn, &c. An Act to enlarge the Trade to Russia. An Act to prevent irregular Returns of Members to serve in Parliament, and to several Private Acts. The Friends to the present Government, in their reasoning for the Continuance of a Land-Force, insisted upon the Danger it wou'd be without it, from the Jacobite and Disaffected Party, which ought always to be reckon'd as one under Revolution-Kings; this was laugh'd at by the Seymours, the Showers's, &c. as was also the Apprehension good Englishmen seem'd to have of Danger to the Liberties of Europe, by the King of Spain's ill State of Health; but Bishop Kennet writes, "One of the Consequences of dis- "banding the Army, was a more visible Concourse "of the Jacobites and Papists about the Town and "the Court, in so bold and so insolent a manner that "the Commons took notice of it;" and presented an Address to the King February 21st, that the Laws against Papists and other disaffected Persons might be put in execution; but they took no notice, as the Bishop does, that the Swarming in and about the Court and City, was one of the first ill Consequences of their disbanding the Land-Forces. His Majesty, pursuant to their Address, caus'd a Proclamation to be publish'd, for putting the Laws in execution against Papists and other disaffected Persons.

Old East-India Company's Petition.

The old East-India Company having presented a Petition to the House of Commons, praying that their Corporation might be continu'd during the Term granted them by King William's Charter; and that 5 per Cent. on East-India Goods, impos'd by the Act for establishing the New Company, might be regulated in their favour; a Bill was order'd to be brought in according to their Petition, but it was rejected at the second Reading. And the New Company having, as has been hinted, procur'd an Embassy to the Great Mogul, his Majesty conferr'd the Dignity of a Baronet on Sir William Norris the Ambassador. He also knighted three of their Directors, James Bateman, Edmund Harrison, and Streynsham Masters Esqrs; and conferr'd the same Honour on Edward Littleton Esq; whom that Company had made choice of to be their President in the Bay of Bengal.

Something has been said of the Scots African and Indian Company, and the Dilemma King William was brought into, by giving his Consent to the Acts for establishing it, and granting a Charter to those that engag'd in it, which was certainly inconsistent with the Interest of the Indian and African Companies in England and Holland; as the Scots Company were managing Matters, by letting the Hamburghers into that Trade, on the foot of their Acts and Charter, contrary to the Rights and Immunities of the English and Dutch East-India Companies, establish'd a hundred Years before any such Company and Trade were thought of in Scotland.

A.D.1699 land. Had the Scots been contented with Trading on their own Bottoms to Guinea and the Weſt-Indies, without breaking in upon the Trade of other Nations ſettled there before them, there cou'd not have been any Thing ſaid againſt it. But that Scotland ſhould be a Back-door to let in Foreigners of all ſorts into the moſt beneficial Branches of the Engliſh Trade, was what they cou'd not in Juſtice and Reaſon expect. Whatever general Expreſſions might be made uſe of in their Acts and Charter to countenance it, it was the Obſervation of that famous Politician the firſt Earl of Shaftesbury, that Scotland is a Door to let Good or Evil into England; and if this Obſervation did ever hold good, it muſt have done ſo with reſpect to the incorporating Foreigners with Scots, to encroach upon the Trade of England, which they moſt certainly were encourag'd to do enormouſly, being privileg'd to trade Cuſtom-free for 21 Years. The Writers on the Scots ſide of the queſtion, avoid touching upon the great Detriment, the letting Foreigners into the Engliſh Eaſt-India Trade would be to England. The wrong done to the Engliſh Company, by their admitting Hamburghers into that beneficial Commerce, ſupported by them at the Expence of 2 or 300000 l. per Ann. is what they keep clear of, becauſe they would have been oblig'd to acknowledge that King William had it incumbent upon him, to protect the Eaſt-India Company of England, againſt all Invaders and Intruders in their Trade; and that his Royal Care was due in the firſt place to the Engliſh Company, being of long ſtanding and in poſſeſſion of that Trade, as well by Statutes and Charters, as by Preſcription. Nay, the Hamburghers were ſo ſenſible of the Advantages they ſhould make by this Trade, and the Diſadvantages the Engliſh and Dutch Eaſt-India Companies would receive from it, That the more Oppoſition the latter offer'd to their Project, as a Scots Writer words it, the more the Hamburghers thought it their Intereſt to embrace it; and their falling in with it ſo eagerly, and even courting the Scots to accept of Two, Three or Four Hundred Thouſand Pounds of their Money, was enough to raiſe a Spirit in Scotland upon a Diſappointment, which Argument and good Policy could not cope with.

Scots African Company objected againſt.

Notwithſtanding all Diſcouragements at home; the Scots African and India Company went on with their Deſign of ſettling a Colony at Darien, an Iſthmus on the Continent of America; between the 8th and 10th Degrees of Northern Latitude, about 70 Miles over in the narroweſt Place; in length from Eaſt to Weſt on the North-ſide, from the Mouth of the River Darien to Port Sciran 140 Italian Miles, and on the South-ſide from Caret Bay to the River of Cheapo 160 Miles. It is bounded on the North and South with the vaſt Oceans, that carry the Name of the North and South-Seas. Its Situation is very pleaſant and agreeable, and very commodious for a ſpeedy and ſhort Communication of Trade between the North and South-Seas, and preventing that vaſt Compaſs which muſt otherwiſe be fetch'd round either of the Extremes of North and South-America. By this means alſo it lies convenient for a ſpeedier Communication of Trade between Europe and the Eaſt-Indies, than any that has hitherto been found out. Mr. Dampier ſays, that from Cheapo River, a Man may paſs from Sea to Sea in three Days, and that the Indians do it in a Day and a half. There are abundance of valuable Iſlands on both ſides the Iſthmus, which prevent the breaking in of the Ocean upon it at once, and beſides the Conveniencies of Wood, Fiſh, Fowl, and Water, afford good and ſafe riding in all Weathers to any Number of Ships. The Continent is agreeably intermix'd with Hills and Vallies, of great Variety for Height, Depth and Extent. The Vallies are watter'd with Rivers, Brooks and Springs, which take their riſe from a great Ridge of Hills that run along the Iſthmus, but neareſt to the Northern Shore, from which it is about 15 Miles diſtant. The River of Darien is large, but the Depth of its Entrance not anſwerable to its Breadth; further in 'tis deep enough, and has a good Harbour in Caret Bay, which is ſome Leagues up. From this Bay to the Promontory near Golden-Iſland, the Shore is indifferently fruitful, and the Soil on the Northern Coaſt generally good. I ſhall not enter farther into the Deſcription of this Country, its Product and People; it wou'd too much ſwell this Digreſſion. What I have ſaid is to ſhew that the Situation of Darien is moſt tempting for a Settlement; and it's great pity when the Scots had got footing there, that ſome Expedient had not been found out for their keeping it, without prejudice to the Peace or Trade of England; and the Engliſh might in time have reap'd the Benefit of their Neighbours firſt Adventure, by Partnerſhip or Purchaſe.

The Colony at Darien.

A Deſcription of the Country.

A.D.1699

On the 27th of October 1698, Capt. Pennicock, Commodore, with one Frigate and three or four Merchant-men, having 1100 Men on board, anchor'd in a fair ſandy Bay, three Leagues off the Gulph of Darien; upon which two Canoes with ſeveral Indians came on board; were very free with the Scots, telling them they had been long expected, and were very welcome. Accordingly, ſeveral of their Kings enter'd into a League with them, and one of 'em condeſcended to take a Commiſſion from the Scots Council; who gave the Country the Name of Caledonia, and that of New Edinburgh to the Place where they ſettled; which that Council, who were

Scots land at Darien

Mr. Robert Jolley,
Mr. J. Montgomery,
Mr. Dan. Mackay,
Capt. Rob. Pennicock,
Capt. Robert Pincartone,
Mr. William Paterſon,
Mr. Hugh Roſs, Secretary,

deſcrib'd thus in a Letter to the Company, dated the 28th Dec. 1698.

" The Place where we are ſettled is 4 Miles " Eaſt of Golden-Iſland, within a great Bay; we " have an excellent Harbour, ſurrounded with " high Mountains, capable of holding 1000 " Sail land-lock'd, and ſafe from all Winds and " Tempeſts. The Mouth of the Harbour is about " random Cannon-ſhot over, form'd by a Peninſula on the one ſide, and a Point of Land on " the other. In the middle of the Entrance is a " Rock three Foot above Water, upon which the " Sea breaks moſt terribly when the Wind blows " hard; and within the Point there is a ſmall Rock " three Foot above Water. On both ſides theſe " Rocks, there is a very good wide Channel for " Ships to come in; that on the South-ſide is " three Cables long, and ſeven Fathom deep; and " that on the North two Cables long: from the " two outermoſt Points the Harbour runs away " Eaſt a Mile and a half; and near the middle on " the right-hand a Point of Land ſhoots out into " the Bay; ſo that by raiſing Forts on the ſaid " Points, on the Rock in the middle of the En- " trance, and the two outermoſt Points, it will " be the ſtrongeſt Harbour both by Art and Na- " ture that is in the known World. The Bay " within, is for the moſt part ſix Fathom Water, " and till you come within a Cable's Length of " the Shore, three Fathom and a half. Thus a " Key may be built to which great Ships may lay " their Sides and unload: The Peninſula which lies on " the left-hand, is a Mile and a half in Length, very " ſteep and high towards the Sea, ſo that it would " be difficult for any body to land till you come to " the Iſthmus, where is a ſmall ſandy Bay which lit- " tle Ships may put into, but it is eaſy to be ſecur'd " by a Ditch and Fort. There are ſeveral little " Rivers of very good Water that fall into the " Bay;

A.D.1699 " Bay, and it abounds ſo with excellent Fiſh, that " we can with eaſe take more than is poſſible for " us to deſtroy, having ſometimes caught 140 at " a Draught; amongſt others there be Tortoiſes, " which are excellent Meat, and ſome of them a- " bove 600 weight. The Peninſula was never in- " habited, and is cover'd all over with Trees of " various ſorts, as ſtately Cedar Trees, Braſil Wood, " Lignum-Vitæ, Box-Wood, Fuſtick-Wood, Yel- " low-Sanders, Manſhineel, and the like ſorts, be- " ſides others, whoſe Names we know not, grow " on the Continent; and we doubt not of find- " ing out the Nicaragua-Wood: We have found " Cabbage-Trees, the Fruit of which eats like Col- " liflowers. The Natives have no Plantation with- " in two Miles of us.

" We have a Watch-Tower upon a high Hill " adjoining to our Plantation, about a Mile South " of the Bay, from whence we can ſee the Ships in " the Bay, and as far as to the Mouth of the River " Darien: we can ſee above thirty Miles ſouth- " ward, and have a fine Proſpect of Golden-Iſland " and the Iſle of Pines, weſtward towards Porto- " bello, and northwards toward Jamaica. The Hill is " about a Mile in height, ſo that we can ſee any " Ships before they come within ſome Leagues of " the Harbour. We compute ourſelves to be about " fifty Leagues North of Carthagena, and as much " South of Portobello, &c."

If to this Deſcription we had added that of the great Plenty of Proviſions of almoſt all kinds; and what we fear is to be ſuſpected, the Proſpect they ſaw there was of fiſhing up more Gold-Duſt than was brought from Guinea; one may well imagine that the Hearts of the Scots were ſet upon this Settlement, and that their Heads muſt be almoſt turn'd with a balk in it: which indeed they had ſome Reaſon to expect, from the Treatment they met with in America; for five Months after their landing at Darien, the Governor of Jamaica put forth this Proclamation againſt them:

By the Honourable Sir William Beeſton, Knt. Governor and Commander in chief for his Majeſty in the Iſland of Jamaica, and of the Territories and Dependencies of the ſame, and Admiral thereof.

" WHereas I have receiv'd Orders from his Ma- " jeſty, by the Right Honourable James " Vernon Eſq; one of the Principal Secretaries of " State, that his Majeſty was not inform'd of the " Intentions and Deſigns of the Scots in peopling " Darien, which is contrary to the Peace between " his Majeſty and his Allies, commanding me not " to afford them any Aſſiſtance in compliance " therewith: In his Majeſty's name, and by his " order, I do ſtrictly charge and require all and e- " very his Majeſty's Subjects, that upon no pre- " tence whatſoever, they hold any Correſpondence " with the Scots aforeſaid, or give them any Aſſiſt- " ance with Arms, Ammunition, Proviſion, or a- " ny thing whatſoever, either by themſelves, or any " other for them, nor aſſiſt them with any of their " Shipping, or of the Engliſh Nation's, upon pain " of his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, and ſuffering the ſe- " vereſt Puniſhment. Given under my Hand and " Seal of Arms, the 19th of April, 1699, and in the " Eleventh year of the Reign of King William the " Third, King of England, Scotland, France, and " Ireland, and Lord of Jamaica, Defender of the " Faith."

The like Proclamations were publiſh'd in Barbadoes and New-England.

It was a very ſhort Anſwer which the Scots gave to the Charge of ſettling in Darien, without acquainting the King with their Intention: As to our informing his Majeſty with our Deſign, there was neither any need of it, nor had we reaſon to do ſo. Which certainly was very wrongly judg'd by them; A.D.1699 for not to enter into a Diſquiſition of the Spaniards or the Dariens Right to the Country, it was reaſonable, that if they expected Support or Aſſiſtance from the Engliſh, they ſhould have let the King know what they were going about, and not have made uſe of their Acts of Parliament and Charter, otherwiſe than his Majeſty intended in granting them. If they did it in defiance of the Government of England, they ought not to have expected Support and Aſſiſtance from the Engliſh. Their chief Advocate tells us in his Pamphlet on this Subject, That England needed not to have been alarm'd at the Scots having an Eaſt-India Company, for they did not think then of an Eaſt-India Trade. One reaſon he gives for it is, their want of Money, which they could not ſpare to ſend thither. Very true: but can any one imagine, that if they had propos'd nothing but a Settlement at Darien to the Hamburghers, that thoſe wary Merchants would have preſs'd their Money upon them by Hundreds of Thouſands of Pounds; or that they would have wanted Money, had their Hamburgh Scheme ſucceeded? There is a little pleaſantry in hearing the Scots complain of the Unkindneſs of the Engliſh, in not aſſiſting them in an Undertaking ſo contrary to the general Senſe of the Engliſh Nation, and carried on in great Oppoſition to it. As to his Majeſty's Conduct in this Affair, how could he with Prudence have acted otherwiſe, after the Scots had, without his Participation, taken a Step ſo little to the good liking of the Engliſh, the Dutch, and the Spaniards, who all preſented him with Addreſſes and Memorials againſt their Eaſt-India and African Companies? The King declares, that Company had began a Settlement in America, without acquainting him with it, and ſo far had acted contrary to his Intentions, in granting their Acts and their Charter. The Parliament of England were earneſt with him to protect their Eaſt-India and Weſt-India Trade againſt this Innovation; and ſurely his Majeſty was in the right, to give them a favourable hearing, as well as the Scots. If the latter by their Management had given the King reaſon to change his Opinion, with reſpect to the Powers given them by their Acts and their Charter, it is no more than Parliaments themſelves have often done on the like Occaſion. The Act for encouraging the Directors of the South-Sea Company to negotiate their Stock, as they did 13 or 14 years ago, 'till they had almoſt thrown the Nation into Confuſion, might have been as well pleaded by thoſe Directors to juſtify their Conduct, which the ſame Parliament condemn'd, in a moſt exemplary manner; as the Scots pleaded their Acts and Charters, as a Warrant for their incorporating with them Hamburghers, and other Foreigners, in our Eaſt-India and Weſt-India Trade.

The Scots act contrary to the King's Intention.

Having given a hint of our Parliament's Addreſs to the King concerning the Scotch Colony at Darien, I ſhall inſert that of the Houſe of Lords entire, becauſe it ſets the Matter in the trueſt light, with regard to England; where this Addreſs, however, did not paſs ſo unanimouſly, but ſeveral Lords enter'd their Proteſts againſt it.

Lords Addreſs againſt their Setlement.

" WE the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in " Parliament aſſembled, being, according " to our Duty, ſollicitous for the Preſervation and " Increaſe of Trade of this Kingdom, on which " the Support of your Majeſty's Greatneſs and Ho- " nour ſo much depends, as well as the Security " and Defence of your People; have been very " apprehenſive, that the Steps lately made towards " a Settlement of your Subjects of the Kingdom " of Scotland at Darien, may tend to the great Pre- " judice of this Nation, and poſſibly to the Diſtur- " bance of the Peace and good Correſpondence " with the Crown of Spain, which we conceive is " very advantageous to us all: we have therefore taken

A.D.1699 " taken the ſame into our ſerious conſideration, as " a Matter of the greateſt Importance, and proper " to be laid before your Majeſty, as the common " Father of both Countries. And as we are truly " ſenſible of great Loſſes our neighbour Kingdom " hath ſuſtain'd both by Men and Treaſure, in " their Expeditions to that Place, which we very " heartily lament, ſo we ſhould not endeavour, by " any Interpoſition of ours, to defeat the Hopes " they may ſtill entertain of recovering thoſe Loſ- " ſes, by their farther engaging in that Deſign, but " that we judge ſuch a Proſecution, on their parts, " muſt end not only in far greater Diſappoint- " ments to themſelves, but at the ſame time prove " very inconvenient to the Trade and Quiet of this " Kingdom.

" On this Occaſion we humbly preſume to put " your Majeſty in mind of the Addreſs of both " Houſes, preſented to your Majeſty on the 17th " of December, 1695; in the cloſe of which Ad- " dreſs your Majeſty will ſee the unanimous Senſe " of this Kingdom, in relation to any Settlement " the Scots might make in the Weſt Indies, by vir- " tue of an Act of Parliament paſs'd about that " time in the Kingdom of Scotland, which was the " Occaſion of the ſaid Addreſs.

" And we humbly repreſent to your Majeſty, " that having receiv'd Information of ſome Orders " your Majeſty had ſent to the Governors of the " Plantations on this ſubject, the Houſe did on the " 10th of January laſt come to this Reſolution, " That your Majeſty's Pleaſure ſignified to the Go- " vernors of the Plantations, in relation to the " Scotch Settlement at Darien, was agreeable to the " Addreſs of both Houſes of Parliament, preſented " to your Majeſty on the 17th of December, 1695. " And on the 8th of this inſtant February, this " Houſe came to this further Reſolution, That the " Settlement of the Scots Colony at Darien, is incon- " ſiſtent with the Good of the Plantation-Trade of " this Kingdom. All which we humbly hope your " Majeſty will take into your royal Conſideration, " and we are confident your Majeſty cannot be " thought too partial to the Addreſs of this Houſe, " if your Majeſty ſhall in the firſt place conſider " the Advantage and Good of the Trade of this " Kingdom, by the Preſervation and Improvement " of which, both theſe Kingdoms, and all your o- " ther Dominions, muſt on all Occaſions princi- " pally be defended."

His Majeſty's moſt gracious Anſwer:

His Majeſty's Anſwer.

HIS Majeſty having received a very dutiful Addreſs from the Houſe of Peers, in relation to the Endeavours lately uſed by ſome of his Majeſty's Subjects of the Kingdom of Scotland, towards making a Settlement at Darien; in which they humbly repreſent to him their Opinion, that ſuch a Settlement is inconſiſtent with the Good of the Plantation-Trade of this Kingdom, is pleas'd to let the Houſe know, that he will always have a very great regard to their Opinion; and to aſſure them, that he will never be wanting, by all proper Means, to promote the Advantage and Good of the Trade of England. At the ſame time his Majeſty is pleaſed to declare, that he cannot but have a great Concern and Tenderneſs for his Kingdom of Scotland, and a deſire to advance their Welfare and Proſperity; and is very ſenſibly touch'd with the Loſs his Subjects of that Kingdom have ſuſtain'd, by their late unhappy Expeditions, in order to a Settlement at Darien. His Majeſty does apprehend that Difficulties may too often ariſe, with reſpect to the different Intereſts of Trade, between his two Kingdoms, unleſs ſome way be found out to unite them more nearly and compleatly. And therefore his Majeſty takes this Opportunity of putting the Houſe of Peers in mind of what he recommended to his Parliament, ſoon after his Acceſſion to the Throne, that they would conſider of an Union between the two Kingdoms. His Majeſty is of opinion, that nothing would more contribute to the Security and Happineſs of both Kingdoms; and is inclin'd to hope, that after they have liv'd near an hundred years under the ſame Head, ſome happy Expedient may be found out, for making them one People, in caſe a Treaty was ſet on foot for that purpoſe; and therefore he does very earneſtly recommend this Matter to the Conſideration of the Houſe.

He recommends the Union.

A.D.1699

The Lords paſs'd an Act, authorizing certain Commiſſioners of the Realm of England, to treat with Commiſſioners of Scotland, for the Weal of both Kingdoms: But the Commons were ſo out of humour with the Proceedings of the Scots at that time that they refus'd to give their Concurrence.

The Scots repoſſeſs themſelves of Darien, and leave it.

The Oppoſition the Scots met with, in their Endeavours to eſtabliſh their Eaſt-India and African Company, and to make a Settlement, did not diſcourage them; nay, tho' their Colony, after their firſt landing, were oblig'd to quit the Country, for want of Supplies of all ſorts of Neceſſaries from Scotland, they ventur'd on another Expedition, and repoſſeſs'd themſelves of it, with no better Proſpect of Succeſs than before.

The Earl of Portland did generally bear the Blame of the Diſſatisfaction of the Scotch Nation with the Engliſh, on account of their Diſappointments in the Affair of their Company and Colony; and it was thought he was influenc'd as much at leaſt by the Dutch as the Engliſh in the Counſels he gave the King on this Occaſion. He was never very popular in England, being thought to engroſs more of his Maſter's Favour than thoſe that envied him were willing to think him worthy of: and it was from this Motive, that the Parliament, ſome time after, order'd an Addreſs to the King, That none but Natives of his Dominions, Prince George excepted, be admitted to his Councils in England or Ireland.

An Addreſs againſt Foreigners in the Council.

It is worth remarking, that the Ferment which appear'd in Scotland at this Juncture, like all other Ferments ſince the Revolution, was work'd up by the Enemies to King William. For tho' there were a great many Members of the Scots Company who were of the Church by Law eſtabliſh'd in that Kingdom, and conſequently Friends to the Proteſtant Intereſt, and King William the Supporter of it; yet there were alſo many notorious Jacobites, who made a handle of this Buſineſs to make Proſelytes to their Party. One of the moſt zealous Advocates for the Darien Settlement, has an Article, in a Treatiſe which he calls, The Grievances of Scotland in relation to Darien, purely upon this Subject, Why the Presbyters are join'd with the Court-Party againſt our Colony? And that ſome of their own principal Men did not give into the Darien Project, tho' it is repreſented as the unanimous Vote of the Nation, appears by what he ſays himſelf; One of our own Secretaries of State knew of the Weſt-India Proclamations againſt the Colony, before they were iſſued, as the Engliſh Secretary Vernon has given out; which Mr. Vernon ſo offended this Author, that tho' he was a Miniſter of State, and Privy-Counſellor, yet he ſays he was formerly a Licenſer of Books, for taking off the Penal Laws, and overturning the Proteſtant Religion. He abuſes him, in repreſenting him as a Licenſer of the Preſs. If he licens'd Books, it muſt be by virtue of ſome Office he held in the State; and his having been Secretary to the Duke of Monmouth, when he was in the height, not only of the royal, but the popular Favour, is far from being an Indication of his being popiſhly affected.

The Scots reflect on Mr. Vernon.

Forces in Scotland.

At the ſame time that the Darien Buſineſs made ſuch a noiſe in Scotland, the Parliament there had the Land-Forces under conſideration, and voted them neceſſary to be kept up: which that Scotch Advocate upbraids King William with, as if he did not deſerve it from them, tho' it was done for their

A.D.1699 own Security: and yet there was a Coalition of Jacobites and Darienites, as they may be call'd, to break thoſe Forces, which they term'd a Standing Army; and I will muſter them, to ſhew what a Hoſt it was, againſt which they made that vain Clamour. A.D.1699

It was ſaid in England, that eight or ten of the Scotch Privy-Counſellors appear'd againſt this ſmall Force, out of pique at the Darien Buſineſs. But the Scotch Parliament were not deterr'd by the formidable Name of a Standing Army, from allowing of this number of Forces, and providing for their Pay.

Kept up by Parliament.

Enough has been ſaid of the Scotch Eaſt-India Company, and their Settlement in America, to which I ſhall only add, that upon Advice of Capt. Pincarton and his Crew, thirty Men only, being taken by the Spaniards, the Company ſent up an Addreſs to the King by the Lord Baſil Hamilton, ſetting forth, that the ſaid Pincarton, Commander of their Ship Dolphin, being forc'd aſhore and bulg'd near Carthagena, was, with all his Company, detain'd Priſoners by the Spaniards. Which was no wonder at all, ſince the Spaniards look'd on that Captain and his Company, as Men who had invaded their Country. In this Addreſs, they deſir'd the King to take ſpeedy and effectual Meaſures for redreſſing their Damage, and obtaining the Freedom of thoſe Priſoners. That the Scots made an ill choice of a Perſon to ſend to Court with this Addreſs, will appear to every one, who knows that this ſame Lord Baſil was ſo profeſs'd a Jacobite, that he had not only avoided paying his Duty to his Majeſty, when he was formerly at London, but had never ſince given any Evidence of his Loyalty, nor acknowledg'd his Majeſty's Government, for which reaſon he was not ſo acceptable at Court as a loyal Man would have been. However, his Majeſty having receiv'd the Addreſs, return'd this Anſwer, That he was reſolv'd in the Terms of the Treaties with Spain, to demand that Capt. Pincarton, and thoſe of his Crew, who are detain'd Priſoners at Carthagena, be releas'd and ſet at liberty. I think this Incident of Lord Baſil Hamilton ſufficiently juſtifies what I have hinted, of the ill uſe the Enemies to the Government made, of ſome that were not its Enemies before, to divide the Scots, and ſupport the languiſhing Cauſe of the abdicated King. The vile Author of the Memoirs which go under the Name of Lockhart's, ſticks not to tell us that the joining of the Friends to the Company, with the Friends to King James, form'd the Country-Party, which then began to get that Title.

Riſe of the Scotch Country-Party. P. 5.

The Houſe of Commons in England being complain'd to of a printed Book, entitled, An Enquiry into the Cauſes of the Miſcarriages of the Scots at Darien, and having examin'd the ſaid Book, they reſolv'd, That it highly reflecting on the Honour of his Majeſty, and both Houſes of Parliament, and tending to create Jealouſies and Animoſities between the two Kingdoms of England and Scotland, was a falſe, ſcandalous, and traitorous Libel; which they order'd to be burnt by the hands of the common Hangman, and addreſs'd his Majeſty to iſſue out his royal Proclamation, for the diſcovering and apprehending the Author, Printer, and Publiſher of the ſaid Libel, which Proclamation was publiſh'd accordingly; but the Author, George Ridpath, enough known as Writer of a News-Paper call'd The Flying Poſt, got, as he boaſted in another Pamphlet worſe than the former, out of the Juriſdiction of England. Speaking, in the laſt Tract, of the Union Bill paſs'd by the Lords, he ſays, "The unmanly and ſcurrilous Reflections thrown upon "the Scots in the Houſe of Commons, by ſome "noted Tories, on that Occaſion, are Indication "ſufficient, that ſuch a Union as they deſign, would "only compleat our Ruin. But at the ſame time "we muſt own, that our Nation is eternally ob"lig'd to thoſe worthy Members of the Lower "Houſe, who declar'd they rejected the Bill, be"cauſe they would not concur in putting a Sham "upon their neighbouring Nation, that had been ſo "much injur'd, and ſo barbarouſly treated, by the "Weſt-India Proclamations." If there were any ſuch Members in the Houſe of Commons, who rejected the Union Bill out of Tenderneſs to the Scots, there was a very great Majority in the ſame Vote out of Hatred to them, becauſe their Church by Law eſtabliſh'd is Presbyterian, and this Houſe of Commons diſtinguiſh'd themſelves in an extraordinary manner by their Zeal for the Church of England as by Law eſtabliſh'd, as will be ſeen preſently.

After all I have ſaid, I as much intereſted myſelf in the Succeſs of the Darien Settlement, as did any Native of Scotland, who had no particular Intereſt in the Company, and was heartily ſorry that a Way was not found out to preſerve that Settlement in Britiſh hands, without regarding what the impotent Spaniards ſaid or did to the contrary: but as the great Eaſt-India and African Companies of England and Holland could not be perſuaded that their Trade would not ſuffer, by the Encroachment given Hamburghers, Dantzickers, and others, under the Scotch Acts and Charter; I do not ſee how it was poſſible for King William to avoid granting them his Protection; nor how the Scots could, with Reaſon and Juſtice, admit Foreigners into the moſt beneficial Branches of the Trade of England and Holland. Which being what was not underſtood by his Majeſty, when he paſs'd their Acts and granted them his Charter, he could not juſtly and reaſonably withdraw his Protection from the Engliſh and Dutch Companies, who had been ſo long in poſſeſſion of the Eaſt-India and Weſt-India Trade.

As

A.D.1699 As to the Affairs of Ireland, it muſt be noted, that Endeavours had been us'd to raiſe a like Spirit againſt the Court and Land-Forces there, as the Sound of a Standing Army, and the Diſappointment at Darien, had done in England and Scotland; tho' not with ſo great Effect as in either of thoſe Kingdoms, eſpecially England, which had but juſt taſted of that bitter Cup of Popiſh Tyranny, of which the Proteſtants in Ireland had drunk large Draughts. We may ſee what theſe Endeavours were, by this Account of it, taken from the Works of a diſguſted Revolutioner; "If the State of Affairs in Ireland be conſider'd, it will appear to be "ſuch as may make it dangerous to provoke the "Scots. It is well enough known that the People "of Ireland are not very well pleas'd with their "Treatment by ſome in England, &c." This refers chiefly to the Woollen Manufacture, of which the People of Ireland were generally more fond than of the Linnen; not duly conſidering, that England could as ill part with that Manufacture, as with their Bread, and was ready to give them all manner of Encouragement in the Manufacture of Linnen, which they could carry on with more Succeſs than the Engliſh.

A Motion in the Parliament of Ireland againſt the French Proteſtants in the Army.

At the laſt meeting of the Parliament a Motion was made, that an Addreſs be preſented to the Lords-Juſtices, the Duke of Bolton and the Earl of Galway, that the five Regiments of French Proteſtants then in Ireland, ſhould be disbanded;

The Earl of Galway's Regiment of Dragoons.
The Marquiſs of Miremont's Regiment of Dragoons.
Col. Martoon's Regiment of Foot.
Monſ. La Mellionere's Regiment.
Monſ. Belcaſtel's Regiment.

In all about 1300 Dragoons, and 2900 Foot, who had done ſuch excellent Service in the late Wars with the Iriſh Papiſts, that it is ſhocking to hear of ſuch a Motion in a Proteſtant Parliament of Ireland. It paſs'd indeed in the Negative, but that it was mov'd at all, is equally a Matter of amazement and ſhame, after one has been juſt reading what thoſe Troops did towards delivering the Proteſtants of that Kingdom, out of the hands of their inveterate and cruel Enemies. Part of the Forces on the Iriſh Eſtabliſhment were reduc'd, and in particular, ſeveral Companies of Col. Tidcombe's, Col. Fairfax's, the Marquiſs de Pizar's, and other Regiments. This Parliament gave a Supply of 120000 l. by a Land-Tax; and the Lords-Juſtices having paſs'd that Bill, adjourn'd the Parliament, and took a progreſs into the Country, in order to view the State of ſeveral Places in that Kingdom.

I am by no means ſo fond of Biſhop Kennet's Method of writing Hiſtory, as to imitate it; but every one knows that the State of Religion, a particular Article of his, is ſo interwoven with the Hiſtory of Nations, eſpecially ſince the Roman Emperors became Chriſtians, that an Hiſtorian cannot well omit it. The Biſhop begins his Account of it at this time, with an Obſervation on the Quakers, who of all Diſſenters, according to him, leaſt deſerve the Toleration; as if Liberty of Conſcience, to which every Man has as natural a Right as to the Air he breathes, was owing only to the Condeſcenſion of thoſe, who claim Authority by Eſtabliſhment. It muſt be confeſs'd, Perſons of a certain Profeſſion, whoſe Paſſions and Intereſts are ſupported by ſuch Eſtabliſhment, are too apt to ſuffer themſelves to be blinded in Judgment by it; and it is therefore with grief of heart, that the reverend Hiſtorian tells us, The Quakers now appear'd in parliamentary Elections, without ſwearing to their Free-holds, and being in their Faction united, they could bring the Weight and the Turn in many Elections, nay, and they ſeem'd to hope to be Repreſentatives, as well as Electors. One of the Members, Mr. Waller, became at laſt profeſſedly their Friend and Brother; and in his Neighbourhood at Wickham, another Quaker, one Archdale, was choſen Burgeſs for this Parliament, tho' he was himſelf convinc'd that he could not qualify himſelf, to be a legal ſitting Member. Mr. Waller here mention'd, was Edmond Waller Eſq; Son of the famous Poet Edmond Waller Eſq; who had ſo much of his Father's Genius, that I believe the Biſhop would have met with his Match, had he enter'd into controverſy with him. Mr. Waller liv'd in the Neighhourhood not only of John Archdale Eſq; of Wycomb in Bucks, but alſo in that of Mr. Thomas Elwood, an eminent Quaker Teacher and Writer, near Beaconsfield, who was a Man of ſenſe, and not unacquainted with claſſical Learning, as I obſerv'd by ſome Tranſlations of his out of Horace, which he ſhew'd me himſelf. This Mr. Elwood convers'd very much with Mr. Waller the Poet, and the Friendſhip he contracted with the Father, continued with the Son to the death of the latter, who had been Member of Parliament for Agmondeſham in Bucks, eight years ſucceſſively, before Mr. Archdale was choſen for Wycombe, and was a Member when he died at Bath laſt year, tho' he never was look'd upon as one of that People, otherwiſe than as a Well-wiſher, and an occaſional Hearer among them; but at his death it appear'd that he was a true Member of their Society, by his ordering his Body to be buried in the Quakers Burying-Place. This One Archdale, as the Biſhop phraſes it, had been Governor and one of the Proprietors of the Province of Carolina in America, from whence returning to England, he ſettled at Chipping-Wycomb in Buckinghamſhire, where he liv'd ſo hoſpitably and friendlily, that the Inhabitants choſe him to be their Repreſentative in this Parliament, without his Sollicitation; which puts his Election in a truer, tho' a different light, than Biſhop Kennet has left it in; who adds, "At the beginning of the Seſſions he went "to the Speaker, and deliver'd him a Letter ſeal'd "up, wherein he ſaid, he had repreſented his Caſe "to the Houſe, ſubmitting the ſame to their Pleaſure and Determination. This Letter was read "Jan. 6. and the Writer, John Archdale, was "call'd in, and Mr. Speaker, by direction of the "Houſe, ask'd him, Whether he had taken the "Oaths, or would take the Oaths, to qualify himſelf to be a Member of that Houſe? To which "he anſwer'd, That in regard to a Principle of his "Religion, he had not taken the Oaths, nor could "take them. Upon which, without asking what "his Religion was, or why he would ſuffer himſelf "to be return'd, when he knew his own Incapacity, "it was only Order'd, that a Warrant ſhould be "iſſued for a new Writ for electing a Burgeſs to "ſerve in this preſent Parliament, for the Borough "of Chipping-Wycomb in the County of Bucks, in "the room of Mr. Archdale, who hath refus'd to "qualify himſelf to be a Member of this Houſe, by "taking the Oaths appointed by Law for that pur-"poſe." The Borough of Wycombe, ſince they could not have the Father to repreſent them, choſe the Son, John Archdale Junior, Eſq; What follows, taken out of the Biſhop's Hiſtory, relating to the Quakers, will ſerve as well for ſome other Men, whom the Reader will gueſs at. It was indeed ſomewhat ſcandalous to ſee, when any Bill or Petition was depending, wherein the Quakers had their Account or Deſign, what crouding, what ſolliciting, what treating and trading there was, by that ſly and artificial Set of Men. The reverend Hiſtorian did not conſider, how much more juſtly this would be apply'd to another Set of Men.

A.D.1699 Mr. Waller and Mr. Archdale.

Quakers Members of Parliament.

We have already mention'd ſome Endeavours that were us'd by particular Societies towards Reformation of Manners, than which nothing could be better meant; but as in all good things there will be a mixture of human Infirmity, ſo it was ſoon obſerv'd,

A.D.1699 obſerv'd, that ſome of thoſe Reformers were more vexatious and inſolent than conſiſted with Chriſtian Meekneſs, Charity, and good Neighbourhood. However, that ſo pious a Deſign might not want Encouragement, the Parliament about Chriſtmas order'd a Bill to be brought in, for the more effectual ſuppreſſing Prophaneneſs, and all manner of Vice, and Sir John Philips, Sir Richard Cocks, Hugh Boſcawen Eſq; and John Perry Eſq; were to prepare it, and bring it in; which Bill was clogg'd with ſo many ſevere Clauſes, that it came to nothing. There had lately been publiſh'd a Book entitled, A ſhort View of the Stage, written by Jeremy Collier, M. A. one of the Clergymen who abſolv'd the Aſſaſſin Sir William Perkins at Tyburn. In this Book he made an admirable Collection of the moſt leud and profane Paſſages in ſome modern Plays, as Sir John Vanbrugh's, Mr. Congreve's, and others, whoſe Authors could more eaſily vindicate the writing Comedies, which Collier declaim'd againſt, than what they had written in the Paſſages he quoted. His Book had a great run, and with many aton'd for the Crime he had been guilty of, in giving Abſolution to impenitent Traytors; the religious part of the Town cry'd it up, and ſome of the wealthy ones rewarded him, particularly a Presbyterian, Sir Owen Buckingham, an Alderman of London, and Member of Parliament for Reading, ſent him 20 Guineas. The Leudneſs of the Stage was in every one's mouth, not without reaſon, for both Players and Plays were ſo profane and filthy, that they were a Scandal to the Chriſtian Name. Biſhop Kennet ſays indeed, Immorality and Prophaneneſs could not be effectually reſtrain'd, while they were acted over with ſo much indecent Liberty on the Stage; the ordinary Plays, inſtead of anſwering the good old Deſign of expoſing Vice, and recommending the Charms of Virtue, were debauch'd with the wrong Images of things, and with a Language bordering upon impious and obſcene. This licentious Vein had grown into Faſhion, under the Rejoicings of King Charles II. and was now continued to pleaſe the Palate of the gay and looſe People that frequented the Playhouſes, for want of Religion and Buſineſs. The King, who rarely or never went to thoſe Places of Diverſion, was honeſtly inform'd of the Scandal given in them; and therefore to put ſome check upon their Liberty and Leudneſs, he commanded the following Order to be ſent to both Play-Houſes.

A Bill againſt Prophaneneſs dropt.

An Order againſt leud Plays.

" HIS Majeſty being inform'd, that notwithſtanding an Order made the 4th of June, 1697, by the Earl of Sunderland, then Lord-Chamberlain of his Majeſty's Houſhold, to prevent the Prophaneneſs and Immorality of the Stage, ſeveral Plays have lately been acted, containing Expreſſions contrary to Religion and good Manners: And whereas the Maſter of the Revels has repreſented, that in contempt of the ſaid Order, the Actors often neglect to leave out ſuch prophane and indecent Expreſſions as he has thought proper to be omitted: Theſe are therefore to ſignify his Majeſty's Pleaſure, that you do not hereafter preſume to act any thing in any Play, contrary to Religion and good Manners, as you ſhall anſwer it at your utmoſt peril.

Pere. Bertie.

An Order alſo was ſent by his Majeſty's Command to Mr. Killegrew, Maſter of the Revels, not to licenſe any Plays containing any Expreſſions contrary to Religion and good Manners, and to give notice to the Lord-Chamberlain of his Majeſty's Houſhold, or in his Abſence to the Vice-Chamberlain, if the Players preſum'd to act any thing which he had ſtruck out. Several of the Actors and Actreſſes were alſo proſecuted for Tranſgreſſions of that kind, and had Trial in Weſtminſter-hall and Guild-hall, where Hudſon the Player was fin'd 10 l.

but neither they nor the Poets much regarded it. There was a little awe upon them at firſt, but it wore off; and this Attempt to reform them, was the ſport of what Wit they had, in their Plays, Prologues, and Epilogues. A.D.1699

The Major Vote in this Houſe of Commons was High-Church, as Biſhop Kennet terms it, and they had a watchful eye on the Conduct of thoſe who diſſented in Opinion from them. From this noble Principle it was, that Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Bartholomew Shower, and their Party, took umbrage at the making ſome few Diſſenters Juſtices of the Peace. For tho' a Presbyterian is the only Perſon to make a fit Lord High-Chancellor in Scotland, yet in England, croſs the River Tweed only, ſuch a one, according to thoſe ſober Thinkers, is by no means fit to ſend a drunken Fellow to the Stocks, or a Whore to Bridewell. Moſt of theſe exceptionable Juſtices were of Borough Towns, for the eaſe of the Inhabitants in the Neighbourhood, and were Men who had acquir'd conſiderable Eſtates, before we reckon'd Eſtates by Plumbs, for Men of their ſituation in Life; but becauſe there had not been a Baronet's bloody Hand in their Arms, they were not judg'd worthy to ſit on the Bench with Worſhips of Dignity. I remember a Weſt-Country Baronet, diſtinguiſh'd alike by his fiery Face and fiery Zeal, being oppos'd on the Bench by a Juſtice who had the Reaſon on his ſide, ſaid in anſwer to his Reaſon, Fine Times indeed, when Gentlemen muſt be taken up by Blue-Apron Men; alluding to his Brother Juſtice's having been a Shopkeeper. The latter retorted, Whatever the Blue-Apron Man has is his own; alluding to a very heavy Incumbrance, which the Baronet could never clear his Eſtate of. But it was ſuch Inſtances as theſe, if not this very Inſtance, which is probable enough, conſidering the great Intimacy there was between Sir Edward Seymour, and this ſame Baronet, that brought the Matter into the Houſe of Commons, where a Bill was ſet on foot for qualifying Juſtices of the Peace, and a Committee was appointed to inſpect the Commiſſion of the Peace, and Commiſſions for Deputy-Lieutenants, as they now ſtood, and as they were for ſeven years laſt paſt. Which Committee made report to the Houſe, that not only many Perſons diſſenting from the Church of England, but Men of ſmall Fortunes, and who conſequently had entire Dependance on the Court, were put into thoſe Places. Upon this, the Commons reſolv'd, That an Addreſs be made to his Majeſty, that it would much conduce to the Service of his Majeſty, and the Good of this Kingdom, that Gentlemen of Quality and good Eſtates be reſtor'd, and put into the Commiſſions of the Peace and Lieutenancy, and that Men of ſmall Eſtates be neither continued, nor put in the ſaid Commiſſions. Tho' the reverend Hiſtorian aſſures us, Theſe Proceedings were not grateful to the King; yet when this Addreſs was preſented, he gave this favourable Anſwer:

Addreſs againſt Diſſenters being Juſtices.

Gentlemen,

I am of the Opinion, that Men of the beſt Quality and Eſtates, are moſt proper to be intruſted in the Commiſſions of the Peace and Lieutenancy; and Directions ſhall be given accordingly.

This Anſwer ſo pleas'd the Commons, that they preſented their humble Thanks in a Body to his Majeſty, who anſwer'd them thus;

Gentlemen,

I ſhall always endeavour to do what is for the Good of the Publick.

Tho' the Party thought fit to lay the Streſs of this Grievance on the mean Quality and ſmall Fortunes of the exceptionable Juſtices, yet we are told by Dr. Calamy, that their being Diſſenters was the occaſion of the Addreſs. From what Spirit it came, will be known, by reading a few Lines of the Biſhop of Salisbury's Preface to his Paſtoral Care: It is not our boaſting that the Church of England is the Biſhop Burnet of the Cry of the Church.

A.D.1699 the beſt reform'd, and the beſt conſtituted Church in the World, that will ſignify nothing to convince others. We of the Clergy are too much Parties, to be believ'd in our own Cauſe. There was a Generation of Men that cry'd, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, as loud as we can cry, The Church of England, the Church of England, when yet by their Sins they were pulling it down, and kindling that Fire which conſum'd it. It will have a better Grace to ſee others boaſt of our Church, from what they obſerve in it, than for us to be crying it up with our Words, when our Deeds deny it. Our Enemies will make ſevere Inferences from them, and our Pretenſions will be thought vain and impudent things, as long as our Lives contradict them. Having mention'd this Prelate's Paſtoral Care, it will not be improper to remember, that about this time he publiſh'd his Expoſition of the Thirty-Nine Articles of the Church of England. In the Preface he intimates he was mov'd to undertake the Work by Archbiſhop Tillotſon, and encourag'd by Queen Mary, that he had the Concurrence of Biſhop Stillingfleet, and the Approbation of ſeveral Biſhops. And that when he was diſcourſing with a Lutheran Divine in Germany, about their want of Union in thoſe Parts, he reminded him of the Diviſions in England about much ſmaller Matters, that had continu'd ſo long; declaring, that if the Church of England would heal her own Breaches, the reſt of the reform'd Churches would, with great reſpect, admit of her Mediation to heal theirs. Which, with many other things in the body of the Book,

Dr. C. that (as we are told by a reverend Hiſtorian) were no way to the guſt of ſuch as thought the Church of England to approach the borders of Perfection, he recommended to the Conſideration of the Clergy. Theſe things ſo incens'd ſome againſt him, that forgetting all his paſt Services to the Church, they bid him open Defiance, and could find no room for Forgiveneſs; inſomuch that a Motion was now made in the Houſe

Vote againſt him paſt in the Negative. of Commons, and the Queſtion was put, That an humble Addreſs be made to his Majeſty, for removing Gilbert Lord Biſhop of Sarum from being Preceptor to his Highneſs the Duke of Glouceſter. But in this ungrateful Vote, the Seymours, Muſgraves, &c. were left, The Majority of that honourable Houſe, ſays Biſhop Kennet, being ſenſible of the unreaſonable Prejudice, and ſo it paſs'd in the Negative. From the ſame reverend Hiſtorian we ſhall have a little light into the dark Deſigns of the Diſaffected, which they colour'd with Zeal for the Church. "The "Majority of the Commons were well affected to "the Church of England, and ſeem'd to ſuſpect "that the Court had ſhewn too much favour to "the Diſſenters, at the ſame time that they were "left in the Shackles of the Sacramental Teſt. It "was upon this Jealouſy that a Committee com-"plain'd, That many Perſons diſſenting from the "Church of England, were made Juſtices of the "Peace: tho' upon Enquiry it did not appear that "any two Men were commiſſion'd in the Peace, or "Lieutenancy, who deſerv'd the Name of Diſſen-"ters, tho' ſome of them indeed were but Occaſi-"onal Conformiſts; which, if it proceeded from "the Intention of getting or keeping Places, was "a ſhameful Practice; and the Indignation which "many ſincere Chriſtians had on this account, gave "the better colour to ſome People, for appearing "with extraordinary Warmth againſt Diſſenters." This deſerves remark. Had theſe many ſincere Chriſtians no Warmth againſt the many Thouſands of Officers, Civil and Military, profeſſing themſelves of the Church of England, who were notorious for being in the State of unworthy Communicants, and were driven to the Communion-Table for a Qualification for Places? Did not that crying Sin raiſe their Indignation too? If not, we may aſſure ourſelves that they were not ſo much provok'd at the Diſſenters receiving the Sacrament, as at their getting the Places. Again, "Hence it A.D.1699 "was, that ſome People lov'd to be diſtinguiſh'd "by the Name of High-Churchmen, and treated all "Perſons of Charity and Moderation, with the "Character of Low-Church, and Whigs, and even "Fanaticks, tho' Men of the greateſt Affection to "the Church, and of the ſtricteſt Conformity to "the eſtabliſh'd Rules of it. Under this new Spi-"rit of Diviſion, the very Prelates of the Church "were to fall into Suſpicion and Reproach;" which he inſtances in the Caſe of Biſhop Burnet above mentioned. By this it is pretty plain that the Springs without doors mov'd the Wheels within; and that the Univerſity of Oxford did not go 200 Miles out of their way, as far as Cumberland, to get Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave to repreſent them; for on January 2, leave was given to bring in a Bill for the conveying of Lands, Tenements, Rents, Titles, and Hereditaments, to any College or School, for the Education of poor Scholars, or Improvement of any Parſonage or Vicarage, &c. This Bill was order'd to be brought in by William Thirſby Eſq; Member of Parliament for Northampton, and Mr. Foley; the latter the more remarkable, for that his Family had been, ever ſince it had diſtinction, of a Puritan Stamp. Theſe two Gentlemen brought in the Bill five days after, it was read the firſt, and order'd a ſecond Reading; but, to uſe the Biſhop's Words, was unhappily dropt.

Biſhop Kennet's Riſe of High-Church.

Henry Boyle Eſq; one of the Repreſentatives for another Univerſity, Cambridge, was Chairman of the Committee of the whole Houſe, to whom it was referr'd to conſider of the State of the Navy; who drew up an Addreſs concerning certain Miſ-

Addreſs about the Navy. managements, which were of no great Importance. The King's Anſwer was;

Gentlemen,

I will conſider your Addreſs. It is my deſire that all ſorts of Miſmanagements and Irregularities ſhould be prevented, or redreſs'd. You may be aſſur'd, I will take the beſt care I can in relation to the Navy, the right Management whereof is of great concern to this Kingdom.

'Tis eaſily perceiv'd, that the Articles of this Miſmanagement are Generals, excepting the Allowance to Capt. Prieſtman, whoſe Pretenſion to it we know nothing of, and that Captain was far from being of the ſame Kidney with thoſe Juſtices of Peace whom this Parliament deſir'd the King to turn out of Commiſſion; which made the Reſolution againſt the Earl of Orford look with the better face of Im-

Intended againſt the Earl of Orford. partiality, tho' in reality, his ſteady Adherence to the Revolution and Revolution-Principles, eſpecially his beating the French ſo unmercifully ſeven years before, were things the Jacobites and their Abettors could never forgive. However, he was ſo much in favour with good Engliſhmen, that in the preceding Parliament, when he was a Commoner, he was Knight of the Shire for Middleſex, Knight of the Shire for Cambridge County, and Burgeſs for Portſmouth; an Honour without example in the Rolls of Parliament. His Lordſhip, to ſhew how little he was acted by a Motive of Intereſt, laid down all his Places, when he perceiv'd that no Services or Merit were a Protection againſt Envy.

On the 4th of May the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and paſs'd ſeveral Bills, as, An Act for raiſing 1484015 l. for disbanding the Army, &c. an Act to lay Duties upon Sweets; an Act for encouraging the Newfoundland-Trade; an Act for preventing the Exportation of Wool; an Act againſt Burglaries; for a free Market at Billinſgate; for ſuppreſſing of Lotteries; for the more effectual charging the Duties upon Rock-Salt; an Act for limiting certain Times within which Writs of Error ſhall be brought for the reverſing of Fines, &c. another Tithe-Act; an Act for taking off the remaining Duty upon Glaſs-Ware; an Act to enable Poſthumous

A.D. 1699 Children to take Eſtates as if born in their Father's life-time; an Act for the Impriſonment of Counter, and others, for the Aſſaſſination Plot; and a great many private Acts.

The Speech with which his Majeſty cloſ'd this Seſſions of Parliament on the 4th of May, ſhew'd he was not fully ſatisfied with their Proceedings.

King's Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

AT the opening of this Parliament, I told you my Opinion was, that you were come together with Hearts fully diſpos'd to do what was neceſſary for the Safety, Honour, and Happineſs of the Kingdom; and having nothing elſe to recommend to you, I had reaſon to hope for Unanimity and Diſpatch.

You have now ſat ſo many Months, that the Seaſon of the Year, as well as your particular Affairs, make it reaſonable you ſhould have a Receſs. I take it for granted, you have finiſh'd all the Bills, which for the preſent, you think requiſite to be paſs'd into Laws: and I have given my Aſſent to all you have preſented to me.

If any thing ſhould be found wanting for our Safety, the Support of Publick Credit, by making good the Faith of the Kingdom, as it ſtands engag'd by Parliamentary Securities, and for diſcharge of the Debts occaſion'd by the War, or towards the advancing of Trade, the ſuppreſſing of Vice, or the employing of the Poor; which were all the things I propos'd to your Conſideration when we met firſt, I cannot doubt but effectual Care will be taken of them next Winter: and I wiſh no Inconveniencies may happen in the mean time.

Then the Lord Chancellor prorogu'd the Parliament till the firſt of June.

Earl of Warwick and Lord Mohun tried.

Some time before this, Edward Earl of Warwick, and Charles Lord Mohun, were tried by their Peers in Weſtminſter-hall, the Lord-Chancellor Somers being conſtituted Lord High-Steward upon this Occaſion, for the Murder of Richard Cote Eſq; The Earl of Warwick was found Guilty of Manſlaughter, but the Lord Mohun was acquitted, and liv'd, ſays Biſhop Kennet, to be a great Example of Sobriety and Publick Spirit. The King was pleas'd to take his Seat on the Scaffold, and continued there near two hours. The Earl of Warwick made a very ſlight Defence, and endeavour'd to leſſen my Lord Mohun's Concern in it.

On the 18th of May his Majeſty in Council declar'd Thomas Earl of Pembroke Lord-Preſident of the Council, in the room of the Duke of Leeds, and John Lord Viſcount Lonſdale Lord Privy-Seal, Edward Southwell Eſq; was made Clerk of the Council; and Abraham Stanyan Eſq; Secretary to the Engliſh Embaſſy in France, Clerk Extraordinary; Chriſtopher Codrington Eſq; Fellow of All-Souls College, Oxon, to which at his death he left in Money and Books to the Value of ſeveral Thouſand Pounds, was made Governor of the Leeward-Iſlands in America. The Dignity of a Baronet was conferr'd upon John Stanley of the County of Dublin in Ireland Eſq; Secretary to the Lord-Chamberlain: and on Edmund Denton of Hilleſdon in Bucks Eſq; the Earl of Jerſey was made Secretary of State, in the room of the Duke of Shrewsbury, who, according to the reverend Hiſtorian, thought himſelf under a neceſſity of travelling abroad to reſtore his Conſtitution, impair'd in the Service of the Publick. His Grace, indeed, by a Fall from his Horſe, was render'd incapable to undergo the Fatigue of the Secretary's Place, but he accepted that of Lord Chamberlain of his Majeſty's Houſhold. He after that went to France and Italy, for change of Air, and marry'd an Italian Lady, Adelaida Palleoti of Bolonia; and was not ſo much in the Eſteem and Affection of good Engliſhmen in the latter, as he had been in the former part of his life.

Duke of Shrewſbury goes to Italy.

Before the Earl of Jerſey return'd from his Embaſſy in France, he obtain'd Leave for the Dutcheſs de la Force, a Proteſtant, to quit that Kingdom, where, upon the death of the Duke her Husband, ſhe was thrown into a Nunnery at Euvreux in Normandy, and had endur'd fourteen Years Perſecution with invincible Conſtancy, on account of her Religion. She came over to England with the Counteſs of Jerſey, and liv'd here to a very great age. The Earl of Mancheſter was appointed Ambaſſador in France, upon the Lord Jerſey's being recall'd. A.D. 1699 Dutcheſs de la Force comes to England.

Before his Majeſty put an end to the laſt Seſſion of Parliament, he went to Newmarket, to take the Diverſion of the Horſe-Races there. On the 14th of April he din'd with the Earl of Orford at Chippenham. The ſame day he gave Audience to the Vice-Chancellor and Heads of the Colleges of Cambridge, who were introduc'd by his Grace the Duke of Somerſet their Chancellor, and had after it a ſplendid Entertainment, by his Majeſty's Order. On the Sunday following the King went to the Pariſh Church, and heard an excellent Sermon preach'd by Mr. Leng, Fellow of Catherine-Hall, who was made Biſhop of Norwich by his late Majeſty King George. Here it was that the Duke of Devonſhire introduc'd two Sons of the Earl of Exeter to kiſs his Majeſty's hand, who receiv'd them very graciouſly. They were both Students at Cambridge; and it was taken notice of, becauſe the Earl himſelf had behav'd in another manner, when the King was at his Houſe near Stamford. A few days before his Majeſty came to Newmarket, Mr. Huſſey, a Diſſenting Miniſter, was tried at Cambridge Aſſizes for reflecting in his Sermon on the Book of Common-Prayer; but the Proſecution being found to be falſe and malicious, Mr. Huſſey was acquitted, and the Jury call'd Fanaticks for acquitting him. The Heads of the Univerſity of Cambridge feaſted. Mr. Huſſey a Diſſenting Miniſter tried at Cambridge, and acquitted.

Before his Majeſty went for Holland, a new Commiſſion of Admiralty was ſign'd, and the Lords Commiſſioners were, the Earl of Bridgwater, the Lord Haverſham, Sir Robert Rich, Sir George Rook, and Sir David Mitchell. The Lords Commiſſioners of the Treaſury were, Charles Montague Eſq; Ford Earl of Tankerville, Sir Stephen Fox, John Smith Eſq; and Henry Boyle Eſq;. On the 31ſt of May his Majeſty declar'd in Council, that intending to go over to Holland for a ſhort time, he had appointed the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord-Chancellor Somers, the Earl of Pembroke, the Lord Lonſdale, the Duke of Devonſhire, the Earl of Bridgwater, the Earl of Marlborough, the Earl of Jerſey, and Mr. Montague, to be Lords-Juſtices of England during his Abſence. The ſame day the Lord-Mayor of London, the Recorder, and ſeveral of the Aldermen, waited on his Majeſty to take their leave of him. The King went from Kenſington May the 31ſt, and arriv'd the next day about noon at Margate, attended by the Duke of Wirtemberg, the Earl of Romney, and other Perſons of Quality. He embark'd at three a-clock in the afternoon, and landed the next day at Oranie-Polder, from whence he went to the Hague. King goes to Holland.

We ſhould, among the Promotions in England, have mention'd, that his Majeſty had been pleas'd to appoint the Earl of Stamford, and the Lord Lexington, to be Lords Commiſſioners of Trade; and not long after, June 19, created Col. Windſor Lord Viſcount Windſor of the Kingdom of Ireland; he being Groom of the Bedchamber, Colonel of Horſe, and Major-General in his Majeſty's Army; it is therefore referr'd to that noble Perſon, to examine himſelf, whether his Sentiments and Expreſſions of ſo good a Maſter, have been anſwerable to ſuch Favours. Charles Bertie Eſq; being remov'd from the Office of Treaſurer of the Ordnance, it was given to Col. Henry Mordaunt, the Earl of Peterborough's Brother. The Earl of Berkeley

A.D.1699 ley having desir'd to be excus'd from going Ambassador to Constantinople, the King accepted of his Excuse, and appointed him to be one of the Lords-Justices of Ireland. Cook and Snatt, two of the Non-juring Parsons who absolv'd Perkins and Friend, were found guilty of high Crimes and Misdemeanours in Trinity Term; but the Lenity of King William's Government continued to give Encouragement to his Enemies, to carry on their traitorous Designs against him; neither of these Criminals met with worse Punishment than a Prison, which they were both in as much danger of for Debt as for Treason, if what I have heard of one of them, was as true as what I knew of the other.

Cook and Snatt the absolving Priests found guilty.

The King having receiv'd the Complements of the Foreign Ministers, and other Persons of Distinction at the Hague, he assisted at the Assembly of the States-General, and at that of the States of Holland. He then gave his Instructions to Mr. Hill, whom he had appointed to go his Envoy Extraordinary to Savoy, to make his Complement of Congratulation to that Court, upon the birth of the Prince of Piedmont, which had been notified to his Majesty in England by Count Maffey, Envoy Extraordinary from the Duke for that purpose. His Majesty and the Dutchess of Savoy were Sisters Children; and the King, before he left England, order'd his Picture very richly set in Diamonds, to be given to the Count. While the King was at the Hague, the Earl of Portland came thither from England; and his Majesty having had a Review of his fine Regiment of Horse, order'd they should mount the Guard while he resided there. On the 22d of June he din'd at Cruitzberg, pass'd in the afternoon through the Cities of Haerlem and Amsterdam, from whence he went to Narden, where he view'd all the Fortifications, which he found in great Perfection. He lay that night at Soertdyke, and the next Morning set out for Loo. While he was there, Count Guiscard, who was Governor of Namur when his Majesty took it, in the year 1695, came thither to pay his Respects to him; he took Holland in his way to Sweden, being appointed by the French King to be his Ambassador at Stockholm; and having pass'd thro' Namur, and seen the Fortifications there made by Monsieur Cohorn, he did not scruple to say, If any Town in the World is impregnable, it is certainly that of Namur. Count Tallard, the French Ambassador, waited on the King at Loo, as did the Lord Brackley, Son to the Earl of Bridgwater, one of the Lords-Justices of England; Mr. Edgcumbe of Cornwall; the Lord Byron; and other English Noblemen and Gentlemen, to pay their Duty to his Majesty, and met with a most gracious Reception. His Court was very numerous and splendid, in expectation of the Company of the Elector of Brandenburgh and Elector of Bavaria, which was much talk'd of. Among a croud of Strangers, there crept in three Irishmen, who were suspected to have some villainous Design against his Majesty's Person, their Names were, Counel, Fitzgerald, and Pendergrass; one of them had been an Officer in the late King James's Army in Ireland, and another was a Student in a College of Jesuits in Lorrain. Being arrested on suspicion, they were examin'd by the Earl of Romney, the Earl of Albemarle, Monsr. Auverquerque, and Mr. Blaithwait Secretary at War. They pretended, their Business at Loo was to beg the King's Pardon, and obtain Passports for Ireland; but their Behaviour giving just Cause to suspect them, the Lords who examin'd them committed them to Arnheim Goal. At Loo his Majesty was also attended by the Sieur Galesky, Ambassador from the King of Poland to the States-General: and my Lord Paget's Steward, the King of Great-Britain's Ambassador at the Port, brought him Letters from the Grand Signior, in acknowledgment of his good Offices, in mediating the Peace at Carlowitz. Not long after, Letters came to his Majesty from the Czar of Muscovy, with like Acknowledgments, for the Truce procur'd for the Russian Empire by King William's Mediation. Thus the two greatest Empires in the known World, paid their Homage of Thanks to his Majesty, for the Tranquillity which so many Millions of Men, their Subjects, enjoy'd by his Procurement. The States of Holland at the latter end of August publish'd a Placart, requiring that all such Persons as had been declar'd Rebels in England, should forthwith quit their Dominions. On the 2d and 3d of September the King review'd the Dutch Forces encamp'd at Arnheim; the Army there consisted of about 20000 Men; and the multitude of Spectators was such, there was said to be above 2000 Coaches, Chariots, Waggons, and other Carriages, full of them, besides those that were on Horseback and on Foot; and at his return to Loo, he found there his bosom Friend, the old Duke of Zell, who was come thither to make him a Visit, with a numerous and magnificent Retinue. His Journey had been deferr'd by Indisposition. The Prince of Hesse-Cassel came to wait on the King at Loo, where his Majesty gave publick Marks of his Satisfaction to General Cohorn, for his extraordinary Services in Fortification; commanding him to visit the Sluys, the Sas Vanghent, and other Places on the Frontiers in Flanders, and add to the Fortifications of Maestricht. The Duke of Zell staid with his Majesty at Loo two Months; and during the King's residence there, the Earl of Portland, the French Ambassador Count Tallard, and the Grand Pensionary of Holland, had frequent Conferences about the Affair of the Spanish Succession. There being also good reason to be apprehensive of a Rupture between the two Northern Crowns, his Majesty sent Instructions to Monsieur Opdam, the Dutch Ambassador in Sweden, to use his utmost Endeavours to prevent it, which were however ineffectual. About the middle of October the King came to the Assembly of the States, and having settled the State of the Dutch Army and Fleet for the ensuing year, he embark'd for England October 16, landed at Margate the next day, lay that night at Canterbury, and on the 18th arriv'd at Kensington.

A.D.1699

The Grand Signior and Czar of Muscovy owe the Peace to the King.

Nothing drew the attention of People more this year, than the Affair of Neufchastel, a independant City and Principality, bordering upon and allied to the Switzers, whose Sovereign was the late Duke of Longueville, upon whose death the Dutchess of Nemours and the Prince of Conti contested the Succession to that Sovereignty. The Dutchess of Nemours being sensible that the French King was in the Interest of her Competitor, refus'd to refer her Cause to him, or to the Parliament of Paris, who in reality had nothing to do with it; however, they made a Decree in favour of the Prince of Conti; and the States of Neufchastel, who were the proper Judges, determin'd the Cause in favour of the Dutchess of Nemours: but the Prince going thither in Person, with some of the French King's Money to support his Pretensions, that King order'd a good Body of Troops to file off to the Borders of the Franche-Comte and Burgundy, adjoining to that Principality; and wrote to the Canton of Bern, signifying his Pleasure, that impartial Judges, as he call'd them, should be forthwith appointed to decide the Controversy; and his sending an Army to forward that Decision, shew'd in what manner he intended they should make their Impartiality appear. The Prince of Conti, upon his arrival at Neufchastel, gave frequent Entertainments to the Burghers of his Party, and spar'd not either for Cost or Caresses. The Dutchess of Nemours follow'd the Prince of Conti to Neufchastel, to take possession of her Right, and the governing part of the Town being in her Interest, she was admitted into the Castle: and the Deputies of the Councils

of

A.D.1699 of State and of Neufchaſtel, deliver'd this Anſwer to the Prince of Conti's demand; That the Dutcheſs of Nemours having been declar'd their Sovereign by the States lawfully aſſembled, and own'd every where as ſuch, they neither would nor could diſpoſſeſs her, it being contrary to their fundamental Laws; and that after her death the ſaid States will examine to whom the Sovereignty ought of right to appertain: intimating thereby, that others had Demands upon it as well as the Prince, particularly the Prince of Orange, then King of Great-Britain, whoſe Intereſt being involv'd in that of the Dutcheſs of Nemours, his Majeſty thought fit to interpoſe, and not ſuffer the Prince of Conti, under the Protection of France, to poſſeſs himſelf of that City and Principality, in prejudice of the Right of the Dutcheſs of Nemours, and thoſe whoſe Right it was to take place in that Succeſſion after her, which he himſelf laid claim to, as univerſal Heir of the Houſe of Longueville; wherefore he order'd Monſieur Hervart, his Envoy in Switzerland, immediately to repair to Neufchaſtel, where the Marquiſs de Puiſieux the French Miniſter, had in vain been labouring to bring over the States to the Prince of Conti's ſide, and to preſent the following Memorial to his Highneſs.

Monſieur,

" BEING order'd hither by the King of Great-
" Britain my Maſter, my firſt Buſineſs is to " pay my Reſpects to your Highneſs, and to aſſure
" you of my very humble Service. I am ſatisfied
" you are not ignorant that his Majeſty has a Right
" to the County of Neufchaſtel, and its Dependen-
" cies, his Miniſters at the Treaty of Ryſwick ha-
" ving given notice thereof to his moſt Chriſtian
" Majeſty's Plenipotentiaries. In the mean while
" his Majeſty, who was very willing that the ſaid
" Country ſhould be expreſſly comprehended in
" the Treaty of Peace, was alſo willing, for the " better aſſuring the Tranquility thereof, to defer
" the juſtifying of his Pretenſions, though very well
" grounded, till the Dutcheſs of Nemours's death,
" who has been inveſted in the Sovereignty five
" years.

" But underſtanding the Motions made here on
" the Subject of your Highneſs's Pretenſions, his
" Majeſty thought it his Intereſt, to declare expreſ-
" ly by his Miniſters at the Court of France, his " Right to that Sovereignty, hoping that his moſt
" Chriſtian Majeſty would obſerve an exact Im-
" partiality in this Affair, that he might leave the " States, who are the true Judges of it, to their " full Liberty, when they ſhall be call'd on that " Account, after the Dutcheſs of Nemours's death.
" And that his Majeſty thought it reaſonable, that " your Highneſs ſhould then propoſe your Preten-
" ſions, as well as others. The Aſſurances which " his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's Miniſters did there-
" upon give of his Impartiality, are ſo poſitive,
" that the King my Maſter thought, he might have
" kept ſilent, until a convenient time was offer'd for " him to prove the Juſtice of his Pretenſions.

" But the Deſign form'd by your Highneſs, to
" call a Tribunal at preſent, during the life of the
" Dutcheſs of Nemours, obliges me, according to
" his Majeſty's Orders, to repreſent to your High-
" neſs, that his Majeſty cannot look on this Con-
" vocation any otherwiſe, than as prejudicial to his
" Right, contrary to the Laws and Cuſtoms of " this Country, and as a Means to deſtroy its Peace
" and Tranquility.

" I hope your Highneſs will be pleas'd ſeriouſly
" to conſider, what I have the Honour to repre-
" ſent to you, on his Majeſty's behalf; and allow
" me the Liberty to give your Highneſs aſſurance
" of my high Conſideration, and profound Reſpect
" for your Perſon."

What is ſaid here of the King of Great-Britain's Miniſters at the Court of France, having inſiſted on their Maſter's Right to the Succeſſion of Neufchaſtel, refers to a Repreſentation made by the Earl of Jerſey, his Majeſty's Ambaſſador there, and Monſ. Vrybergen the Dutch Ambaſſador, to Meſſieurs de Pompone and Torcy, the French King's chief Miniſters of State, in April, of his, King William's Pretenſions to the Sovereignty of Neufchaſtel and Valengin; requiring, in his Majeſty's Name, that the French King ſhould continue neuter in that Affair, and leave the Matter to the natural and competent Judges, the States of Neufchaſtel, who could not meet, upon this Head, while the Dutcheſs of Nemours was alive; but that after her death, the Prince of Conti ſhould be heard, as well as other Pretenders. To which the French Miniſters anſwer'd, That his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty would be very willing to continue neuter. Mr. Hervart did at the ſame time preſent another Memorial to the Dutcheſs of Nemours, to communicate in his Maſter's Name, what he had repreſented to the Prince of Conti; and ſaid particularly, I hope, Madam, that the Intereſts of his Majeſty being conformable to yours, and thoſe of the whole State, and the King being willing to contribute on his part, that your Highneſs be not troubled in your Poſſeſſion, and that nothing be done contrary to the Rights and Freedoms of the Country; the ſteps I take by his Order, will not be diſpleaſing to you, &c. The Dutcheſs and the States of Neufchaſtel, expreſs'd great Acknowledgments of his Majeſty's interpoſing in this Affair, but the Prince of Conti did not, as Biſhop Kennet writes, return at firſt ſo reſpectful an Anſwer to Mr. Hervart's Memorial, as he did in that which he order'd his Secretary to deliver to Mr. Hervart upon his quitting Neufchaſtel, which he did two or three days after he had receiv'd that Miniſter's Memorial; for he ſaid, He did not think any one would have hinder'd him of his Right. The Anſwer his Secretary deliver'd Mr. Hervart, is as follows:

" My Lord the Prince of Conti, knowing no-
" thing of the ſeveral Tranſactions mention'd in
" the Memorial which was deliver'd to him by
" Mr. d' Hervort, the Engliſh Envoy, on the 21ſt
" of the laſt Month, O. S. is not in a condition
" to anſwer the ſame, without further Inſtructions
" and Orders from the French Court. In the mean
" time, it ſhall be without prejudice to his Right,
" if, out of reſpect to his Majeſty of Great-Bri-
" tain, he deſiſts for ſome time to go on to juſtify
" and make valid, his Pretenſions to the Sovereign-
" ty of Neufchaſtel.

" His Highneſs having yeſterday, by a Courier
" from Court, receiv'd his Majeſty's Orders to at" tend his Perſon; hath thought meet to anſwer the " Lord Envoy of England, that he cannot believe,
" if his Britannick Majeſty was well inform'd of
" the Juſtice of his Pretenſions, that he would oppoſe
" himſelf to the legal Pleas he makes, for the bring-
" ing the ſame to take effect, &c. Then follows a Proteſtation againſt the Dutcheſs of Nemours's Poſſeſſion of it; and it concludes thus, As to what remains, his Highneſs will always receive whatever comes to his hand from the King of England, for whoſe Perſon he hath a particular reſpect, in a becoming manner, &c. Such were the Honours paid to his Majeſty's royal Perſon and Character, while the abdicated King remain'd in a moſt diſconſolate forlorn condition, with his miſerable Retinue, at St. Germains; ſome of his Iriſh and Scotch Officers and Servants were reduc'd even to Beggary, and ask'd Alms in the Streets of Paris, with Swords by their ſides, and an Air that ſeem'd rather to require it as an Homage to their Merit, than Charity to their Want.

On the 20th of October, the Lord-Mayor, Recorder, Aldermen, and principal Citizens of Lon- don

A.D.1699 don, went to Kenſington to congratulate his Majeſty's ſafe Return. He was pleas'd to expreſs his favourable Acceptance of their Affection, and earneſtly recommended to them the careful and vigorous Execution of all the Laws againſt all Profaneneſs, Debauchery and Ill-Livers. And alſo that effectual Care be taken to provide for the Poor, ſo that they may not be neceſſitated to wander about the Streets for Relief; and then his Majeſty was pleas'd to confer the Honour of Knighthood, on Charles Duncomb, and Jeffery Jefferys Eſqrs; the preſent Sheriffs, and William Withers Eſq; Alderman, not one of whom was ever charg'd with the Sin of Schiſm.

On the 25*th* of October, his Majeſty deliver'd the Key and White-Staff to the Duke of Shrewſbury, as Lord-Chamberlain of his Houſhold; Mr. Montagu, Firſt Commiſſioner of the Exchequer, and Chancellor of the Exchequer, having the Auditor's Place in view, reſign'd his Seat at the Treaſury-Board, and was ſucceeded as Chancellor, by John Smith Eſq; and by Richard Hill Eſq; his Majeſty's late Envoy at the Courts of Savoy, Lorain and Bruſſels, as one of the Lords of the Treaſury. The 4th of Nov. being his Majeſty's Birthday, was obſerv'd with great Solemnity; his Highneſs the Duke of Glouceſter went in the Morning to Kenſington, to make his Complement to his Majeſty on that Occaſion. The Prince and Princeſs of Denmark, din'd with his Majeſty at Kenſington, and in the Evening, the King and the whole Court came to St. James's, and were entertain'd by the Princeſs with a Ball. The Cities of London and Weſtminſter ſhew'd their univerſal Joy with Fireworks, Illuminations and Ringing of Bells. For tho' the High-Church Faction, I took the Term from Biſhop Kennet, did their utmoſt to thwart and perplex his Majeſty's Counſels, tho' the Leaders of the Major Vote in the Houſe of Commons ſeem'd to act in concert with them; King William was belov'd not only by the virtuous and ſound part of the Kingdom, but even by the Populace, and that Love was the effect of the great things he had done for them.

On the 16th of Nov. the Parliament met at Weſtminſter, and the King made this Speech to both Houſes.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I Hope you will not think I have call'd you out of " your Countries too ſoon, if you conſider that " our Common Security requires a farther Proviſion ſhould be made for the Safety of the Kingdom by Sea and Land, before we are at the " End of what was granted for that Purpoſe the " laſt Seſſion. And when you enter upon this Buſineſs, I believe you will think it neceſſary to take " care of the Repairs of the Ships and of the Fortifications, without which our Fleet cannot be ſafe " when it is in Harbour.

" I cannot omit to put you in mind of another " matter, in which ſo great a number of my Subjects is concern'd, and wherein the Honour of " the Kingdom and the Faith of Parliaments is ſo " far engag'd, that our future Security ſeems to depend upon it; I mean the making good the Deficiencies of the Funds, and the diſcharging the " Debts contracted by reaſon of the War.

" And till we may be ſo happy to ſee the Publick " Debts paid, I ſhall hope that no Seſſion will end " without ſomething done towards leſſening them. " While I am ſpeaking to you on this Head, I " think myſelf oblig'd to mention with a very particular Concern, a Debt which is owing to the " Prince of Denmark, the State whereof I have " order'd to be laid before you.

" Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" Theſe things are of ſuch Importance, that I " muſt earneſtly recommend them to your Conſideration, and deſire you to provide the neceſſary " Supplies. A.D.1699

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" There is nothing I could rejoice in more, than " that I was under no Neceſſity of ſo often asking " Aids of my People; but as the reaſon of it is evident, becauſe the Funds formerly apply'd to defray the publick Expence are now anticipated for " the Payment of the Debts of the Kingdom; ſo " it is my Satisfaction that you all ſee that nothing " of what is demanded, is for any perſonal Uſe of " mine; and I do faithfully aſſure you, that no " part of what is given ſhall be diverted from any " Purpoſe for which it is deſign'd.

" I believe the Nation is already ſenſible of the " good Effects of Peace, by the manifeſt Increaſe " of Trade, which I ſhall make it my Buſineſs to " encourage by all means in my power. Probably it might receive an Advantage if ſome good " Bills were prepar'd, for the more effectual preventing and puniſhing unlawful and clandeſtine Trading, which does not only tend to defraud the " Publick, but prejudice the fair Merchant, and " diſcourage our own Manufactures.

" The Increaſe of the Poor is become a Burden to the Kingdom, and their looſe and idle " Life does in ſome meaſure contribute to that " depravation of Manners which is complain'd of, " I fear with too much reaſon; whether the ground " of this Evil, be from defects in the Laws already made, or in the Execution of them, deſerves your Conſideration. As it is an indiſpenſible Duty, that the Poor, who are not able to " help themſelves, ſhould be maintain'd; ſo I cannot but think it extremely deſirable, that ſuch as " are able and willing ſhould not want Employment, and ſuch as are obſtinate and unwilling " ſhould be compell'd to Labour.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I have a full Aſſurance of the good Affections " of my People, which I ſhall endeavour to deſerve, by a conſtant Care of their juſt Rights " and Liberties, by maintaining the eſtabliſh'd Religion, by ſeeing the Courſe of Juſtice kept ſteady and equal, by countenancing Virtue and diſcouraging Vice, and by declining no Difficulties " or Dangers, where their Welfare and Proſperity " may be concern'd. Theſe are my Reſolutions, " and I am perſuaded that you are come together " with Purpoſes on your part ſuitable to thoſe on " mine. Since then our Aims are only for the " general Good, let us act with Confidence in one " another, which will not fail by God's Bleſſing to " make me a happy King, and you a great and flouriſhing People."

Tho' this will appear to all ſenſible Readers, to be one of the beſt Speeches that ever were made from that Throne; yet the Party term'd High-Church as above, took it in the worſt Senſe: and whatever Reaſon they had given his Majeſty by the precipitate disbanding of his Forces and Reſumption of his Iriſh Grants, to intimate their want of Confidence in him; yet rather than they wou'd appear to have given any Occaſion to ſuch Suſpicion, they grew angry at their being ſuſpected, and inſtead of an Addreſs of Thanks, preſented one of Remonſtrance, wherein they complain'd that ill-deſigning Men had put falſe Conſtructions on their Conduct, and had endeavour'd to deſtroy the Confidence, which ought to be maintain'd between him and his People; wherefore they pray'd him to ſhew marks of his high Diſpleaſure towards all ſuch Perſons, who have, or ſhall preſume to miſrepreſent their Proceedings to his Majeſty. The King was ſo far from expoſtulating upon the Senſe of this Addreſs, that he wiſely ſeem'd to take it on the ſofter Side, and expreſs'd his Thanks for it, in a ſingular Air of Lenity and Good-nature. The Commons Remonſtrance.

The King's soft Answer.

" Gentlemen,

" MY Parliaments have done so great Things for me, and I have upon all proper Occasions expres'd so great a Sense of their Kindness, and my Opinion has been so often declar'd, that the Happiness of an English King depends upon an entire good Correspondence between him and his Parliament, that it can't seem strange for me to assure you, that no Persons have ever yet dar'd to go about to misrepresent to me the Proceedings of either House: had I found any such, they would have immediately felt the highest Marks of my Displeasure. It is a Justice I owe not only to my Parliament, but to every one of my Subjects, to judge of them by their Actions, and this Rule I will steadily pursue. If any shall hereafter attempt to put me upon other Methods by Calumnies or Misrepresentation, they will not only fail of Success, but shall be look'd upon and treated by me as my worst Enemies.

" Gentlemen,

" I am pleas'd to see by your Address, that you have the same Thoughts of the great Advantages which will ensue to the Kingdom from our mutual Confidence, as I have expres'd to both Houses at the opening of the Session. I take very kindly the Assurance you give me of using your utmost Care and Endeavour to prevent and discourage all false Rumours and Reports reflecting upon me and my Government. And I faithfully promise you, that no Actions of mine shall give a just Ground for any Misunderstanding between me and my People."

Monsr. de Cize, a French Author's Reflections on this Tory Parliament.

See what a French Historian says upon this; Tel etoit la Maniére douce & obligeante avec laquelle Guillaume repondoit aux plaintes de ses Sujets, Heureux les Peuples qui sont governez par des Princes de ce Charactere! ¡Mais encore plus Heureux les Peuples qui scavent connoitre leur Bonheur, & qui ont autant de respect & de soumission pour le Souverain, que celuci a de Tendresse & de Moderation. Il est certain que ce Parlement Tory avoient resolu de ne pousser la Complaisance fort loin, &c. " Such was the soft and obliging manner in which " King William made Answer to the Complaints of " his Subjects; Happy the People that are go- " vern'd by Princes of this Character; but more " happy the People, who being sensible of their " Happiness, have as much Respect and Submis- " sion for the Sovereign, as he has Tenderness and " Moderation for them? 'Tis certain this Tory " Parliament were resolv'd not to carry their Com- " placency to the King too far."

And it was as certain, that the King endeavour'd to carry his Complacency to them, as far as was consistent with his Royal Dignity. An Instance of which, was his dining with the Earl of Rochester at Petersham, and the Discourse which was then in Town, that the Earl was soon to be taken into the Ministry.

King dines at the Earl of Rochester's.

Irish Forfeitures.

We are now to give some Account of the Proceedings, with respect to the Forfeited Estates in Ireland, about which the Party above-mention'd made a great Noise and Bustle, because the Produce of them had not been appropriated to the discharge of the National Debt contracted by the War in Ireland. This was the Pretence, but the real Truth was, that the same Party were willing at once to mortify the King and his Ministers, and to bestow their beneficial Favours on their own Friends. To prepare the way for resuming his Majesty's Grants in Ireland; one of those Friends of theirs, was employ'd to write a Book. The Author, Dr. Davenant, was the Son of Davenant the Poet, and tho' not qualify'd by his Freeholds to be a Member of Parliament, according to the Qualification the same Men establish'd afterwards, yet they befriended him with a Seat in two or three Parliaments. He had a flowing Stile and a plausible way of arguing, which, with a great disregard to Sincerity and Truth, gave his Works a Currency for a Year or two. The Piece he publish'd to usher in the Act concerning the Forfeited Estates, was entitl'd, A Discourse upon Grants and Resumptions; of which the learned Author of Jus Regium, wrote thus a Year after. " Tho' the Business of " his Book, as the Title-Page sets forth, was to " shew how our Ancestors proceeded with such Mini- " sters as procured to themselves Grants of the " Crown-Revenues, and that the Forfeited Estates " ought to be apply'd towards the Payment of the " Publick Debts; yet has he not in all that long " and factious Discourse in any one Instance shewn, " that our Ancestors pretended that 'twas against " the Law of our Land, that any Ministers should " have Grants of the Crown-Revenue, or that " ForfeitedEstates should be no otherwise dispos'd of, " than towards Payment of Debts, or any other " Use of the Publick. In the whole Work there " is not one Thing said relating to the Argument, " that can in the least serve to keep that bold Dis- " course in countenance, unless it be that shameful " Assertion of his, That the Grants of the Crown- " Lands, made for these last ten Years are void in " Law. It must be great disaffection to the pre- " sent Government, that makes him pronounce so " severely against his Majesty's Grants, when the " Reason he gives for it, which is no Reason at " all, holds as strong against all the Grants that " have been made above these 290 Years." By this I find what he says in another Discourse may be true; That a People may have a Hero come over to secure their Religion and Civil Rights, which were invaded, and to arm them against an Enemy, whose Power threaten'd to enslave Europe; yet he may meet with some [not thankful for his Benefits. He then confutes him by Fact and Argument, to which I refer.

Answer'd.

The Parliament had last Sessions appointed seven Commissioners, for taking an Account of the Forfeited Estates in Ireland; the Earl of Drogheda, Francis Annesley Esq; James Hamilton Esq; Henry Longford Esq; Sir Richard Leving, Sir Francis Brewster, and John Trenchard Esq; the last of these was better known by the Roman Name of Cato, which he put to his Letters against the Ministry in his late Majesty's Reign. These Commissioners passing over to Ireland, affected a very great Zeal to discharge their Trust. They had their Meetings in the Parliament-House at Dublin; and to lose no time, order'd a Cook to attend them, that their Eating elsewhere might not hinder their doing Business. But we shall find presently they did not agree so well upon their Matters in other Things.

Commissioners for the Irish Forfeited Estates.

I shall not give a formal Account of the Report of these Irish Commissioners, presented to the House of Commons by Mr. Annesley; because whatever Application appears in it, I am convinc'd by what I read in Jus Regium, there is not the Fidelity, Bishop Kennet speaks of. For instance they say in their Report, that the Value of the Forfeited Estates discover'd by them, at Thirteen Years Purchase, amounted to 2,037,287 l. By which Computation, the House of Commons might well be led into Expectation of a prodigious Fund, to be rais'd by the Sale of those Lands, and into a good Opinion of the Industry and good Conduct of the Commissioners. But let us return to Jus Regium, and there we find the State of it thus: " In their Report they say, that the Expence " of the Commission has been about 40000 l. " Sterling, that is, as Exchange now goes, about " 50000 l. Irish Money, which is just double the " Charge of the Civil-List of that Kingdom. 'Tis " much that after spending so much Money, they " should not be able to learn the Value of the " Lands."

Their Report cen- sur'd.

Dr. Davenant's Book for Resumptions.

" In

A.D.1699 " In order to make a probable Eſtimate of them, " I will ſuppoſe them to be worth 60000 l. per " Ann. This I believe will be found to be con- " ſiderably more than they are ſet for at preſent, " tho' they have been ſet after the manner here de- " liver'd. If we value them at 13 Years Purchaſe, " which is a great deal more than Lands have been " continually ſold for in that Kingdom; and con- " ſiderably more than thoſe Eſtates will yield, 2 or " 3 Years hence; then the full Value of them con- " ſider'd as Fee-Simple, and free from all Incum- " brances, will be 780000 l.

" The Lands of forfeiting Perſons over and a- " bove the Eſtates reſtor'd, by the King's Favour " and Articles of Limerick, &c. were valu'd by the " Commiſſioners at 1699343 l.

" Add to this the Private Eſtates by them valu'd at } 337943 l.

" The Value of the whole according to them, at 13 Years Purchaſe } 2037286 l.

" The real Value of the whole being 780000 l.

" It appears that in the firſt Value of the Lands they are miſtaken } 1257287 l.

Several Deductions are to be made out of the 780000 l. real Value.

The Author of Jus Regium proceeds; " We are " to deduct,

" Firſt, All Debts and Incumbrances on thoſe " Lands. The Commiſſioners repreſented in their " Reports that all the Statutes, Judgments, Mort- " gages, or other Debts, which appear'd to them " to affect the ſaid Eſtates, amount to 161936 l.

" Theſe are only thoſe which were found by In- " quiſition, and allow'd by Order of the Exche- " quer. Beſides theſe, they will find, and have al- " ready found, a great many more. And they " themſelves may remember very well, that there " were other good Incumbrances ſhew'd to them, " which they thought not proper to mention in " their Report, tho' they inſinuate that they re- " turn'd all."

I hope this juſtifies the Remark, I made upon Biſhop Kennet's high Commendations of the Fide- lity of theſe Commiſſioners. Again,

" Secondly, All thoſe Lands that will return to the " next Heir after the Death of the preſent Tenant " for Life, the forfeiting Perſon. Of this ſort there " are many great Eſtates. Such is the great Eſtate " or rather Territory, as the Commiſſioners call " it in their Report, of the Lord Bophin. The E- " ſtate of Col. Bagnal, an old infirm Man, which " they have valu'd at above 5000 l. a-Year. The " Eſtate of Sir Valentine Brown, which is much " more valuable than that of Col. Bagnal. The " Eſtate of Col. Baggot, and ſeveral others.

" Thirdly, We are to deduct the Quit-Rents, " which the Truſtees, in their late Report, have " return'd at about 5000 l. per Ann.

" Fourthly, We are to deduct the Value of all " the Beneficial Leaſes, and whatſoever has been or " will be gain'd by the 3092 Claimants, about " 800 of which have been already heard, and of " thoſe but an Eighth Part rejected.

" Theſe will cut off more than a Third Part of " the real Value, of the Fee-Simple which I have " ſet down.

" I don't here take notice of ſuch ſmall Sums, " as the 10000 l. due to the Lady Bellaſis, the " 21000 l. allow'd the Purchaſers, &c. Among " the Deductions, I may reckon three Years Pro- " fits of all the Lands which will be ſwallow'd up " in the Expences of the Truſt."

This Expence was to be ſwoln with 1500 l. per Ann. each, to 13 or 14 Truſtees, all good Church- men, as was boaſted at that time, and indeed o- thers could not have a majority of Votes in this Parliament. Here and elſewhere care muſt be ta- ken to diſtinguiſh ſuch Men as aſſum'd the Title of good Churchmen, purely, as they were a Party in Oppoſition to the Government, to Liberty, Cha- rity and the true Reformation, from thoſe good Church of England Men, who were and are Friends to all, to the Government, to Liberty and Charity, and the true Reformation. A.D.1699

Thus did this Parliament, out of a Spirit of good Husbandry, reſume an incumber'd 60000 l. a-Year from King William's faithful Friends and Servants, all of them zealous Proteſtants, and none of 'em Presbyterians; and at the ſame time gave 45000 l. a-Year clear Money to their own Friends, the Truſ- tees for their Reſumption. Again, Beſides theſe, there will be other Deductions. Some Eſtates have already been recover'd from the Truſt, more will follow before the Books are ſhut up, as we may very well imagine from the Inclinations obſerv'd in ſome Men to favour the Iriſh Claimants.

" But I will abſtract from all Deductions of this " kind, and allow, which will be found to be a " large Reckoning, that the forfeited Lands in Ire- " land, will yield 500000 l. in that Kingdom. This, " if it were at this time to be paid into the Exche- " quer here, would be but 400000 l. Let us now " compute what thoſe Lands would have yielded " us in 1690, or two Years after. I can't forbear " mentioning thoſe Years, becauſe till then they " were undiſpoſs'd of, till then the Parliament " might have deſir'd them of the King for the Uſe " of the Publick. Afterwards his Majeſty, as I " have prov'd he had a Right to do, made them the " Property of others, and 'twas by the turn of " time, and the Labour and Improvements of " poor Tenants, this is well worth minding, that " they grew up to the value they now bear. In " thoſe Years an Acre of Land generally in thoſe " Countries, where the great Forfeitures were, un- " leſs 'twas very near Dublin, did not yield a fourth " Part of what it will now. And had the forfeited " Lands been then expos'd to Sale, the Purchaſe " would have been at leaſt as low as this Rent, be- " cauſe People during that great (and when I con- " ſider how the King's Perſon was expos'd, I will " ſay uncertain) War, were not fond of purcha- " ſing. If this Computation be allow'd me, which " I take to be a very juſt one, 'twill follow that in " thoſe Years, theſe exorbitant Grants which the " King has made, would have yielded but 100000 l. " which is no more than the Parliament gave to " Duke Schomberg."

This is confirm'd by another Writer, who the laſt Seſſion of this Parliament publiſh'd a Diſcourſe, entitl'd, The Caſe of the Iriſh Forfeitures fairly ſta- ted; wherein he ſays, Had the Forfeitures in Ireland been ſold for the Uſe of the Publick, in the Year 1690, or ſome Years after, 'tis certain they would not have rais'd near 200000 l. So that the prodi- gious Valuation made by the Commiſſioners, aroſe out of the Improvements made by Proteſtant Te- nants ſince the Forfeitures and were to be included in Davenant's Reſumption.

Then the Author gives us ſeveral Inſtances of the Miſtakes the Commiſſioners ran into; and that they were wilful ones, may be gueſt by this one, with which I ſhall content myſelf.

There is a Gentleman now in London, who when Surveyors appointed by the Commiſſioners were ſurveying the Lands which he held, obſerv'd that they took in a Bog, of which he never made one Shilling, that contain'd about ten times as many Acres as his Land did. Such were the Methods they took to ſwell the Number of Acres, which ſwell'd their Computation ſo unconſcionably, as we have ſeen by the Account of a better Compu- ter.

The Commiſſioners in the 14th Article of their Report, gave a Liſt of the Number of forfeited Acres in every County; of the exactneſs of which we may make a Judgment by theſe Words in Jus Regium: 'Twas very hard to go through ſuch an En- quiry,

A.D.1699 quiry, without committing some mistakes; but 'tis very strange the Commissioners should err to such a Degree, as to return the Forfeitures of the little County of Carlo, at above 80000 l. when a Gentleman who knew them all very well, declar'd to several Members of Parliament, that he would prove they were not worth a sixth Part of that Money. But they were to shew their Employers, they had not been so busy in Ireland for nothing; and if they had not by over-reckoning made good the Hopes and Expectations of their Party in England, as to the immense Value of the Irish Grants, the Bill of Resumption would not have pass'd, and their Work would have been in Appearance, what it was in Fact, the Labour of the Mountain. They introduce their Particulars with a grievous Complaint of the extravagant Fees taken in Ireland in the Register's-Office there; which was held by Mr. Pultney, whose Deputy demanded 86 l. as a Fee of Mr. Luke Dillon, for his Father's Adjudication. Then they name the Lord Bellew's Case thus:

Irish Commissioners over-value the Forfeitures.

26th Article, The Right Honourable the Lord Bellew, releas'd a Statute-Staple of 1000 l. Principal-Money, and 7 or 800 l. Interest to the Lord Raby, which was due from Sir William Wentworth, Father to the present Lord Raby, to the Lord Duleck, Father to the present Lord Bellew; in Consideration that he would use his Interest with his Majesty to procure his Pardon, which he did accordingly. He also releas'd to the Lord Rumney, all the Profits of his Estate, which his Lordship had enjoy'd three Years, amounting to about as many Thousand Pounds, in Consideration his Lordship would not give him any molestation in passing his Pardon.

It is very likely that the first Part of this Article, relating to Sir William Wentworth's Statute-Staple of 1000 l. and 800 l. Interest, would have been sunk by the Commissioners, if that Report had been drawn up during the Utrecht Treaty: but the whole Article is thus animadverted upon in Jus Regium.

" The first Instance they give us, is of my Lord " Bellew, &c. The very thing itself tells us, that " the Money could not be the motive of procuring his Majesty's Favour; since the Lord Raby " could with more ease obtain from his Majesty " the remission of that Mortgage, than a Pardon " for a Delinquent, who had so great an Estate. " Another Instance of Corruption which they tell " us of in this Case, is, that he also releas'd to the " Lord Rumney, all the Profits of his Estate, which " his Lordship had enjoy'd near three Years, &c. " The Sum releas'd, they are mightily mistaken " in, when they tell us 'twas about 3000 l. for it " was not a third Part of that Money: But be that " as it will, why is it mention'd among Instances " of Money being given for restoring forfeiting " Persons to their Estates? Was there any Reason " then, why he should be forc'd to pay the Lord " Bellew, the Profits of the Estate, during the time " he had it by the King's Grant."

27th Article, John Kerdiff of Kerdiff Town in the County of Dublin, gave to Mrs. Margaret Uniack 200 l. or thereabouts, to make use of her Interest with the Lord Rumney, to obtain his Majesty's Letter, to have his Outlawry revers'd; which was accordingly done, tho' the particular Case of this Man as appear'd to us, deserv'd Compassion.

The Answer taken out of the same Treatise:

" This Man's Case, they say, deserv'd Compassion, " If so the Lord Rumney did not abuse his Majesty's Compassion; such Instances as this, are the " others they mention of John Morris, Harvey Morris and Edmund Roch. If they were not able to " discover, neither by the General Report of the Country nor their own Observations, which we find " has been mighty penetrating, nor the Oaths of " Persons examin'd before them, that the Earl of " Rumney had any Part of these little Sums; 'twas " hard that they should after such a manner insinuate, that he had for Gratifications abus'd his Majesty's Compassion; one would hardly imagine " that a Person of a noble Family, whose Ancestor was eleven Times chief Governor of that " Kingdom, and himself thought worthy of that " Great and Honourable Trust, could be so treated by Gentlemen of that Country." A.D.1699

Injure the Lord Rumney.

36th Article, John Hussey of Lesly Esq; upon his being inform'd by Mr. Bray and Mr. Rosco, Agents to the Lord Athlone, That he could not get his Outlawry revers'd, without giving a general Release of all Demands to the Lord Athlone, which he did, whereby a Mortgage which he had on the Lord Limerick's Estate, then in Grant to the Lord Athlone, was releas'd; who appears not to us to have known of the said Mortgage, nor had any Benefit thereby.

The Answer as above,

" If the Lord Athlone did not know of any " Mortgage, and had no Benefit by the Release; " I don't understand how he cou'd abuse the King's " Compassion, or how this can be reckon'd as an " Instance of Pardons being obtain'd for Money. " But suppose the Lord Athlone had known of " that Mortgage, and had told Mr. Hussey that he " would oppose his Pardon, till he releas'd that Incumbrance on the Lord Limerick's Estate; I " can't see how this could be a greater Crime in " him, than accepting a Grant of the Estate of the " Lord Limerick; sure they were both Criminals. " There was no necessity for his Lordship's contracting with Hussey, to procure him his Majesty's Pardon, in Consideration of that Release; " since it was easier for him to beg a Release of " it from the King." And the Earl of Athlone.

The Representation of the Lord Bophin's Case in the Commissioners Report, shews us how much a Spirit of Party can warp People's Understandings and Consciences, and turn them from their proper Bent. They say,

John Bourk Esq; commonly call'd Lord Bophin, agreed to pay 7500 l. to Mr. Andrew Card for the Use of the Lord Albemarle, in Consideration he would procure his Majesty's Letter, to have him restor'd in Estate and Blood. 3000 l. of the said Sum was to be paid when he was restor'd to his Estate, and the residue some time after. In pursuance of the said Agreement, a Letter was sent to the Lords-Justices, to be communicated to the Commissioners of the Court of Claims in favour of the Lord Bophin, in order to have him adjudg'd within the Articles of Galway; but nothing being done therein, it was agreed, That a Bill should be transmitted into England, in order to pass into a Law in Ireland, to restore the Lord Bophin to his Estate and Blood: the Consideration suggested in the Bill was to educate his Children in the Protestant Religion, and to set his Estate to Protestants. And Earl of Albemarle.

We are to note here, that these Commissioners report, That these two Conditions were only Suggestions in the Bill, and insinuate that the real Motive was the Bribery of 7500 l. to be paid the Earl of Albemarle. At the same time they knew the Lord Bophin's two Sons were actually sent to England, to be educated at Eaton School, and were there educated Protestants. They go on,

It was further provided in the said Bill, That 9000 l. should be rais'd upon the said Estate for Payment of Debts, and a certain Part of the said Estate appropriated for the Maintenance and Provision for the Children; but in reality 7500 l. of the said Money was to be paid to the Earl of Albemarle, and the remainder, as we believe, to the other Persons concern'd in negotiating the said Agreement. This Bill was brought into the House of Commons of Ireland; but the Agreement taking wind, and the House resenting that their Authority should be made use of to support such a clandestine Bargain, and finding several Allegations in the Bill false, they rejected it.

After-

A.D. 1699 Afterwards a new Agreement was made, viz. That there ſhould be a Grant to the Lord Roſs in Truſt, That the Money to be advanc'd for the procuring the ſaid Grant, ſhould be firſt rais'd out of the ſaid Eſtate; and next, that the Profits ſhould be apply'd to the Payment of Debts, and after to the Uſe of the Family of Clanrickard. In purſuance of the Agreement aforeſaid, a Letter was procur'd from his Majeſty, and 3000 l. paid to Thomas Broderick Eſq; for the Benefit of the Lord Albemarle.

The Anſwer to it in Jus Regium is as follows:

" The true Account of that Affair is thus: Upon the Forfeiture of the Lord Bophin, his Eſtate, " to which he was only Tenant for Life, was by the " King given to the Earl of Albemarle. The forfeiting Lord us'd all the Endeavours he could " to recover his Eſtate, and his great Plea was, " that he was ſecur'd by the Articles of Galway. " Afterwards, not ſucceeding in this Claim, he " petition'd the King, and made Overtures to the " Earl of Albemarle, about his quitting his Grant, " and prevailing with his Majeſty to have him reſtor'd. In order to bring him to a more eaſy " Compliance, he did not only mention great Incumbrances on the Eſtate, and repreſent what " was true, that he was only Tenant for Life; but " ſaid that another, the Earl of Clanrickard, would " ſet up a Title which would defeat the Grant. " Theſe Conſiderations inclin'd the Earl of Albemarle to hearken to Propoſals. That which the " Lord Bophin offer'd in his Petition to move his " Majeſty's Royal Compaſſion, was, that he wou'd " give up his Children to be educated as Proteſtants. " To the Earl of Albemarle for releaſing the Grant, " he offer'd 7500 l. which, as I have heard, was " readily accepted by reaſon of the other Offer. " The King, who was pleas'd with the Thoughts " of gaining of that Branch of the noble Family of " Clanrickard, who had almoſt the whole Territory of that Houſe left him, to the Proteſtant " Religion, willingly embrac'd the Propoſal; and " purſuant to it, two of the Lord Bophin's ſeven " Sons were preſently after ſent to Eaton at his " Majeſty's Charge, where they have continu'd " ever ſince. But this was not all that wrought upon his Majeſty's Royal Compaſſion in that matter: " 'Twas repreſented to him, as it is by the Commiſſioners in their Report, who had their hint from " the Account given them in the Tranſactions of " that Affair, by the Perſons they examin'd upon " Oath; That if that Eſtate were ſet to Proteſtant Tenants by Leaſes for Lives, renewable for ever, 'twould greatly encreaſe the Freeholders thereby, ſecure the Property and advance the Proteſtant Intereſt of that Country. His Majeſty was therefore deſir'd, that one of the Conditions on which " the Lord Bophin ſhou'd be reſtor'd, might be, " that he ſhou'd ſuffer his Eſtate to be put into the " hands of Proteſtants in Truſt, who ſhou'd let " Leaſes for Lives, renewable for ever to Proteſtant Tenants. This Propoſal made to ſecure " the Proteſtant Intereſt, in that Iriſh Part of the " Country, was aſſented to, tho' not ſo very willingly by the Lord Bophin, two Thirds of whoſe " Eſtate was then to be leas'd out."

All this is entirely ſunk, by theſe Men of Fidelity in their Report; and truly I do not think, that the then major Vote wou'd have laid any great ſtreſs upon the Condition of letting the Lands to Proteſtant Tenants, to advance thereby the Proteſtant Intereſt. To proceed;

" To ſettle the whole matter a Bill was prepar'd, " in which, as the Report ſays, 'twas pretended " that 9000 l. ſhou'd be rais'd on the Eſtate; of " that Money, the Earl of Albemarle, was to have " 7500 l. for releaſing his Grant, the other 1500 l. " was not, as the Report inſinuates, more Fidelity you ſee, to be paid to Perſons concern'd in negotiating " that Agreement. When the Bill was under Debate " in the Council in Ireland, ſome Perſons offer'd A.D. 1699 " a Petition, wherein, purſuant to Proclamations " and publick Aſſurances given, they made a demand of the part due to them, as Diſcoverers of " the Lord Bophin's Title. After ſome Debate " 1000 l. was nam'd and agreed on as a competent " Sum; beſides this, 'twas propos'd by the Lord " Galway himſelf, that 500 l. more might be added to the above Sum. His reaſon for it, was, " that the Lord Bophin, who was Tenant for Life, " and therefore not able to raiſe Money, might " have wherewithal to defray the Charge of the " Bill, and to make him otherwiſe eaſy, who was " neceſſarily at that time at a greater Expence than " his Circumſtances could bear. Theſe were the real " Uſes for which the 9000 l. mention'd in the " Report, was to be rais'd upon that Eſtate; in " the Bill 'twas ſaid to be for Payment of Debts, " but they were Debts contracted after the manner I have here mention'd."

By what follows we ſhall ſee, what great Pains theſe faithful Commiſſioners were at, to fiſh up if poſſible ſome ground for Complaint, againſt thoſe noble Perſons who were in his Majeſty's Service and Favour.

" The Commiſſioners, ſays my Author, omitted " no Queſtion that was proper to diſcover, whether great and conſiderable Men in the Manage- " ment of the Affairs of that Kingdom, had, " in this Tranſaction, acted a faulty and corrupt " Part or no." Mr. Methuen, Lord-Chancellor of Ireland, whoſe Character was ſo infinitely ſuperior to that of the Commiſſioners, put 'em all together, who behav'd in his Miniſtry in Foreign Courts, ſo as to gain univerſal Eſteem and Applauſe, who for Wiſdom, Policy, Learning and Eloquence, had few Equals; Him did theſe Commiſſioners ſummon before them, as a Country Juſtice might do a petty Offender, and had him under Examination ſeveral Hours; as alſo Thomas Broderick Eſq; who both gave upon Oath the ſame Account of this Affair, as is here given. Judge Daly, who was Manager for the Lord Bophin, being ſtrictly examin'd four Hours together upon Oath, concerning the diſpoſal of the Money, and the Subject Matter of the Bill, gave the ſame Account. Theſe ſeveral Queſtions were put to Judge Daly, Whether Mr. Thomas Broderick, or Allen Broderick, ſince Lord Broderick, were to have any Part of the Money? Who ſollicited the Bill at the Privy-Council? What did the Lord-Chancellor or any other of the Privy-Council ſay concerning it? How came the Lord Galway, the Lord-Chancellor, Mr. Thomas Broderick, and Mr. Allen Broderick to befriend the Bill? &c. His Anſwers upon Oath were, That neither of them was to have one Groat directly or indirectly. That they were for it upon no other account, as he believ'd, than to bring the Children of the Lord Bophin, who were 7 Sons and 2 Daughters, into the Proteſtant Church, and to plant his Eſtate with Proteſtants, that what was then a Catholick might be made a Proteſtant Country. The Commiſſioners were ſo very deſirous to get ſomething out of this Judge Daly, that they told him, If he wou'd diſcover, they would recommend him. He reply'd, I am very unfortunate, if I am taken to be a Perſon who would be brib'd. As this was ſaid to Mr. Trenchard and the other Commiſſioners, one wou'd have thought it might have been a Check to his great Zeal againſt Bribery; when, as the modern Cato, he inveigh'd againſt it ſo furiouſly in his late Majeſty's Reign on a groundleſs Suppoſition, that the Adminiſtration was not free from it. Mr. Anneſly, while my Lord-Chancellor was under Examination, was very well pleas'd with what his Lordſhip ſaid in the beginning of it, about the Money to be given to the Earl of Albemarle, which he thought was a ſufficient diſcovery of Bribery; but afterwards, when he proceeded to open the whole

The Commiſſioners inſult the Lord-Chancellor Methuen.

A.D.1699 Matter, and explain the Conſiderations, he ſpoke to Sir Richard Leving another Commiſſioner, and pray'd him, to bid the Lord-Chancellor hold his tongue, for he would ſpoil all he had ſaid before.

I ſhall conclude what I have to ſay concerning theſe Commiſſioners and their Report, with the Article concerning the Lady Orkney's Grant, about which they made a great buſtle, and affected to be in a deep Concern, that their Duty oblig'd them to ſay Things which muſt touch ſomewhere, inſinuating the Perſon was too great to be nam'd or even to be gueſt. It had been well if their Concern had been more taken up in repreſenting the Truth of the Fact, and leſs in aggravating ſome Circumſtances of it.

'Tis ſaid in the Report,

Lady Orkney's Grant queſtion'd.

We ſhall conclude with laying before your Honours another Grant of a conſiderable Value, which we are apprehenſive does not fall within the Letter of our Enquiry. However, they are ſo over-diligent in their Buſineſs, that they will rather do what they own to be impertinent, than not take hold of ſo fair an Opportunity to ſhew their Ill-will to his Majeſty's Perſon and Government. They go on, A Grant under the Great Seal of Ireland, dated the 30th of May 1698, paſs'd to Mrs. Elizabeth Villiers, now Counteſs of Orkney, of all the Private Eſtate of the late King James, except ſome ſmall Part in Grant to the Lord Athlone, containing 95646 Acres, worth per Ann. 2599*5 l.* 18 s. They were ſo exact in their Calculation, as to put down the 18 s. The total Value 337943 l. 19 s. There is payable out of this Eſtate 2000 l. per Ann. to the Lady Bellaſis for her Life, and 1000 l. per Ann. to Mrs. Godfrey for her Life, and almoſt all the old Leaſes determine in the Year 1701, and then this Eſtate will anſwer the Values above-mention'd. To which four of them ſet their Hands,

The Commiſſioners falſe Computation of it.

Francis Anneſly.
John Trenchard.
James Hamilton.
Henry Longford.

If it was more à propos, it were eaſy to object to every part of this Article, and to prove it not to be true; but it will be ſufficient only to inſert the next Produce of this Eſtate, from the time of the Grant to the preſent Year: and it is thus,

		l.	s.	d.
In the Year 1695 the clear Income was		5125	9	3
1696	— — —	5652	0	11½
1697	— — —	6725	7	0
1698	— — —	7024	14	7½
1699	— — —	8489	7	3

About 6600 l. a-Year by a Medium, which at 13 Years Purchaſe, amounts to 86000 l. or thereabouts, and the Commiſſioners repeat it over again; the real Value is above 25000 l. per Ann. and the Value total above 330000 l. Notwithſtanding the 3000 l. a-year Incumbrance upon it, and an Arrear of 10000 l. due to Lady Bellaſis, of which they ſay not a Word. Indeed they do mention the Earl of Athlone's Grant of a Part of this Eſtate. However, they ſtuck not to value that to Lady Orkney, at 337943 l.

We read upon this in Jus Regium;

Tho' the miſtake of the Commiſſioners has been very great, as to the Returns they have made of the Value of this Eſtate; yet 'twill appear much leſs than what they have been guilty of in their other Returns, becauſe this Eſtate is free from any Incumbrances, but what I have here mention'd.

Votes upon the Report.

The Houſe of Commons having heard this Report, reſolv'd, That a Bill be brought in, to apply all the Forfeited Eſtates and Intereſts in Ireland, and all Grants thereof, and of the Rents and Revenues belonging to the Crown within that Kingdom, ſince the 13*th of* February 1688, to the Uſe of the Publick; and order'd a Clauſe to be inſerted in that Bill, for erecting a Judicature for determining Claims touching the ſaid Forfeited Eſtates. They alſo reſolv'd, That they would not receive any Petition, from any Perſon whatſoever, touching the ſaid Grants or Forfeited Eſtates, and that they would take into Conſideration, the great Services perform'd by the Commiſſioners, appointed to enquire into the Forfeited Eſtates in Ireland. A.D.1699

We have had a pretty good Enumeration of theſe Services, and are let into the Merits of the Report, which three of the Commiſſioners refus'd to ſign; theſe three were the Earl of Drogheda, Sir Francis Brewſter, and Sir Richard Leving; and they gave their Reaſons for it in a Letter to my Lord-Chancellor, dated the 29th of November. They ſent the like Letter to the Speaker, but the Houſe would not hear it read, becauſe the other four Commiſſioners, whoſe Conduct was complain'd of in that Letter, had not ſet their Names to it alſo. Theſe four Commiſſioners refus'd to conſider the Reaſons the other gave for diſſenting from them; inſiſting upon their being Four to Three, which was all the Argument the Earl of Drogheda could get from them; when he told them himſelf, Sir Richard Leving, and Sir Francis Brewſter, cou'd not give an Aſſent to the Article concerning the Grant to Mrs. Villiers; nor to the 32d Article concerning the Lord Bophin's Eſtate, and ſeveral other the moſt material Articles. 'Tis aſtoniſhing, that after three of the ſeven Commiſſioners, and three of them of the beſt Quality and Knowledge of the Affairs of Ireland, had explain'd themſelves ſo amply in a Memorial deliver'd to the other four Commiſſioners, for the Irregularity and Partiality of their Proceeding, ſuch a Vote ſhou'd paſs in their Favour. But the whole Proceeding taken ſtep by ſtep ſhews it was a Thing determin'd by the Party, who ſome how or other had unfortunately work'd themſelves into the Major Vote. The Author of Jus Regium informs us, that Count Tallard the French Ambaſſador, was at this time very often at Dr. Davenant's Houſe, that a Letter was written to one of the truſty Commiſſioners in Ireland, to aſſure him, The Doctor's Book of Reſumptions ſhould meet them here in the Winter, and that thoſe Commiſſioners before they left Ireland gave out, They would make uſe of all their Intereſt and Influence to get the Parliament to hear no Petitions. All theſe Things being in a deplorable manner confirm'd by the poor Produce of theſe Reſumptions, which thoſe that puſh'd the Bill on in the Houſe were ſufficiently inform'd of, while it was paſſing, gives us but a melancholy Proſpect of the Condition this Nation will be in, if ever it ſhould fall into the hands of a like Majority; for never was there ſo much want of Juſtice and Sobriety in National Counſels, as in the Caſe of theſe Forfeitures. If they would have hearken'd to a Propoſal publickly and commonly ſaid to have been made by the Grantees, to advance 300000 l. for a Parliamentary Confirmation of their Grants, they wou'd have acted like wiſe Men and Patriots; but to be led into a wild Inſinuation of two or three Millions, by a conteſted Report of a part of their Commiſſioners, and to receive it indigeſted as it was, purely for the Suggeſtions a part of them had thrown into it againſt the King and his Miniſters, is a woful Inſtance, that great Bodies of Men are no more free from Paſſion and Prejudice, and the diſmal Effects of them, than particular Perſons.

The Iriſh Commiſſioners differ about the Report.

A good Propoſal concerning the Grants rejected.

While the Commiſſioners were about this Buſineſs in Ireland, Mr. M———, a Member of the Houſe of Commons, ſent a Letter of his own private Motion, wherein he directed them to make a ſeparate Article of the Lady Orkney's Grants, becauſe that might reflect upon ſome-body, meaning the King.

A.D.1699 King. Another Member having learn'd the Contents of this Letter from Mr. M—, and being zealous to vindicate his Majeſty's Honour, which he thought was ſtruck at in it, complain'd of it to the Houſe: being preſs'd to tell his Author, he at firſt excus'd himſelf, alledging he was under an Obligation not to reveal what had paſs'd in a private Converſation. But the Houſe threatning to ſend him to the Tower, he nam'd the Perſon from whom he had this Report; which Perſon, who was alſo a Member of the Houſe, deny'd flatly that he had ever mention'd any ſuch thing. Here are two Parliament-Men flatly affirming and flatly denying the ſame thing. It might have been obſerv'd, that the Grant to Lady Orkney was in truth made a ſeparate Article in the Report, according to the Directions in Mr. M—'s Letter. For after the Commiſſioners had drawn up their Ninety Articles, and made an Abſtract of the Valuation, &c. they conclude, as they ſaid, with this prodigious Grant, without numb'ring it, as they had done the others; and this being by way of diſtinction, is a plain Proof that Mr. M—'s Letter had the intended Succeſs. However, as Biſhop Kennet words it, The affectionate Sticklers for his Majeſty being left in the Lurch, the Houſe voted on January the 15th, That the Report about Mr. M— was falſe and ſcandalous.

1700 The next day the Iriſh Commiſſioners attended the Houſe, and were examin'd, as to ſeveral Points which the Houſe were willing to be inform'd of. The firſt was concerning the late King James's private Eſtate, whether it could be deem'd forfeited by his Abdication in England, or whether it was by Treaſon committed afterwards. A hard Saying this, to thoſe that ever ſince the Reſtoration had been crying up the Divine Right and Abſolute Power of Kings. Sir Richard Leving ſaid, The ſame Gentleman, Mr. Longford, who urg'd, that upon the 15th of March King James landed in Ireland, and committed Treaſon, was pleaſed to ſay, " I don't " diſlike the 30th of January, nor the Deed that was " done that day; I like both the Day and the Deed." And as to Mr. Trenchard, Sir Richard Leving atteſted, That one of the Commiſſioners, ſpeaking of the Duke of York's Eſtate, ſaid, " If we take it not " to be within our Commiſſion, why will you do " it? why will you report it? for it will fly in the " King's Face." Mr. Trenchard anſwer'd, Why, the Commiſſion flies in the King's Face; if you won't fly in his Face, you can't execute this Commiſſion, or you muſt not execute it; one of them two. In the courſe of this Examination, Letters were found to be written by Members of Parliament to the Iriſh Commiſſioners, particularly by Mr. Arthur Moor, to Mr. Anneſley; probably the Mr. M—— above ſpoken of, by Mr. Harcourt, and others, by which we may know what Ground we tread upon. Mr. Trenchard endeavour'd to explain away what Sir Richard Leving had ſaid of him, which was confirm'd by Sir Francis Brewſter. I ſhall inſert his own Words, to free myſelf from a charge of Partiality.

An Iriſh Commiſſioner's Saying of the 30th of January.

Mr. Trenchard accus'd for ſpeaking againſt King William.

Mr. Trenchard. " My Lord Drogheda, as I re- " member, or Sir Richard Leving, ſaid, It would " be flying in the King's Face to report this Grant. " Upon which one of the Commiſſioners replied, " My Lord, we have heard too much of this Ar- " gument already, and 'tis time to have done with " it; we were not ſent here to flatter; and if the " enquiring into the Miſmanagement of the For- " feitures be a flying in the King's Face, then our " whole Commiſſion is a flying in his Face."

Speaker. Who ſaid the Words you have repeated?

Mr. Trenchard. 'Twas I, Sir.

The Softning here is very apparent, and what he added to it to ſoften it ſtill the more, ſo contrary to the natural Heat of that Man's Temper, that one cannot help thinking, he who was intereſted in the thing was rather in the wrong, than two others, Leving and Brewſter, who were in the ſame Tone; eſpecially when Mr. Trenchard himſelf own'd, there were ſome Words ſaid that might give Umbrage to the Accuſation. A.D.1700

When the Commiſſioners Pro and Con were heard, in the Houſe of Commons, there paſt ſomething elſe, which will further let us into Mr. Trenchard's Character; with which we ought to acquaint ourſelves, becauſe he aſſumed that of Patriot and Cenſor, in the Reign of King George I. which he endeavour'd to diſturb, by writing Letters againſt the Adminiſtration. Sir Francis Brewſter ſaid,

At the ſame time this was ſaid by Mr. Trenchard, I hear you talk of flying in the King's Face, I hope 'tis not flying in his Face; but this I muſt tell you, 'tis a villainous Grant, and ought to be expos'd. Upon his ſpeaking ſo, Words aroſe, and Mr. Trenchard gave me ill Language; but my Language was not ſo bad, but he was forc'd to beg my Pardon at the Board, and I did not his. There he ſtands, let him deny it if he can.

Mr. Trenchard asks Pardon.

Mr. Trenchard. " Sir, it is true, I did ask his " Pardon. The Board was in great Diſorder, and " one of the Commiſſioners whiſper'd to me, You " know he is a very ſimple old Fellow, and tho' he " gave the Affront, you are in the wrong, that you " are capable of being angry with him. Truly, Sir, " I was conſcious that I was much to blame to ſuf- " fer myſelf to be provok'd by him, and therefore " that the Debate might be interrupted no longer, " I ask'd his Pardon." That is, Mr. Trenchard ask'd Sir Francis Brewſter's Pardon for Sir Francis Brewſter's affronting him. A fine Tale this, to be told to a whole Houſe of Commons! As to the term villainous, he directly deny'd it, and ſoftned it to an extravagant Grant, an unreaſonable Grant, an unconſcionable Grant. But we may very juſtly queſtion the truth of this Alteration in the Expreſſion, when he immediately after ſays, The King was deceiv'd, and granted that for 5000 l. a year, which is worth between Five and Six and Twenty Thouſand. Which was far from being true, as we have already plainly prov'd. All that had been ſaid by Sir Richard Leving and Sir Francis Brewſter, ſignifying nothing, the Houſe came to theſe Reſolutions, January 16.

There having been divers groundleſs and ſcandalous Aſperſions caſt upon Francis Anneſley, John Trenchard, James Hamilton, and Henry Longford, Eſqrs; four of the Commiſſioners for the Iriſh Forfeitures,

Reſolv'd, That the ſaid four Commiſſioners have acquitted themſelves in the Execution of that Commiſſion, with Underſtanding, Courage, and Integrity.

Reſolv'd, That Sir Richard Leving, one of the ſaid Commiſſioners, has been the Author of the ſaid groundleſs and ſcandalous Reports upon the four Commiſſioners before mention'd.

Reſolv'd, That the ſaid Sir Richard Leving be committed to the Tower for the ſaid Offence.

The Commons ſend one of the Iriſh Commiſſioner's to the Tower.

How comes it about that Sir Richard Leving only was the Author of the ſaid groundleſs and ſcandalous Report, when Sir Francis Brewſter gave as ſtrong Evidence about it as Sir Richard Leving did? Sir Francis's Words were;

" There was ſome Diſcourſe concerning the re- " porting the private Eſtate; Sir Richard Leving " ſaid, It was not within our Enquiry. To which " ſome Reply was made, Why, if it was not within " our Commiſſion, yet it might be reported. My Lord " Drogheda made anſwer, If it be not within our " Commiſſion, then it will be to fly in the King's " Face to report it. Another then ſaid, The Com- " miſſion flies in the King's Face, and we can't act " in this Commiſſion unleſs we fly in his Face." Beſides, Mr. Trenchard himſelf confeſs'd, that there was Ground, which he term'd Umbrage, for the Accuſation now voted to be groundleſs. It was alſo Reſolv'd, January the 18th,

That

A.D.1700 Vote against the Grants.

That the adſiving, procuring, and paſſing the ſaid Grants of the forfeited and other Eſtates in Ireland, had been the Occaſion of contracting great Debts upon the Nation, and levying heavy Taxes upon the People; that the adviſing and paſſing the ſaid Grants was highly reflecting on the King's Honour; and that the Officers and Inſtruments concern'd in the procuring and paſſing theſe Grants, had highly fail'd in the Performance of their Truſt and Duty.

The little Pleaſure the Reader muſt needs take in the Proceedings of this Houſe of Commons, for ſo we muſt always term the Major Vote, will certainly be an Excuſe for our abridging the Hiſtory of them. The Buſineſs of the Supply took up ſome of their time, and they reſolv'd, that the Sum of 76383 l. now remaining in the Exchequer, on account of Tonnage and Poundage, with what the Subſidy ſhould bring in more to the 25th of December, ſhould be applied towards the Payment of Seamens Wages, and that 220000 l. be borrowed at Five per Cent. for the ſame Uſe; that 7000 Seamen be the Complement for the next Year's Service; that 18000 l. be allow'd for Bounty Money to the Officers of the Fleet: 90000 l. for the Extraordinary of the Navy; 300000 l. for Guards and Garriſons; and 25000 l. for the Office of Ordnance for the Year 1700. And to atone a little for the virulent Oppoſition Mr. How had given to all Meaſures of the Miniſters, he was pleas'd to give his Vote for Half-Pay to the disbanded Officers. They laid Two Shillings in the Pound Land-Tax, and order'd the Reſumption-Bill to be tack'd to it. On the 6th of February they reſolv'd to raiſe Money to diſcharge the Debt due to the Army; and being in a hot Scent after Grants, a Motion was made and the Queſtion put, That the procuring or obtaining of Grants of Eſtates belonging to the Crown, by any publick Miniſter concern'd in the directing or paſſing ſuch Grants, to or for their own Uſe or Benefit, while the Nation lay under the heavy Taxes of the late War, was highly injurious to his Majeſty, and prejudicial to the State, and a Violation of the Truſt repos'd in them. But this was over-doing it to ſuch a degree, that it paſs'd in the Negative. And an Order was made for bringing in a Bill to reſume all Grants and Penſions ſince the death of King Charles the Second; but that Order was of no effect, becauſe, as Biſhop Kennet tells us, it touch'd King James's Friends. I hope this will ſerve for a Confirmation of the Idea I have been forming of this Parliament, the Members of which were ſworn, and ſome of them aſſociated Subjects to King William, and will explain to us what is meant by High-Church and Tory. Never was Zeal ſo officious, as well as furious, as that of this Party in purſuit of Grants. On the 15th of February it was reſolv'd, that an Addreſs be preſented to his Majeſty, repreſenting to him the Reſolution of this Houſe of the 18th of January laſt, relating to Grants of forfeited Eſtates in Ireland; which was accordingly preſented ſix days after, and his Majeſty gave them an Anſwer worthy of his royal Dignity and Goodneſs.

The Reſumption-Bill order'd.

The Commons addreſs againſt Grants.

King's Anſwer.

Gentlemen,

I Was not only led by Inclination, but thought myſelf oblig'd in juſtice, to reward thoſe who had ſerv'd well, and particularly in the Reduction of Ireland, out of the Eſtates forfeited to me by the Rebellion there.——The long War in which we were engag'd, did occaſion great Taxes, and has left the Nation much in debt; and the taking juſt and effectual Ways for the leſſening that Debt, and ſupporting publick Credit, is what, in my Opinion, will beſt contribute to the Honour, Intereſt and Safety of the Kingdom.

The Speaker having reported this Anſwer, the Commons were ſo provok'd by it, that they Reſolv'd, That whoſoever adviſ'd it, had uſed his utmoſt Endeavour to create a Miſunderſtanding and Jealouſy between the King and his People. We have ſeen that in every Step they have taken, relating perſonally to the King, they have affected a more than ordinary Jealouſy of his Government, and now they throw the Blame of it on his Miniſters. This is the fair Dealing that we are to expect from that ſort of Men, when the publick Affairs are under any Influence of theirs.

A.D.1700 Vote againſt it.

Coll. Granville, afterwards Lord Granville, was Chairman of the Committee of the whole Houſe, who took into conſideration the State of his Majeſty's Revenue, and Reſolv'd, That there had been a great Loſs in his Majeſty Revenue of Exciſe; and to mend that Matter, they Reſolv'd, That it be an Inſtruction to the Committee of the whole Houſe to whom the Land-Tax and Iriſh-Forfeiture Bills were committed, that they receive a Clauſe to enable his Majeſty, for the Improvement of the Revenue, to let to Farm the Duties of Exciſe; but no Member of the Houſe to be a Farmer or Manager of Exciſe.

On the 7th of March they voted 1000 l. to be paid the Earl of Drogheda, Francis Anneſly, John Trenchard, James Hamilton, Henry Longford, Eſqrs; and to James Hooper, Secretary to the Commiſſioners; but to Sir Richard Leving and Sir Francis Brewſter, who had been at as much Trouble as the reſt, only 500 l. each, in conſideration of their Expences. They laid a Duty on Iriſh Hops, on Eaſt-India Goods, and continued the Duties on French Goods and Wines, towards raiſing the Supply; and order'd a Clauſe in one of the Money-Bills, for the importing, Cuſtom-free, a certain Quantity of Paper for printing Dr. Allix's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory. They Reſolv'd, that a Supply be granted to his Majeſty towards the Payment of his Proportion of the Debt owing to the Prince of Denmark, and the Moneys to be rais'd to be laid out in this Kingdom, and ſettled upon the Prince and Princeſs, and their Iſſue, according to their Marriage-Agreement. That an Addreſs be preſented to his Majeſty, that he would uſe his Endeavours to procure other Princes and States to pay their Proportions of the ſaid Debt. They agreed upon a Supply for the Coinage, for circulating Exchequer-Bills one year longer, for making good the Deficiencies of the Three Shillings in the Pound in the eighth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, and of the Duty on ſtamp'd Paper and Parchment, granted in the ſame Seſſion of Parliament; of the Malt-Tickets and Quarterly Poll granted in the next Year, for paying off the Tranſport Debt, and for Payment of the Debt due to the Navy, and Sick and Wounded Seamen. The forfeited Eſtates in Ireland were to be a Fund for ſome of theſe Purpoſes, which was making good one Deficiency with another, as it prov'd on the Experiment. On the 9th of February the King gave the royal Aſſent to an Act for taking off the Bounty-Money for Corn exported, till the Michaelmas following; and then came Kidd's Buſineſs before the Houſe of Commons. The Enemies to the Government were in hopes of improving it to their advantage, by creating more Complaints of Corruption, and alienating from it the Affections of the People. The grand Committee of Trade; receiv'd Repreſentations from ſome Merchants, of Pyracies committed in the Eaſt-Indies by Capt. Kidd, and his Crew, who had himſelf had a Commiſſion or Commiſſions to ſuppreſs Pyrates; Copies of which the Committee carefully examin'd, there being a Whiſper in Town, that great Men were concern'd with Kidd, not only in the regular Commiſſion which was granted him, but even in the Abuſe of it by his own Pyracies. In this Examination, a new Grant is met with to the Earl of Bellamont, and others, of Pyrates Goods taken by them or their Agents, which in ſober thinking one would take for Kidd's Buſineſs.

A.D.1700 for the publick Good, and whoever took ſuch Goods, richly deſerv'd to have them. Kidd being ſeiz'd in New-England by this very Earl of Bellamont, a Jealouſy is immediately conceiv'd, that the ſeizing him is Grimace, or at leaſt, that it was in order to have him tried, and diſpatch'd out of the way, before any further light could be had in that dark and dangerous Intrigue: therefore an Addreſs is preſented to the King, That Capt. Kidd might not be tried, diſcharg'd, or pardon'd, until the next Seſſion of Parliament; and that the Earl of Bellamont, Governor of New-England, might tranſmit over all Inſtructions and Papers taken with, or relating to the ſaid Kidd: which his Majeſty complied with.

If I could, like Biſhop Kennet in his Hiſtory, have contented myſelf with copying Gazettes and Votes of the Houſe of Commons, it would have ſav'd much of the Labour of the Brain in my own Hiſtory; which I ſhould never have undertaken, could I have thought the Reader expected no more from an Hiſtorian, whoſe Duty it is to extend his Enquiries as far as he can, into the Springs of Action and the Cauſes of Effects, which only can enable one to make a right Judgment of both Men and Things, and to diſtinguiſh Truth from its Appearances. This is to be done in Kidd's Affair, and we ſhall find it to be the Fruit of the ſame Tree, on which grew the Diſbanding, the Reſumption, the Diſſenting Juſtices, and thoſe other Articles; which the Biſhop ſays, could not be grateful to the Court, nor indeed to Country, where People had a juſt ſenſe of the Bleſſings of the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty, preſerv'd to us by the King, who is here call'd the Court. Kidd's Buſineſs was brought into the Houſe of Commons by the Old Eaſt-India Company, who bore a mortal Grudge againſt the Adminiſtration, for the eſtabliſhing the New Company, and were glad of this Occaſion to give Proofs of it, to the Ruin, if poſſible, of the chief Miniſters of State. One Mr. Coulſon, a Member of the Old Company, was ſo much in the Confidence of Sir Edward Seymour, that he ſtood with him for the Borough of Totneſs in this very Parliament, and by them and their Confederates, was this ſhameful Charge ſpirited up, againſt the moſt noble Perſons in the Miniſtry, as the Lord Chancellor Somers, the Duke of Shrewsbury, who however was nam'd very ſparingly, the Earl of Romney, and the Earl of Orford, Perſons ſo very noble, that the infectious Breath of the fouleſt Faction has not been able to taint their Characters. The Fact is thus.

Mr. Coulſon brings it on the Stage.

Great Lords abuſed by it.

In the beginning of the year 1695, the Earl of Bellamont was made Governor of New-York, and his Majeſty did then do him the honour to ſay, he thought him a Man of Reſolution and Integrity, and with thoſe Qualities, the more likely than any other he could think of, to put a ſtop to the growth of Pyracy, with which that Province was remarkably infeſted. For this reaſon he intended to put the Government of New-England alſo into his hands. Upon this, all Perſons who had Concerns in New-York, made their Application to him; and among others, Col. Robert Levingſton, a Man of a conſiderable Eſtate and fair Reputation, who had ſeveral Employments in the Province of New-York, on which account, as well as that of other matters he had then depending before the Council and the Treaſury, he had frequent acceſs to him: and his Lordſhip taking occaſion to mention to him, the Scandal which lay upon New-York, in reſpect to the Encouragement which Pyrates found there; Col. Levingſton confeſs'd, there was too much ground for the Complaint, and that if ſome ſpeedy and effectual Courſe was not taken to ſuppreſs theſe Enormities, ſo many Perſons would be drawn into the Guilt, that it would become exceeding difficult to maſter them. He then propos'd to him to employ one Capt. William Kidd, lately come from New-York in a Sloop of his own, who had told him he knew moſt of the principal Pyrates, and their Places of Rendezvous, and would undertake to ſeize moſt of them, in caſe he might be employ'd in one of the King's Ships, a good Sailor, of about 30 Guns, and 150 Men; he ſaid, tho' the Pyrates are many in number, yet they had at that time no Ships of conſiderable Force. Col. Levingſton repreſented Kidd as a bold honeſt Man, and one he believ'd fitter than any other to be employ'd on that Occaſion. My Lord Bellamont acquainted the King with this Propoſal, which he was pleas'd to think very neceſſary to be immediately conſider'd, becauſe ſeveral Informations upon Oath were then come to the Secretary of State, of ſeveral Veſſels gone and going from Bermudas, New-York, Rhode-Iſland, &c. under the Command of Thomas Too, William Maze, John Ireland, Thomas Wake, and others, all of them Pyrates, who had made ſeveral pyratical Voyages, and return'd with great Wealth. The King conſulted the Admiralty on this Occaſion, but the War employing all the King's Ships which were in a condition for Service, and the great want of Seamen, notwithſtanding the Preſs, and all other means us'd, together with the Remoteneſs of the Voyage, and the Uncertainty of meeting with the Pyrates, or taking them, tho' they might be found out, occaſion'd, after ſome deliberation, the laying aſide of this Project. Col. Levingſton however would not give it over, but propos'd to the Earl of Bellamont, that if Perſons of conſideration might be induced to join in the Expence of buying and fitting out a proper Ship, he had ſuch an Opinion of Kidd's Capacity and good Meaning, and ſo great a Deſire that ſome Stop might be put to theſe Pyracies, that he would himſelf be one of the Undertakers, and that he and Kidd would be a fifth part of the Charge; Kidd, as he alledg'd, being a ſettled Inhabitant at New-York, where he had a competent Eſtate, and had marry'd a Wife there with a good Fortune, by whom he had a Child; that he liv'd regularly, and his good Behaviour might be depended upon with Aſſurance, becauſe if he did otherwiſe than as his Duty would oblige him, he had no Place to go to, for he had acted ſuch things againſt the French ſince the War, that he durſt never truſt himſelf to them: but as the ſtongeſt Argument that could be made uſe of for truſting Kidd, the Colonel offer'd to be bound for the faithful Execution of his Commiſſion; all which the Earl made known to the King, who highly approv'd of the Deſign; and to encourage it, was pleas'd to conſent, that the Perſons who engag'd ſhould have a Grant of what Kidd ſhould take from the Pyrates, as far as it might belong to them, except a Tenth, which was reſerv'd to ſhew that his Majeſty was a Partner in the Undertaking. Upon this Encouragement, the Earl of Bellamont propos'd it to the Lords before mention'd, the Lord Chancellor, Duke of Shrewsbury, Earl of Romney, Earl of Orford, Sir Edmund Harriſon, and others, who agreed to his Propoſal of 6000 l. Expence, of which Levingſton and Kidd were to be a fifth part. The whole Management of the Adventure was left to the Lord Bellamont. The Commiſſion granted to Kidd had nothing in it objectable in point of Law, nothing in it different from the conſtant Form of Commiſſions of that kind, of which there have been a great number. There is a Power to fight with and ſeize Pyrates, in order to Trial, but not a word of treating with or pardoning them; yet this was given out by the Old Eaſt-India Company, and that Kidd was a notorious Pyrate, whereas he had had a Commiſſion from the Admiralty as a Privateer, before he was employ'd by theſe noble Adventurers, of whom he never ſaw the Duke of Shrewsbury or the Lord Somers. He was introduc'd to the Earl of Orford by my Lord Bellamont, and to the Earl

A falſe Report of Kidd's Commiſſion.

*A.D.*1700 of Romney by Col. Hewetſon, which was all he knew of them. He had no Inſtructions publick or private from any of the Adventurers, except ſailing Orders from the Earl of Bellamont, by which he was directed to purſue the Letter of his Commiſſion. This is the naked Truth, and thus it appears that there was a generous Deſign form'd by theſe Adventurers, to undertake that on their own account, which could not then be undertaken on account of the Publick, as it ought to have been, and as it was the King's deſire it ſhould have been, but the Lords of the Admiralty repreſented that it was impracticable at that Juncture. 'Tis plain this was not only an innocent, but a laudable Undertaking, and the baſe Turn that was given to it, by the Enemies to the Adminiſtration, was a complication of Abſurdity, Malice, and Falſehood. They had the impudence to affirm, that Kidd had plunder'd ſeveral Merchants by virtue of his Commiſſion; that the Earl of Bellamont was ſent Governor of New-York on purpoſe to countenance Kidd and other Pyrates; and all this was done by the Procurement of ſome great Men. The Old Eaſt-India Company, who were the Merchants ſaid to have deliver'd Repreſentations, complaining of theſe things, had very often taken out the very ſame Commiſſion, as was that of Kidd, for the Commanders of their Ships to act againſt Pyrates, which, as much as it muſt be within their Knowledge, they pretended not to know; and intimated that Kidd's Commiſſion was of a different ſort, and unlawful.

Falſhoods invented by the Enemies to the Adminiſtration.

Purſuant to the Orders, Kidd had receiv'd from the Lord Bellamont, and Sir Edmund Harriſon, who being one of the New Eaſt-India Company, cou'd not fail of lying under the diſpleaſure of the old; he ſail'd in the Adventure-Galley from Plymouth, at the latter end of the Year 1695, to New-York, and in his way took a French Prize. From thence he ſail'd to Madera, thence to Bonaviſta and St. Jago, from whence he proceeded to Madagaſcar, and from thence he cruiz'd at the Entrance of the Red-Sea; but effecting nothing, he ſail'd to Calicut, and took a Ship of 150 Tons; the Maſter and three or four of the Crew were Dutchmen, the reſt Moors, this Ship he carry'd to Madagaſcar. From whence he ſail'd again, and about five Weeks after took the Quedah-Merchant of 400 Tons; the Maſter was one Wright an Engliſhman, ſhe had on board two Dutch Mates, and a French Gunner, the Crew were Moors, in all about 90 Perſons. The Ship he carry'd to St. Mary's near Madagaſcar, and there he ſhar'd the Goods with his Crew, 40 Shares to his own Uſe. Here 90 of his Crew, who were 151 in all, left him and went on board the Mocha-Merchant, an Eaſt-India Company Ship which had turn'd Pyrate; and there was every whit as much reaſon to charge that Company with the Pyracies the Mocha-Merchant's Crew committed, as there was to charge Kidd's Adventurers with his. He and his Men burnt his own Ship the Adventure-Galley, at St. Mary's, and they all went on board the Quedah-Merchant and ſail'd for the Weſt-Indies. Being deny'd Succour at Anguilla, and St. Thomas's, he ſail'd to Mona, lying between Porto-Rico and Hiſpaniola, and there by the means of one Bolton got ſome Proviſions from Curaſſau. He bought a Sloop of Bolton, in which he loaded part of his Goods, and left the Quedah-Merchant with the reſt of the Goods in Truſt with Bolton, and 17 or 18 Men in her. In this Sloop he touch'd at ſeveral Places, and diſpos'd of a great part of his Goods, and at laſt came to Boſton in New-England, where the Earl of Bellamont ſeiz'd him and what Goods he had left; for the Villain had pretended to have a vain Imagination, that the Quedah-Merchant being mann'd with Moors was a lawful Prize; tho' there was no Proof that the Commander of her and his Crew had committed any

Pyracies on the Engliſh, or any other European, or indeed Indian Nation. My Lord Bellamont immediately ſent Notice of Kidd's being taken to the Secretary of State, and deſir'd that a Ship might be ſent to fetch him and his Goods, that had been ſeiz'd with him. Accordingly the Rocheſter Man of War was order'd for that Service in the Year 1699; and ſail'd for Boſton with other Ships under her Convoy: but the latter proceeding in their Voyage, and the Rocheſter returning, ſhe being diſabled by a Storm to continue the Voyage, 'twas preſently nois'd about, that it was all Colluſion between the Miniſters and Adventurers, who had no mind that Kidd ſhou'd be brought here for fear of his making diſcoveries, that the Duke of Shrewſbury, the Lord-Chancellor Somers, &c. were turn'd Pyrates: For to be Partners with Pyrates, is the ſame thing as being Pirates themſelves. As groundleſs, as abſurd, as monſtrous as this Suſpicion, or rather pretended Suſpicion was; it was taken hold of by Sir Edward Seymour, Mr. John How, and the ſame Set of Men that prevail'd in this Houſe of Commons, to form a Charge if poſſible againſt my Lord-Chancellor, and the other Lords Adventurers, with a particular Aim againſt my Lord-Chancellor Somers; a Man of ſuch illuſtrious Merit, that the ſore Eyes of Envy cou'd not bear its Glory. So thoſe that were under this Affliction brought the Matter into the Houſe of Commons, where a Queſtion was propos'd and inſiſted on, That the Letters Patents granted to the Earl of Bellamont, and others, of Pyrates Goods, were diſhonourable to the King, againſt the Law of Nations, contrary to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, Invaſion of Property, and deſtructive of Trade and Commerce. The contrary of all which in every Article is notoriouſly the Truth, as is prov'd and put beyond all doubt, in a Treatiſe publiſh'd at that time, entitl'd, An Account of the Proceedings in relation to Captain Kidd, written by a Gentleman; who ſhews himſelf to have been very converſant with our Laws and Buſineſs, and particularly with this Buſineſs of Kidd's. The above Queſtion, as wild as it appears to be, not to ſay wicked, was put the 6th of December 1699, and paſt in the Negative; but whoever compares ſome Queſtions in the Caſe of the Iriſh Grants with this, in relation to Kidd's Grant, will find ſo much Agreement in them both, as to Temper and Juſtice, that he will think it ſtrange that the Succeſs of 'em upon the Queſtion ſhou'd be different. The Party gave not over at this balk; the Rocheſter returning back, the Clamour was renew'd, and it was inſinuated there was another Commiſſion granted to Kidd, which was not yet diſcover'd, and other Inſtructions that were ſecret and of a dangerous nature wou'd be brought to light. Theſe Inſinuations had their Effect on ſome Men, and produc'd the Addreſs, That Kidd might not be try'd nor pardon'd, till the next Seſſions of Parliament,

A wicked impudent Slander on the Miniſters.

A Queſtion propos'd for a Vote upon it.

Paſt in the Negative.

Whatever has been ſaid in general of this Tranſaction, was particulariz'd and circumſtantiated in the Examination of Kidd after he was brought home, which was long before they cou'd have heard of ſuch an Addreſs in America. After the riſing of this Parliament, the King did a noble Lord the Honour to dine with him; and while they were at Dinner a Diſcourſe aroſe concerning Kidd, and the Trouble occaſion'd by that Buſineſs to the Perſons concern'd in the Grant. Upon which his Majeſty was pleas'd to ſay, If by the Law of England, I could be a Witneſs, I could of my own Knowledge juſtify the Lords concern'd, in all they have done in that Affair. What Opinion then muſt that great and good King have of the Honeſty of thoſe Men, who endeavour'd with all their Might to form a Charge againſt them for it in Parliament, in the Proceſs of which they wou'd have made him a Party, as

The King juſtifies the Lords concern'd in Kidd's Buſineſs.

A.D.1700 his Aſſent was neceſſary in all their Proceedings? In what remains of this Matrer, I ſhall follow ſcrupulouſly the Treatiſe juſt mention'd, becauſe the Things are of too great Importance to ſtand upon any ſingle Authority.

" heard, the poor Creature had nothing to ſay,
" which in any ſort anſwer'd the Expectations of
" thoſe who gave the Information, or were ſo
" forward to ſend for him; and thereupon he was " remanded. Sir Edward Seymour had ſuch an In-
" dignation at his Diſappointment, that he declar'd
" the Fellow was a Fool as well as a Rogue,
" and that he would never credit what he ſhou'd ſay
" afterwards. To ſpeak the truth, it was no Fault
" of that Gentleman, that Kidd ſaid no more to
" the Purpoſe; he watch'd his bringing up, and
" preſently got him alone in the Room where he " was kept; their Converſation was quickly in" terrupted: two worthy Members, who heard
" that Sir Edward Seymour was alone with Kidd,
" had ſo much Senſe of his Behaviour throughout
" that whole Affair, and ſo juſt an Abhorrence of
" ſuch Practices, that they ruſh'd immediately in-
" to the Room, and put an end to the Privacy.
" But if there be Curioſity of knowing what paſt
" in that little time it laſted; the Miſtreſs of the

" while, and the Keeper who there took care of him,
" are both alive; and can tell what Kidd very na-
" turally related to them, of that ſhort Conference
" ſoon after it was over. I think I ought to tell
" you, how Sir Edward Seymour came to make
" that Miſtake in procuring Kidd to be ſent for thus
" fruitleſly, that you may the better ſee his Zeal to " make ſomewhat more than he could find. For
" tho' he told the Houſe he had a Letter from
" Kidd, that was but mending the Story, to give the " more Expectations of what was to come; and
" therefore you will obſerve Care was taken to o-
" mit any mention of a Letter in the Printed
" Votes. The Fact was thus; when Kidd was " brought up the firſt time, he became indebted
" to one Kiftdale a Coffee-man, near the Houſe of " Commons, in 7 or 8 Shillings. The Coffee-
" man and his Son went to him to Newgate, on
" the Sunday, to demand the Debt; and drinking
" together, Kiftdale ſaid to Kidd, You are a Fool to be
" hang'd for any body, and you may certainly ſave your
" Life, if you can ſay any thing againſt the Lord Or-
" ford, and the Lord Somers. Kidd reply'd, I will
" hang for no body, and am reſolv'd to ſpeak all I
" know. Kiftdale and his Son went immediately Sir Edward Seymour's Malice. " with this Story to Sir Edward Seymour, and upon
" that he founded the Information he gave the
" Houſe, which he call'd the receiving a Letter;
" whether the Coffee-man acted by Order in talk-
" ing ſo to Kidd, or whether he only gueſt where
" he ſhould be welcome with a bad Story, I know
" not. Sir Edward Seymour little knew himſelf,
" when he ſaid he wou'd never credit Kidd again.
" He was ſo unwilling to let this matter end with-
" out more Prejudice and Reflection, on thoſe
" whoſe Ruin he wiſh'd, that ten Days after, he
" and his good-natur'd Friend, were engag'd in " bringing another yet more impertinent Story be" fore the Houſe. He inform'd them that Kidd,
" ſince his being in Newgate, had been in ſome
" other Place beſides the Houſe of Commons;
" this occaſion'd a new Examination of all the " Keepers of Newgate. But there alſo follow'd a A.D.1700
" Diſappointment, it proving to be a ridiculous as " well as a falſe Tale, and ended only in the Con-
" fuſion of thoſe whoſe Malice and Deſire to op-
" preſs Innocence could never end. The Story is
" as follows: One Symmonds, who had been for" merly an Officer in the Marine Regiments, and
" lives now as he can, told Sir Edward Seymour and
" Mr. John How, that one Stockdale told him,
" that the firſt time Kidd was brought up to the
" Houſe, as he was going back to Newgate, he
" was carry'd to the Lord Hallifax's Houſe in Weſt-
" minſter. Stockdale ſaid, he ſaw him there, toge-
" ther with that Lord and the Lord Somers; in" credible Stupidity and Effrontery! My Author
" proceeds, If you would know the Quality of this
" Stockdale, he is a poor Fellow that waits at an
" Alehouſe at Charing-Croſs, to be ſent on Errands,
" but was Brother to a Maid-Servant in my Lord
" Hallifax's Family; by Pretence of which he
" us'd very often to get Victuals there, and ſo knew
" the way into the Houſe. Upon the Examina-
" tion of theſe two Fellows, procur'd by Seymour
" and How, it appear'd it was not poſſible the Tale
" ſhould be true, becauſe all that day hundreds of " People follow'd Kidd wherever he went, ſo that
" this Interview muſt have been a very publick one.
" If the Gentlemen who thought fit to give this no-
" table Information to the Houſe of Commons,
" had not been blinded with Malice, they muſt
" have ſeen the Folly of it. Was it probable that " one of thoſe Lords, who was wholly unconcern'd
" in the Buſineſs of Kidd, ſhould ſo unneceſſarily
" deſire his Company at his Houſe on ſo remark-
" able a Day? Or was it poſſible to believe, that " the other of theſe Lords, who certainly thought
" himſelf not a little fortunate, that Kidd upon all
" his Examinations had declar'd he had never ſeen
" him, would begin an Acquaintance with him
" at that time? I have told you that this third In" quiry vaniſh'd in Smoke; and I cannot for-
" bear obſerving to you, that it ended without
" any Cenſure or Indignation, expreſs'd againſt
" thoſe who continu'd to act a Part ſo ſhame-
" leſly malicious." And let me tell the Reader, that theſe were the very Men, who paſs'd a Vote of Applauſe of the Conduct of Mr. Trenchard, and three other Iriſh Commiſſioners; who puſh'd on the breaking the Army; the Reſumption-Bill; the Condemnation of the Partition, &c.

We muſt remember that the Iriſh Commiſſioners in their Examination of Judge Daly, provok'd that Gentleman to reprove them for offering to bribe him out of Diſcoveries, when he had none to make to their purpoſe; and when Kidd was examin'd before the Admiralty, he was ask'd in plain Words, If he could ſay any Thing in relation to the Earl of Bellamont, the Earl of Romney, the Duke of Shrewsbury, for form ſake perhaps, or the Earl of Orford by Name. But he declar'd, he had nothing to ſay of them or any of the Owners, more than he had ſaid already; the Subſtance of which is here related, and at all his ſubſequent Examinations he affirm'd the ſame thing. p. 251.

It is well known, both before and after Kidd's Trial, no Endeavours were wanting to make Kidd underſtand the only way, whereby he might deſerve his Pardon; Dr. G——g, continues my Author, knows who the Perſon was, who was with Kidd more than once ſome few days before his Execution, and dealt ſo freely with him, to adviſe him to charge two Lords by name, with ſomewhat that was material, which he ſaid was the only way to ſave his Life. And the more to provoke the poor Wretch to follow his Advice, ſwore to him, that thoſe Lords and their Friends were reſtleſs in ſolliciting to have him hang'd, and therefore it was reaſonable enough for him to do their Buſineſs. But having nothing to ſay, as great a Villain as he was, he cou'd not bring himſelf to ſave his Life, p. 230. Kidd tamper'd with to accuſe the Lord Somers, &c.

A.D.1700 by ſwearing Lyes againſt ſuch noble and innocent Perſons. Notwithſtanding the Diſappointment their Enemies met with in the Proſecution of Kidd; after all their indefatigable Labours to make uſe of him or his Buſineſs for their Deſtruction; they were ſo far from being diſcourag'd, that a Queſtion was put in the Houſe of Commons, That an Addreſs be made to his Majeſty, to remove John Lord Somers, Lord-Chancellor of England, from his Preſence and Counſels for ever; which was too great a Reflection on the Honeſty and Underſtanding of the Nation, to be approv'd by their Repreſentatives, and it was accordingly rejected.

A Vote againſt Lord Somers rejected.

In the mean time the Reſumption-Bill was going forward, of which, Biſhop Kennet writes, It was an Indignity put upon the King and his Councils; a very great hardſhip upon the Grantees, and the Purchaſers and Tenants under them, and indeed a Confuſion and Diſtraction to the whole Government in Ireland. Great Arguments theſe, to ſuch Men as Mr. John How, Mr. Arthur Moor, Dr. Davenant, &c. On the 28th of March, the Houſe of Commons made choice of no leſs than thirteen Commiſſioners or Truſtees, for the Sale of the Forfeited Eſtates, who were

One may know what the Temper of thoſe that choſe them was, by their Choice of Sir Henry Sheers a Nonjuror, and one that had been charg'd with more Plots than one againſt the Government, and was taken up at the breaking out of the Aſſaſſination and Invaſion-Plots, when he impeach'd three or four of King William's moſt faithful Miniſters, as if in concert with Fenwick to confound the Innocent with the Guilty, that the latter might fare the better. Fellows, another of 'em, was a Creature of Colſton's, a Creature of Sir Edward Seymour's, and no more need to be ſaid of theſe Truſtees. On the 2d of April, this Reſumption-Bill was ſent to the Lords for their Concurrence. Their Lordſhips ſeem'd not to be well-pleas'd, at the pinning down this Bill upon them, it being tack'd to the Land-Tax; as the ſame Set of Men, two or three Years after, attempted to tack a Bill for perſecuting thoſe Proteſtants in England, who worſhipped God in the way of the Reformation, according to the manner of all the Reform'd Churches; which theſe Ingenious Men then call'd Schiſm. But becauſe the Lords cou'd not reject the Bill, without leaving the urgent Neceſſities of the State unprovided for, their Lordſhips contented themſelves to make great Amendments to that Part of it which related to the Forfeitures. The Commons diſapprov'd them, and deſir'd a Conference with the Lords about it; which, and two other Conferences having little Succeſs, the Commons who had order'd a Liſt of his Majeſty's Privy-Council to be laid before them, took the ſaid Liſt into Conſideration with great Solemnity. They firſt order'd the Lobby of the Houſe to be clear'd of all Strangers, the Back-door of the Speaker's Chamber to be lock'd up, and that the Serjeant ſhould ſtand at the Door of the Houſe, and ſuffer no Members to go forth. After all theſe Preparations, the Vote againſt my Lord Somers, and that for an Addreſs to turn all out of the Privy-Council that were not born in England, the Prince of Denmark excepted, were warmly debated; the former had a Negative put upon it, the latter paſt in the Affirmative, as has been already related; and his Majeſty being inform'd of the high Ferment the Commons were in, ſent a private Meſſage to the Lords by the Earl of Albemarle, to paſs the Bill without any Amendments. But to prevent his receiving any ſuch Addreſs from them, he came to the Houſe of Lords the next Day, April 11. his Coronation-Day, and after having giving the Royal Aſſent to all the Bills that were ready for it, he commanded the Earl of Bridgwater to prorogue the Parliament; and it had been well for England and all Europe, if he had then diſſolv'd them, as will appear in the Sequel. But the Juncture was too critical to leave the Kingdom without a Parliament; beſides, there were ſome Perſons very obnoxious to all Engliſhmen of Revolution Principles, who had found means to have Acceſs to his Majeſty with as much Freedom as thoſe of his Cabinet, and inſinuated to him that this was a Church Houſe of Commons, and that none but whom they were pleas'd to call good Churchmen could do his Majeſty's Buſineſs, which was true, only taken in the worſt Senſe. That if he would be pleas'd to employ ſuch, the Church would ſtand by him, and go with him into a War, if he thought a War was neceſſary to preſerve the Liberty and Ballance of Europe. The Earl of Rocheſter was at the head of this new Party in the Lords Houſe; Sir Edward Seymour, and Mr. How, nay Mr. Robert Harley, who had had the rankeſt Sort of Conventicle Education, as Seymour and the reſt thought fit to miſname the Aſſemblies of Proteſtant Diſſenters. The King had ſome time before the Prorogation of the Parliament, given my Lord Somers a hint of the neceſſity he ſhould be under to part with him, in order to accommodate Matters with thoſe in the Oppoſition. Tho' my Lord-Chancellor was far from being deſirous to continue in that high Station out of Ambition or Intereſt, which were both equally flatter'd by it; yet his Health and the Uneaſineſs with which he had lately held it, inclin'd him to lay it down. However, being ſenſible that his Enemies rather meant Diſſervice to the King than Diſgrace to himſelf; he took the liberty to ſpeak freely to his Majeſty in Words to this Effect: "That he knew very well what his Enemies aim'd "at, by their abuſing and perſecuting him as they had "of late done; that the Seal was his greateſt Crime, "and if he quitted it he ſhould be forgiven; but "knowing what ill Uſe would be made of it if it "were put into their hands, he was reſolv'd, with his "Majeſty's Permiſſion, to keep it in defiance of "their Malice, and to ſtand all the Trials they "ſhould put upon him, with the Support of his "Innocence and the Hopes of being ſerviceable to "his Majeſty: that he fear'd them not, and did "not doubt but if he would be as firm to his Friends "as they would be to him, they ſhould be able to "carry whatever Points he had in view for the "Publick Welfare in a new Parliament." The King ſhook his Head a little, as a ſign of his Diffidence, and only ſaid, It muſt be ſo. The Gentleman from whom I had this Incident, had it from my Lord Somers himſelf; and I have the more Reaſon to believe it, becauſe their Intimacy had been ſo great, as that my Lord, when he was Sollicitor-General, was very near concluding a Treaty of Marriage with a young Lady that Gentleman's Kinſwoman; which I ſpeak of my own Knowledge, and the rather, becauſe it is probably the only Treaty of that kind, which his Lordſhip ever enter'd into. Biſhop Kennet's way of telling it is thus, after another Writer: "The King ſent "the Earl of Portland to the Lord-Chancellor Somers, to demand the Great-Seal of him. Whether his Majeſty made this Step by his own Determination, or by the Impulſe of his New Favourite, who headed a growing Party, Hiſtory "cannot affirm; but 'tis moſt certain, that thereby his Majeſty loſt abundance of true Friends, "without gaining any real ones; for the Lord Somers had been attack'd by the Houſe of Commons,

Let us ſee what a Foreign Author ſays upon this Article; he is ſpeaking of the Lord Albemarle, being ſuppos'd to have had a ſhare in thoſe Counſels, which produc'd the removal of the Lord Somers. Il perſuade a ſa Majeſte de changer de Miniſtres, dans le Deſſein de gagner les Torys, Rochester, Seymour, Harley, firent croire au Comte que ſi on employent, &c. A French Author's Reflections upon it. " He perſuaded his
" Majeſty to change the Miniſtry, in order to " gain the Tories, Rocheſter, Seymour, Harley, who " made the Earl of Albemarle believe, that if that
" Party were taken into Employment, the Parlia-
" ment would be entirely devoted to the King's
" Pleaſure. Albemarle undertook to repreſent
" their Reaſons to his Majeſty, who having Occa-
" ſion for Money, to make Preparation for a War
" which he ſaw was unavoidable, was ready to give
" ear to any Propoſals which ſeem'd to facilitate his
" Deſign; but it is certain, he loſt by it many old
" Friends, without making any new ones." And ſuch will be the Conſequence in all Revolution Princes, whenever they ſuffer themſelves to be influenc'd by the Enemies to the Revolution. The ſame French Author writes thus, Pluſieurs Membres de la Chambre Baſſe, &c. " Several Members of " the lower Houſe in this Parliament,, who had
" till then ſided with the ſtaunch Whigs, now join'd
" with the ſtrongeſt ſide, under pretence of Male-
" Adminiſtration." The Harleys and Foleys put themſelves at the head of this New Band, which The Flying Squadron. was call'd the Flying Squadron, and theſe with the Howes, the Muſgraves, the Bolles's, &c. form'd the major Vote.

I ſhall only mention the State-Acts of Parliament, to which the King gave the Royal Aſſent; The Land-Tax, and Iriſh Forfeitures Bill; and an Act for a Duty on Muſlins and other Eaſt-India Commodities; for aſcertaining the Meaſures of Ale and Beer; for employing the Poor; for Heirs to inherit, tho' their Parents were Aliens, themſelves being Engliſh born; for preventing vexatious Suits in Wales; for preventing the growth of Popery; for the more effectual Puniſhment of Vagrants; for puniſhing Governors of Plantations in England, for Crimes committed by them in America; for the more effectual ſuppreſſing of Piracy; an Act for the better tything Hemp and Flax; to prevent the Exportation of Wool out of Ireland and England; to regulate Watermen and Wherry-men; to take away the Duties on Woollen-Manufactures, Corn, Bread, Biſket and Meal exported; to appoint Commiſſioners for the Army-Debt; to diſſolve the Duke of Norfolk's Marriage with the Lady Mary Mordaunt. This I mention, becauſe I have not enlarg'd upon the Trial of that Divorce. Biſhop Kennet has taken great pains to make it out, that a Woman who liv'd with another Man as his Wife, in her firſt Husband's Life-time, and lay with him before Witneſſes, as was the Caſe of the Dutcheſs of Norfolk, and Sir John Germain her Gallant, ought to be divorc'd from him. And in my Opinion it ought to have been done without uſing a tenth Part of the Words that were made uſe of for doing it. An Act for continuing the old Eaſt-India Company a Corporation; we have ſeen how well that Company behav'd, and what they deſerv'd for it in the Affair of Kidd. His Majeſty made no Speech at the cloſe of this Seſſion; during which a ſecond Treaty of Partition was negotiated and concluded; Second Treaty of Partition. which was occaſion'd by the Death of the Electoral Prince of Bavaria, and his Part of the Spaniſh Succeſſion was by this ſecond Treaty aſſign'd to Charles Archduke of Auſtria, the preſent Emperor, from whom it was given by the Utrecht Peace, to Philip Duke of Anjou. By this new Partition Treaty, Milan was aſſign'd to the Duke of Lorrain, inſtead of his own Dutchy, which was given to France. The County of Bilche, was conferr'd on the Prince of Vaudemont; in all other Articles, the ſecond Partition Treaty was the ſame as the firſt. The Plenipotentiaries, who tranſacted this grand Affair, were, the Earl of Portland and the Earl of Jerſey, for the King of England; John Van Erſen, Burgo-maſter of Zutphen; Frederick Baron Rheede; Sir Anthony Per-Lee of the Nobility of Holland; Anthony Heinſius Penſionary; William of Naſſau Lord of Odycke; Everard de Weede Lord of Weede; William Van Haren, Deputy of the Nobility of Friſeland; Arnold Lemsker, Burgomaſter of Daventer, and John Van-Heek, Senator of Groningen; all Deputies of the States-General, for their High-Mightineſſes: and the Count de Tallard, and the Count de Briord, for the French King. I name the Dutch Plenipotentiaries, for that we find among them the Illuſtrious Names of Heinſius, Odycke, &c. juſtly eſteem'd as the greateſt Men of that Age, for Council or Negotiation. Againſt whom we are to bring Mr. John How, Sir John Bolles, Mr. Arthur Moor, Mr. William Bromley, &c. This was the Treaty which Mr. John How call'd felonious in the Houſe of Mr. John Commons; which as the Report, then was, his Ma- How's Inſolent Expreſſions of it. jeſty ſo highly reſented, that he dropt an Expreſſion, ſignifying, that if the diſparity of their Condition had not reſtrain'd him, he wou'd have had the Satisfaction of him, which all Gentlemen have a Right to demand of one that gives the Lye.

The Garter being given to the Earls of Pembroke and Albemarle, they were inſtall'd at Windſor about the beginning of June. And the Remark upon it in the Right Reverend Hiſtorian's Reign of King William, is very extraordinary; to make his Majeſty's giving that moſt noble Order to the Earl of Albemarle, go down the better, " The King did Earls of Pembroke
" at the ſame time beſtow that diſtinguiſhing and Albe-

One wou'd have thought that the Earl of Albe- ter.
marle's Birth had been too Illuſtrious to have been a Diſqualification for any Knighthood; his Family being one of the moſt ancient and noble Families of Gelderland; who pique themſelves on their Nobility and Antiquity, and that his Deſcent from the Illuſtrious Opdam, a Name well known in the Britiſh Seas, deſerv'd no ſuch diſadvantageous Diſtinction. The Prelate proceeds; " The two
" Knights elect were inſtall'd at Windſor with the uſual
" Formalities, but it was obſerv'd, that tho' the Con-
" courſe of People was extraordinary great, and the " Entertainment very ſplendid; yet few of the Nobi-
" lity honour d the Ceremony by their Preſence, and " that many ſevere Reflections were then made on
" his Majeſty, for laviſhing away a Garter on his Fa-
" vourite." If the Biſhop had examin'd the Regiſters of the Garter in King Charles and King James II's Reign, he wou'd have been more cautious in his Expreſſion. Thoſe who write that of the latter Part of Queen Anne's Reign, will have more Occaſion for that Phraſe laviſhing a Garter, and

A.D. 1700 the Hiſtorian might have obſerv'd, that the Report of the Earl of Albemarle's being inſtrumental in the removal of the Lord Chancellor Somers, and of the Earl of Rocheſter's being to be one of the Commiſſioners for the Inſtallation, kept ſeveral of the Nobility at home.

It was taken notice of, that the Great Seal remain'd a good while in the Cuſtody of the Lord Chief-Juſtice Holt, and the other Chiefs of the Courts in Weſtminſter-Hall. 'Twas reported, that not only Mr. Vernon, the great Chancery Lawyer, but others of leſs fame, excus'd themſelves when it was offer'd them, as doubtful of their being equal to a Poſt which had been ſo well fill'd, and even adorn'd by my Lord Somers. But Sir Nathan Wright, one of the King's Serjeants at Law, little known or talk'd of till he was Counſel againſt Fenwick, having no ſuch ſcruple upon him, the Great-Seal was given him by the King at Hampton-Court, with the Title of Lord-Keeper, on the 21ſt of May. After which, he took his Seat at the Council-Board, and ſign'd a Commiſſion to the Earl of Bridgwater to adjourn the Parliament. This Lord-Keeper began very ſoon to provide well for thoſe for whom he was to make Proviſion, and appointed his eldeſt Son to be his Secretary. About this time, the very eminent Mr. Locke reſigning his Seat at the Board of Trade and Plantations, it was given to Mr. Matthew Prior, who had been the Earl of Portland's Secretary in France, and ow'd his diſtinction from others of his birth, to the Patronage of the Earl of Dorſet, and his Genius for Poetry, which was his Support at his coming into and going out of the World, as is well remember'd.

Sir Nathan Wright made Lord Keeper

Mr. Prior made a Commiſſioner of Trade.

In the ſame Bill with the Reſumption of the Iriſh Grants, there was particular Care taken to keep the King's Servants out of the Houſe of Commons, by a Clauſe which makes any Member of that Houſe incapable of being a Commiſſioner of the Exciſe or Cuſtoms. Accordingly, Sir Walter Young, Burgeſs for Honiton in Devon; Sir William St. Quintin, Burgeſs for Kingſton upon Hull, Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms; Sir William Aſhurſt, one of the Citizens for London; Edward Clarke Eſq; Burgeſs for Taunton in Somerſetſhire; Chriſtopher Montague Eſq; Burgeſs for Northampton; and William Carr Eſq; Burgeſs for Newcaſtle upon Tyne; three of the Commiſſioners of the Exciſe, ſurrender'd their Places at the Boards of Cuſtoms and Exciſe, preferring the Service of their Country in Parliament, to any lucrative Employment. And about the ſame time, June 21, there was a Trial before the Lord Chief-Juſtice Holt at Guildhall, between Dr. Richard Kidder, Lord Biſhop of Bath and Wells, and Harry Bridges of Wells Eſq; in an Action of Scandalum Magnatum. After the Jury were ſworn, before the Cauſe was open'd, the Counſel for Bridges offer'd, that he was ready to make his Submiſſion, which the good Biſhop, then preſent in Court, accepted of, and Bridges accordingly acknowledg'd in open Court, That he had done his Lordſhip wrong, begg'd his Pardon, and promis'd to behave himſelf dutifully, and as became him, for the future. He alſo agreed to pay his Lordſhip full Coſts; and a Rule of Court was made immediately for the Payment. 'Tis worth remarking, that Bridges of Somerſetſhire, and Chivers of Wiltſhire, who brought the like Diſgrace upon himſelf, for ſpeaking falſe and ſcandalous Words of the Lord Biſhop of Salisbury, were Men of the ſame ſtamp, and both furious Aſſertors of the Divine Right of Biſhops, according to their High-Church Principles, but otherwiſe Men of ſuch Morals, that their Characters are not fit for ſober Hiſtory. On the 24th of June, the King was pleas'd to confer the Office of Lord-Chamberlain, vacant by the Reſignation of the Duke of Shrewsbury, upon Edward Earl of Jerſey, and to make the Earl of Romney Groom of the Stole, and the Earl of Carliſle one of the Lords of the Bedchamber. Three days after, his Majeſty declar'd in Council at Hampton-Court, that the publick Affairs requiring his going over to Holland for a ſhort time, he had appointed Thomas Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury; Sir Nathan Wright, Lord-Keeper; Thomas Earl of Pembroke, Lord-Preſident of the Council; John Viſcount Lonſdale, Lord Privy-Seal; William Duke of Devonſhire, Lord-Steward of the Houſhold; John Earl of Bridgwater, firſt Commiſſioner of the Admiralty; John Earl of Marlborough, Governor to his Highneſs the Duke of Glouceſter; and Ford Earl of Tankerville, firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury; to be Lords-Juſtices of England, for the Adminiſtration of the Government during his abſence. On the 4th of July, his Majeſty went from Hampton-Court in the Morning, lay that Night at Canterbury, and the next day went aboard his Yacht at Margate, from whence he ſail'd under convoy of Sir Cloudeſley Shovel, and the next day arriv'd in the Maeſe, landed at Orange-Polder, and went directly to the Hague.

I have enlarg'd ſo much already on the Affairs of the Scotch African and Indian Company, that conſidering they made no more of it in Trade or Negotiation, it cannot be very agreeable to write or read it. The Parliament of that Kingdom met the 21ſt of May, and his Majeſty's Letter to them was read, in which there was no mention of the Darien Enterprize; on the contrary rather, the Paragraph which touch'd upon their Commerce, ſeem'd to divert them from any ſuch Thoughts, by turning their View towards the Linnen Manufacture, and the improving of their Lands; as in theſe Expreſſions:

Scotch Affairs.

We are heartily ſorry for the Misfortune and Loſſes that the Nation has ſuſtain'd in their Trade, and we will effectually concur in any thing that may contribute for promoting and encouraging Trade, that being ſo indiſpenſibly needful for the Welfare of the Nation. And we do particularly recommend to you the encouraging Manufactures, and the improvement of the native Product of the Kingdom; which is not only the ſureſt Foundation of Foreign Trade, but will be an effectual way for providing for and employing the Poor, &c. After the reading of his Majeſty's Letter, the Duke of Queensberry, Lord High-Commiſſioner, made a healing Speech, as did the Earl of Marchmont, Lord High-Chancellor; but that did not hinder the Council of the Company from preſenting a ſharp Repreſentation, containing, ſays Biſhop Kennet, a tedious Rehearſal of their Loſſes, Diſappointments, and Grievances; which Repreſentation was back'd by an Addreſs from the Shire of Haddington, importing, That their Trade abroad was decay'd, their Coin carried out; Articles which occaſion'd ſome Speculation; that their Woollen and other Manufactures, receiv'd not due Encouragement at home; that their Settlement at Caledonia was in danger of being loſt a ſecond time; that they groan'd under numerous Forces, &c. and the Addreſſers concluded very religiouſly, that they could not but look upon all theſe Calamities, as the Effect of the Diſpleaſure of almighty God, for the Immoralities that every where abounded, &c. Other Addreſſes and Petitions of the ſame nature were preſented to the Parliament, complaining of Grievances, which were not in all of them imputed to the growth of Immorality and Debauchery, but to the influence of evil Counſellors about the King. It is not pretended, that in the courſe of this Affair there was nothing tranſacted which was liable to exception; what was ſo, has been explain'd already: but the puſhing of the Darien Settlement, after the Scots had found it impracticable, without Aſſiſtance, which they had all the reaſon in the world to deſpair of, not only after their firſt abandoning it, but even after their ſecond as fruitleſs and ruinous an Attempt, muſt be the Effect, not of a Spirit of Com-

A.D.1700 Commerce, which is cautious and quick-ſighted, but a Spirit of Faction, which is giddy and raſh. Let any good Briton of Temper conſider ſeriouſly, what muſt have been the conſequence of this Motion in the Scotch Parliament, had it come to a Reſolution, That the Colony of Caledonia in Darien, was a legal and rightful Settlement, and that the Parliament would maintain and ſupport the ſame. The Parliament of England, and the States-General General of the United Provinces, were as fully determin'd to maintain and ſupport their African and Indian Companies, upon which they thought that of Scotland an Encroachment. The King of Spain was then dying, and died ſoon after; by whoſe Will, the Country of Darien, as part of the Spaniſh Succeſſion, devolv'd on a French Prince, and Clouds were gathering every where, portentous of the approaching Storm. Was this a time to maintain and ſupport a conteſted Country, without Ships, without Money, without Allies, againſt the moſt formidable Power, that ever made Europe tremble, Spain and France united, as in effect they were, by Lewis the XIV's uſurping the Adminiſtration of Spain, three or four Months after this Motion, in the Name of his Grandſon the Duke of Anjou, the teſtamentary King of Spain. But none of theſe Conſiderations, how natural ſoever they were, had the leaſt weight in the Councils of the Scotch Company, by which their Parliament began to be influenc'd; and to prevent the dangerous Reſolve before-mention'd, the Lord High-Commiſſioner adjourn'd them for three days, and then for twenty; upon which, the Plurality of the Members met that very Evening, and ſign'd an Addreſs to his Majeſty, wherein they complain'd, of their having been interrupted by a ſudden Adjournment, while they were debating a Motion concerning their Colony at Darien, which they conceiv'd was not agreeable to the 4th Act of the 11th Parliament of King James VI, &c. wherefore they earneſtly entreated his Majeſty, that he would allow his Parliament to ſit, as long as might be neceſſary for redreſſing the Grievances of the Nation. The Air of this Addreſs ſhews in what Mint it was coin'd; and that his Majeſty was appriz'd of it, will be ſeen in his Anſwer. Duke Hamilton took the Oaths to qualify him for a Seat in this Parliament, who appointed the following Members to be their Committee for Trade:

By the Names of the Commiſſioners for anſwering the King's Letter, the Earl of Argyle, the Laird of Grant, and Sir Hugh Dalrymple, there ſeem'd to be a proſpect of more compliance than the Miniſters in Scotland found this Seſſion. When the Lord High-Commiſſioner adjourn'd them, he ſpoke as follows:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I AM troubled with ſuch a Cold and Hoarſeneſs, that not being able to ſpeak much, nor " in a condition to ſtay any time here, I ſhall " therefore only tell you, that, as I was ever firm " and faithful to my King, ſo I was ever zealous " for the Honour and Intereſt of my Country; " and at this time I hope to have done acceptable " Service to both: for I can boldly ſay, that I " have Power and Inſtructions for every thing that " appear'd neceſſary or convenient for the Good " and Advantage of the Nation, as to their Religion, Property, Liberty, Trade, and particularly, what could be of moſt ſolid Uſe to our African and Indian Company. But ſeveral things " have occurr'd, wherein I find myſelf obliged to " conſult his Majeſty, and ſo muſt of neceſſity adjourn for ſome days."

A.D.170°

The Members of the Scotch Parliament who ſign'd the Addreſs before-mention'd, deputed the Lord Roſs, the Lairds of Grubbet and Torwoodie, to preſent it to the King, and they poſted to London for that purpoſe. The Earl of Argyle, the Earl of Annandale, and the Lord Seafield, one of the Secretaries of State for Scotland, went alſo to Court, to give his Majeſty an account of the State of Affairs in that Kingdom. On the 11th of June the Scotch Commiſſioners preſented their Addreſs to the King, being introduc'd by the Lord Seafield, as his Majeſty was going to the Treaſury; and having no Opportunity to read it then, they made their Application for a ſecond Audience, which the King was pleas'd to allow them in the Afternoon, when the Addreſs was read, and the King told them, he would take it into his conſideration. And I do not find that theſe Commiſſioners had other Anſwer, tho' the Lord Roſs ſeem'd earneſt for it, than that they ſhould know his Intentions in Scotland; where Duke Hamilton and his Party were not idle, but got a Draught of a ſecond Addreſs, which was to be ſent to the Shires and Burghs for hands throughout the Kingdom; and when the Scotch Commiſſioners return'd, July 1, they were receiv'd with great marks of Eſteem and Applauſe, by the Members who ſign'd the Addreſs, and the Duke of Hamilton gave them their Thanks, with very obliging Expreſſions of his own particular Sentiments; intimating, he ſhould have been better pleas'd if they had given previous Notice of their coming, that the Members might have met them, and paid that Complement of Reſpect. In the mean time, the King thought fit to write a Letter to the Duke of Queensberry, and the Privy-Council in Scotland, which Letter was publiſh'd in the manner of a Proclamation; wherein he declar'd, " That if it had been poſſible for " him to have agreed to the Reſolve offer'd, to " aſſert the Right of the African Company's Co" lony in America, tho' that Method ſeem'd to " him unneceſſary, yet his Majeſty had from the " beginning readily done it at the earneſt deſire of " his Miniſters, and for his People's ſatisfaction, " all other Conſiderations ſet apart; but ſince that " things were much chang'd, his Majeſty being " truly ſorry for the Nation's Loſs, and moſt will" ling to grant what might be needful for the Re" lief and Eaſe of the Kingdom; he aſſur'd them " that he would be ſo ready to concur with his " Parliament, in every thing that could be reaſon" ably expected of him, for aiding and ſupporting " their Intereſts, and repairing their Loſſes, that " his good Subjects ſhould have juſt grounds to be " ſenſible of his hearty Inclination to advance the " Proſperity of that his Majeſty's ancient King" dom. That his Majeſty was confident, that that " Declaration would be ſatisfying to all good Men, " who would certainly be careful both of their own " Preſervation, and of the Honour and Intereſt of " the Government, and not ſuffer themſelves (here's the Root of this Evil) to be miſled, nor give any " Advantage to Enemies and ill-deſigning Perſons, " ready to catch hold of any Opportunity, as their " Practices did too manifeſtly witneſs. The Scots outed at Darien.

One would have thought, by the Vigour of the Scotch Company's Procedings, that their Colony at Darien had not only recover'd Poſſeſſion of Caledonia, but was in a condition to maintain and ſupport it, purſuant to the Grand Reſolve, made part of the Addreſs brought up by the Lord Roſs; but the Caſe was much otherwiſe, for in February, five Months before that Addreſs was preſented to the King, the Spaniards had outed the Scots, and retaken what the latter had poſſeſs'd themſelves of by Articles of Capitulation, ſign'd by Mr. Gibſon, Mr. Vetch, and others of the Caledonian Council and Settlement; which were, 1. That the Scots ſhould have liberty to retire, with their Ships and Effects, unmoleſted. 2. That the Priſoners on both ſides ſhould be exchang'd. 3. That if any Ships came thither in ſix Months, they ſhould have leave to anchor in the Harbour, and the privilege of Wood, Water, and Proviſions, if they needed them. After which, it will be needleſs to ſay more of Duke Hamilton's and his Party's more than ordinary Zeal for the Eſtabliſhment of that Colony in America: and indeed, I ſhould not have ſaid ſo much, if there had not appear'd a mixture of Faction and Malevolence, in the Stir that was made about it, ſince theſe Gentlemen took upon them to protect it.

Duke of Glouceſter's death.

His Majeſty had not been long in Holland, before he was ſurpriz'd with the melancholy News of the death of the Duke of Glouceſter. The general Affliction in England was the greater, becauſe the King's deſire to have timely Proviſion made for failure of Heirs in the Proteſtant Line, had not been anſwer'd. He thought of it ſo early as the Act of Settlement at the Revolution, but in complement to the Princeſs of Denmark, it had no effect then, and the Duke of Glouceſter's death had reduc'd that Line to the infirm Life of the Princeſs, upon his Majeſty's demiſe. This Conſideration very much imbitter'd People's Grief for the death of his Highneſs, which was in a great meaſure occaſion'd by his over-heating himſelf in the obſervance of his Birth-day, Wedneſday July 24. After the Ceremony was over, he found himſelf fatigu'd and indiſpos'd; the next day he was feveriſh, and grew worſe, till the Monday following, when he expir'd about Midnight, being ten years and five days old.

Biſhop Kennet's Dream of a Commonwealth.

Biſhop Kennet ſpoils all the Flowers of Rhetorick, with which he endeavours to adorn that Prince's Panegyrick, ſuperior to all Ornament but the Simplicity of Truth, by inſinuating, that the Commonwealth's-Men hinder'd the Lamentation for him being ſo great as it ought to have been, becauſe he would have been an Obſtacle to their Deſigns of ſetting up a Commonweulth, which the epiſcopal Men had a mortal dread of ever ſince Ludlow and Vane's time. And as People are apt to dream of whatever throws them into a panick, ſo did theſe Men every now and then terrify themſelves with the Whim of a Republick, which I am ſatisfied has not enter'd into any ſound Head ſince King James was abdicated. King Charles and King James II. were as much frighted at the ſound of the term Republicans, as their Biſhops were, and truly not without as good reaſon; but when England was deliver'd from the perpetual Fears ſhe was in of Popery and Slavery, by being rid of thoſe two Princes, the Commonwealth's-Men reconcil'd themſelves heartily to the Government of the Revolution Kings and Queens; and whenever the term Republican was trump'd up, 'twas to carry on the worſt ſort of Church-Work, the Oppreſſion of our reform'd Brethren the Diſſenters, particularly the Presbyterians, who were the only Party of Men that endeavour'd all they could to prevent the cutting off King Charles the Firſt's Head; which if they could have effected, the Name of a Commonwealth had never been known in this Nation, otherwiſe than in the Hiſtory of others. A.D.1700

His Majeſty going from the Hague to Loo, was viſited by the Biſhop of Oſnabrug, Brother to the Duke of Lorrain, and gave Audience to the Preſident de la Tour, Envoy Extraordinary from the Duke of Savoy. On the 11th of September, the Electoral Prince of Brandenburgh waited on his Majeſty, as did the Princeſs Sophia, Electreſs Dowager of Hanover, whom the King had invited to his Court: and that Princeſs being the next in the Proteſtant Line, it was with reaſon conjectur'd, that his Majeſty deſir'd to confer with her concerning the Succeſſion of her illuſtrious Houſe to the Crown of England. The Elector of Bavaria, and the imperial General Taff, waited alſo on his Majeſty, the latter at Loo, the former at Breda; and when the King return'd to the Hague, the Princeſs Sophia accompanied him, in order, as it was ſuppos'd, to concert the Affair of the Succeſſion ſo maturely, as that it might be laid before the Parliament at their next meeting.

The King has Conference with the Princeſs Sophia, Electreſs of Hanover at Loo.

War between Sweden and Denmark.

While theſe things were tranſacting in England and Holland, a War broke out in the North, which rag'd in ſeveral Parts of it ten or twelve years. The Princes who form'd the League againſt Charles XII. King of Sweden, ſeem'd to act a very ungenerous part, in attacking him while he was yet a Child. The Czar of Muſcovy, the King of Poland, and the King of Denmark, confederated together to ſtrip him of his Dominions in Livonia, Finland, and his Brother-in-law the Duke of Holſtein of his Territories. The Pretences of theſe Princes were all forc'd and unjuſtifiable, whatever colour was put upon them. The Treaty of Altena, of which England and Holland were Guarantees, was an eternal Bar to them; and the Duke of Holſtein being attack'd, the Guarantees were oblig'd to interpoſe, and accordingly did it effectually.

The Pretenſions of Denmark, &c. againſt Sweden and Holſtein.

'Tis certain, the Deſign of the Princes confederated againſt Sweden, was, to ſurprize that King even in his Nonage, and take advantage of that Juncture, to recover what they laid claim to by right of long ſtanding, but paſs'd away to Sweden by the Treaties of Oliva and Altena. The Kings of Poland and Denmark pretended other Cauſes of Rupture; the former, that the People of Livonia, weary of the Swediſh Yoke, which indeed was grievous enough, had taken Arms for their Deliverance, and the Saxon Troops were only their Auxiliaries, the Heer Patcul, a Livonian Lord, deſerting to him, and doing his utmoſt to bring over the chief Men of that Province to his Intereſt, gave ſome colour to this Pretence. The King of Denmark's was, the Duke of Holſtein's erecting ſome Forts in his own Territories, too near the Daniſh Diviſion of that Dutchy. The Czar of Muſcovy laid claim to Ingria, which had been taken from the Muſcovites by the Swedes, under Guſtavus Adolphus, ſeventy years before, and had been yielded to them by Treaties; but he was forming vaſt Deſigns, and wanted a Port to the Eaſt of the Baltick, to facilitate the execution of them. With this View he enter'd into the Confederacy againſt Charles XII. in hopes of poſſeſſing himſelf of the Country that lies between the Gulph of Finland, the Baltick, Poland, and Muſcovy. Thus we ſee that the War they began, was without juſt Cauſe, and it ended, as ſuch Wars generally do, in the Diſgrace of thoſe that began it.

England and Holland endeavour'd to accommodate Matters before they came to Hoſtilities, as Guarantees of the Treaty of Altena, which was made to preſerve the Peace of the North. But the King of Denmark making ſure of an eaſy Conqueſt in the Dutchy of Holſtein, being ſupported by ſuch powerful Allies; inſiſted on ſuch high Terms, that it was not juſt or reaſonable to abandon the Duke of Holſtein, reduc'd to ſo great Extremities.

The

A.D.1700 The King of Great-Britain and the States-General order'd each a ſtout Squadron of Men of War to be equipp'd, and being join'd, to ſail to the Baltick, and in Junction with the Swediſh Fleet, oppoſe the Enterprizes of the Danes againſt Holſtein; the Capital of which, Tonningen, they had laid ſiege to. Sir Cloudeſley Shovel being at that time indiſpos'd, the Command of the Engliſh and Dutch united Squadrons was given to Sir George Rooke; and while they were equipping and proceeding on their Expedition, there was an Army form'd for the Defence of Holſtein, conſiſting of 8000 Swedes, 3500 Dutch, who landed at Harburgh; 12 or 14000 Men of the Troops of Hanover and Zell, to whoſe Aſſiſtance the Swedes owe the Preſervation of that Dutchy: For which the King of Sweden made the Elector of Hanover but very ill Returns when he was King of England, as will be ſeen in the Sequel. The King of Poland had order'd a ſtrong Body of Saxons to penetrate into the Country of Zell, which they ravag'd with great Fury and Barbarity. Sir George Rooke arriv'd at the Mouth of the Sound, on the 20th of July, with 30 Engliſh and Dutch Men of War, and join'd the Swediſh Fleet near Landſcroon, upon whoſe Approach the Daniſh Fleet retir'd in ſome Confuſion for fear of being attack'd under the Caſtle of Copenhagen. The Confederates threw ſome Bombs among them, which did little Execution, and it was obſerv'd that the Dutch affected to do them as little harm as poſſible; but the Engliſh in the Van aſſiſted the Swedes in this Bombardment. The King of Sweden had put himſelf aboard his Fleet, with an Army of 16000 Men to land in Zealand and attack Copenhagen, as the ſhorteſt way of obliging the King of Denmark to quit Holſtein. Voltaire's Account of this King's Deſcent upon Zealand, is perfectly Romantick. The following Relation may be depended on, and is enough to that Monarch's Glory: In the beginning of Auguſt, the Swedes landed between Hamelbeck and Eppegards within four Miles of Copenhagen, and a Mile and half of Elſenore, with very little Oppoſition; there being only ſome Troops of Horſe and a few Boors, poſted near the Place where they landed; ſeveral Engliſh, Swediſh and Dutch Ships cover'd the Deſcent, and with their great Guns kill'd ſome of the Troopers and Boors. They landed the firſt Day 4800 Foot; the King himſelf was the firſt Man that landed, leaping out of the Boat up to the middle in Water, and his Men who were in Sloops follow'd him with great Courage. Major-General Stuart, who was next him, was ſhot in the Leg, and a Lieutenant had his Arm broke by a Granade. The King led on the Attack againſt the Danes in Perſon. On News of the King of Sweden's being ſo near the King of Denmark's Capital, that Prince's Miniſters at Travendale, within a Mile of the Confederate's Camp at Holſtein, ſhew'd ſo good a Diſpotion to conclude a Treaty of Peace, that in ſix Days time it was compleated and ſign'd by his Daniſh Majeſty. The 18th of Auguſt, the King of Sweden had landed 15000 Men in Zealand, and would have encreas'd his Army there, if the Engliſh and Dutch Admirals had not refus'd to be aſſiſting in any further Deſcent. Lieutenant-General Banier, who commanded in the Town of Tonningen when the Danes beſieg'd it, waited on the King of England at Loo; being ſent by the Duke of Holſtein, in Acknowledgment of his Majeſty's Protection. The King of Poland and the Czar of Muſcovy were not included in the Treaty of Travendale; the King of Sweden, being reſolv'd to have full Satisfaction from the former at leaſt, for breaking with him, one may ſay out of Wantonneſs; he having no Provocation to it by the Conduct of the Swedes. The Saxons might have deſtroy'd Riga by Bombardment, tho' they cou'd not reduce it by Arms; and the King of Poland's Miniſter at the Hague preſented a Memorial to the States-General, full of Aſſurances of Friendſhip from his Maſter, and acquainting them, that what induc'd him to put off the bombarding of Riga, when every thing was in readineſs for it, was chiefly the Conſideration of the Loſs, which the Merchants there, Subjects of the King of England and the States-General, would have ſuffer'd thereby. His Majeſty wrote to the Czar of Muſcovy, to preſs him to accommodate the Differences between him and the Crown of Sweden. King William had a great Court at the Hague, when he return'd thither from Loo in the beginning of October. For beſides the Electreſs of Brandenburgh, and the Electreſs of Hanover; the Hereditary Prince of Heſſe-Caſſel, and his Princeſs arriv'd there; as did other German Princes and Miniſters. On the 17th of October, his Majeſty having finiſh'd his Important Affairs in Holland, embark'd for England, landed the next Day at Harwich, din'd at Sir Iſaac Rebow's at Colcheſter; on the 19th lay at Chelmsford, and on the 20th came to Hampton-Court.

The King returns to England.

The Diſaffected in this and the ſucceeding Reigns, never, but when they flew out into open Rebellion, own'd directly that what Diſturbance they endeavour'd to give the Government, was to forward the Reſtoration of their Abdicated King. They had always ſome Word to give out, which amus'd and deceiv'd the Rabble, the great Vulgar as well as the ſmall, and had the Face of good Meaning. The Affair of the African and Indian Company in Scotland, was taken up by them, with full Aſſurance that it cou'd not terminate without ſome benefit to their reſtleſs Party. The Trade to Guinea and the Weſt-Indies, carry'd on by the Natives of Scotland on their own Bottoms; was what every one muſt allow to be reaſonable, and to deſerve Encouragement from their King. So far the Well-affected join'd heartily in Society to promote and eſtabliſh it; but when afterwards it appear'd that the Deſign was to invade the Rights of the old Companies, eſtabliſh'd in England and Holland, and not only that, but to make a Settlement in the Weſt-Indies with Foreign Money, and for a Foreign Intereſt; People of Moderation and Prudence ſuſpended their Zeal for an Experiment, which they found to be equally dangerous and unpracticable. However, the Diſaffected, as has been already hinted, took up the Matter there, and the more impracticable and dangerous the Experiment was, the more they inſiſted upon it, and the more they endeavour'd to ſtir up a Spirit of Sedition and Tumult, to obtain by Violence at all Ventures, what they found could not be accompliſh'd by reaſonable and peaceable Counſels. To this end they were daily publiſhing falſe and impudent Libels againſt the Adminiſtration, and gathering Mobs to inſult and terrify thoſe that would not join with them, in their wicked Deſigns againſt the Peace and true Intereſt of their Country; which indeed the more Sober and Judicious Part of the Scots Nation abhorr'd. Before his Majeſty went to Holland, one Hugh Paterſon, an Apothecary at Edinburgh, Watſon and Simſon two Printers, were apprehended for printing and publiſhing Libels, entitl'd, Scotland's Groans and lamentable Tears pour'd out before the Parliament; ſudden Thoughts concerning the African Trade; a Speech prepar'd to be ſpoke in Parliament, &c. full of Invectives againſt the King and his Miniſters, both Engliſh and Scots. When they were taken into Cuſtody, the Mob roſe and reſcu'd them, but they thought fit to ſurrender themſelves again; and Paterſon and Watſon were afterwards ſentenc'd to be three Weeks in Priſon, and then not to be ſeen within ten Miles of Edinburgh for a Year; Paterſon on Pain of 100 l. Sterling, and Watſon 50 l. Sterling. In the mean time, Capt. Pincarton, who was taken by the Spaniards, as has been already mention'd, near Carthagena, with moſt of his Crew, was ſent by them to Seville in Spain; where himſelf, John Malloch, James Graham, Benjamin Spencer, and David Wilſon, were try'd and condemn'd as Pyrates; but

Murmurings in Scotland

Tumultuous there.

A.D. 1700 Execution was reſpited at the Interceſſion of the Engliſh Conſul. On the 26th of July, a Proclamation was publiſh'd at Edinburgh, for apprehending Capt. Gaven Hamilton, Capt. Kenneth Mackenzie, and Capt. Urquhart, Ringleaders of the Rabble in that City, in the late Tumult; offering 100 l. for each of them, and forbidding the Subjects to entertain them at their higheſt Peril. Can any one imagine, that their Concern for the Trade to Guinea or Darien, ſet ſuch Men as theſe upon ſuch Work? Is it not plain, that Faction had mingled itſelf with Commerce, to do the Abdicated King's Buſineſs, under pretence of doing the Company's? His Majeſty, in his Letter laſt mention'd, intimated ſomething like it; and in another Letter he ſent to the Parliament of Scotland from Loo, he intimates it again in theſe Expreſſions: You cannot but take notice of the Deſigns and Practices of Perſons diſaffected, both to our Government and to your Peace; and how watchful and ready our Enemies are, as well at Home as Abroad, and deſirous of nothing more, than that differences may fall in amongſt us. We are perſuaded you will be no leſs careful to avoid them.

As to Darien he ſaid, 'Tis truly our Regret, that we could not agree to the aſſerting of the Right of the Company's Colony; and you may be very confident if it had not been for invincible Reaſons, the preſſing Deſires of all our Miniſters, with the Inclination of our good Subjects therein concern'd, had undoubtedly prevail'd. But ſince we were, and are fully ſatisfy'd that our yielding in that Matter had diſturb'd the general Peace of Chriſtendom, and brought inevitably upon that our ancient Kingdom a heavy War; wherein we could expect no Aſſiſtance, and that now the State of that Affair is quite alter'd; we doubt not but you will reſt ſatisfy'd with theſe plain Reaſons. And doubtleſs ſo they had done, if the Loſſes at Darien had not ſharpen'd their Reſentment of the Oppoſition they met with. Notwithſtanding which, this Parliament behav'd as Wiſe Men, good Patriots, and good Subjects in the following Vote: That in Memory of the great and never to be forgotten Deliverance, which it had pleas'd God to give that Kingdom by his Majeſty, and for that their Safety and Happineſs depended, next under God, upon the Preſervation of his Perſon, and the Security of his Government; they would ſtand by and ſupport his Majeſty and his Government to the utmoſt of their power, and maintain ſuch Forces as ſhould be neceſſary for theſe Ends. In purſuance of this good Diſpoſition, the Lord High-Commiſſioner gave the Royal Aſſent to an Act for keeping on foot 3000 Men, till the 1ſt of December 1702; and to an Act for a Land-Tax to pay them; they alſo readily complied with his Majeſty's Deſire to have 1100 Men on his own account.

Scots Parliament vote for the Army.

Iriſh Truſtees.

In Ireland there was hardly any thing talk'd of, but the vigorous Proceedings of the Truſtees for Sale of the Forfeited Eſtates; whoſe Names being little known before, became now of Eminence by the frequent Notice taken of them in the publick Prints, as well at London, as at Dublin. By the latter end of June they were all got ſafe to Dublin; and the time of their Departure from London, and of their Landing in Ireland, was recorded by the News-Writers; as if they had been Men who had the Burthen of the State upon their Shoulders. They met at Chicheſter Houſe, and began their Work with an offer of a Groat in the Pound, for all Tenants and Poſſeſſors of Eſtates within 50 Miles of Dublin, and 6 d. in the Pound, for all at a greater Diſtance, for what they paid out of the Profits of them. The City of Dublin was full of People crouding from all Parts of the Kingdom, to put in Claims to thoſe Eſtates; and there were above 3000 Claims enter'd in a few days, which was a hopeful beginning for raiſing two Millions Sterling, as was the pretence of the Party that puſh'd on the Reſumption-Bill. The Number of the Claims ſtartled the Truſtees, and they publiſh'd a Paper for preventing Fraudulent ones. But the Frauds came ſo thick upon them, that they were forc'd to iſſue another Order to prevent them. A.D. 1700

Sir Edward Seymour being then in Ireland, to look after an Eſtate left to one of his Sons in the North of that Kingdom; the Truſtees hearing he was coming to Dublin, went out in a very ſolemn Manner to meet him; and had Sir Edward ſtaid longer there, the leading Men of the Corporation intended to have preſented him with his Freedom: but they were much better employ'd, about a Month after, Sept. 27th, when the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs and Common-Council, with the Maſter of Trinity and Guild of Merchants, went to College-Green to lay the Foundation of the Pedeſtal, on which his Majeſty's Effigies was to be plac'd; being an Equeſtrian Statue of Braſs. Sir Anthony Piercy, Lord-Mayor, James Barlow and Charles Foreſt Eſqrs; the Sheriffs, laid the Foundation-Stones, under which they put each of them two Broad Pieces of Gold for the Workmen. The Effigies coſt about 2000 l. A ſhameful Reproach this, to that great Corporation in England, who not long ago refus'd thoſe, who wou'd have been at the Charge of a like Statue on the waſte Ground in their City, to put it upon, in honour of the Glorious and Immortal Memory of England's, as well as Ireland's Deliverer King William. How theſe Iriſh Truſtees, (and with this Paſſage we ſhall have done with them for the preſent,) came off in the Courſe of their Conduct, was foretold by the Author of Jus Regium: "If when the Rights are ſecur'd to "Proteſtant Purchaſers, Tenants and Improvers, "which certainly will be in an Engliſh Proteſtant "Parliament, and the ſeveral Claimants have reap'd "the full Benefit of their Claims, the Produce of "the Reſuming Act will be but very little more than "the Advantage which will accrue to Iriſh Commiſſioners and Truſtees, and the Pleaſure and Satisfaction, which our Enemies will have in ſeeing the King's Grants Reſum'd after a manner "unknown in this Land before, and the Rewards "of their Services taken from thoſe great Men; "who follow'd his Fortune, and were Inſtruments "in the Hand of God, to deliver us from Popery and Slavery, that were juſt breaking in upon "us; 'tis hop'd the Wiſdom and Juſtice of this "Nation will not think it their Intereſt to adhere "to what they have been led into by falſe Suggeſtions of Men, who have had more Regard to "their private Gain; The Author refers here to the "Report, ſign'd by Mr. Trenchard, and the three "other Iriſh Commiſſioners of Inquiry; than the "Glory and true Intereſt of England. If after "the Truſtees have ſpent three Years Rents of theſe "Forfeitures, in the Execution of that Truſt, and "the Claimants have been at 100000 l. Charge "in their Journies from their reſpective Countries "to Dublin, and in preſenting their Claims; and "the whole Kingdom has for that courſe of time "been diſquieted with the Juriſdiction of Twelve "Arbitrary Men; how little of the Roman Cato is "in all this? All that England will gain by it, will be "no more than the little Sum abovemention'd; it "can hardly be doubted, but that all thoſe who "love our Conſtitution, are for ſupporting the "preſent Government, and have Regard to what "is truly honourable and juſt, will reſtore to the "ſeveral Perſons concern'd, what by the ſettled "Laws of the Land belong'd to them, &c." But that is not a Reſtoration, which Tories either Engliſh or Iriſh are ever like to be charg'd with.

King William's Statue ſet up in Dublin

The Succeſs of the Iriſh Truſtees.

We have touch'd upon the ſecond Partition Treaty in the preceeding Pages; France was the firſt Party that made it publick, being in earneſt with it, till her Intrigues in Spain had ſucceeded; and that crazy King, infirm alike in his Head and his Health, ſign'd a Will on the 2d of October, declaring the Duke of Anjou, the Dauphin's ſecond Son, his Univerſal Heir. The Marquis de Harcourt, the French Ambaſſador at Madrid, found means to purchaſe the good-will of the Prime Miniſter there, Cardinal

The Duke of Anjou declar'd King of Spain.

A.D.1700 Cardinal Portocarrero, and made uſe even of the very Partition Treaty, contriv'd and concluded by his own Maſter Lewis XIV. to incenſe the Grandees of Spain againſt the Indignity of tearing their Monarchy in pieces. This Argument, ſupported by that of Gold, which ever did Lewis the Great's Buſineſs better than his Arms, brought over the Chief Miniſters of the Court of Spain to the French Intereſt; and the King of Spain dying a Month after he had ſign'd that prepoſterous Will, the Frontiers of France towards the Dominions of Spain, were immediately crouded with French Troops, and an eaſy Poſſeſſion of that whole Monarchy taken, without any Regard to the Treaty of Partition; which the French King was at that very ſame time endeavouring to draw in all the Princes and States of Europe to accede to. I ſhall only inſtance his Miniſter's Negotiation in Switzerland, to engage the Cantons to come into that Treaty. About the middle of July, 4 Months only, before he accepted of the Will againſt the Treaty; Monſieur de Puiſieux the French Ambaſſador made a florid Speech to the Deputies of the Cantons, deſiring them to be Guarantees of the Treaty of Partition; and the Heer de Hervart, Baron of Hunningen, Envoy from the King of Great-Britain, did the ſame.

The Emperor's Miniſters oppos'd this Guaranty of the Swiſs, and the Affair hung there and elſewhere in a doubtful manner, till France breaking that Treaty and accepting the Will, occaſion'd other Determinations in the Counſels of Europe. The French King having declar'd his Grandſon the Duke of Anjou King of Spain; one of the firſt Complements the new King receiv'd upon it, was from the late King James and his Queen, who made a Viſit of Ceremony on purpoſe. The cooleſt Heads in France were for ſtanding to the Treaty of Partition; foreſeeing that the Acceptance of the Will would involve the Nation in a new Expenſive and Bloody War. Some of the King's Counſellors ſpoke to this effect in Council, but the Dauphin who was preſent, ſpoke with Warmth for accepting the Will, and ſaid, Tho' the Right of Succeſſion to the Spaniſh Monarchy was undoubtedly in himſelf, he renounc'd it with Pleaſure, and ſhould be glad to ſay during his whole Life, the King my Father, and the King my Son.

The Dutch Envoy at Madrid, had ſent Intelligence of the Marquis de Harcourt's Intrigues there, to the Earl of Mancheſter, then Ambaſſador from England at the French Court: upon which the Earl deſir'd a private Audience of that King, wherein he preſs'd to know what his Majeſty intended to do in this Conjuncture, putting him in mind of his ſolemn Engagements to the King his Maſter. To this the French King anſwer'd, That he would not take a final Reſolution, till his Excellency had an Anſwer to his Diſpatches to England; which he deſir'd he would not communicate to the Dutch Ambaſſador. Inſtead of doing as he ſaid, he immediately did what we have ſaid, declar'd and ſaluted the Duke of Anjou King of Spain, and not contenting himſelf with acting thus contrary to the Treaty, he had lately concluded; he now acted contrary to the Will he had juſt accepted, by ordering two Inſtruments to be drawn, for preſerving the Duke of Anjou's Title to the Crown of France, in caſe his Elder Brother dy'd without inheritable Iſſue. When he declar'd him King, he ſaid, The late King of Spain has made you King; the Spaniſh Grandees demand you as their King; the People of Spain deſire you, and I conſent to it. But the Foreign Miniſters in the Court of France were not over-forward to own Philip of Anjou as King of Spain; tho' by Order of the Miniſters the Paris Gazetteer inſerted in his Paper, that the Envoys of Venice, Sweden, Portugal, Tuſcany and Lorrain, had made a Viſit to the New King of Spain; of which thoſe Envoys complain'd to the Marquis de Torcy, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, repreſenting, That tho' they did not queſtion but their Maſters would acknowledge that Prince; yet they did not as Publick Miniſters preſume to viſit him as King of Spain, and could not do it without Orders from their reſpective Courts. The Deputies of the States in Holland had a long Conference with the Count de Briord the French Ambaſſador there, and repreſented to him, That his Maſter having concluded a Treaty with them and England, for ſettling the Spaniſh Succeſſion, and aſſur'd them ſeveral times, that he would never depart from that Treaty; their High Mightineſſes could not but be in a great Surprize, when they heard his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty had accepted the Will of the late King of Spain, and therefore they deſir'd his Excellency to repreſent the ſame to his Maſter. That Miniſter labour'd to put a Colour on this foul Proceeding of his Maſter; he told Mr. Stanhope, the Engliſh Envoy at the Hague, by way of ſounding, That he found his Maſter had accepted the Will, but he was inform'd the Engliſh did not like it, and therefore he ſhould be glad to know his Thoughts upon it. Mr. Stanhope reply'd gravely, Such a Queſtion is too weighty for an extempore Anſwer, but I hear you have communicated it to the Penſionary Heinſius, pray what does he think of it? The Penſioner reply'd, the French Ambaſſador told me, he would impart it to the States. And ſo will I, ſaid Mr. Stanhope, to the King my Maſter. But the Anſwer of the Dutch Ambaſſador to Mr. de Torcy at Paris was more remarkable: Torcy obſerving to that Miniſter, that if the States wou'd deſerve the Continuation of his Maſter's Affection and Friendſhip, they ought not to delay acknowledging his Grandſon for King of Spain; the Ambaſſador reply'd, The States-General always keep their Treaties ſo religiouſly, that I am confident they will never deſerve the Ill-Opinion of their Neighbours. The Court of Vienna ſaid little at firſt upon the French King's accepting the Will, which they believ'd to be obtain'd by French Artifices and Money, and expreſt their Senſe of it in Terms to that purpoſe; but their Conduct in the Affair of the Partition Treaty had given the King of England and the States-General juſt Occaſion to appear leſs warm in their Intereſts, than otherwiſe might have been expected from them. The King and the States had by the laſt Treaty of Partition, ſecur'd Spain and the Indies for the Emperor's ſecond Son, the Archduke Charles; but nothing leſs wou'd ſatisfy his Imperial Majeſty, than the entire Spaniſh Monarchy, Naples, Sicily, Milan, and all; which it was not probable that France wou'd ever conſent to, unleſs forc'd to it by Arms; and the Succeſs of the firſt Confederate War, did not promiſe fairer for a ſecond, which was the Reaſon that induc'd King William and the States to endeavour to preſerve the Peace and Ballance of Europe by Treaty. A wiſe Step of itſelf, but much more ſo, when we conſider it was the only one they had to take, without precipitating themſelves in a new War, before the Wounds of the old one were heal'd, before their Subjects had hardly taſted of the Benefits and Sweets of Peace; and even when thoſe of England, at leaſt, if a Judgment cou'd be made of them by their Repreſentatives, ſeem'd inclin'd to fall out with any body rather than with the French King; who order'd the Count de Briord to carry it very ſmoothly towards the States-General, while he was filling his Frontier-Towns with Troops, to be in a readineſs to ſeize the Spaniſh Netherlands, as ſoon as Matters were concerted with the Elector of Bavaria; who had ſent a Miniſter to England, to inform himſelf exactly of the Situation of Affairs in that Kingdom, and of the likelihood of the Parliament's entering immediately into Meaſures for preventing the Duke of Anjou's poſſeſſing himſelf of the Dominions of Spain, or rather his Grandfather's doing it in his Name. This Miniſter had Inſtructions to aſſure his Britannick Majeſty, that the Elector his Maſter wou'd declare for the Confederacy, and keep the Spaniſh Netherlands out of

The Tories the Cauſe of the Elector of Bavaria's ſiding with France.

The Parliament then in being were full of Projects to depreſs the Miniſtry. They had not left talking of Standing Armies, Exorbitant Grants, &c. and there was no likelihood, that they would preſently conſent to raiſe new Forces at a prodigious Expence, who had juſt disbanded the old ones at a like Expence. They had been told enough of the declining Condition the King of Spain was in, and what a Temptation it would be to France, to take poſſeſſion of his Dominions at his Death, if England ſhould be at that time diſarm'd. But theſe Conſiderations weigh'd little againſt the Cry of a Standing-Army; which had not been disbanded many Months, before the neceſſity of keeping them ſtanding was ſeen and allow'd. The Bavarian Miniſter finding there was no good to be done in the Method he wanted; that there muſt be a new Parliament, and probably another in the ſame Diſpoſition with that then in being, return'd home with a melancholy Account of Expectations from England; and the Elector of Bavaria being incapable of reſiſting the French Armies pouring in upon the Netherlands, made his Bargain with that Monarch, and abandon'd to him even thoſe Towns that were garriſon'd by the Dutch; whoſe Troops were made Priſoners, and not ſuffer'd to return, till the States acknowledg'd the Duke of Anjou as King of Spain, and that neither, not without much cavilling and difficulty. The neceſſity the States lay under to temporize in this Matter, oblig'd the King of England do the ſame, tho' much againſt his Will: he was highly incens'd at this new Breach of Faith in Lewis XIV. but thought not proper to ſhew his Reſentment, till he ſhould be in a better Condition of demanding Satisfaction. Count Tallard the French Miniſter at his Court, happen'd to be at Paris, when News came of the King of Spain's Death, and of the Will he had made. He was order'd to haſten to England, and coming to wait on his Majeſty at Kenſington; the King then looking out at a Window, contented himſelf to ſay to him, Monſieur l'Ambaſſadeur le Tems eſt bien change; by which Expreſſion, his Majeſty meant not only the Alteration of the Weather, but chiefly the change of Time, and Circumſtances of Things. The Ambaſſador ſoon perceiv'd an Alteration too in the King's Countenance and Reception of him; and therefore on February 3. he took his publick Audience of Leave of his Majeſty, and ſoon after ſet out for France; to return no more, till after the great Rout of the French Army he commanded in Germany, he was taken Priſoner by the Victorious Duke of Marlborough, who ſufficiently reveng'd this Breach of Faith in Lewis XIV. and ſent him to England, where he ſpent ſeven Years in cultivating a Spot of Ground at Nottingham, much more to his Glory, than the Treaties his Maſter put him upon making for him, at the the ſame time that he intended to break them on the firſt Occaſion.

Monſieur Pouſſin the French Secretary ſtaid after the Ambaſſador was gone, and enter'd into a cloſe Correſpondence with thoſe Members of Parliament, whom he thought fitteſt for his Purpoſe; particularly Mr. John How, Dr. Davenant, and Mr. Hammond, who to obſerve Impartiality we muſt name, tho' that Gentleman has ſince given frequent and undoubted Proofs of his Attachment to the true Intereſt of England.

The Pouſſineers.

On the 19th of December, a Proclamation was publiſh'd for diſſolving the Parliament, and a new Paliament was call'd, to begin at Weſtminſter, February 6th. But as this was an Effect of the new Counſels the King was giving into, as he was influenc'd by the Earl of Rocheſter and others of his Stamp, ſo we ſhall find it did not at all anſwer the Hopes he had conceiv'd of their falling in with his Meaſures for a ſecond Grand Alliance, to reduce France to reaſon in the Affair of the Spaniſh Succeſſion. Biſhop Kennet may ſpeak, what would be unpardonable in a Lay-Hiſtorian; and he tells us, who the Men were, whom I have ſaid to be of the Lord Rocheſter's Stamp. "To ſweeten the "Humours of the New Parliament, the King "was willing to oblige thoſe Men, who were emi-"nently diſtinguiſh'd by the Name of the Church-"Party." Now one would think that the pleaſing of ſuch a Party, muſt be by ſome new Injunctions to the Clergy, for the promoting Piety, and reforming Manners, for the Encouragement of Virtue, and Puniſhment of Vice, for the cheriſhing Chriſtian Moderation and Charity; whereas, as the ſame Biſhop informs us, that Party wanted to be ſweeten'd by giving them Places; and therefore, as he proceeds, Laurence Earl of Rocheſter was made Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, &c. Sir Thomas Trevor, Lord Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, Edward Northey Eſq; Attorney-General; Chriſtopher Muſgrave Eſq; Clerk of the Council; This contributed to the ſweetning the Humours of that Church-Party; as did other Promotions about the time of the meeting of the Parliament, February the 10th: when the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and ſending for the Commons, ſignify'd to them by the Lord-Keeper Wright, that they ſhould forthwith proceed to the Choice of a Speaker. The Candidates were Sir Richard Onſlow, Knight of the Shire for Surrey; and Mr. Robert Harley, Burgeſs for Radnor, a Welch Borough, who had the major Vote: His great Merit with the Party, being his deſerting his Puritan Friends and Principles. This perhaps is a Paſſage that will be roll'd among the Partials, tho' the Truth of it is as well known, as that there ever was ſuch a Man in the World. His Majeſty having approv'd of the Speaker, deliver'd himſelf to both Houſes in the following Speech:

Mr. Robert Harley choſen Speaker.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"OUR great Misfortune in the Death of the Duke of Glouceſter, hath made it abſolutely neceſſary that there ſhould be a farther Proviſion, for the Succeſſion of the Crown in the Proteſtant Line, after me and the Princeſs: the Happineſs of the Nation, and the Security of our Religion, which is our chiefeſt Concern, ſeem ſo much to depend upon this, that I cannot doubt but it will meet with a general Concurrence, and I earneſtly recommend it to your early and effectual Conſideration.

King's Speech.

He earneſtly recommends the Proteſtant Succeſſion.

"The Death of the late King of Spain, with the Declaration of his Succeſſor to that Monarchy, has made ſo great an Alteration in the Affairs abroad; that I muſt deſire you very maturely to conſider their preſent State: and I make no doubt but your Reſolutions thereupon will be ſuch, as ſhall be moſt conducing to the Intereſt and Safety of England, the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion in general, and the Peace of Europe.

"Theſe Things are of ſuch Weight, that I have thought them moſt proper for the Conſideration of a New Parliament, to have the more immediate Senſe of the Kingdom, in ſo great a Conjuncture.

"I muſt deſire of you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, ſuch Supplies, as you ſhall judge neceſſary for the Service of the current Year; and I muſt particularly put you in mind of the Deficiencies and Publick Debts, occaſion'd by the late War, that are yet unprovided for.

"I am oblig'd farther to recommend to you, that you would inſpect the Condition of the Fleet, and conſider what Repairs and Augmentations may be requiſite for the Navy, which is the great Bulwark of the Engliſh Nation; and ought moſt eſpecially in this Conjuncture, to be put into a good Condition; and that you would alſo conſider what is proper for the better Security of thoſe Places where the Ships are laid up in Winter. "The

A.D.1701 " The Regulation and Improvement of our " Trade is of ſo Publick Concern, that I hope it " will ever have your ſerious Thoughts: and if " you can find proper Means of ſetting the Poor " at Work, you will eaſe yourſelves of a very great " Burthen, and at the ſame time add ſo many uſe- " ful Hands, to be imploy'd in our Manufactures " and other publick Occaſions.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I hope there will be ſuch an Agreement and " Vigour in the Reſolutions, you ſhall take upon " the Important Matters now before you, as may " make it appear, we are firmly united among our " ſelves; and in my Opinion nothing can contri- " bute more to our Safety at Home, or to our be- " ing conſiderable Abroad."

One may eaſily perceive that the Air of this Speech is different from that of all the other Speeches made by King William to his Parliament. For tho' his Majeſty had not as yet had Opportunity to put their Good-will to the Proof, the majority of the Elections, and particularly that of the Speaker Harley, gave him juſt grounds to apprehend, they wou'd behave as they did, and put him backwards rather than forwards, in the grand Affair of the Spaniſh Succeſſion. On the 14th of February, after reading the King's Speech by the Speaker, they came, ſays Biſhop Kennet, to this expedient Reſolution; That they would ſtand by and ſupport his Majeſty and his Government, and take ſuch effectual Meaſures, as may beſt conduce to the Intereſt and Safety of England, the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Peace of Europe. The expediency of this Reſolution, conſiſts chiefly in its leaving the War, which the King wou'd gladly have enter'd into, to prevent the French King's ſeizing Spain, undetermin'd. Yet this Vote, as cold and undeciſive as it was, could not be carry'd without great Difficulty, Yeas 181, Noes 163. The Author of Jura Populi Anglicani, generally ſaid to be one of the greateſt Lawyers in England, expreſſes himſelf on this Occaſion: " Here it was that " the Prejudices began againſt that Party in the " Houſe, the Biſhop calls it in direct Terms, The Church-Party, " and this laid the Foundation for " the great Suſpicions that follow'd afterwards. " 'Twas amazing to all thoſe that could diſcover " no poſſible means to preſerve us but by a vigo- " rous War, to ſee ſuch a great Number of the " Repreſentatives of the Freemen of England, la- " bouring for that which of all things in the World, " France moſt deſir'd, and would give any Money for. " Nor was this the Voice of that Party alone, but all " without Doors, who were of their Faction, and " all who had any Biaſs to France, or the St. Germain " Family, were every where induſtrious and noiſy, " in decrying a War, and ſetting forth the Incon- " veniencies of it." Dr. Davenant, who wrote an Eſſay on the Ballance of Power, had therein taught this Party, how to avoid anſwering the King and Kingdom's deſire, of entring into a War, for preſerving or recovering Spain out of French Hands. Of him the Author of Jura above-mention'd, writes; " O wonderful Contrivance to ſerve his " Maſters, and perſuade England to lay aſide all " Thoughts of War? Could he expect to do it by " ſuch Fetches as theſe, to ſcare a great and war- " like People, with his paltry Repreſentations of " the Power of France, or to lull a wiſe Nation a- " ſleep, with ſuch a ſilly Proſpect of Security? " Yet this is one of the great Machines, which Count " Tallard the chief French Engineer in England " has made uſe of; not only to bomb great Mini- " ſters, and every Thing he has a mind to reduce " to Aſhes, but to batter down all the ſtrong Holds " and Fortreſſes of our Religion and Liberties. This " is he, who is careſs'd by the great Men of our " Court, meaning the Earl of Rocheſter and his Aſſociates, for he could not mean my Lord Somers, who was not then of the Court, nor Mr. Montagu, for the latter had ſo mean an Opinion of Davenant's Honeſty, that he wou'd never admit him into the leaſt ſhare of his Confidence, tho' the Doctor very much deſir'd and courted it, as I was inform'd by thoſe who were deepeſt in it. " This is he who is " employ'd to teach young Gentlemen the Buſineſs " of the Nation; who is to tell us in Print a little " before the Seſſion begins, what they are to do " there." If this be our Condition, that the weighty Affairs of the Kingdom muſt be manag'd by Senators who are to learn their Wiſdom from ſuch a Wretch as this; in Charity we ought to pray for them in the Language of our Saviour, Forgive them, for they know not what they do? But for ourſelves in theſe Words, which are written on the Doors of Peſt-houſes, Lord have Mercy on us, &c. That Tallard courted this Davenant, was apparent; that he corrupted him, was ſuppos'd, on account both of his Circumſtances and Character. Having got into the Parliament-Houſe, for which the 300 l. Act would have diſqualify'd him, by the Intereſt of the Church-Party, as the Biſhop calls them, he faithfully voted with How, Seymour, Shower, Harley, &c. and was one of the 161 Members, who were againſt, even ſo ſmall a Compliance with the King, as the Expedient Reſolution before-mention'd; for which being reprov'd afterwards by a Member, to whom he expreſs'd himſelf otherwiſe, he reply'd, I ought indeed to have done otherwiſe, but Jack How ſmil'd ſo pleaſantly upon me, I could not divide againſt him. This Mr. John How had endear'd himſelf ſo much to the French, by his inſolent Behaviour to King William; that the Paris Gazetteer ſpoke of him by the familiar Appellation of Jack How too, and we more than once read Monſieur Shackoo's Name in his Paper. Notwithſtanding King William knew very well into whoſe hands he was fallen, upon paſſing the Expedient Reſolution; yet when it was preſented to him 3 Days after, he return'd this gracious Anſwer, I thank you for this Addreſs, and your ready Concurrence to thoſe great Ends therein mention'd, which I take to be extremely important to the Honour and Safety of England; and I do aſſure you, I ſhall never propoſe any thing, but what is for our common Advantage and Security. Having this Occaſion, I think it proper to acquaint you, that yeſterday I receiv'd a Memorial from the Envoy Extraordinary of the States-General, a Tranſlation whereof I leave with you. As to the firſt part of it, I think it neceſſary to ask your Advice; and as to the latter part, I deſire your Aſſiſtance. Mr Secretary Hedges, by his Majeſty's Command, laid before the Houſe the Treaty between England and the States-General of the 3d of March 1677, and all the Renewals of it ſince that time; which appear'd ſo reaſonable, that the following Vote was not much debated: Reſolv'd, " That an humble Andreſs be made to his Majeſty, " that he will pleaſe to enter into ſuch Negotia- " tions, in concert with the States-General of the " United Provinces, and other Potentates, as may " moſt effectually conduce to the mutual Safety of " theſe Kingdoms, and the States-General, and the " Preſervation of the Peace of Europe; and that " they will aſſiſt and ſupport his Majeſty in the " Performance of the Treaty made with the States- " General the 3d of March 1677." Which Addreſs was preſented by the whole Houſe Febr. 21. and his Majeſty gave this acceptable Anſwer; for he always kept his Temper, whatever Provocations the oppoſite Party in general or particular gave him.

Vote to aſſiſt the States.

Gentlemen,

I Thank you heartily for the Advice you have given me, and your unanimous Reſolution to ſupport and aſſiſt me, in making good the Treaty mention'd in your Addreſs; and I will immediately order my Miniſters abroad to enter into Negotiations, in concert with the States-General, and other Potentates, for the attaining of thoſe great Ends which you deſire. Nothing can more effectually conduce to our Security, than the Unanimity and Vigour you have ſhew'd on King's Anſwer to the Commons Addreſs.

A.D.1701 this Occaſion. And I ſhall always endeavour on my part to preſerve and increaſe this mutual Truſt and Confidence.

But alas! this mutual Truſt and Confidence, were things the Party of the 161 had leaſt in their Thoughts, as will appear preſently.

Mr. Secretary Vernon acquainted the Houſe of Commons, on the 17th of February, that he was commanded by his Majeſty to communicate to them a Letter, which came very providentially to his hands out of France, being a Letter from the Earl of Melfort to his Brother the Earl of Perth. A Copy of which he deliver'd at the Table, and the Original to the Speaker. I ſhall abridge it.

Earl of Melfort's Letter to the Earl of Perth.

Having deſir'd the late Queen to give Madam Maintenon thanks for his Audience, he continues thus; " I told you, among other things, the great " Fleet the King intends to put out this Summer, " the Order being given, and the Money ready, " the Stores full, and every one concern'd active " in their Stations. There is no doubt but this " Fleet will be Maſter of the Sea for ſome time, " if not for all the Summer, becauſe the Dutch " dare not ſtir till the Engliſh be ready, and they " have long Debates: Yet before they can be in " a condition to act, if they have the Will, and tis a " Queſtion if they will have it at all." Is not this a proof of the Correſpondence between the St. Germains People, and their Faction in England?

" The King never had ſo favourable a Conjunc- " ture, if he can perſuade this King that his Affairs " are really in the Circumſtances they are in; but " there is the Difficulty. He then complains " that there is a proper Perſon wanted to draw up " Informations and Plans, to be laid before the " French King; he excepts againſt the Lord " Middleton, as ſuch a Perſon, being lazy in his " Temper, an Enemy to France, by his Inclination " tainted with Common-wealth Principles, and a- " gainſt the King's Return by any other Power " than that of the People of England, and upon " Capitulation and Terms, who is ſuſpected of giv- " ing Aid to the Compounders, and worſe." He objects againſt Mr. Caryl, as in ſociety with the other, and therefore he will not be truſted by their Friends the true Church of England Party, it is worth remark, the Catholicks, and the Earl of Arran, Duke Hamilton; of every one of theſe he ſays ſomething.

Correſpondence between the High-Church Party, and the Jacobites in France.

" The King cannot but remember, what weight " the Court of France laid upon the true Church " of England Party joining with him, incaſe of a " Landing; therefore all Arts ſhould be us'd with- " out delay, to get them to renew their Corre- " ſpondence, and every Impediment ought to be " remov'd. Aſſurances from the Non-jurors, the " ſoundeſt and moſt venerable part of the Engliſh " Church, would be of great uſe at this time, to " perſuade this Court to undertake this great Af- " fair; for beſides their own Example at Landing, " and their preaching and writing to the People, " that their Religion was in no danger, it is moſt " certain that they know better than any other can " do, what the Church of England in general " would do for the King's Service."

What he ſays of the Catholicks, and their readineſs to join in a French Invaſion, needs not to be repeated, becauſe it is what every one, in and out of England, expected from them; but tis needful to obſerve how he rejoices at the Opportunity put into their hands, by the Party's having procur'd the disbanding of King William's Forces. For when the expoſing the Nation to an Inſurrection by Papiſts and Jacobites, was mention'd in the Houſe of Commons, as an Argument for keeping up thoſe few Forces, 'twas ridicul'd by the Seymours and Hows, as a Bugbear to fright Fools out of their Liberty and Property. But ſays the Earl of Melfort, " If " there will ever be a Landing in England to pur- " poſe, it muſt be before they are arm'd, and they " cannot be arm'd before the Parliament come to

The French rejoice at disbanding the Army.

" a Reſolution concerning the War; and conſi- " dering the few Troops in England, ſuppoſe the " Catholicks to be no better than Militia, what a " Diverſion would it be?" A.D.1701

I ſhall repeat what he ſays of the Earl of Arran, becauſe that Earl, who was Duke of Hamilton by King William's Creation, was ſo far from being ſenſible of his Obligations to that Prince's Goodneſs, that he was the deepeſt in Engagements with his Majeſty's Enemies, and the Enemies to the Revolution; which recommended him ſo much to the Miniſtry, when this Speaker Harley was at the head of it ten years after, that they thought fit to entruſt him with the Intereſts of Great-Britain at the Court of France, by procuring him that Embaſſy.

Duke Hamilton correſponds with the Jacobites in France.

" As to the Earl of Arran, ſays Melfort, it " would be of great uſe to have an Underſtand- " ing with him; he will have none where — Mid- " dleton, he means, can pry; his all is at ſtake, and " he ought to be wary with whom he ventures to " deal. It is of the laſt conſequence to let him " know what to do in caſe of an Invaſion of Eng- " land, or in caſe he and his Friends be oblig'd, " for Self-preſervation, to riſe in their own De- " fence." He concludes, with advice to baniſh all ſuſpected Perſons from St. Germains to Champagne or Burgundy, and the taking in of ſome truſty Counſellors, for the Management of their deſperate Affairs. The Commons did not deign to give ſo much Attention to this treaſonable Letter, as to take the leaſt notice of it; but the Lords did, (tho' the reverend Hiſtorian ſays they did not) as will be ſeen by their Addreſs to his Majeſty; wherein Lords addreſs the King.

" They declar'd their thankful Acknowledgments " to him, for the concern he had expreſs'd in his " Speech for the Proteſtant Religion, and his Care " for its future Preſervation, by recommending to " their Conſideration a further Proviſion for the " Succeſſion to the Crown in the Proteſtant Line. " That they were highly ſenſible of the weight of " thoſe things which his Majeſty was pleaſed fur- " ther to recommend to them, and therefore they " humbly deſir'd he would be pleas'd to order all " the Treaties he had made ſince the late War, " to be laid before them, that they might be ena- " bled to give their mutual Advice, when they " ſhould be inform'd of all thoſe Matters neceſſary " to direct their Judgments. Then they humbly " deſir'd him to enter into Alliances with all thoſe " Princes and States, who were willing to unite " for the Preſervation of the Ballance of Europe; " and aſſur'd his Majeſty, that they ſhould readily " concur in ſuch Methods as might effectually con- " duce to the Honour and Safety of England, the " Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, and the " Peace of Europe. They then humby return'd " their farther Thanks to his Majeſty, for commu- " nicating the Letter of the Lord Melfort, and " deſir'd him to ſearch and ſeize all ſuch Perſons " as were thought to be in a readineſs to diſturb " the Government. In the mean time, they hum- " bly deſire that his Majeſty would give ſuch order " for the ſpeedy fitting out of the Fleet, as he in " his great Wiſdom ſhould think neceſſary, in this " Conjuncture, for the Defence of his Majeſty and " the Kingdom." The King thank'd the Lords for their Addreſs, and for the Concern they expreſs'd in relation to the common Security both at home and abroad; and told them, he would give the neceſſary Orders for thoſe things they deſir'd of him, and take care for fitting out ſuch Ships, as in this Conjuncture ſhould be neceſſary for their common Safety.

The Author of the Jura, ſpeaking of the Houſe of Lords at this time, writes in his Preface, " 'Twill " be allow'd me, I believe, in this favourable Junc- " ture, to ſay, that the Lords, who have through- " out this Seſſion ſpoken the ſenſe of the great " Bulk of the People of England, and have with " great Wiſdom, Temper, and Conduct, done all " that was in their power to ſerve their Country, " and prevent its Ruin, are, as they are a part of

We ſhall find in the courſe of this Story, that not only the Bulk of the Nation, and the Houſe of Lords, as this ingenious Author affirms, but very near an Equality of the Commons, were in the Sentiments of the Kentiſh Petitioners, eſpecially if the Houſe had been rid of thoſe Members of this Parliament, who refus'd the voluntary Aſſociation in 1695, and were now of the number of the 161. They are mention'd in the preceding Pages.

Before we proceed in Parliamentary Affairs, 'twill be proper to remember the Honours conferr'd by his Majeſty, and ſome other Accidents that have occurr'd, ſince we laſt ſpoke of them. In November the Earl of Tankerville was made Lord Privy-Seal; and Sir Charles Hedges a Civilian Secretary of State, and a Privy-Counſellor; another inſtance of ſweet'ning Biſhop Kennet's Church-Party. On the 6th of November there was a Call of Serjeants at Law, Sir Joſeph Jekyl of the Middle-Temple, Chief Juſtice of Cheſter; John Green of Lincoln's-Inn Eſq; Charles Whitaker Eſq; Thomas Gibbons Eſq; Philip Neve Eſq; Nicholas Hooper Eſq; James Munday Eſq; John Prat Eſq; James Selby Eſq; Henry Carthew Eſq; of the Inner-Temple; Thomas Bury Eſq; John Hook Eſq; Laurence Agar Eſq; John Smith Eſq; of Gray's-Inn; John Keen Eſq; Henry Turner Eſq; of Lincoln's-Inn; Robert Tracey Eſq; William Hall Eſq; of the Middle-Temple. About the ſame time his Majeſty created Charles Montagu Eſq; a Peer, by the Title of Baron of Halliſax in the County of York. Mr. Hill, the King's Miniſter at Turin, being recall'd, was made one of the Lords of the Treaſury: he had Orders now to repair to Bruſſels, and confer with the Elector of Bavaria on the preſent ſtate of Affairs; but there being no Diſpoſition in the Parliament to ſecond his Majeſty's great deſire to preſerve the Ballance of Europe, there was no great Expectation of effecting any thing, by this or the like Negotiations. The Earl of Rocheſter was made Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, in hopes of ſweet'ning ſtill more the Party, of which he was one of the Heads, tho' thouſands of his Majeſty's beſt Friends were ſour'd by it, and his Affairs reduc'd to a very doubtful and dangerous Condition. Sidney Lord Godolphin was made firſt Lord Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, in an Opinion that he was ſtaunch in the ſame Party, a term now made uſe of, to expreſs an immoderate Zeal; but that great Lord had too much good Senſe and Honour, to ſacrifice the true Intereſt of England to a Spirit of Bigotry and Perſecution, and left them, as ſoon as it appear'd that they made a Difference between the Church and the Conſtitution of England, both alike eſtabliſh'd by Law ſince the Revolution. Sir Edward Harley, a brave old Presbyterian, Father to the Speaker, died ſoon after he was plac'd in that Chair, and liv'd not to have the Mortification to ſee his Son buſied in promoting the Schiſm and Occaſional Bills, two years afterwards, deſign'd to ſweeten the Church Party, at the expence of the Conſciences and Quiet of the Diſſenters. This worthy Gentleman, Sir Edward Harley, had alſo a Son of his own Name, Mr. Edward Harley, a Member of the Houſe of Commons then, and at this time; who thinking there could be no better Example than that of his Brother, fell in with thoſe Enemies to Liberty ſpiritual and temporal, againſt whom his Father combated ſo gallantly, both in Council and Arms. Let the Reader judge, whether Religion or Reaſon could be concern'd in ſuch a change of Principle and Practice. About the ſame time, another eminent Member of the Forty-One Parliament, Sir John Holland of Norfolk, (I am far from intending it as a Reflection) died, and left his Principles, as well as his Honours and Eſtate, to his Son, Sir John Holland, Knight of the Shire for Norfolk in this and the next Parliament. The new Lord Halliſax was made Auditor of the Exchequer, on the death of Sir Robert Howard, who procur'd the Reverſion of that lucrative Office, by the Interceſſion of the Earl of Shaftesbury, when Lord-Chancellor, and by that means avoided an Impeachment, which Sir Robert, and other Members of King Charles IId's Penſioner-Parliament, were contriving againſt him. Sir Robert enjoy'd that Place many years, and upon his death it was conteſted by the Marquiſs of Carmarthen, Son to the Duke of Leeds, who had got a Grant in Reverſion, but not ſuch a one as was valid in Law; ſo the Lord Halliſax kept poſſeſſion of that Poſt till his death, and left the Survivorſhip of it to his Nephew, the preſent Earl of Halliſax.

The Earl of Melfort having mention'd in his Letter a Proviſion of no leſs than ſeven Regiments of Horſe and Dragoons, to be made by the Papiſts, with Arms, Trumpets, Kettle-drums, Standards, &c. his Majeſty did not think fit to neglect the Advice, whatever the Commons did; and on the 29th of February iſſued out his Proclamation, « For « all ſuſpected Perſons to repair to their reſpective « Places of Abode; and for putting the Laws in « execution againſt all Papiſts, and reputed Papiſts, « and all other Offenders, who by reaſon of their « Converſation, Diſcourſe, or other Demeanour, « ſhall be ſuſpected not to be well affected to the « Government."

Proclamation againſt the Diſaffected.

Count Wratiſlaw, Ambaſſador from the Emperor of Germany to King William, came to London before the meeting of this Parliament, but found at his coming ſmall Encouragement to proceed in his Negotiation for a new Alliance. The Author of Jura gives a hint that he met with cold Treatment and coarſe Language too, from a Gentleman in a great Station, ſince the faſhion of ſweet'ning came up; and how could it be otherwiſe, when, as he tells us, Whatever Matter was offer'd that ſeem'd to have the leaſt tendency to a War, was violently oppos'd by the Speaker Harley, Muſgrave, Seymour, Shower, Finch, How, Harcourt, and all thoſe who were entirely in the Intereſt of that Party. Of theſe Men, Sir Bartholomew Shower was a Renegade from his Brethren the Diſſenters, at the feet of whoſe Gamaliel he was bred, with his Brother Mr. John Shower, the noted diſſenting Miniſter; but this Bartholomew very early departed from reform'd Principles, and not only became a Tool to the Tory, but even to the Popiſh Intereſt, being Counſel againſt the Biſhops in King James's Reign; and he was now receiv'd with open arms by the above mention'd Church-Party, to forward their Deſigns againſt the Court, who, as the Biſhop owns, reſented that they had not the Places by which they would have had it more in their power to perplex and diſtreſs the Government, as they did at this time.

Sir Bartholomew Shower's Character.

The Parliament had ſat near a Month, before we heard a word of the Proteſtant Succeſſion, recommended to them ſo earneſtly by his Majeſty, and the Wiſhes and Prayers of all good Engliſhmen. To avoid as much as may be the whimſical Charge of Partiality, when I am only relating fact, I ſhall uſe the words of a modern Hiſtorian, not out of love to them, but myſelf. There was no notice taken of that part of the King's Speech about the Succeſſion, tho' of the laſt importance, till the 3*d of* March. It's obſervable, that a Whig Member deſign'd to bring in the Bill, which being ſmoak'd by the Speaker, Sir John Bolles, a Tory, and little better than a Madman, was employ'd to preſent it to the Houſe; who had ſo little ſtomach to it, that it hung there three Months before they paſs'd it, and even then it was ſent up ſo looſe to the Lords, that the late Biſhop of Salisbury, out of the height of his Zeal for the Succeſſion in the Proteſtant Line, was ſtanding up to move for Amendments, when a great many of the young Lords, by a very ſignal Providence, crying out, No Amendments, no Amendments, it paſs'd without any; and Dr. Newton, one of the Maſters in Chancery,

Chancery, being ſent with it down to the Commons, where there were not many Members then ſitting, after his Admiſſion, he was ask'd, What he had brought them? he replied, The Succeſſion Bill. Then being further interrogated concerning what Amendments the Lords had made to it, and he replying, None at all; ſeveral of the Members ſaid aloud, The Devil take you and your Bill. This the Lord Somers told to ſeveral Gentlemen, and particularly to a Friend of his and mine, from whom I had it; and if I had not known him to be a Perſon of great Integrity, I ſhould not have ventur'd to inſert it.

It was well known that the Speaker Harley anticipated the Revolutioners in this Work, which they had moſt at heart, and that thoſe of his, the Church Party, who liv'd and ſat in Parliament after the Proteſtant Succeſſion took effect, gave daily convincing Proofs of their being ſorry for what they had done, purely to prevent its being done by others, as will evidently be ſeen hereafter. Biſhop Kennet however, tells this Story as ſeriouſly, as if the Speaker, Seymour, Muſgrave, &c. had been as much in earneſt as Sir Richard Onſlow, or Sir Thomas Littleton, and we copying him, muſt relate,

Vote for the Proteſtant Succeſſion.

That the Commons Reſolv'd, March 3. That for the preſerving the Peace and Happineſs of the Kingdom, and the Security of the Proteſtant Religion by Law eſtabliſh'd, (the uſing that good term with ſo much Affectation, takes off a great deal of its Gravity) it is abſolutely neceſſary a further Declaration be made of the Limitation and Succeſſion of the Crown in the Proteſtant Line, after his Majeſty and the Princeſs, and the Heirs of their Bodies reſpectively; and that farther Proviſion be firſt made for the Security of the Rights and Liberties of the People. A noble Lord, in a late Vindication of General Monk, ſpeaking of the Biſhop of Salisbury and other Men's Quarrel with Monk, ſays, it was becauſe he had not ſuffer'd the Presbyterians to let Charles II. come back in Chains; his Lordſhip means ſuch ſort of Proviſion for the Security of the Rights and Liberties of the People, which this High-Church Parliament voted to be abſolutely neceſſary, and was certainly a thouſand times more neceſſary before the Reception of Charles and James II. who intended and endeavour'd to deſtroy thoſe Rights and Liberties, and from whom nothing better could be expected, by Men of common Underſtanding and common Honeſty, than before the Reception of the royal Houſe of Hanover, who were diſtinguiſh'd from all other Princes by their Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, and the Rights and Liberties of all Europe. But ſuch is the Conſiſtency that is always to be expected from Perſons miſled by Bigotry or Diſguſt, or any other of the meaner Paſſions of the Mind of Man.

Reſolutions for Clauſes in the Act of Succeſſion.

The Succeſſion Act was no more heard of till nine days after, and then Mr. Conyers reported the further Reſolutions of the Houſe, all Chains and Shackles, in the ſenſe of the noble Vindicator;

" That all things relating to the well-governing of " this Kingdom, which are properly cognizable " in the Privy-Council, ſhall be tranſacted there, " and all Reſolutions taken thereupon ſhall be " ſign'd by the Privy-Council. 2. That no Per- " ſon whatſoever, that is not a Native of England, " Scotland, or Ireland, or the Dominions there- " unto belonging, or who is not born of Engliſh " Parents beyond the Seas, altho' ſuch Perſons be " naturaliz'd or made Denizens, ſhall be capable " of any Grant of Lands, Tenements, or Here- " ditaments from the Crown, to himſelf, or any " other in truſt for him. 3. That upon the fur- " ther Limitation of the Crown, in caſe the ſame " ſhall hereafter come to any Perſon not being a " Native of this Kingdom of England, this Na- " tion be not oblig'd to engage in any War for " the Defence of any Dominion or Territory not " belonging to the Crown of England, without " the Conſent of Parliament. 4. That whoever ſhall " hereafter come to the poſſeſſion of this Crown, " ſhall join in Communion with the Church of " England as by Law eſtabliſh'd, (this ſeems to " preſs a little hard upon the Church of Scotland as by Law eſtabliſh'd). " 5. That no Pardon be " pleadable to any Impeachment in Parliament. " 6. That no Perſon who ſhall hereafter come to " the poſſeſſion of this Crown, ſhall go out of " the Dominions of England, Scotland, or Ireland, " without conſent of Parliament. 7. That no " Perſon who has any Office under the King, or " receives a Penſion from the Crown, ſhall be ca- " pable of ſerving as a Member of the Houſe of " Commons. 8. That further Proviſion be made " for the confirming of all Laws and Statutes, for " ſecuring our Religion, and the Rights and Li- " berties of the People. 9. That Judges Com- " miſſions be made Quam diu ſe bene geſſerint, " and their Salaries aſcertain'd and eſtabliſh'd; but " upon the Addreſs of either Houſe of Parliament, " it may be lawful to remove them. 10. That " the Princeſs Sophia, Dutcheſs Dowager of Ha- " nover, be declar'd the next in Succeſſion to the " Crown of England, in the Proteſtant Line, after " his Majeſty and the Princeſs, and the Heirs of " their Bodies reſpectively; and that the further " Limitation of the Crown be to the ſaid Princeſs " Sophia, and the Heirs of her Body, being Pro- " teſtants." I ſhall content myſelf with Biſhop Kennet's Reflections upon theſe Reſolves, becauſe his Example, if it is good, will juſtify my Reflections on the like Occaſions. In this caſe, ſays he, it was obvious to obſerve, that People may come into the ſame Meaſures upon a very different View. Some, no doubt, might fall into ſuch Limitations upon a true Regard to the Security of the Church. I very much doubt it, if the Biſhop means by it the Proteſtant Religion, excluſive of any temporal Emoluments, and the Liberties of Poſterity. Others might come in with a meaning to condemn the preſent Adminiſtration, and to provide for ſuch future Conveniencies as they ſeem'd now to want. Some may think it a ſtep towards coming to a belov'd Commonwealth. Here the Hiſtorian dreams again. He might have been defy'd to name three Members who voted for the Houſe of Hanover, who would have preferr'd a Commonwealth to the Proteſtant Line. And even others might imagine, that ſo to clog and embaraſs the Succeſſion, might indirectly prevent the Settlement of it.

A.D. 1701

As to the Stir made about it by the Popiſh Princes, who were deſcended from the Blood-Royal of England, and were more nearly related, by Heirſhip, to the Crown than the Princeſs Sophia, it is not worth remembring. King James himſelf, and his pretended Son, were then both alive. The Laws of England had incapacitated all Popiſh Princes to ſucceed to the Crown, which theſe Princes knew very well; particularly the Duke of Savoy, whoſe Miniſter, Count Maffey, preſented a Proteſtation in behalf of the Right of the Princeſs Anne of Orleans, Dutcheſs of Savoy, Daughter of the Princeſs Henrietta-Maria, Daughter of King Charles the Firſt, the next in blood to the King and the Princeſs of Denmark, but all Popiſh Heirs were put under an Incapacity of Succeſſion to this Crown. This Savoy Proteſtation was a terrible Affront to King James, his Queen, and his pretended Son, of whom the Dutcheſs of Savoy deign'd not to take the leaſt notice; but only ſaid, Being inform'd it had been reſolv'd in the Parliament to ſettle the Order of Succeſſion, ſhe repreſented to the King and Parliament, that being the only Daughter of the late Princeſs Royal Henrietta her Mother, ſhe was the next in Succeſſion, after his Majeſty William III. and the Princeſs Anne of Denmark, according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of England. By which we ſee that Papiſts, even one of the Race of the Stuarts, have denied what Biſhop Kennet's Church-Party have been preaching and aſſerting theſe four or five and forty Years, the Hereditary, Unalienable, Indefeaſible Right to the Crown, to confirm the pretended Title of the abdicated King and his pretended Son; which the Dutcheſs of Savoy, Grandaughter of King Charles I. had in ſo great Contempt, as not to think it worth mentioning.

On

A. D. 1700.

On the 18th of March, the King ſent the following Meſſage to the Commons.

WILLIAM R.

" HIS Majeſty having directed Mr. Stan-
" hope, his Envoy Extraordinary and " Plenipotentiary at the Hague, to enter into
" Negociations in Concert with the States Ge" neral of the United Provinces, and other
" Potentates for the mutual Defence of Eng-
" land and Holland, and the Preſervation of
" the Peace of Europe, according to the Ad-
" dreſs of this Houſe to that Effect: And the
" ſaid Mr. Stanhope having tranſmitted to
" his Majeſty Copies of the Demands made by
" Himſelf, and the Deputies of the States up-
" on that Subject to the French Ambaſſador
" there, his Majeſty has thought fit to com-
" municate the ſame to You, it being his Ma-
" jeſty's gracious Intention, to acquaint You,
" from Time to Time with the State and Pro-
" greſs of thoſe Negociations into which he
" has entered purſuant to Your Addreſs a-
" bovementioned. Kenſington, March 17, 1700.

Inſtead of taking into Conſideration, the Negociations of Mr. Stanhope which required immediate Diſcuſſion and Determination, the Leaders of the Party, which I am aſhamed to name ſo often as being below the Dignity of Hiſtory, put the Houſe upon conſidering Negociations for the Treaties which the King had made to prevent thoſe for a War. Having read the aboveſaid Meſſage and the Propoſals made to the French Ambaſſador by Mr. Stanhope, and the Reſolutions of the States General for Treating with Monſieur D'Avaux, they reſolved, That the Partition Treaty be read. Every One within Doors and without ſaw plainly that this was an unaccountable Way of Proceeding towards carrying on Negociations for preſerving the Peace and Ballance of Power in Europe, which, indeed, was the main Deſign of the Partition Treaty, but the French King had broken it, and the Wiſdom of the Nation ſhould have been directed to what was to be done, and not to what had been done, though that was the Effect, not of Choice, but of Neceſſity. The Party would not let the King go into a War with France to prevent her ſeizing the Dominions of Spain; neither would they approve his Endeavours to do it without a War. They reſolved, That an Humble Addreſs be preſented to His Majeſty to return the Thanks of this Houſe, for His Gracious Meſſage, wherein He is pleaſed to communicate His Royal Intentions to acquaint this Houſe from Time to Time with the State and Progreſs of thoſe Negotiations, into which His Majeſty had entered, purſuant to an Addreſs of this Houſe. And alſo to lay before His Majeſty the ill Conſequences of the Treaty of Partition, paſſed under the Great Seal of England, during the Sitting of Parliament, and without the Advice of the ſame, to this Kingdom and the Peace of Europe, whereby ſuch large Territories of the King of Spain's Dominions were to be delivered up to the French King. There is ſomething in this ſo very contrary to good Senſe and good Policy, that it would have been Matter of Amazement had it come from any other Set of Men than thoſe, who after Ten Years War, and One Hundred glorious Victories over the French for the Recovery of thoſe Territories did give up all Spain and the Indies to the French, which was in their Power to give. For what the German Emperor had poſſeſſed himſelf of by his own Arms, and the Arms of his Allies, theſe Men could not reſtore to the Duke of Anjou. The ill Conſequences of a Treaty which never was executed are extraordinary Things in humane Underſtanding. The Death of the King of Spain was the only ill Conſequence they could be ſenſible of. For if the King of Spain had lived long enough to have given Time for the Potentates of Europe to have acceded to that Treaty, as it was their Intereſt to do, he would probably have never made ſuch a Will as he did, or France would not have dar'd to accept of it. Was it good Policy to put ſuch an Affront upon King William's Counſels at ſo critical a Juncture, when no leſs than the Preſervation of Religion, Liberty, Trade, Peace, and every Thing dear to Men depended on the Credit and Authority of them, as he muſt neceſſarily be the Head of the next Confederacy which appear'd, unavoidable as he was of the laſt, and when the retroſpecting the Affair of the Partition could be of no Uſe in the World to the Common Cauſe then in the extreameſt Peril, but was ſure to be an Obſtruction to the Supporting of it, which doubtleſs was the Intention of the Staunch Men in the Houſe of Commons; for that this Affair was ſet a Foot purely by a Spirit of Party is notorious and ſelf-evident.

The Houſe of Commons neglect it.

They vote againſt the Partition-Treaty.

The ill Conduct of the High Church Party.

Though His Majeſty could not but reſent the Unkindneſs of this Addreſs, yet as it was his Cuſtom in all Caſes, he ſhewed in his Anſwer, that whatever the Addreſſers were, he himſelf was Maſter of his Paſſions.

Gentlemen,

I AM glad You are pleaſed with my Communicating to You the State of the Negotiations I have entered into, purſuant to Your Addreſs. I ſhall continue to inform You of the Progreſs that ſhall be made in them; and be always willing to receive Your Advice thereupon, being fully perſuaded that Nothing can contribute more effectually to the Happineſs of this Kingdom and the Peace of Europe, than the Concurrence of the Parliament in all My Negotiations, and a good Underſtanding between Me and My People.

King's mild Anſwer.

I omit the Lords Addreſs on this Subject, becauſe the Reaſon their Lordſhips give for diſliking the Partition Treaty looks now with a very ill Grace. The few Provinces taken from Spain by that Treaty, and yielded to France bearing no Manner of Compariſon with the many Empires and Kingdoms yielded to the Duke of Anjou by the Utrecht Treaty. The Cloſe of the Lords Addreſs was much ſpoken of and highly approv'd. And ſince it appear'd, the French King's accepting the King of Spain's Will was a manifeſt Violation of that Treaty, they humbly adviſed His Majeſty in future Treaties with that Prince to proceed with ſuch Caution as might carry a Real Security. If this intended to reflect on the Want of Real Security in the Partition Treaty, it might have been objected, that the Partition Treaty was not capable of ſuch Security, without the French King's delivering up ſome of his own Country to ſecure the Poſſeſſion of ſome of the King of Spain's, which could not be thought of unleſs he had been compelled to it by Arms. For this Real Security implied as much in the Senſe it was taken in, in the Houſe of Lords, where it was ſaid, That it did neceſſarily imply a War, and that a very long one, by Reaſon of the Extent of a Real Security, and the great

Lords Addreſs againſt the French King's Inſincerity.

Improbability of obtaining any Terms of that Kind.

Before the Sitting of the Parliament, His Majesty wrote a Letter of Congratulation to the Elector of Brandenburgh, upon his Taking the Title and Prerogatives of King of Prussia, which was full of Sentiments of Respect and Tenderness. As these, Therefore the Notification thereof has been the more joyful and acceptable to Us, as well for all these Reasons as because of the Nearness of Blood; and the inward Affection which we have, both to Your Majesty's High Person, and to Your Whole Illustrious Family, can work nothing else in Us, than that whatever Successes and Pleasures Your Majesty may meet with, shall likewise cause great Joy in Us.

King William congratulates the King of Prussia.

The State of Religion, which Bishop Kennet writes of after this, consisting chiefly of Disputes in Convocation, wherein the Church of England Presbyters oppos'd the Church of England Bishops, I refer to his own History for the Particulars, which he must needs be well acquainted with, and the Controversy being about Prorogation, Whether the Power was in the Archbishop and Bishops, or in the Prolocutor and the Lower House, the Subject is most proper for those that were and are most concern'd in it. However, let us not forget that the Archbishop of Canterbury deliver'd to the Prolocutor, Dr. Hooper, Dean of Canterbury, the Form of an Address to His Majesty, to which the Lower House agreed, without any Amendment, only they proposed, it might be, Reformed Churches, instead of Reformed Religion, the Exception might be taken against such as would make Church and Religion to mean different Things. With the Alteration of that Word it was presented to His Majesty, on the 10th of March by the Archbishop. It contained Thanks to his Majesty for his constant Favour and Protection to the Church of England; an Acknowledgment of his pious Concerns for the Reformed Churches in general, and an Assurance of their stedfast Fidelity and Affection, and Readiness to maintain the Supremacy as settled by Law, &c. And they were graciously received by the King, He thanked them for their Promises of maintaining his Supremacy according to Law, beyond which he assur'd them he would never extend it.

Convocation's Address

Asserts the King's Supremacy,

On the 20th of March, the Prolocutor carried up a Representation from the Lower House, with Respect to Things lately published against the Truth of the Christian Religion. It contained several Resolutions of a Committee of their House, concerning a Book written by one Toland, a Man of some Sense and Learning, but of more Conceit and Assurance. It was entituled, Christianity not mysterious, out of which they extracted this Schedule of Positions.

Against Toland.

" I conclude that neither God himself, nor " any of his Attributes, are mysterious to us, " for Want of adequate Ideas.

" No doubt of it, as far as any Church al- " lows of Mysteries so far it is Antichristian, " and may with a great deal of Justice, claim " Kindred with the Scarlet Whore.

" To speak freely, Contradiction and My- " stery are but two emphatical Ways of say- " ing Nothing, &c.

Toland complained, that the Convocation had quoted him by Scraps without his Connexion or Explanation, which would have softened the Interpretation.

On the 22d of March, the Archbishop produced Dr. Davenant's Book, entituled, The Ballance of Power, &c. in the 40th Page of which were these Words: " Are not a great " many of us able to point out to several " Persons, whom nothing has recommend- " ed to Places of highest Trust, and often " to RICH BENEFICES and DIGNITIES, " but the open Enmity which they have " almost from their Cradles profes's'd to the " Divinity of Christ." And it was agreed, that a Paper should be affix'd over several Doors in Westminster-Abbey, intimating, That " it was desired by the Archbishops and Bi- " shops, that the Author himself, wherever " he was, or any of the great Many to whom " he refers, would point out to the particular " Persons, whom he or they know to be lia- " ble to this Charge, that they might be pro- " ceeded against in a judicial Way, which " would be esteem'd a great Service to the " Church; otherwise the abovementioned " Passage must be look'd upon as a PUBLICK " SCANDAL." It was sign'd at Bottom, Tho. Tollet. This Author of a Publick Scandal was well-known to be of Bishop Kennet's Church-Party, and one of their great Oracles in the present House of Commons.

A.D. 1701.

Davenant's Book censured as scandalous.

Some of the Convocation complained as warmly of Bishop Burnet's Exposition of the Thirty-nine Articles, as of the Writings of Atheists and Deists; and we have seen by this Quotation of Davenant's, that the Name and Cause of the Church were made use of by that Sett of Men, not really out of any Concern for Religion, or even for the Bishops, but as a Mark of Distinction to disguise Faction and Malignity. Sir John Packington brought a Bill into this Parliament against the Translations of Bishops from one See to another, yet as we read in the Preface to Jura, " He " must be thought a true Son of the Church, " because he tells Churchmen he is so." But in Truth these Men have never once since the Revolution meant any Thing by their popular Proceedings, but Opposition and Mischief to the Government. The Cry against a Standing Army was colour'd over with a specious Concern for Liberty, as it has been done since, and will always be done as long as the Cry is continu'd. Sir Christopher Musgrave was loudest in it, and see what is said in the abovecited Preface. " In King James's Reign, " when the Army consisted of 20000 Men, " and the King had no other Occasion for " them, but to terrify and afflict his own " Subjects, Sir Christopher Musgrave was " pleased to say in the House, it was a deplo- " rable Thing the King should have no better " Army. Was it not that good old Loyalist, " and Men of his Party, who brought his " Present Majesty to the Allowance of 7000 " Men, and were the Cause of all the Cala- " mities that have been occasion'd by it:" Which in Reality is what was said to be the ill Consequences of the Partition Treaty. For if the King's Forces had been kept together, as he and all wise and unprejudiced Men had Reason to expect they would have been at such a Juncture, his Majesty would have been as ready to have secur'd, as the French King was to seize the Spanish Monarchy. However, that very Treaty which was design'd to preserve the Publick Tranquillity was now censured as the sole Occasion of breaking it, and many noble Lords directly charg'd it upon the Earl of Portland, who excus'd himself, as well he might, by saying, that the Duke of Leeds, the Earls of Pembroke, Jersey and Manchester,

Lords Concurrence in the Partition Treaty.

Manchester, the Lords Somers and Halifax had their Share in that Negotiation, as it is certain they had, being in the King's Council and Confidence. The Lords nam'd by the Earl readily acknowledg'd the Allegation, and that the rough Draught of the Treaty had been communicated to them, but that the Earl of Portland had drawn it up himself in French, and as for their Part, they had neither given nor refus'd their Consent to it. But the seeing a Treaty, the having it communicated to them, being for their Approbation or Objection, and they being silent in the Matter was a tacit Consent, as doubtless that Silence was intended, and as it was necessary the Draught of that Treaty should be in French for the Use of the Dutch and French Ministers who were to conclude it, and understood not English. All the World must needs guess the Reason, why the Earl of Portland was pitch'd upon to make a Draught of it. As for what was added, that the Treaty was never communicated to the Privy Council, these Lords could not lay the Stress of their Excuse upon that, because it was communicated to them, and they were of the Council. But the Truth is, No body had the least Conception of any other Step that could be taken to preserve the Publick Peace, unless it was by a War, and that the Party who made such a Clamour against the Treaty would not hear of, which shews that these Lords did not think that Treaty would have any ill Consequences or, at least, that the Consequences would be worse, than if there was no Treaty at all. Some Lords, in this Debate, spoke very reflecting on the French King, upon which the Earl of Rochester, the same who published the History of the Grand Rebellion, said, " All Men ought to speak respectfully " of Crown'd Heads, and that this Duty was " more particularly incumbent on the Peers " of a Kingdom, who derive all their Ho- " nour and Lustre from the Crown." He was seconded in his Complement to the French King by another Earl, who said, " The King " of France was not only to be respected, but " to be fear'd." To whom another Member of that August Assembly replied, as became both a Peer and a Patriot. " I hope no Man " in England need be afraid of the French " King, much less the noble Peer who spoke, " ('tis Pity the Historian does not name him) " who I doubt is too much a Friend to that " Monarch, to fear any Thing from him." There was so great Warmth in the Debates of the Commons concerning this Treaty, every Word that was said of it being Mal a propos, and thrown away upon a Non Entity, that more than one of the Members broke in upon common Decency and good Manners to a Degree that would have been scandalous in a Country Corporation. For besides the intollerable Insolence of How, in his Felonious Treaty, Seymour, Bolles and others whose Heads were not much better settled than Bolles's compar'd the dividing another Man's Kingdom to robbing on the High Way. Let us see how it is understood by Foreigners. For Truth in us is Partiality.

However, the King of England ought not to lose the Effect of that Treaty, which was the general Peace and Tranquillity, and his own particular Security, for which he must demand an Equivalent and the States in these following Articles:

A. D. 1701.

English and Dutch Ministers Proposals to the French to preserve Peace.

The Dutch Miniſters preſented another Memorial the ſame Day to D'Avaux much to the ſame Purpoſe only for their Security, they required to have Venlo, Ruremond, Stevenſtweart, Luxemburgh, Namur, Charleroy, Mons Valenaennes, Dendermond, Damme and Denys with all their Appurtenances. But the French King, who by engaging the Elector of Bavaria on his Side, made ſure of all the Spaniſh Netherlands inſtructed his Ambaſſador to anſwer coldly only, That he would keep the Peace of Ryſwick, tho' his ſeizing the Crown of Spain for his Grandſon had perfectly vacated the Ends of that Peace. I have hinted already, that the Elector of Bavaria was compell'd to an Acquieſcence in the Meaſures of France by the numerous Armies that were marching to the Netherlands, againſt which he could make no Head, without the Aſſiſtance of England and Holland, and England was not likely to aſſiſt him, while the then Houſe of Commons were under the Influence of ſuch Men as Muſgrave, How, Harley, &c. King William*'s Meſſage about the* French King's Anſwer.

" French Ambaſſadour there, had deliver'd
" to the Penſionary, that the King his Ma-
" ſter had no other Anſwer to return to the " Demands made by the States General of " the United Provinces, than that he is ready
" to renew and confirm the Treaty of Ryſ-

" are to expect, and that he has no Orders
" to give any Anſwer to His Majeſty's ſaid
" Envoy, but if His Majeſty has any Thing
" to demand, it may be done by His Majeſty's
" Ambaſſador at Paris, or to the French Mi-
" niſter at London, and that he had no Com-
" miſſion to treat with any but the States:
" And His Majeſty having alſo receiv'd two
" Reſolutions of the States, and a Memorial
" from their Envoy here, relating to the " Ships they are ſending to join His Majeſty's
" Fleet, and the Succours they deſire may be
" haſten'd to them, by Virtue of the Treaty
" made the 3d of March, 1677. His Maje-
" ſty has thought fit to communicate the " Whole to this Houſe, that they may be " particularly inform'd of the State of Affairs
" Abroad, where the Negociations ſeem to " be at an End by the poſitive Anſwer the " French Ambaſſador has given to the States,

" ous Conſideration of this Houſe, as a Mat-
" ter of the greateſt Weight and Conſequence,
" and deſires that they will give His Majeſty
" ſuch Advice thereupon, as may be for our " own Security, and that of the States Gene-
" ral and the Peace of Europe. Kenſington, March 31. 1701.

The King having done, as he told the Commons before he would do, and communicated the State of Foreign Affairs with Reſpect to England, they could do no leſs than return a decent Anſwer, tho' far from giving Satisfaction to all good Engliſhmen.

" ble Advice of this Houſe be given to His

" cert with the States General, and take ſuch
" Meaſures therein as will moſt conduce to

" General, the 3d of March 1677. And to
" aſſure His Majeſty, that this Houſe will
" effectually enable Him to ſupport the ſaid
" Treaty." This Reſolution of Advice being preſented to the King, His Majeſty ſent them this ſoft Anſwer, by Secretary Hedges.

King's Anſwer.

" That according to the Advice of the Houſe
" of Commons, His Majeſty had given Order
" to his Envoy Extraordinary at the Hague,
" to carry on the Negotiations in Concert
" with the States General, and to take ſuch
" Meaſures therein as may moſt conduce to
" their Security. His Majeſty thanks You
" for the Aſſurance you have given, that this
" Houſe will effectually enable him to ſup-
" port the Treaty of 1677, and will purſue
" the ſame as You adviſe. He does not doubt
" but the Readineſs You have ſhewn upon this
" Occaſion will very much contribute to the
" Obtaining ſuch a Security as is deſir'd."

The King underſtood very well what the Commons meant by confining him to the Treaty of 1677, and ſpeaking in general Terms of his providing for their Security. That it was to evade his Deſire of Forming a Confederacy for a new War, without which he foreſaw France would never yield up any Part of the Spaniſh Monarchy. The Party who had the Major Vote in this Houſe of Commons were ſo frank upon this Occaſion as to ſay publickly, Let thoſe Abroad look to themſelves, what have we to do with their Matters. One of theſe excellent Politicians expreſſing himſelf thus to one of the Imperial Miniſters, the latter made him this ſober and rational Anſwer, " You Gentlemen, I find,
" talk much at your Eaſe, and we muſt ſhift
" for ourſelves. But if we muſt, in the firſt
" Place we are Catholicks, and have One
" Common Head, You Hereticks, and this
" Head againſt you: Therefore if the Pro-
" teſtant Intereſt gives us up, we muſt needs
" gain ſome good Terms by giving up the Pro-
" teſtants. In the next Place, Your great

" can give up that too. In the third Place, " You are of the French King's neareſt Neighbours, and Holland once ſwallow'd, you " will be as acceſſible, I ſuppoſe, as if join'd " to the Continent; while we for our Parts " have a tolerable Barrier of Princes, the " Body of Germany lying between, and ſo at " leaſt muſt be the laſt devour'd, the Auſtrian " Dominions, Bohemia, Hungary, &c. being " the moſt remote. And laſt of all, when " driven thither, we have an old Enemy, " our then ſure Friend, to join with us, we " will call in the Janiſſaries, and ſhall have " that Empire, and the whole Strength of the " Eaſt to confederate with us againſt the We- " ſtern Power. And what will you be, Gen- " tlemen, long e'er it comes to this?" One may eaſily imagine, that ſuch a judicious Diſcourſe as this cou'd have very little Effect on Perſons whoſe Religion conſiſted in Bigotry and falſe Zeal, and their Politicks in Oppoſition and Perplexity. The Commons did not mend their Pace in making effectual Proviſion even for the Engliſh Auxiliaries, notwithſtanding their Aſſurances, and this Slowneſs obliged his Majeſty to keep the Negotiations a Foot at the Hague and at Paris, which were manag'd with great Caution and Dexterity by the Earl of Manchester, and Mr. Stanhope, but could not be continu'd without acknowledging the Duke of Anjou, as King of Spain, and no doubt that Acknowledgment would have been made good, if the French King had comply'd with the juſt Demands of His Majeſty and the States General. King William's Congratulatory Letter to the King of Spain was as follows:

Moſt Serene and Potent Prince, Our dear Brother and Ally,

King William's Letter to the King of Spain.

" WE have received Your Majeſty's " Letter of the twenty-fourth of " March, which has been very acceptable to " Us upon many Accounts: Firſt becauſe they " brought us Notice of Your ſafe Arrival in- " to Your Kingdom of Spain, and of Your " coming to the Poſſeſſion of it, and taking " upon Yourſelf the Government of the Do- " minions thereunto belonging; and in the " ſecond Place, becauſe they have made it " plain to Us, that Your Majeſty hath a " Mind to continue and keep inviolably that " moſt ancient Alliance, which is between " the two Crowns. Indeed, We having wil- " lingly embraced this Occaſion both to con- " gratulate Your Majeſty's happy Exaltation " to the Spaniſh Throne, and to ſhew You " how much Eſteem we have for Your Ma- " jeſty, and how much we deſire to make it " appear to You, that Our Inclination doth " moſt readily prompt Us to endeavour what " we can, that the mutual Conjunction of " Friendſhip and Alliance between Us, may " be confirmed and knit faſter, and the Com- " mon Good of the two Nations may daily " more and more flouriſh and may be promo- " ted, which we hope alſo will redound to " the Publick Benefit and Good of all Eu- " rope, What remains is to commend and " commit Your Majeſty to the Care and Pro- " tection of Almighty God.

Given at Our Palace at Kenſington, the ſeventeenth Day of April, 1701, and in the thirteenth Year of the Reign of Your Majeſty's moſt loving Brother and Ally, Gulielmus Rex.

A. D. 1701.

All Europe was ſenſible, that King William was forc'd to take this ungrateful Step by the Perverſeneſs of the Tory-Party. This Letter, which their dilatory Proceedings had extorted from His Majeſty, was afterwards made uſe of as an Argument againſt the Alliance he was forming to bring the French King and his Grandſon to Reaſon. Let us look again into our French Hiſtory: Le Roi qui vit l'éloignement que les Communes avoient a renouveller la Guerre, & qui il ne pouvoit dependre ſur aucun Secours, tacha de s'aſſurer des Amis & des Alliez en Hollande *& dans l'*Empire. Il crut cependant qu'il eſtoit de la Politique de reconnoitre le Droit de Philippe *a la Succeſſion d'*Eſpagne. Il le fit par une Lettre, &c. "The " King who ſaw how far the Commons were " from any Diſpoſition to renew the War, " and that he could not depend upon any Aſ- " ſiſtance from them, endeavour'd to make " ſure of Allies in Holland and the Empire. " In the mean Time, he thought it good Po- " licy to acknowledge Philip's Right to the " Spaniſh Succeſſion, which he did by a Letter.

Mr. Stanhope having received an Expreſs of His Majeſty's Recognition of the King of Spain. He complimented the Spaniſh Ambaſſador upon it, and Monſieur d'Avaux, the French Miniſter, preſented an amuſing Memorial to the States, ſetting forth, " That " having tranſmitted their Reſolution of the " firſt of April to His Maſter, wherein they " deſir'd the Negotiations may be reſum'd in " Conjunction with the King of England's " Envoy for maintaining the Peace of Europe " and providing for their own particular Se- " curity, and that their Lordſhips having at " the ſame Time declared, they wiſh'd no- " thing ſo much as that thoſe Negotiations " might be brought to a ſpeedy and good " Concluſion with his Maſter, to whom he " had given an Account of the Anſwer he " gave their Lordſhips concerning the Admit- " tance of the Engliſh Envoy, and he had en- " tirely approv'd the ſame, and was pleas'd " with the Aſſurances given by their Lord- " ſhips of the Deſire they had to preſerve " the Peace. And as His Majeſty continu'd " in the Reſolution of maintaining the Pub- " lick Tranquillity, he would conſent to eve- " ry Expedient that might conduce towards " ſecuring the Common Good and Repoſe of " Chriſtendom, and that in Order thereunto " His Majeſty had no ſooner been acquainted " with their Lordſhips Deſign of renewing " their Conferences, but he had commanded " the Ambaſſador to reſume the ſame and " continue at the Hague.

French Ambaſſador amuſes the States.

Here Monſieur d'Avaux was enjoin'd to take on him the Character of an Actor, and play the Part his Maſter impos'd upon him, without any Regard to Sincerity or Honour. For the French King meant nothing by maintaining the Publick Tranquility, but his maintaining his Grandſon in the whole Spaniſh Succeſſion, ſince notwithſtanding this ſpecious Declaration, the French King ſent Inſtructions to d'Avaux to keep the Engliſh Envoy out of the Negotiations at the Hague, and to engage the States to treat ſeperately. But the Dutch Miniſters were aware of d'Avaux's Deſign by the Ambiguity of his Memorial, and therefore preſs'd him to explain himſelf; letting him know at the ſame Time, that the States would not enter into Negotiation with France, but in Conjunction with England, their Intereſts in this Caſe being inſeparable; And they muſt inſiſt on a poſitive Anſwer to that Point, eſpe-cially now that His Britannick Majeſty's owning the King of Spain had remov'd the principal Objection that was before inſiſted on againſt Treating with the Miniſters of England. The French Ambaſſador to ſpin the Matter into Length, deſir'd Time to ſend for new Inſtructions to Court, which they were not very forward to ſend him, and in the mean while, they ſtrengthen'd themſelves daily on the Frontiers of Holland, and exerted their utmoſt Efforts to ſecure the Milaneſe againſt the Imperial Army which was then advancing towards it, under the brave Prince Eugene, who the Duke of Marlborough his Companion in War and in Glory, will in the Compaſs of two or three Years take ſevere Vengeance for this Inſolence and Prevarication in the Conduct of France.

It is not to be expreſs'd, what Surpriſe and Concern good Engliſhmen were in, when they ſaw how calmly the Houſe of Commons took the Duke of Anjou's poſſeſſing himſelf of the Dominions of Spain; but one of the Tools of the High-Church Party, in a Libel he publiſhed, entitul'd, England's true Friends and Patriots defended; very ingenuouſly, or very ſimply, confeſs'd, That "Great Sums of French "Mony were diſpers'd by Count Tallard." And the Anſwer to it informs us, That "it "was ſaid not to be decent to accuſe France "of any ill Deſigns when that Court had of "late expreſs'd a very great Tenderneſs for "us. They praiſe our Conſtitution, ſtudy "the Law of Impeachments we ſhall ſoon "know their Reaſon for it, admire the P—t, "and drink their Health, and when the "Firſt Princeſs of the Blood had done us the "Honour to feaſt a worthy Member." The French Hiſtorian confirms this, Pendant que les Communes etoient ainſi occupez a ſuſciter les Querelles aux Miniſtres du Roi, &c. "While the Commons were thus buſying "themſelves in ſtirring up Proſecutions a-"gainſt the King's Miniſters, and quarrelling "with the Lords, Philip V. poſſeſs'd him-"ſelf of the Spaniſh Monarchy. There was "ſomething certainly very aſtoniſhing in this "Procedure, and it was hard to put any good "Conſtruction upon the Calm in which "they ſuffer'd the Houſe of Bourbon to ac-"quire ſuch vaſt Territories. It was thought "that Monſieur Pouſin, the French Agent, "had given a ſleepy Potion to ſeveral Mem-"bers of the Lower Houſe, who on this Ac-"count were call'd Pouſſiniers.

Sir John Leviſon Gower was order'd to impeach the Earl at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords.

E. of Portland impeach'd.

The Commons deliver'd at a Conference this Paper to the Lords. "It appearing by "Your Lordſhips Journal, that Your Lord-"ſhips have receiv'd Information of ſome "Tranſactions between the Earl of Portland "and Mr. Secretary Vernon relating to the "Spaniſh Monarchy, the Commons having "the ſaid Matter under Conſideration, deſire "Your Lordſhips would be pleas'd to com-"municate to the Commons what Informa-"tions Your Lordſhips have had of any "Tranſactions relating to any Negotiations "or Treaties of Partition of the Spaniſh "Monarchy, by Letters or otherwiſe, and "the Commons are fully aſſur'd that Your "Lordſhips will readily concur in aſſiſting "them in this Enquiry, which they conceive "abſolutely neceſſary for the Safety and Ho-"nour of this Kingdom, and the Preſervation "of the Peace of Europe." All which would have been Jargon in a particular Perſon. The Treaty of Partition was not only a Dream, which never had any Effect, but if it had been effected, it would, without all Doubt, have preſerv'd the Peace of Europe. On the 14th of April, the Lord Somers ſent in an Information to the Houſe of Commons, That having heard the Houſe was upon a Debate concerning him, he deſir'd to be admitted and heard, which was granted, and a Chair ſet by the Serjeant a little within the Bar on the Left Hand. Then the Serjeant had Directions to acquaint the Lord Somers that he might come in, and the Door being open'd his Lordſhip came in, and the Speaker acquainted his Lordſhip he might repoſe himſelf in the Chair provided for him, which he did, and the Houſe heard what he had to offer. His Lordſhip ſpoke with great Plainneſs and Freedom of Mind, but inſtead of weighing his Reaſons, as ſoon as he was withdrawn, they reſolv'd, "That John Lord Somers by adv-"ſing his Majeſty in the Year 1698, to the "Treaty for the Partition of the Spaniſh "Monarchy, whereby large Territories of "the King of Spain's Dominions were de-"livered up to France, is guilty of a High "Crime and Miſdemeanor," and they ordered, Mr. Simon Harcourt to go up to the Lords and impeach him. Immediately, they reſolved, "That Edward Earl of Orford and "Charles Lord Hallifax be for the ſame "Reaſons impeach'd of High Crimes and "Miſdemeanours;" for doing a Thing which the People of England were even then ſenſible would have been much for their Advantage if it had taken Place, inſtead of the King of Spain's Will. The Commons in this ſober Way of Working did not content themſelves with Impeachments only, they alſo preſented this Addreſs to the King, about the Middle of April.

" tection for what themſelves had ſo advis'd. " Of which Treatment of Your Majeſty we " cannot but have a juſt Reſentment. And " that they may be no longer able to deceive " Your Majeſty and abuſe Your People, we " do humbly beſeech Your Majeſty that you " will pleaſe to remove John Lord Somers, " Edward Earl of Orford, and Charles Lord " Halifax from Your Council and Preſence " for ever: As alſo William Earl of Portland " who tranſacted theſe Treaties, ſo unjuſt in " their own Nature, and ſo fatal in their " Conſequences to the Nation and the Peace " of Europe. And we humbly crave Leave, " upon this Occaſion, to repeat Our Aſſu- " rances to Your Majeſty, That we will al- " ways ſtand by and ſupport Your Majeſty to " the utmoſt of our Power againſt all Your " Enemies, both at Home and Abroad.

Moſt Part of this Addreſs is downright Banter, eſpecially where they thank the King for conſulting his Engliſh Counſellors and reſenting the Treatment he had met with from thoſe Noble Lords, whom he knew to be his beſt Friends. However, to give them another Proof of his Wiſdom and Patience, at a Time when he ſtood in need of them, he anſwered thus:

The King's Anſwer.

" I am willing to take all Occaſions of " thanking You very heartily for the Aſſu- " rances You have frequently given Me, and " now repeat of ſtanding by and ſupporting " Me againſt all Our Enemies both at Home " and Abroad; towards which nothing in my " Opinion can contribute ſo much as a good " Correſpondence between Me and My Peo- " ple. And therefore You may depend up- " on it that I will employ none in my Ser- " vice, but ſuch as ſhall be thought moſt " likely to improve that mutual Truſt and " Confidence between us, which is ſo neceſ- " ſary in this Conjuncture.

It muſt not be imagin'd, that this Repreſentative ſpoke the Senſe of the Nation, or that they were infallible becauſe they were a great Body. 'Tis impoſſible for me to eſcape the Charge of Partiality upon this Head being ſo well known to have always had an Abhorrence of the Principles and Practices of this Party. For which Reaſon I call in Dr. Jonathan Swift to my Aſſiſtance, as he is generally taken to be the Author of a Treatiſe written at this Time on the Subject of theſe Impeachments. He was eſteem'd the Champion of the ſame Party, when under other Names and Pretences they endeavoured to deſtroy our preſent happy Conſtitution. The Treatiſe is entitl'd, A Diſcourſe of the Conteſts in Athens and Rome, and I will take out of it a Paragraph or two to enlighten and enliven the Ideas of theſe Men and thoſe Things.

Dr. Swift writes againſt theſe Impeachments.

" For a few popular Orators upon the " Score of perſonal Pique, or to employ the " Pride they conceive in ſeeing themſelves at " the Head of a Party, or as a Method of " Advancement, or mov'd by certain power- " erful Arguments that could make Demoſt- " henes Phillippize; for ſuch Men, I ſay, " when the State would of itſelf be quiet and " has beſides Affairs of the laſt Importance " upon the Anvil, to impeach Miltiades, " (Lord Orford,) after a great Naval Victo- " ry, (La Hogue) for not purſuing the Per- " ſian Fleet, to impeach Ariſtides, (Lord So- " mers) the Perſon moſt verſed among them " in the Knowledge and Practice of their " Laws, for a blind Suſpicion of his Acting " in an arbitrary Way, that is, as they ex- " pounded it, not in Concert with the People; " to impeach Periles after all his Services, " (Lord Hallifax) for a few paltry Accounts, " or to impeach Phocion (Earl of Portland) " for no other Crime than for negociating a " Treaty for the Peace and Security of his " Country, What could the Continuance of " ſuch Proceedings end in, but the utter Diſ- " couragement of all vertuous Actions and " Perſons, and conſequently the Ruin of a " State? Therefore the Hiſtorians of theſe " Ages ſeldom fail to ſet this Matter in all " its Lights. What better Example could I " follow than the Hiſtorians of Greece, leav- " ing us the higheſt and moſt honourable Ideas " of thoſe Perſons who ſuffer'd by the Perſe- " cutions of Party, together with the fatal " Conſequences they had, and how the Per- " ſecutors ſeldom fail'd to repent when it was " too late.

A. D. 1701.

The Peers of England behav'd with great Prudence and good Affection at this Critical Juncture. They look'd upon the Addreſs of the Commons as an ill Precedent for Perſons to be cenſur'd before they were tried, and therefore they interpos'd with this Counter Addreſs to His Majeſty.

The Lords Counter Addreſs.

" WE Your moſt loyal and dutiful Subjects, " the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in " Parliament aſſembled, beg Leave to repre- " ſent to Your Majeſty, That the Houſe of " Commons have ſeverally impeach'd at the " Bar of our Houſe, William Earl of Port- " land, John Lord Somers, Edward Earl of " Orford, and Charles Lord Halliſax, of " High Crimes and Miſdemeanors. And they " having acquainted us, that they will in due " Time exhibit particular Articles againſt the " ſaid Lords, and make good the ſame, We " do moſt humbly beſeech Your Majeſty, that " Your Majeſty will be pleas'd not to paſs " any Cenſure upon them, untill they are " tried upon the ſaid Impeachments, and " Judgment be given according to the Uſe of " Parliament, and the Laws of the Land.

Their Lordſhips did indeed believe, that the Impeachments of the Four Lords carry'd up by Sir John Leviſon Gower, Mr. Simon Harcourt, &c. were only to give a Colour to the Commons Addreſs, and that the latter had no ſerious Intention to proſecute the Charge againſt them. Upon which they ſent this quickning Meſſage to them, May 5. by Sir Richard Holford.

Mr. Speaker,

THE Lords have commanded me to acquaint this Houſe, that they having on the firſt Day of April laſt ſent up their Lordſhips an Impeachment againſt William Earl of Portland of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors. And having alſo, on the 15*th Day of the ſame Month, ſeverally impeached,* John Lord Somers, Edward Earl of Orford, and Charles Lord Hallifax, of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, their Lordſhips think themſelves obliged to put this Houſe in Mind, that as yet no particular Articles have been exhibited againſt the ſaid Lords, which, after Impeachments have been ſo long depending, is due in Juſtice to the Perſons concern'd, and agreeable to the Metaods of Parliament in ſuch Caſes.

Their Lordſhips Meſſage to the Commons about the Impeachments.

This Meſſage extorted from them certain Articles againſt Edward Earl of Orford, which Colonel

A. D. 1701.

Colonel Bierly had the Honour to carry up to the Houſe of Lords.

Articles againſt the Earl of Orford carried to the Lords by Colonel Bierly.

I. That he had Grants in Time of War.

II. That he had receiv'd Mony near Gibraltar.

III. That he had receiv'd Mony, Wine and Oil from the King of Spain and others.

IV. That he has taken Prizes to himſelf.

V. That he diſcourag'd the Eaſt-India Company in ſuppreſſing Pirates, and procur'd a Commiſſion for Kidd the Pirate.

VI. That he order'd Captain Steward to put Seamen aboard Kidd's Ship.

VII. That he procur'd an Order for His Majeſty's Ship Dolphin, to be employ'd in a private Voyage.

VIII. That he neglected to deſtroy the French Fleet, after he had beaten it.

IX. That he adviſ'd the King to enter into the Treaty of Partition.

I did not think that the Reader would expect any Anſwer to ſuch Articles, but I ſhall inſert the Earl's Anſwer to the laſt. He does deny that he adviſ'd His Majeſty to enter into the Treaty of Partition, but ſo far as he was any ways acquainted therewith, he objected to and gave his Opinion againſt it.

Mr. Simon Harcourt buſy in Lord Somers's Impeachment.

Mr. Simon Harcourt was very buſy in the Lord Somers's Impeachment, and carry'd up the Articles againſt him to the Lords with Pleaſure. I am ſatisfy'd they rais'd Indignation and Abhorrence in the Minds of all good Engliſhmen, but having abridg'd theſe againſt Lord Orford, I ſhall give Room to thoſe againſt Lord Somers to finiſh the Character of this Repreſentative.

Art. I. " That well-knowing the moſt apparent evil Conſequences, as well as the Injuſtice of the Partition of the Spaniſh Monarchy, he did adviſe His Majeſty to enter into a Treaty for it, and did ſo far encourage and promote the ſame, that the ſaid Treaty was concluded and ratified in 1698, under the Great Seal of England, then in the Cuſtody of the ſaid Lord Somers.

To which his Lordſhip anſwer'd in a full and plain Account of all the Steps of that Treaty, referring himſelf to the Letters on that Subject between His Majeſty and Himſelf, wherein as he conceiv'd he had fully and faithfully diſcharg'd his Truſt and the Duty incumbent on him.

The Term Injuſtice here ſhews the Ignorance as well as the Malice of the Penman. It was ſaid without Doors: " To ſay, it was " unjuſt, is at the ſame Time to ſay, the ſeperate Article of the Grand Alliance was " unjuſt, for that was the Diſpoſing of the " Dominions of a King then living, by an A- " greement of two Strangers, with one only " of the Pretenders. As the Emperor was " no Party to this laſt Treaty, ſo France was " no Party to the firſt. If it was conſiſtent " with Juſtice for the King of England and " the States to agree, that one of the Preten- " ders ſhould have the Whole, without any " Privity or Conſent of the other, or of " Spain, how could it be unjuſt as to the " Nature of the Contract, to enter into an " Agreement with one only of the Preten- " ders, for diſtributing the Succeſſion among " all that claim'd. A. D. 1701.

The Triple Alliance was the Glory of King Charles II's Reign, if it was capable of Glory, and would have been its Strength, if he had ſtuck to it. And that was a Partition of the Spaniſh Netherlands, of which the Council of Madrid complain'd ſo much, that they threatned they would abandon all Flanders rather than ſubmit to it, and yet they were wiſer when they ſaw they could not help themſelves. What had been done lately in the Difference between Denmark and Holſtein was a Partition Treaty. Inſtead of reading the Ravings of Faction, let us ſee what wiſe Men have ſaid on this Head in Sobriety of Thought.

" When Controverſies ariſe between Sove- " reign Princes, there is no Judicature to de- " termine of the Right. And they are at " Liberty to ſubmit to a Mediator, which is " often hard to bring about, becauſe both " Parties muſt agree in the Mediators. Con- " troverſies of this Sort would never have " an End, but in the Ruin of one of the Par- " ties, and perhaps of neighbouring Nations " in the Conſequence, unleſs other Princes " and States may by a proper Interpoſition, " in ſuch a Manner as they think moſt agree- " able to Juſtice, and the Good of their own " Subjects, oblige all the Pretenders to recede " from Extremities, and in Caſe of Obſtina- " cy on any Side aſſiſt thoſe who are willing " to yield for the Sake of Peace.

Enough has been ſaid of the Abſurdity of the ill Conſequences of a Treaty which never had any Conſequence at all, except it can be prov'd that it was the Occaſion of the Will and we have prov'd already that the Apprehenſions of ſuch a Will was the Occaſion of the Treaty. Add to this, the Reflection of a good Author, who wrote at that Time, It is as evident the French King was in a Condition to take Poſſeſſion of what Parts he pleas'd of the Spaniſh Dominions, if not of all, without Oppoſition. And that if ſomething was not done previouſly to the King of Spain's Death, it would be too late then to talk of forming Alliances with Hopes of Succeſs.

Art. II. " That for the more effectual car- " rying on the ſaid Treaty, Commiſſions were " prepar'd, amended, enlarg'd or alter'd, by " the ſaid Lord Somers, without any lawful " Warrant for his ſo doing, whereunto with- " out Communicating the ſame to the Reſt of " the Reſt of the Lords Juſtices of England, " or adviſing with the Privy Council. He did " preſume to affix the Great Seal of England " with a Blank for Commiſſioners Names to " be afterwards inſerted.

Art. III. " That having affix'd the Great " Seal without lawful Warrant in Hopes of " concealing that evil and moſt dangerous " Practice, after he had ſettled the ſaid Com- " miſſions, he uſed his Endeavours to procure " a Warrant to be tranſmitted to him for af- " fixing the Great Seal, that it might not be " known but that he had in due Time.

To which Second and Third Articles he anſwer'd, That having receiv'd his Majeſty's expreſs

A. D. 1701.

preſs Commands to ſend to His Majeſty full Powers under the Great Seal for negotiating the ſaid Treaty with Blanks for His Majeſty's Commiſſioners Names, he thought it ſufficient Warrant for him ſo to do. And that he did afterwards deſire His Majeſty that a particular Warrant for ſigning the ſaid Commiſſion might be ſign'd and return'd, not that he doubted His Majeſty's ſaid Letter to be a ſufficient Warrant, but for that ſuch Warrant would be more proper to be produc'd, if Occaſion ſhould require.

Art. IV. " That contrary to his Duty he " affix'd the Great Seal of England to the " Ratification of the ſaid Treaty in 1698, " not having communicated the ſame to the " Reſt of the then Juſtices, or advis'd with " the Privy Council, and leaving one entire " blank Sheet, and many other Blanks in the " ſaid Ratifications with Intent to be after- " wards filled up by other Perſons beyond the " Seas.

To which he anſwer'd,

That Mr. Secretary Vernon having prepared by His Majeſty's Commands the Inſtruments for Ratification, with Blanks therein, he did affix the Great Seal, which he conceives and is advis'd he might lawfully do, not communicating the ſame, becauſe he had His Majeſty's Command, that the ſaid Treaty ſhould be kept ſecret.

Art. V. " That in the Year 1699, another " Treaty of Partition was concluded, and " ratified under the Great Seal, then in the " Cuſtody of the ſaid Lord Somers, diſhonou- " rable to His Majeſty, highly injurious to " the Intereſt of the Proteſtant Religion, &c.

To which he anſwer'd,

That a Draught of the ſaid Treaty being read over in the Preſence of divers of the Lords of the Privy Council, he the ſaid Lord Somers, as well as others then preſent, did make ſeveral Objections, but they were informed by His Majeſty's Plenipotentiaries, the Earl of Jerſey, &c. for tranſacting this Treaty, who were alſo then Preſent, that nothing could could be altered therein, and His Majeſty afterwards by Warrant ſo requiring, he did affix the Great Seal being as he conceives oblig'd to do it.

Art. VI. " That whereas by the Laws and " Uſages of this Realm, all Commiſſions un- " der the Great Seal, for the making any " Treaty or Alliance, ought to be enrolled " and enter'd on Record in the Court of Chan- " cery, he the ſaid Lord Somers, not minding " the Duty of his Office, did not in any Man- " ner inroll or enter on Record any of the " ſaid Commiſſions or Ratifications.

His Lordſhip's Anſwer to this is no great Great Proof of Mr. Harcourt's Qualifications to come after him in his Office in Chancery.

He conceives it was not incumbent upon him as Lord Chancellor to ſee the Commiſſions or Ratifications inrolled, but the Care of inrolling the ſame, if neceſſary, doth belong to the Prothonotary of the Court of Chancery.

Art. VII. " That the Lord Somers contra- " ry to his Oath as Lord Chancellor of Eng- " land, did paſs many great unreaſonable and " exorbitant Grants, under the Great Seal, of " divers Manors, Lordſhips, &c. belonging " to the Crown of England, and did adviſe " promote and procure divers like Grants of " the late forfeited Eſtates in Contempt of " the Advice of the Commons of England.

A. D. 1701.

To which he anſwer'd,

He doth acknowledge he did paſs ſeveral Grants, &c. but the ſame were regularly paſſed through the proper Offices, and brought with ſufficient Warrants for the Great Seal, and believes more conſiderable Grants have paſſed in the like Number of Years in moſt of his Predeceſſors Times.

Sir Edward Seymour who liv'd at that very Time, upon General Ludlow's Eſtate, and in his Houſe at Maiden Bradley, in Wiltſhire, and Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave, who is directly charg'd with taking Grants in the Reign of King Charles II, by the Author of Jura, were the greateſt Sticklers againſt the Lord Somers, who is charg'd :

Art. VIII. " That he did not only receive " and enjoy the Fees, Profits and Perquiſites " belonging to the Great Seal, but had re- " ceived an Annual Penſion from the Crown " of 4000 l. and had farther begg'd and pro- " cur'd many great unreaſonable and exorbi- " tant Grants of Revenues belonging to the " Crown of England.

To which he anſwer'd,

That the annual Penſion or Allowance of 4000 l. had been allow'd to ſeveral of his Predeceſſors, but denies he did ever beg or uſe any Means to procure any Grant whatſoever for his own Benefit; but what His Majeſty was pleaſed to give him, proceeded from His Majeſty's own Motion, and of his meer Bounty, as his Majeſty was pleas'd to declare upon that Occaſion, as an Evidence of the gracious Acceptation of the ſaid Lord Somers's zealous Endeavours for his Service.

This Article had an Eye particularly to the Manor of Ryegate, of about 4 or 500 l. per Ann. in Surry, which is call'd there Crown Lands, but was the forfeited Eſtate of William Lord Monſon, who was appointed one of King Charles I's Judges, and coming into Poſſeſſion of the Duke of York was forfeited, as the Scots ſaid in Caſe of his Kingdom, and King William gave what Right the Crown had in it to Lord Somers; But it being a Borough Town repreſented by two ſuch ſtaunch Men as Sir John Parſons, and his Son John, the Party were afraid of its falling under the Influence of ſo good a Friend to the King and Kingdom as the Lord Somers was, and conceiv'd great, but vain Hopes of its being taken from him.

The Ninth and Tenth Articles are about certain Fee-Farm Rents. The Eleventh about ſome Windſor Rents and Payments. The Twelfth is to the ſame Purpoſe. The thirteenth about that ſtale unaccountable Scandal concerning Kidd, and the fourteenth about delaying Cauſes in Chancery, which all the World knew to be no better founded than the Charge concerning Kidd. His Lordſhip averred, that his Conduct, with Reſpect to thoſe Articles, had been juſt and legal, and the Copy of his Anſwer was deliver'd to the Commons, who being preſs'd by the Lords to proceed to the Trial of the Earl of Orford, inſiſted upon it as their Right to proceed with whom they pleas'd firſt, and would not be ap-appointed a Day by the Lords, nor go faſter forwards with their Proceedings againſt the other Impeach'd Lords, than they themſelves thought fit.

It would be too tedious to enter into the Detail of the Meſſages from the Lords to the Commons, and the Anſwers of the Commons, the former preſſing for the Trials of the Impeached Lords, and the latter evading it on Account of Formalities and Punctilioes. I will content myſelf with what relates to Lord Somers, becauſe that Trial had an Appearance of Iſſue.

The Lords ſent a Meſſage by Dr. Newton and Mr. Gery, That they had appointed the Trial of theImpeachment againſt Lord Somers, on Tueſday, the 17th of June, at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, in the Houſe of Lords, which will be then ſitting in Weſtminſter-Hall, and that their Lordſhips agreed to a Conference with the Commons to Morrow, June 13. at One o'Clock in the Painted Chamber.

As to Trial of Lord Somers, the Commons objected againſt their Appearing to it, becauſe the Impeach'd Lords had been appointed of Committees for preparing and drawing up Meſſages and Anſwers to the Houſe of Commons.

Differences between the Lords and Commons about the Trials.

Mr. Harcourt reported the Matter of the Conference in this Manner: " That the Ma-
" nagers appointed by the Houſe of Commons
" met the Lords at the Free Conference, the " Subject whereof was open'd by Mr. Har-
" court, and farther argu'd by Sir Bartholo- mew Shower, who was Counſel againſt the Biſhops, when Lord Somers was Counſel for them.

" It was agreed on by each of them, That
" the Reaſons offer'd by their Lordſhips at
" the laſt Conference were not ſufficient for
" their Lordſhips diſagreeing to a Committee
" of Both Houſes, deſir'd by the Commons
" at the firſt Conference.

" That notwithſtanding theſe Reaſons the " Commons ſtill thought a Committee of both
" Houſes abſolutely neceſſary for adjuſting
" and preventing ſuch Differences as had hap-
" pened or might ariſe previous to or upon
" the Tryals, and therefore inſiſted that ſuch
" a Committee ſhould be appointed before
" the Commons could proceed to any Tryal, &c.

" The Lord Steward firſt reply'd, and no-
" thing was offer'd by his Grace, but what
" was material and pertinent to the Matter in
" Queſtion, and agreeable to the Method of " Parliament in Free Conferences.

Lord Haverſham replies on the Impeachments.

John Lord Haverſham ſpoke immediately after, and in his Lordſhip's Diſcourſe us'd theſe or the like Expreſſions: " One Thing
" there is, though I cannot ſpeak it, being
" bound up by the Orders of the Houſe. Yet
" I muſt give ſome Anſwer, that is as to the " Lords voting in their own Caſe; It re-
" quires an Anſwer, tho' I cannot go into
" the Debate of it. The Commons them-
" ſelves have made this Precedent; For in
" theſe Impeachments they have allow'd Men
" guilty of the ſame Crimes to vote in their " own Houſe, and therefore we have not
" made any Diſtinction in Our Houſe; that
" ſome ſhould vote, and ſome not. The Lords
" have ſo high an Opinion of the Juſtice of
" the Houſe of Commons, that they hope
" Juſtice ſhall never be made uſe of as a
" Mask for any Deſign, and therefore give
" me Leave to ſay, though I am not to ar-
" gue it, 'tis a plain Demonſtration that the " Commons think theſe Lords innocent, and
" I think the Propoſition is undeniable, for
" there are ſeveral Lords in the ſame Crimes,
" in the ſame Facts, there is no Diſtinction.
" And the Commons, leave ſome of theſe
" Men at the Head of Affairs near the King's
" Perſon to do any Miſchief, if they were
" inclin'd to it and impeach others, when
" they are both alike guilty, and concern'd in
" the ſame Facts: This is a Thing I was in
" Hopes I ſhould never have heard aſſerted,
" when the Beginning of it was from the
" Houſe of Commons.

A. D. 1701.

Duke of Devonſhire excuſes it.

Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave immediately took up Lord Haverſham, and he and the reſt of the Managers left the Painted Chamber; the Duke of Devonſhire ſaying, as they were going away, " That he hop'd they would not
" think that that Lord had any Authority
" from the Houſe of Lords to uſe any ſuch
" Expreſſions towards the Commons.

Votes againſt Lord Haverſham.

It was not doubted in Parliament and out of Parliament, that the Majority of this Repreſentative would make Lord Haverſham's Speech a Pretence for putting off Tryals, in which they muſt make but a very indifferent Figure as Proſecutors in Weſtminſter-Hall, and therefore having voted what he ſaid to be moſt ſcandalous Reproaches and falſe Expreſſions, they reſolv'd to charge him with them and to deſire the Lords to proceed in Juſtice againſt him, and puniſh him as ſo high an Offence againſt the Commons deſerv'd, &c. Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave was order'd to carry the ſaid Charge and Reſolution to the Lords, who with great Wiſdom and Temper ſent a Meſſage to them by Dr. Newton and Mr. Gery to deſire them to come again preſently to the Free Conference as the beſt Expedient to prevent the Inconvenience of a Miſunderſtanding upon what had paſs'd. They receiv'd this Meſſage the next Day, June 14. and the Commons anſwer'd, that it was not conſiſtent with their Honour to renew the Conference untill they had Reparation by their Lordſhips doing Juſtice upon John Lord Haverſham. The ſame Day, Mr. Bruges, Member of Parliament for the City of Hereford carried up to the Houſe of Peers, ſix Articles againſt Charles Lord Halifax. Which as extraordinary as they are, I am ſure will be more acceptable in Miniature, than at full Length.

Mr. Bruges carries up Articles againſt Lord Halifax.

Art. I. " That he preſum'd to adviſe, paſs
" or direct the Paſſing a Grant to Thomas
" Railton, Eſq; of Forfeited Eſtates and Debts
" in Ireland to the Value of 13000 l.

His Lordſhip own'd he accepted of the Grant as it was lawful for him to do, that it had been taken away from him by Act of Parliament ann he had not made above 400 l. of it.

Art. II. " That he had not paid into the " Exchequer in Ireland, as the Act about
" the Forfeitures requir'd 1000 l. which he " had actually received out of the Profits of
" the forementioned Grants.

Anſwer, That what Monies were received being out of the mean Profits, which were remitted by that Act were not in the firſt mentioned Clauſe of the ſaid Act.

There is ſomething prodigious in this Article for about Three Years before Mr. Montague, now Lord Halifax owned Mr. Railton's Grant to be for his Uſe in the Houſe of Commons,

A. D. 1701. Commons, who after a warm Debate Reſolv'd by a great Majority that Mr. Montague did deſerve his Majeſty's Favour for his good Services.

Art. III. " That he did obtain and accept " ſeveral beneficial Grants for himſelf, which " was a notorious Abuſe of his Majeſty's " Goodneſs.

Anſwer, He own'd his Acceptance of ſuch Grants, as Marks of his Majeſty's Royal Favour.

Art. IV. " That he procur'd a Grant to " Henry Segar in Truſt for himſelf of 14000 l. " Worth of Scrubbed Beech, Birch, &c. un- " der Colour of which Sapling Oaks, and " many Trees of well-grown Timber had " been cut and ſold for his Benefit.

Anſwer, He own'd a Grant of 2000 l. per Ann. for Seven Years to be rais'd by the Fall of Scrubbed Beech, &c. And if any Abuſe were in cutting the Wood he conceiv'd he was not anſwerable for the ſame, it being done by the Direction of his Majeſty's Surveyor General, and other his Majeſty's Officers.

The Fifth Article is about the Auditor's Office. The Sixth about the Partition-Treaty. The Lord Halliſax could not deny his being Auditor of the Exchequer, but he denied, that he advis'd his Majeſty to make the Treaty, or was even conſulted upon any Clauſe thereof; But the ſaid Matter was diſcours'd at Tunbridge Wells, and he made ſeveral Objections to the ſame.

Poſterity will certainly be amaz'd that ſuch Articles as theſe ſhould paſs thro' an Engliſh Houſe of Commons, and be carry'd up to the Houſe of Peers. The Lords having given Notice of their Intention to proceed to the Trial of John Lord Somers, Mr. Harcourt went to work again by Order, and drew up Reaſons why the Commons would not proceed to that Trial accordingly. The chief of them were the Indignity offer'd to them by Lord Haverſham, and becauſe a Committee of Both Houſes was not appointed according to their Deſire. I ſhall only inſert their Lordſhip's Anſwer to the latter, the Lord Haverſham having been order'd to vindicate himſelf.

Lord's Anſwer to the Objections of the Commons for delaying the Trial.

" Their Lordſhips cannot but wonder, that " the Commons ſhould not have propos'd a " Committee of Both Houſes much ſooner, " if they thought it ſo neceſſary for the " bringing on the Trials, no Mention being " made of ſuch a Committee from the firſt " of April, to the ſixth of June, although " during that Interval their Delays were fre- " quently complain'd of by the Houſe of " Lords.

" The Manner in which the Commons de- " mand the Committee, the Lords look upon " as a direct Invading of their Judicature, " and therefore as there never was a Com- " mittee of both Houſes yielded to by the " Lords in Caſe of High Crimes and Miſde- " meanours: So their Lordſhips do inſiſt, " that they will make no new Precedent up- " on this Occaſion. Many Impeachments for " Miſdemeanours having in all Times been " determin'd without ſuch a Committee; and " if now the Commons think fit, by any un- " precedented Demand to form an Excuſe " for not preſenting their Impeachments, it " is demonſtrable where the Obſtruction " lies.

A. D. 1701.

The Lords proceed to try Lord Somers.

On the 17th of June, the Lords proceeded to the Trial of the Lord Somers in Weſtminſter-Hall, according to the Notice they had given, Proclamation was firſt made. Whereas a Charge of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors has been exhibited by the Houſe of Commons, in the Name of themſelves, and all the Commons of England, againſt John Lord Somers, all Perſons concern'd are to take Notice that he now ſtands upon his Trial, and are now to come forth in Order to make good the ſaid Charge. The Lords being all ſeated and Silence proclaim'd the Articles againſt the Lord Somers were read, and then his Lordſhip's Anſwer to them. The Lord Keeper declar'd the Houſe was ready to hear the Evidence againſt him, and my Lord Somers mov'd to have his Council heard. After long Debate and Hearing the Judges to ſeveral Queſtions ask'd them by the Lords, this Queſtion was propos'd, " That John Lord Somers be ac- " quitted of the Articles of Impeachment a- " gainſt him exhibited by the Houſe of Com- " mons, and all Things therein contain'd, and " that the ſaid Impeachments be diſmiſs'd." When the Lord Keeper had ask'd every Lord whether Content or Not Content? He declar'd the Majority was for Acquitting. Then the Lords adjourn'd to their own Houſe, and made the following Order: " It was confide- " red, order'd and adjudged, by the Lords " Spiritual and Temporal aſſembled, That " John Lord Somers ſhall be, and is hereby " acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment " againſt him, exhibited by the Houſe of " Commons and all Things therein contain- " ed, and that the ſaid Impeachments ſhall " be, and is hereby diſmiſs'd.

His Impeachment diſmiſſed.

The Majority of this Repreſentative remonſtrated againſt this Order, and reſolv'd, " That all the ill Conſequences, which may " at this Time attend the Delay of the Sup- " plies for the Preſerving the Publick Peace, " and maintaining the Balance of Europe, by " ſupporting our Allies againſt the Power of " France are to be imputed to thoſe, who to " procure an Indemnity for their own enor- " mous Crimes, have us'd their utmoſt En- " deavours to make a Breach between the " two Houſes.

The Commons vote it to be Hindrance of the Supplies.

Let this Majority be what it will, ſince it is a Majority. I ſhall lay a Reſtraint on the natural Reflections that would ariſe on ſuch wonderful Proceedings, but I beg Leave to make Uſe of the Words of Dr. Jonathan Swift, if he was the Author of the beforementioned Conteſts in Rome and Athens.

Dr. Swift's Reflections on the Proceedings of the Commons.

" Another Conſequence is this, that, with " all Reſpect to popular Aſſemblies be it " ſpoke, it is hard to recollect one Folly, In- " firmity or Vice, to which a ſingle Man is " ſubjected, and from which a Body of Com- " mons either collective or repreſented can " be wholly exempt. For, beſides that they " are compos'd of Men with all their Infir- " mities about them; they have alſo the ill " Fortune to be generally led and influenced " by the very worſt among themſelves, I " mean Popular Orators, or, as they are now " ſtil'd, Great Speakers, Leading Men, and " the like. " and Obſtinacy, the ſame ungovernable Rage " and Anger, the ſame Injuſtice, Sophiſtry " and Fraud, that ever lodg'd in the Breaſt " of any Individual.

The Reverend Author, if his Character be reverend, wrote this very Treatiſe on the Subject of thoſe Impeachments, and this Difference between the two Houſes, and we ſhall find ſomething more apropos in it hereafter.

The Lords ſent this Anſwer to the laſt Meſſage of the Commons:

Lords Anſwer to the Commons.

" The Lords do acquaint the Commons, " that they might have known by the Records " of the Houſe of Lords, That the Lords " had proceeded to the Trial of the Lord " Somers, on Tueſday laſt, being the Day appointed, and the Commons not appearing " to maintain their Articles againſt the ſaid " Lord, their Lordſhips had by the Judgment " of their Houſe acquitted him of the Articles " of Impeachment againſt him, exhibited by " the Houſe of Commons, and the Lords " had appointed Monday next for the Trial " of the Earl of Orford, on which Day they " would proceed on the ſaid Trial.

" The Commons ſtill preſſing for a Committee of Both Houſes, which their Lordſhips could never conſent to for the Reaſons already given, Their Lordſhips could never infer nothing from their perſiſting in this Demand, but that they never deſign'd to bring any of their Impeachments to a Tryal.

The Lords ſay much the ſame thing as Lord Haverſham ſaid.

" As to the Lord Haverſham: His Anſwer " was now before the Houſe of Commons, " and the Lords reſolv'd to do Juſtice in that " Matter:" Which that Lord needed not to be much apprehenſive of. After their Lordſhips had declar'd, that " they could think " nothing but that the Commons never deſign'd to bring any of their Impeachments " to a Trial.

This was the Senſe that ſober Men had of it both at Home and Abroad. Il y eut de longues & d'ennuyeuſes diſputes entre les deux Chambres ſur ce Sujet il fut aiſe de s'appercevoir qui c'etoit une Affaire de Party; car pendant qu'on accuſoit les Lords Whigs dont je viens de parler, on ne dit Rien du Comte de Jerſey, ny du Chevalier Williamſon, ny d'autres Torys qui etoient le Complices des Premiers. C'eſt ce qui obligea le Lord Haverſham de dire, avec ſa Liberte Ordinaire, &c.

" There were long and tireſome Diſputes " between the two Houſes on this Occaſion. " 'Twas eaſy to perceive that it was made a " Party-Buſineſs; for at the ſame Time that " they accus'd the Whig Lords, I have been " ſpeaking of, they had not a Word to ſay againſt their Accomplices the Earl of Jerſey, " Sir Joſeph Williamſon and others, who " were Tories, which oblig'd the Lord Haverſham to ſay with his wonted Freedom, &c.

I have not yet met with any Character in Hiſtory clear'd up ſo perfectly well by the Facts, as is that of this Majority. The Springs of their Actions lie open. The Wheels of their Machine are turn'd to the Spectators, and if the Simplicity of their Deſigns had been as innocent, as it was apparent, they would not have gone off the Stage in the Manner we ſhall find they did.

Lord Haverſham denies the Commons Charge.

The Lord Haverſham in Anſwer to the Commons Charge againſt him, denied that he ſpoke the Words in the Manner mention'd in the ſaid Charge, and inſerts his Speech at the Conference in his own Words, after which he proceeds.

" The ſaid Lord being here interrupted, " he deſir'd to be heard out, and that his " Words might be taken down in writing: " But the Managers for the Commons broke " up and departed refuſing to hear any Explanation. Now the ſaid Lord as to any " implicit Charge of a Deſign to reflect on " or diſhonour the Houſe of Commons, denies any ſuch Deſign or Intention, having " for many Years had the Honour to ſit in " the Houſe of Commons and having ever " had an honourable and reſpective Senſe " thereof: But the ſaid Lord was led to expreſs himſelf in the Manner aforeſaid for " the Reaſons aforeſaid, and takes himſelf to " be juſtified therein by the Facts and Reaſons too long to be here inſerted, which were ſo ſatisfactory to the Peers that they reſolv'd, June 21. " That unleſs the Commons " Charge, againſt the Lord Haverſham was " preſented by them, with Effect, before the " End of that Seſſion, the Lords would declare and adjudge him wholly innocent of " the ſaid Charge. They alſo reſolv'd, June 23. " That the Reſolutions of the Houſe of " Commons in their Votes of the 20th Inſtant, contain'd moſt unjuſt Reflections on " the Honour and Juſtice of the Houſe of " Peers, and were contriv'd to cover their " affected and unreaſonable Delays in proſecuting the Impeach'd Lords, and did manifeſtly tend to the Deſtruction of the Judicature of the Lords, to the rendering " Tryals and Impeachments impracticable for " the future, and to the ſubverting the Conſtitution of the Engliſh Government, and " therefore whatever ill Conſequences might " ariſe from ſo long deferring the Supplies " of this Year were to be attributed to the " fatal Counſel of the putting off the Meeting of a Parliament ſo long, and to the unneceſſary Delays of the Houſe of Commons." Then their Lordſhips adjourn'd to Weſtminſter-Hall, and proceeded upon the Impeachment of the Earl of Orford as they had done on that of the Lord Somers. The Commons had voted that no Member ſhould preſume to appear at the pretended Trial of Edward Earl of Orford upon Pain of incurring their utmoſt Diſpleaſure. So the Lords according to the Notice before given went on in the ſame regular Manner as at Lord Somers's Trial, heard the Articles againſt the Earl of Orford read, and his Lordſhip's Anſwer to them, who by unanimous Votes was acquitted of the Articles, and the Impeachment diſmiſs'd. I remember it was ſaid of the Eighth Article concerning his Neglect in not deſtroying the French Fleet that the Offence was taken not for his not beating them enough, but for his beating them at all. The next Day, June 24. their Lordſhips diſmiſs'd the Charge againſt Lord Haverſham, and the Impeachments againſt the Earl of Portland and the Lord Hallifax, there being nothing farther done by the Commons towards their Trials. They alſo diſmiſs'd an old Impeachment againſt the Duke of Leeds, about the Eaſt-India Company's 5000 Guineas beforementioned.

Votes of the Lords upon the Votes of the Commons.

Lords acquit the Earl of Orford, and diſmiſs all the Impeachments.

The Miſunderſtanding between the two Houſes was ſo great, that there was hardly any Publick Bill paſt without Amendments and Conferences, and the Lords having made ſome Amendments to a Bill ſent them from the Commons for appointing Commiſſioners to take State and examine the Publick Accounts. The Commons would not conſent to it, and in

in their Reaſons inſinuated, that there had been immenſe Sums of the Publick Mony imbezzled by thoſe that had the Management of. Many Millions of Money have been given to his Majeſty by the Commons, for the Service of the Publick, which remain yet unaccounted for. Which was not true, if it was taken in the uſual Way of underſtanding Accounts. For there were not, nor could be Millions of Money, for which no Accounts were given, but thoſe Accounts tho' given in, taking up a great deal of Time in paſſing through the Comptroller's and Auditor's Offices might not nor could not be perfected and clear'd of all Audit, when this was ſaid of them, which a candid honeſt Man could not have ſaid of any one he had Dealings with, had the Accounts between them been in the ſame Forwardneſs. It muſt not be ſuppos'd, that the Nation was unconcern'd Spectators of the Conduct of their Repreſentatives, as the latter term'd themſelves: Never were People ſo uneaſy as were the Engliſh at this Juncture having put themſelves into the Hands of a Set of Men whoſe Abuſe of the Truſt they had confided in them, threaten'd them with Confuſion at Home, while their inveterate Enemy the French King by his vaſt Encreaſe and Power was throwing them and all Europe into the utmoſt Peril Abroad.

The Tory Party charge the Miniſtry with Millions of Mony.

The People uneaſy at theſe Proceedings.

His Majeſty well-pleas'd with the wiſe and moderate Proceedings of the Lords, and the good Diſpoſition o. a great, tho' not then the major Part of the Houſe of Commons, and with the general Well-Affection of the People of England, did not in the leaſt interpoſe in the Diſputes between the two Houſes, but proceeded to take his Meaſures with the States General, and other Powers, for the real Security of the Liberties of Europe, and for the maintaining that Balance of Power, without which they could not be ſecur'd. Mr. Stanhope, his Miniſter at the Hague, was vigilant and active in forwarding the Negociations, either for Treaty or Alliance, and on the 8th of May the King ſent this Meſſage to the Houſe, by Secretary Hedges.

WILLIAM R.

The King's earneſt Meſſage in Behalf of the States.

" HIS Majeſty having lately receiv'd an " Account from Mr. Stanhope of the " preſent Poſture of Affairs in Holland, and " likewiſe a Letter from the States General, " which is of the greateſt Importance: And " his Majeſty who has ſo perfect a Know- " ledge of their Country, being entirely con- " vinced of the Hardſhips of their preſent " Condition, and the great Preſſures they now " lie under, which are particularly expreſs'd " in the abovemention'd Letter, has thought " it abſolutely neceſſary to communicate the " ſame to the Houſe; that the Expectations " the States have of preſent Aſſiſtance from " his Majeſty may more fully appear. And " his Majeſty doth not doubt but this Houſe " will be ſo juſtly ſenſible of thoſe immediate " Dangers to which they ſtand expos'd, as to " take the ſame into their moſt ſerious and " effectual Conſideration; it being moſt evi- " dent, that the Safety of England, as well " as the very Being of Holland, does very " much depend upon Your Reſolutions in this " Matter.

By this Time the Murmurs of the People began to reach the Ears of the Majority at Weſtminſter, and like the diſtant Grumbling of Thunder to put them in Mind of foul Weather. This Meſſage was conſider'd the next Day, and the Houſe Reſolv'd, That they will effectually aſſiſt his Majeſty to ſupport his Allies in maintaining the Liberty of Europe, and will immediately provide Succours for the States General, according to the Treaty of the 3d of March 1677. They are very cautious not to give his Majeſty Encouragement to enter into any new Treaty, or to hope for more at preſent than the 10000 Men England was to aſſiſt the Dutch with by the Treaty of 1677.

A.D. 1701.

The Commons confine the King to one old Treaty about it.

This Reſolution being preſented to his Majeſty by the whole Houſe, he gave them this gracious Anſwer, May 10.

Gentlemen,

The King's Anſwer.

I Return You my hearty Thanks for the ready Aſſurances you give Me of providing immediate Succours for the States General, and the Zeal you expreſs for the Common Cauſe. I know nothing that can be more effectual for its Support, both at Home and Abroad, than the unanimous Concurrence, which you have ſhew'd upon this Occaſion: And it will be a particular Satisfaction to Me in My Time, to revive the Glory, which the Engliſh Nation has formerly had, of maintaining the Liberty and Balance of Europe.

It will not be improper to lay this up in Memory 'till we come to that ungenerous and ungrateful Debate upon the Word Retrieve, in the next Reign ſtarted to diſhonour this glorious King's Memory, by the ſame Men to whom he now ſpoke in this Manner.

His Majeſty communicated the States Letter to the Houſe of Lords, who in Return preſented him with this hearty and acceptable Addreſs, May 14.

The Lords hearty Addreſs.

" WE Your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and lo- " yal Subjects, the Lords Spiritual " and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled re- " turn Your Majeſty our moſt humble Thanks " for communicating to Us the Letter from " the States General to Your Majeſty. It " gives us an Opportunity with great Sa- " tisfaction to repeat to Your Majeſty the " Aſſurances of our Duty and Zeal for Your " Service. And we take this Occaſion fur- " ther to aſſure Your Majeſty, we are very " ſenſible of the great and imminent Danger " to which the States General are expos'd. " And We do perfectly agree with them, in " believing that their Safety and ours are ſo " inſeparably united, that whatſoever is Ruin " to the one, muſt be fatal to the other.

" And we humbly deſire Your Majeſty " will be pleas'd not only to make good all " the Articles of any former Treaty to the " States General, but that you will enter in- " to a ſtrict League, offenſive and defenſive, " with them, for our Common Preſervation. " And that you will invite into it all Princes " and States, who are concern'd in the pre- " ſent viſible Danger ariſing from the Union " of France and Spain.

" And We further deſire Your Majeſty, " that you will be pleas'd to enter into ſuch " Alliances with the Emperor as Your Ma- " jeſty ſhall think fit, purſuant to the Ends " of the Treaty of 1689. Towards all " which We aſſure Your Majeſty of our " hearty and ſincere Aſſiſtance, not doubting " but whenever Your Majeſty ſhall be oblig'd " to be engag'd for the Defence of Your Al- " lies, and Securing the Liberty and Quiet of

A. D. 1701.

" Europe, Almighty God will protect Your " Sacred Perſon in ſo righteous a Cauſe. And " that the Unanimity, Wealth and Courage " of Your Subjects will carry Your Majeſty " with Honour and Succeſs thro' all the Dif- " ficulties of a juſt War.

They impute the Danger to new Councils.

" And in the laſt Place, with great Grief, " we take Leave to repreſent to Your Ma- " jeſty, That the Danger to which Your " Kingdoms and Your Allies have been ex- " poſ'd, are chiefly owing to the fatal Coun- " cils that prevented Your Majeſty's ſooner " Meeting Your People in Parliament.

His Majeſty was pleas'd to anſwer thus :

My Lords,

I Thank You for the Expreſſions You make of Your Duty and Zeal to my Service, and the Concern You ſhew for the imminent Danger to which the States General are at preſent expoſed. I ſhall take into Conſideration Your Deſires to Me of entring into new Meaſures with them, and other Princes and States for our common Preſervation. And You may be ſure it ſhall be always my Care to make ſuch Alliances with Our Neighbours as may tend alſo to our own and their greater Security, which will be the moſt effectual Means to raiſe the Honour of the Engliſh Nation in Our Days, to the Reputation it hath maintain'd in any former Times.

The People in a high Ferment againſt the Tory Majority.

Biſhop Kennet acknowledges, that the Nation by this Time began to be in a Ferment, and the People generally diſlik'd the Proceedings of the Commons, as appear'd by the Addreſs from the Counties of Kent and York, and the like were preparing in all Parts of the Kingdom, that from Kent by the Gentlemen, Juſtices of the Peace, Grand Jury and other Freeholders, at the General Quarter Seſſions holden at Maidſton, the 29th of April, in the 13th Year of his Majeſty's Reign, is thus expreſs'd :

The Kentiſh Petition.

" WE the Gentlemen, Juſtices of the Peace, " Grand Jury, and other Freeholders " at the General Quarter Seſſions at Maidſton " in Kent, deeply concern'd at the dangerous " Eſtate of this Kingdom, and of all Europe. " And conſidering, that the Fate of us and " our Poſterity depends upon the Wiſdom of " our Repreſentatives in Parliament, think " ourſelves oblig'd in Duty, humbly to lay " before this Honourable Houſe, the Conſe- " quence in this Conjuncture of Your ſpeedy " Reſolutions, and moſt ſincere Endeavours " to anſwer the great Truſt repos'd in You " by Your Country.

" And in Regard, that from the Experi- " ence of all Ages, it is manifeſt, no Nation " can be happy without Union ; we hope that " no Pretence whatſoever ſhall be able to " create a Miſunderſtanding between Our- " ſelves, or the leaſt Diſtruſt of his Majeſty, " whoſe great Actions for this Nation are " writ in the Hearts of his Subjects, and can " never without the blackeſt Ingratitude be " forgot.

" We moſt humbly implore this Honoura- " ble Houſe, to have Regard to the Voice " of the People, that our Religion and Safety " may be effectually provided for, that Your " Addreſſes may be turn'd into Bills of Sup- " ply, and that his moſt Sacred Majeſty, " whoſe propitious and unblemiſh'd Reign " over Us, we pray God to continue, may " be enabled powerfully to aſſiſt his Allies be- " fore it be too late.

And Your Petitioners, &c.

Sign'd by all the Deputy Lieutenants there preſent, above twenty Juſtices of the Peace, all the Grand Jury, and other Freeholders.

A. D. 1701.

This Petition was offer'd to the Houſe, on the 8th of May. The Gentlemen who deliver'd it and own'd it at the Bar of the Houſe were Men of the beſt Families and Figure in that County. William Colepepyr, Eſq; Thomas Colepepyr, Eſq; whoſe Siſter had marry'd the Lord Colepepyr, David Polhill, Eſq; who marry'd the Duke of Newcaſtle's Siſter, William Hamilton, Eſq; of the Houſe of Hamilton in Scotland, and Juſtinian Chamneys, Eſq; Yet out of a Meanneſs of Spirit which never yet was found in ſuch a Body of Men, the Party order'd the Title, Eſq; to be caſtrated and plain Maſter to be put before their Names in the printed Votes, tho' Four of them were Juſtices of the Peace, and Two of them Deputy Lieutenants of the County, which was ſuppos'd to be done to leſſen the Credit of the Petition among People without Doors, and to make others leſs eager to follow the Example of thoſe Gentlemen.

A mean Spirit in the Majority.

The Majority carry'd this Reſolution, That the Petition was ſcandalous, inſolent and ſeditious, tending to deſtroy the Conſtitution of Parliament, and to ſubvert the Eſtabliſh'd Government of the Realm. Sir Edward Seymour ſaid, it ſmelt of Forty One, and made a dull Pun or two on the particular Name of one of the Gentlemen, who reply'd, He was well known to be of a Family, which was remarkable for oppoſing the Uſurpations of the Commons. The five Gentlemen were order'd to be taken into the Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms, in whoſe Cuſtody I ſaw them, and can bear Witneſs, that they were far from thinking the Uſage they met with, reflected ſo much upon themſelves, as on thoſe that were the Cauſe of it. I beg Leave to repeat here a Paragraph or two out of a learn'd and eloquent Treatiſe written and publiſh'd on this Occaſion, and generally aſcrib'd to one of the greateſt Lawyers of the Age. In the Preface, we read :

" 'Tis not to be wonder'd, that the Impri- " ſonment of the Kentiſh Petitioners ſhould " have the Votes of the Major Part of the " Houſe of Commons ; when, beſides the " great Inclination diſcover'd by the Speaker, " Mr. Robert Harley, Sir Edmund Seymour, " Sir Bartholomew Shower, Mr. John How, " Mr. Simon Harcourt and others ; my Author " imitates their Votes in omitting, Eſq; preſs " violently for it. What ſo many Leaders in " the Party contended ſo earneſtly for, could " not but have the Approbation of thoſe who " voted conſtantly with them, as if they " thought it both their Duty and Intereſt ſo " to do. I hope the Reader will give Attention to what follows, that when I ſpeak of this Majority, I may be always underſtood to mean them diſtinctly from the other Members who would have prevented the Occaſion of this Petition had it been in their Power, and the Veneration all good Engliſhmen have or ought to have for their Repreſentatives requires a very clear Explanation on this Article. " But tho' that was the Act of the great- " er Part, it was not of the whole Houſe of " Commons. All thoſe worthy and honoura- " ble Members, who have always adher'd to " his Majeſty's Intereſt, who have aſſociated " for him, who have given perpetual Demon- " ſtrations of their Enmity to France, and " heartily deſir'd to have all thoſe Things " done

A. D. 1701.

" done which the Kentiſh Gentlemen petition-
" ed for, were averſe to this, as they were
" to other fatal Proceedings, which yet they " had not Power to prevent. If then a great
" and honeſt Party in the Houſe, and, in a
" manner, the whole People without Doors,
" except the Papiſts and Jacobites, inveigh a-
" gainſt the Impriſonment of theſe Gentle-
" men, as a notorious Infringement of the " Liberties of the People of England. This,
" I hope, will be a ſufficient Apology for
" me and ſecure me from the Cenſures of all
" thoſe who are apt to call ſuch an Underta-
" king as this, an impudent Arraignment of
" the Juſtice of the Houſe of Commons, and
" of the whole People of England.

The Author enlarges on this Subject, which is too delicate for a leſs able Pen, and indeed will hardly be pardonable, if apply'd to any Caſe, but that of this Majority, and others when the ſame Sort of Men have had the Influence. They were not contented with ordering the Kentiſh Juſtices of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenants to be taken into Cuſtody of the Serjeant, they countenanced their being inhumanly treated, and at laſt ſent them to the common Jail. The Serjeant accidentally ſeeing two of them talk together he drew his Sword upon his Deputy for permitting it, and when one of theſe Gentlemen demanded a Copy of their Commitment, which they thought they had a Right to do by Virtue of the Habeas Corpus Act, the Serjeant refus'd it, and the Gentlemen ſaying, He hoped the Law would do him Juſtice, the other reply'd, I care not a Fig for the Law, or ſomething worſe. They were five Days in his Cuſtody, and then Speaker Harley iſſued out his Warrant to deliver them Priſoners at the Gate-houſe, where they continued to the End of the Seſſion. This Tory Majority alſo voted an Addreſs to his Majeſty to turn theſe Gentlemen out of the Commiſſions of the Peace and Lieutenancy, and three or four Years after a Convert to their Party, if ever he was of any better, Sir George Rooke inſulted William Colepepyr, Eſq; ſo ſhamefully, that he was oblig'd to demand of him theSatisfaction of a Gentleman,yet he was ſo far from loſing the Good Will of his Countrymen, that when he ſtood for Knight of the Shire for Kent, he had above One Thouſand Six Hundred Single Voices.

The Commons ſend the Petitioners to Jail.

What the Gentlemen of Kent ſaid in their Petition, that they ſpoke the Voice of the People, was certainly true, and the Party was further ſenſible of it by a bold Attempt of Daniel Foe, who was at that Time a zealous Revolutioner and Diſſenter, but became afterwards a Tool to this Speaker, when to our Grief and Terror he became a Miniſter of State, Foe drew up a Paper entitul'd, A Memorial from the Gentlemen, Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Counties of ——— in Behalf of themſelves, and many Thouſands of the good People of England. He incloſ'd this Paper in a Letter to the Speaker Harley charging and commanding his future Patron in the Name of 200000 Engliſh Men, to deliver it to the Houſe of Commons. Foe who was naturally of a daring dauntleſs Temper infus'd enough of his Spirit into his Memorial, which charg'd the Houſe with illegal and unwarrantable Practices in Sixteen Particular, wherein he doubtleſs had Help from Men of more Brains, tho' not of ſo much Aſſurance.

Foe's Memorial againſt the Commons.

I. " To raiſe Funds for Money, and de-
" clare by borrowing Clauſes that thoſe who
" advance Money on thoſe Funds ſhall be re-
" imburs'd out of the next Aids, if the " Funds fall ſhort, and then give ſubſequent
" Funds, without transferring the Deficiency
" of the former is a horrible Cheat on the " Subjects who lent the Money, a Breach of
" Publick Faith, and deſtructive to the Ho-
" nour and Credit of Parliaments.

A. D. 1701.

II. " To impriſon Men, who are not your " Members, by no Proceedings but a Vote of " your own Houſe, and to continue them in
" Cuſtody ſine die, is illegal, a notorious
" Breach of the Liberty of the People; ſet-
" ting up a diſpenſing Power in the Houſe
" of Commons, which your Fathers never
" pretended to; bidding Defiance to the Ha-
" beas Corpus Act, which is the Bulwark of
" Perſonal Liberty, deſtructive of the Laws
" and betraying the Truſt repos'd in You.

III. " Committing to Cuſtody thoſe Gen-
" tlemen, who at the Command of the Peo-
" ple, whoſe Servants You are, came in a
" peaceable Way to put You in Mind of " Your Duty, is illegal and injurious, de-
" ſtructive of the Subjects Liberty of Peti-
" tioning for Redreſs of Grievances, which " has by all Parliaments before You, been
" acknowledg'd to be their undoubted Right.

Tho' Foe took to himſelf, in my Hearing, the Honour of being the Author of this Paper; yet no Body that knew him well could think him capable of drawing up theſe Articles, nor the following ones, in the regular Form in which we now exhibit them.

" We do hereby declare, 1. That it is the " undoubted Right of the People of England,
" in Caſe their Repreſentatives in Parliament,
" do not proceed according to their Duty,
" and the People's Intereſt, to inform them
" of their Diſlike, diſown their Actions, and
" to direct them in ſuch Things as they think
" fit, either by Petition, Addreſs, Propoſal,
" Memorial, or any other reaſonable Way.
" 2. That the Houſe of Commons ſeparate-
" ly, and otherwiſe than by Bill paſt, have
" no legal Power to ſuſpend or diſpence with
" the Laws of the Land, any more than the " King has by his Prerogative. III. That
" the Houſe of Commons have no legal Po-
" wer to impriſon any Perſon, or commit
" him to the Cuſtody of Serjeants, or other-
" wiſe, their own Members excepted, but
" ought to addreſs the King to cauſe any
" Perſon on good Ground to be apprehend-
" ed, which Perſon ſo apprehended, ought " to have the Benefit of the Habeas Corpus
" Act, and be fairly brought to Trial by due
" Courſe of Law. The Scene would have been much pleaſanter, if inſtead of being thrown into a Pannick by this Paper, the Party had directed Mr. Harcourt, Mr. Finch, and their beſt Lawyers to have drawn up an Anſwer to it. One cannot doubt, but thoſe who were concern'd in this Memorial were at leaſt a Match for thoſe two renown'd Practitioners, and having the Truth and the Reaſon on their Side, whatever had been ſaid to the contrary, muſt have been humorſom and diverting. Probably Foe might have a Hand in the Concluſion: " Thus Gentlemen You " have Your Duty laid before You, which it
" is hop'd you will think of. But if You
" continue to neglect it You may expect to
" be

A. D. 1701.

" treated according to the Reſentments of an " injur'd Nation; For Engliſh Men are no " more to be Slaves to Parliaments than to " Kings. Our Name is LEGION, and we " are many.

A Number of prudent ſober Men, ſays Biſhop Kennet, were apt to think the Subject Matter of this Memorial true. The Court of Aldermen and Common Council of the City of London were very near to the Coming into ſome Publick Declaration of the like Nature. The Party did nor think fit to vote arbitrarily againſt Legion as they had done againſt the Kentiſh Petition, but a Complaint was made to the Houſe of Endeavours to raiſe Tumults and Seditions, in Order to diſturb the Publick Affairs, and a Committee was appointed to draw up an Addreſs to the King humbly to lay before him the Endeavours of ſeveral ill diſpos'd Perſons to raiſe Tumults and Seditions in the Kingdom, and humbly to beſeech his Majeſty that he will provide for the Publick Peace and Safety.

The Yorkſhire Petition againſt this Majority.

Farther to ſhew the Senſe of the Nation with Reſpect to this Majority, we ſhall inſert the Heads of the Addreſs from Yorkſhire preſented to the Lords Juſtices after his Majeſty was gone to Holland. The Gentlemen and Freeholders of that large County " acknow- " ledged themſelves to be deeply and truly " ſenſible, that their Religion, Laws and Li- " berties were entirely owing, under God's " Providence, to his Majeſty's Care, Cou- " rage and Conduct, and begg'd they might " take the Opportunity to expreſs their Duty " to him, and Zeal for the Preſervation of " the Publick, as became true Engliſh Men, " That they had freſh in Memory the de- " plorable and deſperate Condition, to which " the pernicious Advice and deſtructive Coun- " cils in the laſt Reign, had reduc'd this flou- " riſhing and happy Nation, but that the " preſent Proſpect of Affairs from Abroad, " and the exorbitant and growing Power of " France, which threaten'd all Europe with " Popery, Tyranny and Slavery, was what " engag'd them at that Time to aſſure his " Majeſty, that nothing ſhould be wanting in " them, which He, the beſt of Kings, might " expect or deſire from the moſt dutiful of " Subjects. That their Hearts were full of " Zeal for the Preſervation of his moſt ſa- " cred Perſon, their Purſes were with Chear- " fulneſs open to whatſoever ſhould be " thought neceſſary to the Publick Support; " and their Hands were ready to ſuppreſs " all thoſe who were diſaffected to his Per- " ſon and Government; and they humbly " begg'd Leave farther to aſſure his Majeſty, " that whenever the Diſſolution of That or " any other Parliament ſhould happen, either " by Virtue of the Triennial Bill, or Prerога- " tive Royal, they would from Time to Time " make it their conſtant Endeavours, to " chooſe ſuch Perſons as ſhall be in the true " Intereſt of his Majeſty and theſe King- " doms.

Never was the Character of any Set of Men ſo clear'd up, as this will be to Poſterity, by the fair Relation of theſe Facts, and the Uſe it may be to the preſent Age in the Judgment they make of that Party, by this Narrative of their Practices will, it is hop'd, recommend it to that which is to come.

While theſe Things were tranſacting at Home, the Negociations Abroad for a Treaty, or an Alliance, were carry'd on by the Miniſters of England and Holland, and ſeveral Bills being ready for the Royal Aſſent, his Majeſty came to the Houſe of Peers, June the 12th, and paſs'd an Act for the Farther Limitation of the Crown, and better ſecuring the Rights and Liberties of the Subjects. An Act for preventing the Inconveniences that may happen by Privilege of Parliament. Freedom from perſonal Arreſts was confirmed, but Proceſs might be had in Weſtminſter-Hall againſt any Perſon or Member of Parliament, and the Eſtate Real and Perſonal of the Party might be ſequeſter'd. An Act for appointing Wardens and Aſſay Maſters, for Aſſaying wrought Plate in the Cities of York, Briſtol, Exeter, Cheſter and Norwich. An Act for Preſerving the Cotton Library. An Act for Separating James Earl of Angleſey, from Katharine, Counteſs of Angleſey, his Wife, for the Cruelty of the ſaid Earl. An Act to diſſolve the Marriage of Ralph Bere with Elizabeth Eyre. An Act for a Court of Conſcience at Norwich. An Act for Diſſolving the Marriage of Sir John Dillon and Mary Boyle, and many other Private Bills. After which his Majeſty made this Speech to expedite the Diſpatch of Affairs with as much Importunity as was decent for him to uſe:

A. D. 1701.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I Return You my hearty Thanks for the " Care You have taken to eſtabliſh the " Succeſſion to the Crown in the Proteſtant " Line; And I muſt not loſe this Occaſion " of Acquainting You, that I am likewiſe " extreamly ſenſible of your repeated Aſſu- " rances of ſupporting Me in ſuch Alliances " as ſhall be moſt proper for the Preſervati- " on of Europe, and for the Security of En- " gland and Holland. Your ready Compli- " ance with My Deſires, as to the Succours " for the States General, is alſo a great Sa- " tisfaction to Me, as well as a great Advan- " tage to the Common Cauſe. And as I have " nothing ſo much at Heart, as the Preſer- " vation of the Liberty of Europe, and the " Honour and Intereſt of England, ſo I " make no doubt of Attaining thoſe great " Ends, by the Bleſſing of God, and the " Continuance of Your chearful Concur- " rence.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" The Seaſon of the Year makes it neceſ- " ſary to have a ſpeedy Receſs, and the Po- " ſture of Affairs Abroad, do abſolutely re- " quire My Preſence for the Encouragement " of our Allies, and for the Perfecting ſuch " Alliances as may be moſt effectual for the " Common Intereſt: And therefore I muſt " recommend a Diſpatch of the Publick Bu- " ſineſs.

So far was the Majority, ſo often mention'd from taking this Speech as his Majeſty intended, that they put a quite contrary Conſtruction upon it, and interpreted it as an Approbation of their Proceedings in Reſpect of their Conteſt with the Lords, and therefore agreed upon this wonderful Addreſs.

The Commons wonderful Addreſs.

Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

" WE Your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and " loyal Subjects, the Commons in " Parliament aſſembled, return your Majeſty " our moſt humble Thanks for your moſt " Gracious Speech from the Throne, in " which your Majeſty is pleas'd to expreſs " your

" your Approbation of the Proceedings of " the Commons. - And We do farther unani- " mouſly aſſure your Majeſty, that we will " be ready on all Occaſions to aſſiſt your Ma- " jeſty in ſupporting ſuch Alliances as your " Majeſty ſhall think fit to make in Concert " with the Emperor and the States General, " for the Preſervation of the Liberties of Eu- " rope, the Proſperity and Peace of England, " and for reducing the exorbitant Power of " France.

This Addreſs was preſented the next Day, June 19. and the King anſwered it in this prudent and mollifying Manner.

Gentlemen,

I Thank you heartily for the unanimous Aſſurances you have given Me of your Readineſs to aſſiſt me, in ſupporting ſuch Alliances as I ſhall make in Conjunction with the Emperor, and the States General. It will be a good Encouragement to them to find the Senſe of this Kingdom ſo fully expreſs'd on this Occaſion, and will always contribute moſt effectually to the Obtaining thoſe great Ends you have now mention'd, on which the Happineſs of Europe does ſo much depend.

Tho' the Kentiſh Petition, and the Legion Memorial were ſeemingly treated with Contempt by the Commons, yet there ſeem'd now alſo to be ſome Change in their Air and Language. They thought it Policy to make the World believe they were in the moſt perfect Agreement with his Majeſty's Councils and Conduct, and the moſt zealous for his Honour and Intereſt, but they would not take a direct Step towards what his Majeſty deſir'd of them, a poſitive Declaration in Favour of the Emperor, and his Right to the Spaniſh Succeſſion, which however his Majeſty took eſpecial Care of in the Treaty of Alliance which was then negotiating.

On the 24th of June, his Majeſty came to the Houſe of Peers, and the Commons being ſent for up, the Speaker Mr. Harley, when he preſented the Mony Bills diſguis'd his Spirit of Oppoſition with this plauſible Speech.

Mr. Speaker Harley's Speech.

SIR,

" IT is with great Joy and Satisfaction that " I attend your Majeſty at this Time, " ſince Your Commons have comply'd with " all your Majeſty was pleas'd to deſire at " their Meeting. They have paſs'd the Bill " of Succeſſion, which hath ſettled the Crown " in the Proteſtant Line, and continu'd the " Liberty of England, which Your Majeſty " hath reſtor'd and preſerv'd, they have paſ- " ſed a Bill for Taking away thoſe Privi- " leges which might be burthenſome to Your " Subjects. They have given Your Majeſty " thoſe Supplies which are more than ever " were given in a Time of Peace to enable " Your Majeſty when You are Abroad to " ſupport Your Allies, procure either a laſt- " ing Peace, or to preſerve the Liberties of " Europe by a neceſſary War.

The Mony Bills were, An Aid for the Expence of the Navy, Guards and Garriſons for one Year. An Act for ſeveral Duties upon Low Wines, Coffee, Tea, Chocolate, Spices and Pictures, and Impoſitions on Hawkers, Pedlars and Petty Chapmen, &c. An Act for 3700 l. Weekly, out of the Exciſe for the Service of His Majeſty's Houſhold.

These and ſeveral Private Acts being paſt, his Majeſty ſpoke thus to both Houſes.

A. D. 1701.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" THE Seſſion being now come to a " Concluſion, I muſt return You " my hearty Thanks for the Great Zeal You " have expreſs'd for the Publick Service. " And Your ready Compliance with thoſe " Things, which I recommended to You at " the Opening of this Parliament. And I " muſt thank You, Gentlemen of the Houſe of " Commons, in particular, both for Your Diſ- " patch of thoſe Neceſſary Supplies which " You have granted for the Publick Occaſi- " ons, and for the Encouragement You have " given Me to enter into Alliances for the " Preſervation of the Liberties of Europe, " and the Support of the Confederacy, in " which, as it ſhall be my Care, not to put " the Nation to any unneceſſary Expence, ſo " I make no Doubt, that whatſoever ſhall be " done during Your Receſs, for the Advan- " tage of the Common Cauſe in this Matter " will have Your Approbation at Our Meet- " ing again in the Winter.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I ſhall conclude with recommending to " You all, the Diſcharge of Your Duties in " Your reſpective Counties; that the Peace " of the Kingdom be ſecur'd by Your Vigi- " lance and Care in Your ſeveral Stations.

Then the Lord Keeper Wright prorogued the Parliament to the 7th of Auguſt, but they never met more, and the Expectation of their Diſſolution was like the Hope of it, as univerſal as any Thing of that Kind ever, was.

The King in an ill State of Health.

The State of His Majeſty's Health very ill conſiſted with the Fatigue of his Mind from the Perverſeneſs of the Party that oppos'd his Meaſures at Home, and his Concern for the Succeſs of his Negotiations by his Miniſters Abroad. It was thought, the King kept the ill Opinion he himſelf had of his own decaying Conſtitution even from his moſt favour'd Confidents, to prevent its taking Air which would have been fatal in the Forming of the intended Confederacy, the Princes having entire Dependance on his Majeſty's Wiſdom, Courage and Zeal for the Common Cauſe. To provide for the Worſt that could happen on this Occaſion, his Majeſty gave the Command of the Troops he order'd to be ſhipp'd for Holland from England and Ireland, to the Earl of Marlborough, making in all 10000 Men, and appointed his Lordſhip to be Plenipotentiary to the States General, his Majeſty knowing him to be equally qualified both for Counſel and for Action. The Elector of Hanover being elected Knight of the Garter, the Earl of Macclesfield was order'd to carry the Order to his Serene Highneſs, and to congratulate the Princeſs Sophia Electreſs Dowager, upon the Paſſing of the Act for the Succeſſion of that Illuſtrious Houſe to the Crown of England, and the Lord Churchil, eldeſt Son to the Earl of Marlborough, was to accompany his Lordſhip in that grateful Embaſſy. The Earl of Albemarl ſet out for Holland before his Majeſty, to enter upon his Office of Lieutenant General of the Dutch Horſe. The King honour'd the Duke of Queensberry with the Order of the Garter, and made the Earl of Argyle a Duke, the Earls of Annandale and Lothian, Marquiſſes, and the Lords Cormichael and Seafield, Earls; and on the 28th of June was pleas'd to nominate Dr. Tenniſon, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Sir Nathan Wright Lord Keeper, the Earl of Pembroke, firſt Lord Commiſſioner of the Admiralty, the Duke of Devonſhire, the Earl of Jerſey, and the Lord Godolphin to be Lords Juſtices in his Abſence, and to appoint Robert Yard, Eſq; a ſtaunch Perſon to be their Secretary. Chriſtopher Muſgrave, Eſq; Edward Southwell, and James Vernon, Jun. Eſqs; were made Commiſſioners of the Privy Seal. The ſame Day the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen waited on the King, and the Recorder in the Name of the City took Leave of His Majeſty, who was pleas'd to confer the Honour of Knighthood on Peter Floyer, Eſq; Sheriff Elect. Three Days after, the Gentlemen who were impriſon'd for delivering the Kentiſh Petition being diſcharg'd of Courſe, at the End of the Seſſion, were ſplendidly entertain'd at Mercers-Hall, at the Charge of the Citizens, being accompany'd by ſeveral of the Nobility and Gentlemen of the Firſt Rank. They were in like Manner very honourably receiv'd upon their Return into their County.

Lords Juſtices.

There were other Preferments and Honours diſtributed before His Majeſty's Departure. The Lord Cornbury was made Governour of New York. the Earl of Carliſle, Earl Marſhal of England; the young Duke of Norfolk being diſqualify'd as a Papiſt, Sir George Rooke was appointed Commander in Chief of the Fleet this Year, and being joyn'd by the Dutch Admirals, Allemonde and Callemberg, at Spithead, the two Squadrons Engliſh and Dutch made a Fleet of near 40 Men of War, much ſuperior to any Strength the French and Spaniards could then ſet out againſt them. By the latter End of June, the Dutch had ſtrengthened their Army with the Hanover, Brandenburgh and other Auxiliary Troops which made them a little more eaſy than they had been ever ſince the French were drawing towards their Frontiers, when in the firſt Conſternation they put the Countries about Bergen op Zoom, and other Cities under Water, to prevent their being ſurpriz'd or attack'd.

The King goes to Holland.

On Mondy Morning, June 30. his Majeſty went from Hampton-Court, and lay at Sir George Rooke's near Canterbury, having in the Way taken a Dinner at Mr. Walker's at Chatham. The Wind not being fair the King lay the next Night at Capt. Ball's near Margate. His Majeſty was convoy'd to Holland by Rear Admiral Munden, whom he knighted on Board a Yacht in Margate Road. He arriv'd in the Maeſe, Thurſday Morning, July 3. and went that Night to the Hague, where he was complimented by the ſeveral Councils and Courts, and by the Foreign Miniſters, of whom the Count d'Avaux was firſt at Court, and ſtaid there about an Hour. He had juſt before notify'd to the Grand Penſionary Heinſius the League offenſive and defenſive between France, Spain and Portugal. The latter only temporized till the Confederacy was form'd and in a Condition to give her Protection upon her Entring into it, and that Confederacy was in ſuch Forwardneſs that it was ready for his Majeſty's Signing a few Days after his Arrival in Holland.

The next Day he went to the Aſſembly of the States General, and made this affecting Speech to them:

His Speech to the States General.

High and Mighty Lords,

" I Always come into this Country with " Joy, but more eſpecially in this dangerous Conjuncture of Affairs, becauſe I " foreſee my Preſence will be neceſſary for " the Service of the State. I was in Hopes " and deſir'd to have paſs'd the Reſt of my " Days in Repoſe and Peace; and after the " End of my Days to have left this State in " a quiet and flouriſhing Condition. To which " End, I have always labour'd particularly " after the Concluſion of the laſt Peace: But " ſince there have happen'd ſuch great Alte- " rations in the Affairs of Europe, that I " know not what will be the Diſpoſal of Di- " vine Providence concerning them: Never- " theleſs, I can ſincerely aſſure Your High " Mightineſſes, that whether Affairs can be " accommodated without coming to further " Embroilments, or, whether we muſt be " oblig'd to take Arms again, I perſiſt in the " ſame Affection and the ſame Zeal which I " ever had for the Service and Proſperity of " theſe Provinces, and will contribute as far " as lies in My Power whatever may tend to " advance the Welfare of this State, the " Maintenance of their Liberty and Religion, " and their particular Security as well as that " of Europe. I am over-joy'd to find all " Things ſtill in a quiet Condition, which, " next to the Bleſſing of the Almighty, muſt " be aſcrib'd to the ſpeedy and unanimous Re- " ſolutions of Your High Mightineſſes to put " Yourſelves in a Poſture of Defence. I am " perſwaded, that the reſpective Confederates " will contribute ſtrenuouſly towards it, " which I look upon as the only Means to " prevent a War, or in Caſe of a Rupture to " defend the State from the Danger that " threatens it. 'Tis a great Satisfaction to " Me that I can aſſure Your High Mighti- " neſſes not only of my Affection, but of the " whole Engliſh Nation, and that they are " ready to aſſiſt this State and ſtrongly con- " tribute towards their Defence, and to what- " ever may tend to the Common Security. " And this is what Your High Mightineſſes " may be fully convinc'd of. I hope the " Great God will bleſs the Means, which " You have made uſe of, either by Way of " Negotiation, or by Force of Arms in Caſe " of a Rupture, to attain the End propos'd, " that is to ſay, Reaſonable Security for the " Common Cauſe, and particularly the Pre- " ſervation of this State in their Liberties and " Religion. There is nothing which I wiſh " with more Fervency, and I will contribute " towards it whatever lies in Power. This " is what I thought neceſſary to ſay at pre- " ſent, only that I deſire the Continuance of " Your High Mightineſſes Affection and A- " mity.

A. D. 1701.

Their High Mightineſſes anſwer'd to this Effect.

The Anſwer of the States General.

" They thank'd his Majeſty with all their " Hearts for the Honour he had done them " to come again to their Aſſembly, and at " the ſame Time teſtify'd their unexpreſſible " Joy to ſee his happy Arrival. They were " ſenſible how much his Majeſty's Preſence " was neceſſary among them in ſuch a dange- " rous Conjuncture to ſettle Affairs in a good " Condition, and ſo to preſerve them, with " the Aſſiſtance of God, out of the great " Confidence which they all had, from the " higheſt to the loweſt, in his Majeſty's Pru- " dence and Surpaſſing Abilities. They were " extreamly oblig'd to his Majeſty and moſt " heartily thank'd him for his perſevering in " his

" his kind Inclinations for their Repoſe and " Tranquility. They were fully convinc'd " that ſince the laſt Treaty of Peace his Ma- " jeſty's Care and Application had tended to " the Preſervation of the ſaid Peace and the " Publick Tranquillity.

This anſwers to what his Majeſty had told them, that he had always labour'd particularly after the Concluſion of the laſt Peace to have left that State in a quiet and flouriſhing Condition. Neither his Majeſty, nor the States thought it prudent to explain themſelves farther, but it is obvious this relates to the Treaties of Partition, which the States General intimate had tended to the Preſervation of the Publick Tranquility, and which Sir John Bolles, Sir John Packington, Mr. John How, Mr. Bromley of Oxford, Mr. Harcourt, &c. voted to be dangerous to the Peace of Europe, and let the Reader impartial or partial judge who knew moſt of this Matter.

The Remainder of the States Anſwer will help to direct their Judgment.

" They were overjoy'd that their Con- " duct, ſince the ſtrange Mutations in gene- " ral Affairs had met with his Majeſty's Ap- " probation. And in Regard the State was " in ſo much Danger that their Religion and " Liberties lay at Stake, they reſolv'd to uſe " all poſſible Means for the Preſervation of " thoſe ineſtimable Pledges. They could not " omit to thank his Majeſty for his Aſſurance " not only in his Own, but in the Name of " the Engliſh Nation, in Favour of Them- " ſelves and the Common Cauſe, well-know- " ing how much they might rely upon a Peo- " ple whoſe Courage and Valour had gain'd " ſo much Reputation in the World. They " were always of Opinion that their Intereſts " were inſeparable from thoſe of England. " In the mean Time they moſt ardently be- " ſought the Almighty to bleſs his Majeſty " and his Counſels, and to grant him long " Life, Health and Strength, that he might " be able to continue his Cares for the Pub- " lick Good, and the Welfare of his own " Kingdom and their State aſſuring him of " their Perſeverance in that Amity and high " Eſteem which they have always had, and " ever ſhall be bound to have for His Ma- " jeſty ſo long as their State endures.

After this the King went to view the Fortifications on the Frontiers, and about the Middle of the Month arriv'd at Breda, his own Town, having given two Audiences to the Count d'Avaua, which gave the King no Satisfaction. The Foreign Miniſters were told, There was no Neceſſity they ſhould attend his Majeſty in that Journey. From Breda the King went to Bergen op Zoom, and while he was there ſeveral French Officers, who were poſted in the Lines about Antverp, deſir'd Leave to come into the Town to ſee his Majeſty, which was granted them, and they were alſo preſent at the Review of the Garriſon. The Liſt of the Army in the Service of the States, which was now tranſmitted from Holland, was read with a great deal of Pleaſure by the Well-affected in England, who had been in Pain for the Safety of the United Provinces ever ſince the French Troops were become ſo numerous in their Neighbourhood.

Tho' theſe Troops were not all arriv'd in the Provinces, yet this Liſt was look'd upon as the Quota's of thoſe ſeveral Princes, and the Expectation of other Troops to encreaſe the Confederate Army in the Netherlands gave a new Spirit and Air to the Enemies of France, made ſo by her exorbitant Power and Tyranny. This Armament gave the French King to underſtand that they would not acquieſce in his Diſpoſal of the Dominions of Spain, at his Pleaſure, and he having declared no Part of them ſhould be diſmember'd. No Good could be expected from the Count d'Avaux's Negotiations.

While the King of England was viewing the Dutch Frontier Towns and Garriſons, the Count d'Avaux deliver'd this Letter from the French King, accompany'd with a Memorial of his own.

To Our moſt Dear Great Friends and Allies.

Moſt Dear Great Friends, Allies and Confederates,

French King's Letter to the States.

WE have thought fit to recall the Count d'Avaux, our Ambaſſador Extraordinary to You, ſeeing the little Fruit thoſe Conferences have produc'd, which You have deſir'd of us, and which You have ſince often interrupted. We are not the leſs inclin'd to the Eſtabliſhing of the Peace: As he will further declare Our Intentions to You before his Departure. Nothing remains for Us but to aſſure You, That it ſtill depends on You to receive Marks of our Ancient Friendſhip for Your Republick, and of our Deſire to give You Proofs thereof, upon all Occaſions. So we pray God, that he may have you, Moſt Dear, Great Friends, Allies and Confederates, in his holy Keeping.

The Count d'Avaux preſented a Memorial repreſenting the Dutch Preparations for War as an Effect of their being influenc'd by the King of England, and complaining that they had deſir'd Conferences for an Accommodation only to gain Time for theſe Preparations. He concludes with telling them, "What Advantages his Maſter might have taken of "them, when they were weak and unprovided, as they Themſelves have own'd, and "if they will not whilſt 'tis yet Time, make "due Reflections upon theſe Things, his Maſter had Reaſon to hope for the Bleſſing of God upon the Juſtice of his Cauſe, and for "his Care to preſerve the Peace of Europe, "and that they ſhall ſee it is not any Diffidence of his own Strength that hath made "him ſo long withhold his Hand, but that "being capable of avenging the Inſults done "to his Flag by the Engliſh and Dutch, who "have fir'd upon his Ships, taken his Men, "and founded his Harbours, he wiſhes they "might reflect duely upon theſe Things whilſt "'tis Time, and tho' his Departure will not "permit him to work out a Peace, he ſhall "always wiſh well to their Republick.

The King of England return'd to the Hague on the 29th of July, at 11 o'Clock at Night, having found all the Fortreſſes on the Frontiers of Flanders in a very good Condition. On the Sunday after his Return, the King coming from Church took a Turn round the Voorhons in his Coach; the Count d'Avaux being there before his Majeſty retir'd that he might not be oblig'd to ſtop his Coach when the King came by, as all others did. After his Majeſty went off, he return'd again having the Miniſters of Spain and Portugal in the Coach with him. Tho' this was no Affront, it was look'd upon as a Diſregard which would not have been offer'd had not a War been determin'd.

The Count d'Avaux puts a Slight on him.

On the 1ſt of Auguſt, the States General return'd an Anſwer to the French Ambaſſador's Memorial, which will fully explain and confute what that Miniſter had ſaid in his.

The States General's Anſwer to Count d'Avaux's Memorial.

"They were oblig'd to the Moſt Chriſtian "King for ſending thither the Count d'Avaux "as his Ambaſſador Extraordinary. They "wiſh'd ſufficient Means might have been "found in the Conferences to have obtain'd "a General Peace, and Reaſonable Security "for Themſelves, and that he had tarried "till that had been done. They were troubled that he ſhould be recall'd before thoſe "Things were effected, and ſo much the "more, that the Cauſe of it ſhould be imputed to their Conduct. That upon his Moſt "Chriſtian Majeſty's ſignifying to them that "he accepted the Will of the late King of "Spain inſtead of the Treaty of Partition, "they gave him their Reaſons why they could "not come to a ſpeedier Reſolution in that "Affair. And as ſoon as their Conſtitution "would allow it, they offer'd to enter into "Conference with any his Majeſty ſhould appoint. That they appointed Deputies accordingly to treat with the Count d'Avaux, "and in Compliance with his Majeſty own'd "the new King of Spain that they might remove all Occaſions of Delay, and give a "convincing Proof of their Deſires to preſerve the Peace of Europe. They cannot "apprehend how they ſhould obſtruct the "ſame by the Intervention of the King of "Great Britain, who was one of thoſe concern'd in the Treaty of Partition, or by the "Intervention of any other Potentate that "has an Intereſt in preſerving the General "Peace. They had not thereby own'd the "Juſtice or Injuſtice of the Pretenſions of a "third Party, nor ſeparated their Intereſts "from any who are concern'd in the General "Peace. That ſince his Majeſty's Miniſters "had repreſented to Them, That the End "of the Treaty of Partition might be as well "obtain'd by the Acceptation of the Will, "they deſir'd the Count d'Avaux might make "Propoſals for the General Peace, and their "particular Security, and he excuſing himſelf "and deſiring Propoſals from Them, They "had in Concert with his Majeſty of Great "Britain deliver'd him Propoſals. They "cannot comprehend why the Effect of that "Union between Them and the King ſhould "be rather War than Peace, ſince his Majeſty of Great Britain has on all Occaſions "given ſufficient Proofs of his Inclination to "Peace. They were ſtrictly united with him "by Alliances many Years ago for their mutual Securities. He was one of the chiefeſt Parties in the Treaty of Partition, and "they declared before their Propoſals were "communicated, they thought his Conſent "neceſſary, as well for theſe Reaſons as for "his private Relation to their Republick; "and no Objection was then rais'd againſt it. "They were ſorry the King of France had "return'd no Anſwer to their Propoſals; "which tho' they had heard call'd Exceſſives, "no Body had undertaken to prove them "ſuch. That the General Peace could not be "preſerv'd without Satisfaction to the Emperor, whoſe Pretenſions were ſo far own'd "by the King of France himſelf in the Treaty of Partition, that it was agreed how "the ſame ſhould be ſatisfy'd. Therefore "there was nothing of this Article of their "Propoſal that could be call'd Exceſſive, and "what they had demanded for their own Security, was not equal to what they had before the Death of the late King of Spain, "or to what they had acquir'd by the Treaty "of Partition. That their Augmenting "their Forces were not grounded alone on "their own private Sentiments, but on the "Opinions of their Allies who had not ſcrupled to ſend them the Aſſiſtance they were "oblig'd to by their Alliances. Had it been "in their Power to rid themſelves out of "their Difficulties without Arming; Seeking "new Alliances, and Draining their Country, "They would certainly have done it. That "the Difficulties rais'd about admitting the "Engliſh Envoy, was not from them, but "the Count d'Avaux, and not chargeable upon them for the Reaſons aforementioned. "The King of France had Reaſon to think "They would inſiſt on Satisfaction to the Emperor, ſeeing that was the firſt of their Propoſals, which the King of France Himſelf "thought juſt and neceſſary. They had given no Cauſe to think that they preſum'd "to ſet up as Umpires between France and "Auſtria, or to determine which of the two "laſt Kings of Spain had a Right to alter the "Laws of the Succeſſion to that Crown; but "deſir'd his Majeſty to remember, that He "Himſelf, as well as the King of Great Britain, and the States, thought a War would "be unavoidable, if upon the Death of the "late King of Spain, either He or the Emperor ſhould inſiſt upon the Pretenſions of "their Families to the Succeſſion, and therefore entered into the Treaty of Partition. "That their Owning the King of Spain could "not

" not be judg'd to be a Step contrary to this, " ſince it does not hinder giving Reaſonable " Satisfaction to the Emperor. And the King " of Spain ought to be convinc'd, that they " would do nothing to the Detriment of their " Provinces Commerce or Riches, but what " was abſolutely neceſſary to their Preſerva- " tion. They had done nothing that could " be conſtrued a Breach of the Treaties, which " confirm'd and ſeal'd their Sovereignty, and " did not well apprehend the Meaning of " that Aſſertion.

Inſolence of D'Avaux,

The Count d'Avaux in another Copy of his Memorial had ſaid, They would in Favour of the Houſe of Auſtria, reſolve to break thoſe Treaties which they had look'd upon as the Confirmation and Seal of their Sovereignty. An inſolent Hint of their former Subjection to the Crown of Spain, which was the Effect rather of French Vanity and Arrogance, than of their Politicks at ſuch a Juncture. The States reply'd with equal Reaſon and Force.

Well anſwered by the States.

" Their Provinces were always free and " ſovereign. Their Anceſtors ſpent their " Lives and Fortunes to aſſert their Free- " dom, and they reſolv'd to do the like. " (ſpoken like Heroes and Patriots, whereas " the Rodomontades of D'Avaux, are of the " Genius and Air of a Bajazet or Almanzor.) " They were ſorry to hear the Count d'A- " vaux expected no Succeſs from the Confe- " rences, becauſe of the Engliſh Envoy's De- " claring that Satisfaction muſt be given to " the Emperor. They own'd the King of " Great Britain and They thought it reaſo- " nable to treat of Satisfaction to that Prince, " and that the Emperor ſhould, in Order " thereunto, be invited into the Negotiation. " The States General did not blindly follow " the King of Great Britain's Sentiments, " but had a great Deference for his Advice, " becauſe they are perſuaded he is wholly in- " clin'd to preſerve the Peace, and convinc'd " he ſeeks uothing but the Welfare of their " Republick. If the Conferences were ſuſ- " pended on that Account, They ſhould look " upon it as a great Misfortune. But if the " King of France had thought fit to let them " continue, and to allow Satisfaction to the " Emperor, They had Hopes of a good Con- " cluſion. They had been oblig'd indeed to " Arm, but did not begin to do it, till they " ſaw their Barrier in the Spaniſh Nether- " lands, which had coſt them ſo much Blood " and Treaſure, poſſeſs'd by French Troops, " their own Forces detain'd and great Prepa- " rations of War made there. Their Jealou- " ſy was beſides conſiderably increas'd by the " ſtrict Union that appear'd every Day be- " tween France and Spain, tho' the Treaty " of Partition was made for This, among " other Reaſons, to prevent Jealouſy from " the Union of too many States. They had " endeavour'd by all poſſible Means to pre- " ſerve Friendſhip, but if they muſt contrary " to their own Inclination enter into a War, " They have no Cauſe to blame Themſelves " for it, and therefore hop'd that God would " protect them:

Notwithſtanding the Sally about the French King's Strength, and his Vengeance in D'Avaux's Memorial, That Miniſter was by no Means willing to ſee a Rupture before he left the Country. On the 11th of Auguſt he preſented another Memorial to the States to take his Leave of them and return Them hearty Thanks for the Honour he had receiv'd there. Upon which their High Mightineſſes reſolv'd, that the ſaid Count d'Avaux ſhould be aſſur'd on their Part of their good Affections for his Perſon, and that they could wiſh he had tarry'd longer, but ſeeing he is recall'd, they had only to wiſh him a good Journey. At the ſame Time, they order'd him a Preſent of a Gold Chain of 6000 Florins Value, and one of 600 Florins Value for his Secretary, whom he left behind at the Hague, under Colour of renewing his Negociations, which They did not expect, and ſo continu'd their Preparations for War.

Marquis of Carmarthen fires on a French Ship

The Inſults done to the French Ships by the Engliſh; One of the Rant's in d'Avaux's Memorial refers to the Marquis of Carmarthen's Yacht firing upon a French Ship in the Harbour of Roterdam to oblige her to ſtrike, which ſhe did immediately. Notwithſtanding which the Commander of the Yacht ſent for the Maſter of the Ship and made him pay 12 Livres for the Ball. An Action of great Temerity, and which would doubtleſs have had ill Conſequences had not the Approaching War render'd ſuch Sort of Offences hardly worth Cognizance.

His Majeſty went from Loo to Dieren, and thence to Nimeguen to view the Fortifications, with which he was extreamly well pleas'd. He return'd to Loo in Expectation of ſeeing the Electoral Prince of Hanover, and the Duke of Zell. The Biſhop of Oſnabrug was then there, as was Count Stirum, the Imperial Envoy, and Count Naſſau Weilburgh, General of the Palatine Forces, who was come to confer with his Majeſty about the March of thoſe Troops. The Count de Frize Lieutenant-General of the Imperial Army under Prince Lewis of Baden, came alſo to have Conference with the King concerning the Diſpoſition of thoſe Troops, in the preſent Juncture. The Earl of Marlborough in the mean Time had daily Conferences with the Dutch Miniſters, and the Miniſters of the Confederate Princes at the Hague, about the Preparations for giving the Enemy a warm Reception if he offer'd to attack them.

The E. of Macclesfield's Reception at Hanover.

In the Beginning of Sepiember, the Earl of Macclesfield return'd from his Embaſſy to Hanover, where he preſented the Exemplification of the Act of Succeſſion under the Great Seal of England to Her Serene Highneſs, the Dutcheſs Dowager of Hanover, who was pleas'd to declare that She and Her Family were entirely devoted to the Intereſt of England, and that nothing can be more natural and dear to Her. She receiv'd his Lordſhip, and the Engliſh Gentlemen who accompanied him, about Thirty in Number, with great Reſpect, and teſtify'd a particular Regard to his Perſon. She diſcours'd them with great Readineſs and Elegance in the Engliſh Tongue, concerning the Conſtitution and Laws of England, which Her Highneſs ſaid were the Peculiar Happineſs of the Engliſh Nation very much heighten'd by the Bleſſing of the Proteſtant Religion which they had ſo long enjoy'd, and which She hop'd God would be pleas'd to continue. His Lordſhip and thoſe that accompany'd him had afterwards the Honour to dine with the Elector and Electreſs, his Electoral Highneſs order'd the Earl's Expence to be born, as ſoon as he ſet Foot in his Territories, and one of the beſt Houſes in the City was prepar'd for his Reception. His Highneſs's Coaches were at the Service of his Lordſhip and his Retinue to carry them to and from the Court, where they were entertain'd with Feaſts, Collations, Balls, and all Sorts of Diverſions, eſpecially Muſick, His Electoral Highneſs's Band of Muſicians being eſteem'd the beſt in Europe. In ſhort, nothing was omitted for the Splendor of his Lordſhip's Entertainment, and to teſtify the grateful Senſe that Court had of the Act of Succeſſion, and their Zeal for the Honour and Glory of England.

The Earl of Macclesfield went alſo to the Court of that good and gallant Prince, the old Duke of Zell, where he was entertain'd with all imaginable Civilities, and diverted with hunting Boars, Stags and other wild Beaſts. His Highneſs preſented the Earl at his Coming away with fine large Gold Medals to the Value of 2000 l. ſome of which his Lordſhip diſtributed to the Lords and Gentlemen, who were with him. On the Face of thoſe Medals was the Duke in Armour, half Length. On the Reverſe, a Pillar crown'd with a Star above it inclos'd in a Peacock's Train, the Motto, Favent Conſtantibus Aſtra. Her Electoral Highneſs Princeſs Sophia preſented the Earl with her Picture ſet in Diamonds of an extraordinary Value.

The Elector of Cologne's Treachery.

His Majeſty ſent the Earl of Galoway to the Elector of Cologne, who had obtain'd that Electorate meerly by the Intereſt and Power of the Confederate Princes, and whoſe Advancement was a Chief Cauſe of their firſt Grand Rupture with France: Yet now he ungratefully deſerted them, and took French Money to raiſe Forces againſt them. But the Chapter of Cologne were appriz'd of his treacherous Purpoſes, admitted the Pruſſian Troops into the City and ſtood on their Defence. The Diet at Bonne, ſummon'd by the Elector, refuſed him Money to maintain thoſe Troops, which he had rais'd with Foreign Money, without their Knowledge. The Earl of Galoway had but a mean Proſpect of Succeſs in his Negociations with a Prince of this Character.

And the Elector of Bavaria's.

And truly that of the Elector of Bavaria his Brother, was not much better after he abandoned the Cauſe of the Confederates, and eſpous'd that of France: He very ſoon began to diſpoſe Matters in his Electorate, not only for Aſſiſting the French King in his Acquiſition of the Spaniſh Dominions, but to bring his Armies into the Heart of Germany to ſeize the Imperial Throne, as he had done that of Spain, it being with Princes as with private Men, when one Step is taken out of the Path of Honour, the Road leads every Way into Error, and ends in Diſgrace and Ruin.

We have mention'd the Addreſs from Yorkſhire, which was a Sort of Confirmation of the Sentiments of the Kentiſh Petition. This was follow'd by another from the Grand Jury, and Juſtices of the Peace for the County of Cumberland, in a Tone quite different from the other, as was alſo that from the County of Devon deliver'd by Sir John Pole, Foreman of the Grand Jury to Mr. Juſtice Blenco concluding thus: "We have not Confidence to "think we can direct his Majeſty, or his "great Council, the Parliament. We ac-"quieſce in every Thing they have done, "and ſhall be extreamly concern'd that any "Device ſhould be ſet on Foot to divide this "Nation, in the Reign of the beſt of Kings, "and when we have the beſt Houſe of Com-"mons, except that which brought his Maje-"ſty to the Throne.

The Cumberland Addreſs.

The Devonſhire Addreſs.

Theſe Addreſſers did no more in their acquieſcing in what had been done, than the French Court did, whoſe Gazeteer ſpoke of this Addreſs with great Applauſe and Pleaſure. He takes Notice of the Addreſſes of five Counties of England, who offer'd to aſſiſt their King with all their Might to oppoſe the Growth of the Power of France. He leſſens the Number of theſe Addreſſes nine Parts in ten, and then glories thus in that from Devon. On the other Side, the Grand Jury of the County of Devon, compos'd of Twenty-three Gentlemen of a DISTINGUISHING MERIT and REPUTATION preſented an Addreſs, wherein, after having, for Cuſtom Sake, applauded the King of England, for the Great Things He has done for Them, They declare They will not take upon Them to give Advice to His Majeſty, or His Great Council, the Parliament, &c. This ſurely is enough to let all ſee, who are not wilfully blind, who the Men were whom the French took to be their Friends, and whom conſequently no Body could reaſonably take to be Friends to their own King and Country, but becauſe Sir John Pole, and his Brethren, of the Grand Jury, have ſaid ſuch fine Things of the then Majority in Parliament, we will ſee whether by a Liſt of their own Members for Devonſhire, we can make their Words good.

bers inſtructed the People to addreſs for the Continuance of their Power in Parliament. But the Addreſſes inſinuating a Diſſolution were more numerous and ſucceſsful.

It was not many Days before News came that put the whole Nation upon Addreſſing, which was that of the late King James's Death, and the French King's abhorr'd Perfidiouſneſs in owning his pretended Son as King of Great Britain. A Step ſo very extravagant as well as unjuſt, that it ſeem'd to make good what the great Prince of Conde was wont to ſay to his Privadoes, that he was no more a Politician than he was a Hero, and ow'd every thing he glory'd in to his Fortune.

Prince of Conde's Saying of Lewis XIV.

Death of James II. late King.

It is not to be imagin'd, that the French King had harbour'd the Abdicated King and his Followers above twelve Years out of Affection to his Perſon, Compaſſion for his Sufferings, or even Zeal for his Religion. He had driven him and his Brother out of France in the Beginning of his Reign, and taken ſo little Pity of them, when they were ſtarving that he refus'd them Loans, which one Gentleman in the like Diſtreſs might expect from another. As to Religion, no one can ſuppoſe a Man of his Way of Life could have it much at Heart, unleſs by Religion we underſtand, Bigotry and falſe Zeal, he could not but be of the ſame Opinion, as was all the thinking Part of the French Nation, that King James was fit for nothing but a Cowl, and that the Title of his pretended Son was a Dream, out of which it was high Time that He and They ſhould wake. The imaginary Schemes with which the Jacobites continu'd to furniſh him for reſtoring the Father or Son, and the Hopes of diſtreſſing King William by the Machinations of that wicked and deſperate Faction, put him upon ſo raſh, ſo provoking and dangerous an Action. The Circumſtances of it are: The late King James after many Contempts, ſays the Biſhop, and Neglects of the French King, was ſo broken with Reſentment and Sorrow, that on Sept. 4. O. S. he fell into a Lethargy at St. Germains. Other Accounts ſaid it was an Apoplectick Fit, and others which were pretended at leaſt to be ſent from St. Germains, ſaid it was the Effect of the Sinking of his Spirits, upon hearing theſe Words read in his Chappel. Remember, O Lord, what is to come upon us, conſider and behold our Reproaches. Our Inheritance is turn'd to Strangers, our Houſes to Aliens. His Phyſician Dr. Conſtable recover'd him out of the Fit, but neither he nor Monſieur Fagou, the French King's Firſt Phyſician, could do more by their Medicines than give him a ſhort Reſpite from his approaching Diſſolution, of which this Narrative was printed at Paris, the next Year, by Order of the Chancellor. It was diſpers'd in France under the Title of a Circular Letter concerning the Death of the late King James, written from the Monaſtery of Chaillas, to which his Wife retir'd as ſoon as the Breath was out of his Body, and the Lad ſhe had foſter'd to Paſſy, a Houſe of the Duke de Lauzuns, who had been at the Pains of a Voyage to Ireland for the Service of the deceaſed King. I have only vary'd the Terms a little, becauſe an Engliſh Reader would be ſurfeited with the frequent Repetition of Majeſty to the late King James, and one he had naturaliz'd for his Son.

" On Friday, the 2d of Sept. the King be" ing taken ill at Chapel, was carry'd into his " Apartment. And on Sunday following he
" order'd the Prince of Wales to be call'd to
" him, believing it was the laſt Time he
" ſhould ſee him. The King embrac'd him
" tenderly, and ſpoke to him thus: I have
" but four Words to ſay to you, Be a good Ca-
" tholick, fear God, obey the Queen, and be
" always attach'd to the King of France. See-
" ing the Pope's Nuncio come into the Room,
" he expreſs'd great Joy, and ſaid, with a
" firm Voice, I pray you aſſure the Pope of my " profound Reſpect. Tell him I die a Son of " the Church, and if it pleaſe God to reſtore
" my Life, it ſhould be to ſerve him and the " Church better than I have done. The King
" ſeeing the Queen in Tears, ſaid, Madam,
" adieu, don't afflict yourſelf for Me, I am go-
" ing to be happy. The Queen anſwer'd, 'Tis
" not your Condition, Sir, that I lament, but
" my own. To which the King reply'd, I do
" not doubt but the King of France, with whom
" I have found ſo kind, ſo conſtant, and ſo ho-
" nourable a Place of Refuge, will take as
" much Care of my Family as of his own."
Theſe Words are put into his Mouth as the Prieſts ſometimes put Wafers into the Mouths of their Penitents after they are dead.

The Particulars of the Abdicated King's Death

" Two Days before his Death, the King of " France came to ſee him for the laſt Time.
" His Majeſty went firſt to the Queen's A" partment and declar'd to Her, that he had
" reſolv'd, if it was God's Will to diſpoſe of " the King her Husband, to acknowledge the " Prince of Wales for King of England. The " Queen ſent for the Young Prince, that he " might return Thanks to his Majeſty. Ha-
" ving ſaluted that King at his firſt Coming,
" he turn'd towards the Queen, who told
" him what the King had juſt declar'd in his
" Favour, which his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty
" confirm'd, expreſſing himſelf in theſe Words:
" Sir, you are going to loſe the King your Fa-
" ther, but you ſhall always find one in me,
" and I will conſider you as my own Child.

Was ever Farce better play'd over a dying Man?

" The Prince, throwing himſelf at the " King's Feet, anſwer'd him thus: I will al-
" ways have, Sir, for Your Majeſty the ſame
" Reſpect as for the King my Father. I will " never forget what I owe you, and I will re-
" tain all my Life, and in all Places, all
" Manner of Gratitude and Acknowledgment.
'Tis plain, the whole Account was drawn up to flatter the Jacobites in England and France, who were far from being in a Capacity to deſerve it from him.

The Narrative tells us farther:

" His Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty went then to
" the next Apartment, where the King lay,
" and approaching very near to him, ſtoop'd
" low, that he might be the better heard by
" the King. The Servants withdrew out of
" Reſpect; but His Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty
" told them, he would have all the World
" hear him, I am come to inform myſelf of the " State of your Health, and to aſſure you that
" if it ſhall pleaſe God to diſpoſe of your Ma-
" jeſty, I will acknowledge and entertain the
" Prince your Son as King of England, and
" will always have for him the ſame Regard,
" that I have had for you, and hope to ſee him
" ſo us'd by all the World. Was not this a Moſt Chriſtian King? Every Word he ſaid was a flagrant Breach of the Treaty of Ryſwick, which he had ſworn by all that Chriſtians hold ſacred to keep inviolably, and indeed thoſe Words had no more Weight in them than the Breath that form'd them, for as he had baniſh'd King James, when Duke of York out of his his Dominions in his younger Years, ſo he afterwards ſent away this pretended Off-ſpring of his to Bar a paltry Town belonging to the Duke of Lorain, and would have baniſh'd him to the Ends of the Earth had the Adminiſtration of the Affairs of England been in any other Hands, but thoſe unworthy ones that were at the Head of them, after Sacheverel's Sedition.

" There was at the ſame Time, continues " the Letter-writer, a confus'd Noiſe of " Praiſes, Applauſes and Tears, (and truly the Followers of King James*'s ill Fortune had Cauſe enough to ſhed them plentifully. There could be no Want of Hir'd Mourners where almoſt all the Company were in Fear of ſtarving*, " This prevented the Hearing diſtinctly what " Anſwer the King made. And his Moſt " Chriſtian Majeſty being a ſecond Time op- " preſs'd with Sorrow, and no longer able to " refrain from Weeping, bid adieu to the " dying King, and retir'd.

" The next Day, the King ſaw the Prince " of Wales and the Princeſs his Siſter for the " laſt Time, and recommended it again to the " Prince to be faithful to God and to his Re- " ligion, always obedient to the Queen, and " to remember all his Life the Obligations, " which he had to the King of France. And " the Day following being the 6th of Sept. " 1701. he dy'd." The Letter Writer is as full of Cant as ever was Hugh Peters, and then goes on.

The French King weeps.

" The Pope's Nuncio gave the King the " Apoſtolical Benediction, according to the " Order he had receiv'd from his Holineſs, " and immediately after his Death ſaluted the " young King forſooth, declaring to him in " Form, That he had receiv'd the Command " of his Holineſs to acknowledge him King of " England. And the Pope himſelf in a Diſcourſe which his Holineſs made after the King's Death uſed theſe Words to the Miters and Cowls that were about him.

Venerable Brethren,

The Pope's Speech on K. James*'s Death.*

" I Muſt inform You, with Sighs and Tears, " of the moſt afflicting Death of James " the Second, King of Great Britain, a " Prince truly Catholick, a true Son of the " Church, a true Defender of the Faith. And " I muſt not paſs over in Silence the very " great Generoſity of Our moſt Dear Son, " Lewis, the Moſt Chriſtian King of France, " who, after having receiv'd for many Years " with as much Magnificence as Liberality, " the ſaid King unjuſtly and wickedly forc'd " out of his Kingdom, (by this we are aſſur'd, that this ſame Holineſs is the true Son of the Father of Lies) with the Queen and Prince, " their Son, has protected him to the laſt " with all imaginable good Offices, Friend- " ſhip and Tenderneſs. And what is ſtill " more glorious, he has juſt now, notwith- " ſtanding the Difficulty of the preſent Con- " juncture, and without any Regard to his " own Intereſt, (his Holineſs ſpoke Truth here when he did not intend it) publickly acknowledg'd the Prince of Wales his Son, bred " up in the Virtue of his Father, (very true " again) by Queen Mary, our moſt dear " Daughter, to be the lawful Heir of the " Crown of Great Britain. And he will ſupport him in adhering to the Catholick Faith " let what will happen to him, in which truly the Moſt Chriſtian King's Zeal and Greatneſs of Soul ſhine in ſo wonderful a Manner that my Praiſe and yours are juſtly due " to him.

His Letter to the Impoſter.

" His Holineſs writ afterwards to the young " King, (and the Truth is, he was as much a King of England, as he had been a Prince of Wales) to comfort him under his Affliction, " which he ſaid he look'd upon to be the " Common Concern of all Chriſtendom.

" The Direction of the Letter was in theſe " Words :

" To Our Moſt Dear Son in Jeſus Chriſt, " the Illuſtrious King of Great Britain.

" And his Holineſs having mention'd, af- " ter many Expreſſions of Condolence and " Sorrow, the great and long Perſecution, " which the late King had ſuffer'd for his " Religion, takes that Occaſion to exhort his " moſt Dear Son to preſerve the Memory of " his Illuſtrious Father in nothing ſo much, as " in the Examples he had left him of his great " Piety and conſtant Affection to the Catho- " lick Faith, and then he adds theſe Words : " This, Sir, we have Reaſon to hope from " the pious Care, which our moſt dear Daugh- " ter, Mary, Queen of Great Britain, conti- " nues to take of Your Education, as well as " from the ſingular Affection which our moſt " dear Son, the moſt Chriſtian King has for " you, who thinks with Reaſon, That after " having acknowledg'd you a King, it con- " cerns his Glory to give conſtant Aſſiſtance " to your Majeſty, to whom we ſend moſt cor- " dially our holy Apoſtolical Benediction. Da- " ted at Rome, the 25th of October 1701.

CLEMENT P. XI.

The Impoſter proclaim'd King by the French King's Herald.

The Pope made no Scruple of telling what was intended by this Owning of the Pretender, who was proclaim'd King at the Gate of the Caſtle of St. Germains by one of the French King's Heralds in direct Breach of the Fourth Article of the Ryſwick Treaty, as the Baron Lienroot, the Swediſh Miniſter, who was Ambaſſador Mediator for Sweden declar'd at the Hague. Nay, the French King was ſo loſt to all Senſe of Common Decency, as well as Juſtice and Diſcretion, that he order'd his Gazeteer to call his Britannick Majeſty, Prince of Orange, in his Weekly Romance. This Outrage againſt the King and People of England was not at all lik'd in France itſelf. When King Lewis communicated it to his Council who were ſummon'd on that Occaſion, the Majority was againſt it, or at leaſt for delaying it : Upon which the Dauphin roſe up in a Heat, and with a great deal of Warmth preſs'd the Owning of him, alledging, they could do no leſs he being a Prince of their own Blood, &c. And to this the French King and all the other Princes of the Blood agreed. One would think the Family of France were out of their Wits at this Time, that their Heads were giddy with the Duke of Anjou's getting into Spain. What an Argument was that of the Blood? King William was as much of the Blood of Henry IV. the firſt Bourbon King as the Dauphin, and ſtood in the ſame Relation ſuppoſing the Stories of Cingmars and Mazarine to be falſe.

The Account of the Abdicated King's Death had as much Art in it as the Letter Writer could ſpare, and is ſpun out to give it proper Decorations to affect the Friends to his deſperate Cauſe. The Subject is not very important or delectable, but perhaps the Curioſity of many Readers may be entertain'd by it. When the French King paid a Viſit to the Pretender, after King James was dead, inſtead of what we were told in the Letter, he ſaid, Voila un Prince que j'ai toujours cheri, & un

Roy

A. D. 1701.

Roy que j'aimeray toujours. "There is a "Prince, whom I have always cheriſh'd, and "a King whom I ſhall always love. Then "turning about to the Company that were "about him, he ſaid, Meſſieurs voila votre "Roy, Gentlemen, there's your King. To have done with the late King James let us recite one Paſſage, which whatever he deſigned it for, has ſome Pleaſantry in it at the End of this Tragedy.

K. James meanly buried.

Having told the Pretender he ſhould deſpiſe the Crown of England, as the People deſpis'd him in Competition with his Religion, he forbore not to ſay, he had ſtill a great Love for the Prince of Orange, tho' he had dethron'd him, becauſe he had given him an Opportunity to think more ſeriouſly of his Salvation. His Servants were not pleas'd that their Maſter's Remains, All, but what was given to pious Uſe, was bury'd in the PariſhChurch of St. Germains, not with ſo much Pomp as a common Undertaker would have beſtow'd upon it, and could not help grumbling that no more Reſpect was paid to a Prince of the higheſt Birth in the Weſtern World, as they term'd it. One may be ſure the young Man to whom the French King had given the Crown of Great Britain was not a little pleas'd with the Title and State of it, and to ſhew he had as much Right to make Lords as his Patron had to make Monarchs, he made the Earl of Perth, Duke of Perth in Scotland, the Lord Middleton, Earl of Monmouth in England, and Mr. Caryl, Lord Dunsford. After which, he was taken ill of a violent Lax and Vomiting, in which Condition we ſhall leave him, and ſay no more of him at preſent.

The Impoſtor makes a Duke.

K. William recalls his Ambaſſador in France.

His Britannick Majeſty upon News of the French King's owning the Pretender, immediately ſent Orders to his Ambaſſador at Paris, the Earl of Mancheſter, to retire from the Court of France, and to the Lords Juſtices of England, to order Mr. Pouſſin, the French Secretary, immediately to depart the Kingdom. His Majeſty alſo diſpatch'd a Courier to the King of Sweden, as Guarantee of the Treaty of Ryſwick, to give him an Account of the French King's manifeſt Violation of that Treaty, and my Lord Mancheſter having receiv'd the beforemention'd Order, ſent the following Letter to Monſ. de Torcy, Secretary of State in France for Foreign Affairs.

Orders the French Secretary to depart the Kingdom of England.

The Earl of Mancheſter's Letter to Mr. De Torcy.

My Lord,

"THE King my Maſter being inform'd, "that his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty has "acknowledg'd another King of Great Bri-"tain, thinks that his Glory and Honour "permits him no more to have an Ambaſſa-"dor near the King your Maſter, and has "left me Orders to depart immediately, "whereof I do myſelf the Honour to ac-"quaint you by this Letter, and withal to aſ-"ſure you, that I am, &c.

Upon this, the French King, who was at Fontaine bleau, aſſembl'd his Council, and after two or three Days, this Anſwer was return'd.

Torcy's Anſwer.

I have nothing more to add to what I had the Honour to tell you eight Days ago, of the ſincere Deſire the King has always had, to preſerve with your Maſter the Peace confirm'd by the Treaty of Ryſwick, I pray you only as to Me in particular to be perſuaded, that in what Place ſoever you be, you will have none that ſhall be with more Sincerity than I ſhall be all my Life-time Yours, &c.

The Earl of Mancheſter, having obtain'd his Paſports, made Haſte to leave a Court where ſo monſtrous an Indignity had been put upon his Great Maſter, but before Pouſſin the French Secretary got away from London, a Diſcovery was made of a Correſpondence of his, which occaſion'd much Diſcourſe and Speculation. For by ſome Accident or Intelligence or other, he was found with three Members of the preſent Majority in Parliament, Dr. D'Avenant, Mr. John Tredenham, and Mr. Anthony Hammond. The latter, Mr. Hammond, has ſince that given ſo many Proofs of his Attachment to the true Intereſt of England, that he ſhould have been forgot, when the other two were remember'd, had it not been for my ſtrict Regard to Truth. Biſhop Kennet writes of it: "They were found at "Supper with him at the Blue Poſts a Night "or two before he went off. This gave an "Alarm of ſecret Correſpondence, and tho' "they excus'd themſelves upon Accident and "Common Civility, yet the World open'd "their Mouths againſt them, and left them "the Name of Pouſſineers, as a Blaſt and Re-"proach that was not eaſily wip'd off.

The Pouſſineers cry'd out againſt.

We ſhall make a good Judgment of the Sentiments of the Nation by the Number and Stile of their Addreſſes to the Lords Juſtices before his Majeſty's Return, and to himſelf after it. The City of London ſet the Example, and ſaid in their Addreſs. By this it is apparent, the French King deſigns, as much as in him lies, to dethrone Your Majeſty, to extirpate the Proteſtant Religion, and to invade Our Liberties and Properties. They conclude, We therefore your Majeſty's moſt loyal Subjects do ſincerely, unanimouſly and chearfully aſſure your Majeſty, That we will at all Times, and upon all Occaſions exert the utmoſt of our Abilities, and contribute whatever lies in our Power for the Preſervation of your Perſon, whom God long preſerve, and the Defence of your juſt Rights, in Oppoſition to all Invaders of your Crown and Dignity. Which Addreſs being tranſmitted to the King in Holland, he was ſo well pleas'd with it as to ſend Orders to the Lords Juſtices to ſignify to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, the great Satisfaction he receiv'd in it, which that Court communicated to the Common Council, and the whole City, gave their Aſſent to this Declaration of Abhorrence, and rejoic'd in his Majeſty's Acceptance of it. Who then could have imagin'd, that many of thoſe Citizens would ſee a Time, when there ſhould be a Common Council, ſo degenerated from theſe good Principles as to refuſe a ſmall Spot of Ground ſufficient for a Pedeſtal to the Statue of this King, their Deliverer, of glorious and immortal Memory, as was done lately.

The City of London addreſs againſt the Pretender.

The Corporation of Marlborough ſpoke in plain, but honeſt Terms, tho' their Repreſentatives Robert Yard, and John Jefferies, Eſqs; were of the preſent Majority. Their Words are, We do humbly implore your moſt ſacred Majeſty to aſſiſt your Allies with ſuch Fleets and Armies, as may chaſtiſe the Inſolence of that haughty Monarch, ſo far as to make him know, that not only his Grandſon, the Duke of Anjou, has no Title to the Crown of Spain, but that even the Crown he wears himſelf is an Appendix to the Crown of England.

Marlborough Addreſs.

The Borough of Pembroke ſay, "Nor do we "wonder at this in the King of France, a Cli-"mate at all times productive of IMPOSTORS, "who has been alway a Proſecutor of his own "Intereſts beyond the Rules of Honour and "Common Juſtice." Then mentioning his Endeavours to place the Impoſtor of St. Germains on the Throne, they add: "A Throne to "which Your Majeſty alone has a lawful and "rightful Title, a Throne merited before "obtain'd, the unequal Reward of Your Ma-"jeſty's great Hazards, and the humble but "voluntary Offering of redeemed Subjects, "whom Your Majeſty found upon the Brink "of Slavery, and reſtor'd to the full Poſſeſ-"ſion and Enjoyment of their ancient Free-"dom.

The Burgeſſes of Haſtings enter into the French King's Reaſons for doing it, We do verily believe that the great Motive which induced him to it, was the better to preſerve in his Intereſt the Popiſh and diſaffected Party.

The Vanity of the French King.

The City of Briſtol expreſs their Deteſtation of the French King's Vanity in ſtiling the pretended Prince of Wales, King.

The County Palatine of Durham are angry, that the French King ſhould dare to act contrary to ſeveral Acts of Settlement.

The County of Eſſex ſay, He is a Prince whoſe unlimited Ambition has broken thro' all ſolemn Treaties, regarding no End but Intereſt nor no Law but Force.

The Borough of Beverley, having obſerv'd how much the French King had endeavour'd to diſturb King William and his Kingdoms add: "And doth ſtill endeavour it contrary to all "Truth and Juſtice, by ſetting up a Perſon "that hath not any legal Pretence to the "Crown of any Kingdom whatſoever.

The Corrupt Faction at Home, accuſed.

The Corporation of Wilton ſay, The French King would not have been ſo bold to have attempted it without ſome Encouragemant from a corrupted Party in his Majeſty's own Dominions. The ſame, who having got the Miniſtry into their Hands in the four laſt Years of Queen Anne, betray'd and broke the Confederacy againſt him for his farther Encouragement.

In the ſame Sentiments are the Foreigners and Pariſhioners of Tiverton in their Addreſs preſented by the Lord Spencer, afterwards Earl of Sunderland.

"We do verily believe the Motive that in-"duced him to it, has been the Aſſurances he "has had from a Party here, that in the late "Reigns have done what they could to en-"creaſe his Power, in Order to the introdu-"cing Popery and Slavery into theſe Nations, "and that oppos'd the Setting of the Crown "on Your Majeſty's Head." Who were to a Man all of Biſhop Kennet's Church Party.

Aylesbury Mens Saying of the French King.

James Herbert, Eſq; Son-in-law to the Duke of Leeds, preſented the Addreſs from Aylesbury, wherein 'tis ſaid, They did it out of a Senſe of the French King's Perfidiouſneſs, whom no Oaths can tie, no Treaties bind, no Sacraments oblige. They ſay it of the Prince on whoſe Bona Fide the Miniſters, in the four Years juſt mention'd, depended for the Security of our Religion, Property, Trade and every Thing dear to Chriſtians and to Men.

The Burgeſſes of Penryn in Cornwal ſay, "As we never flatter'd ourſelves with Ex-"pectation of any Advantage from that Mo-"narch's Friendſhip, ſo this freſh Inſtance of "his Breach of ſolemn Treaties confirms us in "the Belief that he will contribute to any "Turn to make Slaves of all true Engliſhmen.

Dr. Atterbury's Addreſs againſt the Pretender.

The Addreſs from the Dioceſs of Exeter, againſt the French King for owning the Pretender was preſented by Dr. Atterbury, who afterwards own'd him himſelf, and dy'd for it in Baniſhment.

The City of Hereford ſent up Two Addreſſes, in which the good Citizens call the Pretender, the Dreſs'd up Prince of Wales, comparing him to a Poppet with Reſpect to his Kingſhip. In the other Addreſs, the ſame good Citizens of Hereford give the French King his own, ſaying, Among the many Inſtances the French King has given to the World of his breaking thro' the moſt ſolemn Oaths and Treaties, and the barbarous Uſage of his own Subjects, contrary to the Laws of God, of Nature, and of Nations, there is none more amazing to us than the laſt villainous Act of his in ſetting up a ſham Prince of Wales.

A. D. 1701.

The City of Hereford againſt the French King's villainous Act of Setting up a Sham Prince.

The Men of Boſton in Lincolnſhire, ſay, "We hearing this Preſumption of the French "King, and knowing it to be agreeable and "ſuitable to moſt of his perfidious Actions, &c.

The Burgeſſes of Newport in the Iſle of Wight, declar'd "their utter Abhorrence "and Deteſtation of the unparallel'd and un-"chriſtian Practice of him who ſtiles himſelf, "The Moſt Chriſtian King, in Proclaiming, "&c. contrary to the Treaty of Ryſwick, "and indeed not only in the Violation of his "own Oaths, Treaties and Alliances, but in "Defiance of his Majeſty's juſt Title.

The Burgeſſes of Kings-Lyn in Norfolk tell King William, That Lewis the XIVth's giving his Majeſty's Title to the Pretender, ſufficiently manifeſts his malicious Deſigns againſt his ſacred Perſon.

The Borough of Leeds in Yorkſhire ſay, The Traffick that the French King makes of Treaties and Alliances is vile and abominable.

The Burgeſſes of Whitchurch in Hampſhire "were alarm'd at the French King's vile In-"tention by declaring the Pretender King.

The Burgeſſes of Taunton in Somerſetſhire, notwithſtanding Sir Francis War was One of their Repreſentatives, ſay, They are wonderfully ſurpriz'd at the unparallel'd Arrogance of the French King in aſſuming to himſelf a deſpotick Power over his Majeſty's Kingdoms, by declaring, &c. in the ſcandalous Violation of King William's Right.

In the Addreſs from New Malton in Yorkſhire, are theſe Words: "Our Hearts are "fill'd with the utmoſt Indignation to find "our Liberties, our Lives, and, which is "more than both, our Religion, deſtin'd by "this Proceeding to the French King's Will "and Pleaſure, to come at which he does "not ſtick to break thro' all that Faith and "Stipulation which former Times held ſacred.

Kingſton upon Hull againſt the infamous Violation of Treaties.

In another Addreſs from Kingſton upon Hull, the Addreſſers declare their Deteſtation of the inſolent and treacherous Proceeding of that infamous Violator of Treaties, Perſecutor of Proteſtants, and Oppreſſor of Countries, the French King.

I ſhall only add two or three more out of the Hundreds which were preſented on this Occaſion from all Parts of England. The one ſhall be that from Totneſs in Devonſhire, which Sir Edward Seymour was wont to call his Borough, and it was preſented by a Creature of his, Mr. Thomas Coulſon, whom he got to be a Member for it in Parliament, and who was one of the Party then the Majority. Theſe Addreſſers ſpeak very tenderly of the Matter, They were only touch'd with the late Proceedings of the French King in Relation to his Proclaiming, &c. How mannerly is all This? How agreeable to the Earl of Rocheſter's Admonition or Caution in ſpeaking of the French King becauſe he was a Crown'd Head, and not becauſe he had declar'd he would, if he could, put a Crown too on the Head of an Impoſtor as the Addreſſers ſtil'd him.

The

A. D. 1701.

The next Addreſs I ſhall mention is that from the Tinners of Cornwal, preſented by the Honourable John Granville, Eſq; who was made a Lord almoſt as ſoon as Queen Ann came to the Crown. Theſe Tinners ſhew themſelves to be as well bred as the Men of Totneſs, and are full of Manners. We cannot, ſay they, without juſt Reſentment, reflect on the Proceedings of the French King in ſetting up as far as in him lies, another Title to the Imperial Crown of England, thereby offering at the higheſt Affront to Your Majeſty, as well as the greateſt of Impoſitions on Your People, not without Indignity to himſelf, being in Breach of that Faith which ought inviolably to be preſerv'd by Princes.

There is great Reaſon to believe, that this very civil Addreſs was no more the genuine Senſe, than it was the Language of the Tinners, and this is confirm'd by another Addreſs from them, preſented regularly by their Lord Warden, the Earl of Radnor, wherein they ſpeak like honeſt Corniſh Men, and ſay, We cannot without the greateſt Diſdain and Abhorrence reflect on the late Vanity and Inſolence of the Common Enemy in preſuming to ſet up a pretended Prince of Wales, who being carefully educated in the French Idolatrous Worſhip and tyrannical Maxims of Government, &c. Again, 'Tis evident, thro' the whole Courſe of his Reign that he has no Regard to the moſt ſacred and ſolemn Ties that Divine Laws have preſcrib'd, or human Policy found out. And this Addreſs had 10000 Hands to it, but the Number of Hands to that preſented by Mr. Granville was not ſufficient in the Opinion of the Gazateer to deſerve printing.

There could be no Doubt of the Neceſſity of calling a new Parliament, the Nation having in theſe Addreſſes diſcover'd ſo good a Diſpoſition to reſent the Indignity put upon them by the French King in giving a ſuppoſitious Prince, as Sovereign of theſe Kingdoms. My French Author expreſſes himſelf thus, L'Indignation fut preſque univerſelle. Les Torys, les Pariſans de la Paix, & de la France perdirent tout leur Credit. " The Indignation " was almoſt univerſal, the Party who were " for Peace and France loſt all their Credit.

There could be no Doubt, but the Repreſentative of ſuch a People as the Addreſſers, would be in the ſame Sentiments: And the Affair of the Spaniſh Succeſſion would naturally fall under the ſame Deciſion, as that of Lewis XIV's Violation of the Treaty of Ryſwick, which could not be decided otherwiſe than by a War, and for the carrying of it on his Majeſty, while he was in Holland, perfected the Second Grand Alliance between England, Holland, and the Empire, which was concluded about the Middle of September, and to which the other Allies acceeded before the Operations of the next Campaign, except Portugal and Savoy, and thoſe Princes came in ſoon after. When this great Buſineſs was over, his Majeſty would have return'd to England, but was hinder'd by Indiſpoſition, which was not kept ſo ſecret, but it was known in France, and it was given out at that Court to be as bad as his Majeſty himſelf thought it, which probably facilitated the French King's Owning the Pretender.

K. William in an ill State of Health.

Don Bernard de Quiros, Ambaſſador from Spain, did ſome how or other procure the Caſe of his Majeſty's Illneſs, which he ſent to the Miniſters in France, and they gave it to Monſieur Fagon, the King's Phyſician, who made the worſt of it. The French Reports of this Kind, tho' too well grounded, were not believ'd. If they had it muſt have occaſion'd unſpeakable Confuſion in the Affairs of Europe. The King was ſenſible he was declining in Conſtitution, and therefore upon a Diſcourſe concerning the Succeſs and bold Actions of the King of Sweden, in the North, againſt the Poles and Saxons, and of Prince Eugene in Italy, againſt the French, he fetch'd a Sort of languiſhing Sigh, and ſaid, It is a fine Thing to be a young Man. He was pleas'd ſo far to unboſſom himſelf to the Earl of Portland, as he walk'd with him in the Gardens at Loo, before he left Holland, as to ſay, he found himſelf ſo weak he could not expect to live another Summer, but charg'd him to ſay nothing of it till he was dead.

On the 4th of November, the King went to the Aſſembly of the States General, and made a ſhort Speech to them, at his taking Leave. It was to this Effect.

The King's laſt Speech to the States General.

" That he was juſt upon returning to En-
" gland, but could have been very well con-
" tented to have ſtaid longer there, ſeeing his
" Preſence was needful, but ſince he could " not be in two Places at once, He recom-
" mended Union to them, which was ſo ne-
" ceſſary at that Time when they were threa-
" ten'd with a violent War. That he was " much troubled to find his Endeavours to
" confirm the Peace, had not been ſo ſuc-
" ceſsful, as he could have wiſh'd, and there-
" fore it was neceſſary for their Lordſhips to " continue well-arm'd, &c. He expreſs'd to
" them alſo his great Satisfaction to perceive
" that the Kingdom of England was in ſuch
" a Diſpoſition to revenge the Affront that
" had lately been put upon him by France.

Our Friends the Dutch expreſt a general Joy at the Advices from England which daily confirm'd and encreas'd it. When they ſaw an Addreſs from Weſtmorland, preſented by Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave, and another from Glouceſterſhire, by John How, Eſq; they could not but conceive great Hopes of the Engliſh Nation's entring unanimouſly into the King's Meaſures, which were alſo Theirs. Mr. John How was ſo over loyal, that he would needs ſtay till the King came Home, and deliver the Addreſs with his own Hands into His Majeſty's.

Mr. John How delivers an Addreſs to the King.

The King landed at Margate on his Birth Day, Nov. 4. and went directly to Hampton-Court, which was crowded every Day with the Attendance of the Nobility and Gentry, who came to congratulate his ſafe Arrival, which had been expected with Impatience.

We ſhall juſt mention the Equipment of the Fleet this Summer, which being join'd by a Dutch Squadron, put to Sea from Spithead, about the 20th of Auguſt, to the Terror of the French, Spaniards, and thoſe that were engag'd with them. The Portugueſe were very uneaſy as fearing a Bombardment, and began to repent of the Alliance their King had made with the King of France and Spain, who were not in a Condition to protect them at Sea. The Spaniards trembled for their unguarded Coaſts. This Fleet was commanded by Sir George Rook, who had with him Sir Cloudeſly Shovel, Admiral Hopſon and Admiral Munden. But the Apprehenſions of the French, Spaniards and Portugueſe were ſoon over. For when Sir George Rooke came into the Latitude of 45, he detach'd a ſtrong Squadron for the Weſt-Indies, which was the Scheme of theſe Naval Preparations, and himſelf, with the Reſt of the Fleet, return'd to England, after having been about three Weeks at Sea. However, thoſe People had been ſufficiently alarm'd, and the more, for that the Dutch Ambaſſador at Madrid had Orders before the Fleet ſail'd to demand in Terrorem, the Uſe of the Spaniſh Ports for them, which they as gravely refus'd, as if it had been with Gravity demanded, bnt it was all Amuſement.

A Modern Hiſtory Writer tells us, ſoon after his Majeſty's Arrival contrary to moſt Peoples Expectation, the Parliament was diſſolv'd. This Writer is One of the ſtaunch Ones, and his Hiſtory is as falſe as their Pretences. For it was agreeable to moſt People's Expectations who were grown impatient under the Oppreſſion of this Unnatural Majority as they were ſtil'd. There were two excellent Treatiſes, publiſh'd at that Time on this Subject. In one of them, father'd on Dr. Swift, it is ſaid: "It would be wiſe in them as Individuals and "Private Mortals to look back upon the "Storms they have rais'd, as well as thoſe "they have eſcap'd. To reflect that after "they have been Authors of a new and wonderful Thing in England, which is for a "Houſe of Commons to loſe the univerſal Favour of the Numbers they repreſent, To "obſerve how thoſe whom they thought fit "to perſecute for Righteouſneſs Sake, have "been openly careſs'd by the People, and to "remember how themſelves ſate in Fear of "their Perſons from popular Rage. Now if "they would know the Secret of this unprecedented Proceeding in their Maſters. They "muſt not impute it to their Freedom of Debate, or declaring their Opinions, but for "that unparliamentary Abuſe of ſetting Individuals upon their Shoulders who were "hated by God and Man, &c.

I am as ſenſible as any one that Party-terms are a Diſgrace to Hiſtory, as the Parties are a Diſgrace to the Age, if they have any Intereſt ſeperate from that of the Publick. I have therefore avoided them as much as was poſſible, ſo as to be intelligible, but others have found a Neceſſity of uſing them, and for that Reaſon I copy what they ſay, as in the other Treatiſe.

"What our Fate ſhall be depends upon our "Management now. 'Tis plain that without "a War we are undone, ſo we may be with "it, if thoſe who have the Management of "Publick Affairs ſhould happen to be in the "Intereſt of the Abdicated Family, or Common Enemy, or ſhould be under the old "Prejudices againſt the Dutch, which were "bred in the late Reigns, (and were reviv'd "in the four laſt Years of the Queen, when "that Set of Men had uſurp'd the Management,) we know what Suſpicions we have "had, and what Grounds there were for "them. This makes it abſolutely neceſſary "that the Nation repreſent itſelf anew. It "would be very ſurprizing to ſee the preſent "Parliament ſit again, when a great Party in "it has given ſuch Umbrage to the Nation, "when they were thought as far as it was "poſſible for them to venture without plain- *A. To let Poſterity a little farther into the true State of Things and Characters of Men, we muſt inform them, that every Man of the Majority here delineated, beſides the Denomination of Country-Party and Staunch, which they were all diſtinguiſh'd by, had alſo that other Diſtinction of the Church-Party, as Biſhop Kennet informs us, and Church being a Term which always carries Veneration in the Minds of Chriſtians, thoſe who call'd themſelves Church-Men, be their Inclinations otherwiſe what they would, had ſuch Influence over the inferior Clergy as theſe had over the People, that that it was no eaſy Matter to undeceive them or convince them it was poſſible for ſuch Churchmen not to be hearty Friends to the Reformed Religion, or true Enemies to France. By this Means ſeveral of them got to be elected again, tho' not enough to do ſo much Miſchief in the next Parliament as they did in the laſt. Biſhop Kennet writes "the Elections "went on with unhappy, but not unuſual "teſts.

The City of London and Borough of Southwark having choſen by a great Majority very worthy Perſons to be their Repreſentatives, They deliver'd Papers of Inſtructions to them.

By this it will be ſeen, the Senſe of the laſt Majority was far from being the genuine Senſe of the Nation.

I ſhall not inſert the Papers of Inſtructions deliver'd by the Citizens of London to their new choſen Repreſentatives, nor that the Burgeſſes of Southwark deliver'd to them, they being both very long, but take ſome Paſſages out of the like Papers deliver'd to the Members newly choſen, as Inſtructions for their Conduct in Parliament, which was to be the very Reverſe to that of the late Majority.

Inſtructions by the Electors to the Elected.

Glouceſterſhire Inſtructions. Reflect on Mr. J. How.

The Borough of Shaftsbury in their Advice to Sir John Cropley, and Edward Nicholas, Eſq; ſay, We having made Choice of you as true Engliſhmen and Proteſtants to be our Repreſentatives in the enſuing Parliament to anſwer thoſe juſt and pious Purpoſes mentioned in his Majeſty's Proclamation, and being deeply ſenſible of the imminent Danger of our Religion and Government from an Univerſal Uſurper Abroad, and an Unſound Party at home, deſire, That according to the Tenor of their own and the reſt of the Nation's late Addreſſes, and moſt faithful Promiſes to his Majeſty, they will do their utmoſt in Parliament to ſecure and confirm the Succeſſion to the Crown in the Proteſtant Line, purſuant to the late Act of Parliament, by utterly REJECTING, RENOUNCING and ABJURING all Right and Title of the PRETENDED Prince of Wales, the PRETENDED Iſſue of the late King James and Queen Mary. This is not all. And, laſtly, that you will uſe your utmoſt Endeavours carefully and ſpeedily to aſſiſt his Majeſty with competent Supplies of Men and Money, neceſſary to ſupport thoſe Alliances he has made, and to reduce France from the exorbitant Power and Preſumption of giving Laws to Europe, and impoſing his Cruel, Bloody, and Tyrannical Government on theſe and other Nations under the Colour of thoſe falſe and unjuſt Titles, ſet up in the Perſons of the Duke of Anjou, and the PRETENDED Prince of Wales.

Shaftsbury Addreſs.

Couples the Pretender and the Duke of Anjou.

It was ſuch Inſtructions as theſe, and ſuch Addreſſes as is referr'd to herein, which provoked the French King to forget his Dignity and Character ſo much, as when one of his Miniſters told him of them, to break out into theſe Expreſſions, "I will chaſtiſe the Inſolence of "theſe Addreſſers, and ſettle that Prince on "the Throne of England, or loſe my Crown. My Author adds: "This Advice comes from "ſuch Perſons that we have Reaſon to be-"lieve it is true:" And the more Reaſon becauſe every one knows he ſaid much the ſame Thing in his Promiſe to King James, when he gave him Shelter in France.

French King's Saying of the Addreſſes againſt them.

In the Paper of Inſtructions deliver'd by the Freeholders of the County of Wilts to the Honourable Maurice Aſhley, Eſq; and William Aſh, Eſq; their newly choſen Members is a Paragraph which fully explains what Biſhop Kennet meant by thoſe he call'd the Church-Party, who had lately taken upon them the Denomination of their Opponents, and ſtil'd themſelves the Country-Party. It is this:

Wiltſhire Addreſs againſt truſting Tories.

"We cannot but with utter Deteſtation "hear of any Reproaches caſt on ſuch a Prince "as This, (they mean Mr. John How's virulent Expreſſion of the Partition Treaty, and other ſuch Speeches about it from Men of his Stamp, the late Majority) nor can we ever "bear even with any Inſinuations of Jealouſy "againſt that Sovereign, to whom we owe the "Reſcue of our Religion and Liberties, and "who has ſince given us all that we can ask "or think for our happy Settlement, and the " Security of our Conſtitution. So that it is " evident to us, That whatever Power our " Enemies have had, either towards the rai- " ſing Diviſions and Animoſities among our- " ſelves, or the creating any Jealouſies of the " King, by arraigning his Conduct, both at " Home and Abroad, to the Diſcouragement " of his Allies, and to the Leſſening of His " Majeſty's and his People's Honour, Repu- " tation and Intereſt, it has been wholly ow- " ing to thoſe irreconcileable Enemies to His " Majeſty's Government and Title, the In- " ſtruments of that treacherous and corrupt " Miniſtry of the late Reigns, whom the un- " exampl'd Clemency of His Majeſty's Go- " vernment, having at firſt ſpar'd, they have " ever ſince been growing in Intereſt and Pow- " er againſt him, and after their unſucceſsful " Oppoſition to the Abdication of King James " to his Majeſty's happy Acceſſion to the " Throne, to the Act of Recognition of his " Majeſty as lawful and rightful King, and " to the National Aſſociation in his Behalf at " the Time of the horrid Conſpiracy againſt " his Life, they have at length endeavour'd " to undermine his Majeſty's Government, " under a more ſpecious Mark, as Promoters " of that Publick Weal and Intereſt, to which " they were the greateſt Enemies, and as Ene- " mies to France, of which they have ever " been the known Friends and Agents, and " never more actively than at this Hour.

One need not ſay, that theſe Wiltſhire Gentlemen, by the Miniſters of the late Reigns, underſtand the Duke of Leeds, the Earl of Rocheſter, the Earl of N———, Sir Joſeph Williamſon, Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave, and the Heads of the Party they adviſe againſt, who were too much hearken'd to in ſome Intervals of this Reign.

Buckinghamſhire Addreſs for finding out and puniſhing Jacobites.

The Gentlemen and Freeholders of Buckinghamſhire ſay to their new Knights, " As " you value the Bleſſing of Almighty God, " and the Future Good Will of your Coun- " try, We do exhort, charge and require, " that you fail not to ſupport the King with " the moſt effectual Supplies, that you hear- " tily concur in ſuch Alliances as the King has " or ſhall make for the pulling down the ex- " orbitant Power of France, and enable him " to make good the ſame, That you conſi- " der of all Ways for maintaining the Succeſ- " ſion as by Law now eſtabliſhed, That you " diſcover, if poſſible, who they are among " us that have any Regard, Friendſhip or Al- " legiance to the New Pretender, which the " French would impoſe upon us, that ſuch " may fall under your juſt Indignation.

There was a Diſcovery made of ſuch a one not long ago by Henry St. John, late Viſcount Bolingbroke, who diſcover'd that he himſelf had been a faithful Servant to that Pretender, and in what Manner has the juſt Indignation of the Parliament fallen upon him. They farther adviſe their Knights, " to avoid all " ſuch Differences, Diſputes and Animoſities " as ſo lately had like to have undone us.

The Freeholders of Suſſex deſire the Knights of their Shire, Sir William Thomas, and Sir Henry Peachy, to do the ſame Things, as in the other Inſtructions, and to join their Votes " with thoſe that are and always have been " reputed to be the known Servants and true " Friends of King William, &c.

The Mayor, Recorder, Aldermen, Common-Council, and other Burghers of Appleby, cloſe their Inſtructions to their Members, Gervaſe Pierpont, and Wharton Dunch, Eſqs; thus: " As our late happy Revolution, and " daily Preſervation from Popery and Slave- " ry is, under God, only owing to his Maje- " ſty, We hope no Inſinuations of EVIL " MEN will ever make you forget the Gra- " titude you owe to him as our King and De- " liverer.

A. D. 1701.

I ſhall inſert no more of theſe and ſuch like Paſſages in the Inſtructions of the Electors, which were effectually purſued by this true Engliſh Parliament, who took not one Step, except their firſt one, the Choice of their Speaker, which could not well be accounted for, that tended not to the King's Honour, and the Good of the Kingdom.

The Paris Gazeteer ſeems to have had Orders to give a general Account of theſe Inſtructions, but to conceal what he found by the London Gazetee, That they all agreed in declaring againſt the French King's Breach of Treaty in owning the Pretended Prince of Wales, and they promiſe to ſtand by King William againſt that Pretender, and all his other Enemies. Nor does the French Gazeteer take any Notice of the Freeholders and Burgeſſes declaring againſt the Duke of Anjou s being ſet upon the Throne of Spain. But he is very careful not to omit that ſome of them have given Inſtructions to their Members to " maintain the Honour of the Commons, to " preſerve the Impeachment of the Lords and " to enquire after thoſe that adviſ'd the Diſſo- " lution of the laſt Parliament." This was not only falſe, as he tells it, but extreamly fooliſh, for it publiſh'd to the World, that the Party, which had the Major Vote in that Parliament was the Friends to France, as it was often charg'd againſt them in England.

Paris Gazeteer praiſes the laſt Majority.

It ſhould be remember'd, that the Scots Nation expreſs'd their Reſentment of the Indignity put upon their King, by the French King's owning of the Pretender, in as ſtrong Terms, as any made uſe of in the Engliſh Addreſſes or Inſtructions. And among others, there were Four Addreſſes againſt the French King's owning an Impoſtor for King of England, preſented to the King by the Earl of Mar: As one from the Garriſon of Sterling-Caſtle; One from the City of Sterling; One from the Juſtices and Commiſſioners of Supply for Sterlingſhire, and one from the Shire of Clacmanan. All which expreſs'd " a grate- " ful Senſe of His Majeſty's having reſcu'd " them from Popery and Slavery, as they do " a perfect Abhorrence of the French King's " PERFIDIOUSNESS in proclaiming and " owning the Pretended Prince of Wales as " King of Great Britain, and they promiſe " with their Lives and Fortunes to maintain " and defend his Majeſty's Perſon and Govern- " ment againſt all PRETENDERS, and to " concur with others of his loyal and dutiful " Subjects to enable his Majeſty to revenge " that Indignity.

E. of Mar preſents the Scotch Addreſſes againſt the Pretender.

It being cuſtomary to ſummon a Convocation of the Clergy at the ſame Time that a new Parliament is ſummon'd, there were choſen Proctors for the Dioceſs of Worceſter, Mr. James Stillingfleet, M. A. Rector of Hartlebury, and Mr. William Lloyd, M. A. Vicar of Blockley, and the Clergy after the Choice made the following Application to them.

" England, both in Doctrine and Diſcipline,
" the Encreaſe of true Piety and good Man-
" ners, and the Eſtabliſhing of Peace and
" Tranquillity both in our Church and
" State.

'Twas highly incumbent upon us to inſert their Application, as it was call'd, for here we ſee the Chriſtian Spirit of the true Church of England, oppoſite to that of the Atterburies, Binkes, Janes, and after them, the Sacheverels, Webſters, Berrymans, &c. And that truly Chriſtian Spirit of Moderation and Charity, being the Characteriſtick of a true Church of England-Man, as Perſecution and Oppreſſion are that of the High-Church-Party, we hope we ſhall alaways, when we ſpeak of Churchmen in Biſhop Kennet's Senſe, be underſtood to mean that Party which only uſurp'd the Name, and not the Tenniſons, the Loyds, the Fleetwoods, the Hoadleys, the Clarks, &c. who deſerv'd it.

E. of Rocheſter in Ireland.

While the beforemention'd Addreſſes and Inſtructions were preparing in England, the Earl of Rocheſter was in Ireland, in Poſſeſſion of his High Office of Lord Lieutenant of that Kingdom, where there happen'd little of Moment, but what the Iriſh Truſtees did in the Execution of their Work, not much ſpoken of in any Records but their own.

A. D. 1701.

In the mean while, the Baron Hervart, his Majeſty's Miniſter in Switzerland, deliver'd a Memorial to that Government in Relation to the French King's Recognition of the pretended Prince of Wales, which among other Paſſages has theſe:

The Engliſh Envoy's Memorial to the Switzs, on the French King's owning the Pretender.

" It is certain, that his Majeſty was uncon-
" cern'd, and made no Complaint at the late
" King James's having paſt, ſince his Abdica-
" tion for King of Great Britain, at the French
" Court, in Regard his late Poſſeſſion of that
" Crown, allow'd him in ſome Manner to aſ-
" ſume the Title thereof during Life. But
" this Prince being now dead, his Majeſty
" could not but highly reſent the French
" King's declaring and owning the Pretended
" Prince of Wales, as King of England, Scot-
" land and Ireland. This Conduct which is
" ſo injurious to his Majeſty, the whole En-
" gliſh Nation, and all Sovereigns, and ſo
" contrary to ſeveral Engagements enter'd in-
" to by his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, would not " allow the King, my Maſter, to continue his
" Ambaſſador any longer in France, the French
" King having by this Act diſcover'd the lit-
" tle Regard he has for his Majeſty.

" My Lords, You have too much Prudence
" and Penetration to be perſuaded, that this
" Recognition of that Pretended Prince is con-
" ſiſtent or compatible with the Treaty of
" Ryſwick, and with the formal Declaration
" which both Kings have made to maintain a
" perpetual Peace, a ſincere mutual Friend-
" ſhip, and to do nothing but what may tend " to each others Honour and Advantage. The
" moſt Chriſtian King ſtands engag'd, by Ver-
" tue of the Fourth Article of the Treaty of
" Ryſwick, not to trouble or moleſt his Ma-
" jeſty in the Poſſeſſion of his Kingdom, and
" to give no Aſſiſtance or Countenance direct" ly or indirectly to any that ſhall preſume to
" diſturb his Majeſty in his preſent Poſſeſſion.
" How ridiculous and what Nonſenſe is it
" therefore to imagine, that the French Court
" ſhould perſuade any one, who is not ſtrong-
" ly prepoſſeſs'd, that the Recognition of this
" Pretended Prince for King of Great Britain
" and Ireland, which high Title he never can
" enjoy nor hope for, neither by the Conſti-
" tution or Laws of England, nor by his " Birth, nor by Vertue of the late K. James's
" Declaration was made to contribute to the " Honour and Advantage of his Majeſty?
" How can this Faithleſs Proceeding conſiſt
" with the French King's Engagement, not any
" ways to favour thoſe that ſhould form any
" the leaſt Deſign againſt his Majeſty's Royal
" Dignity? The French Court ſeems to have
" a mean Opinion of the Generality of Man-
" kind, by endeavouring to abuſe their Cre-
" dulity, and to make them believe ſo ſtrange
" a Paradox.

The French King's Nonſenſical Excuſe for owning the Pretender.

The latter End of this Memorial has Reference to a ſorry Piece deliver'd by Monſieur de Chamois, the French Miniſter at Ratisbon, to the Diet of the Empire to juſtify his Maſter's Conduct in owning the Pretended Prince of Wales for King of Great Britain, wherein he aſſerts that his ſo doing was no Breach of the Peace, and good Correſpondence with the King in Poſſeſſion of the Engliſh Throne, which was ſaid in Germany to be ſuch Nonſenſe that it was wonder'd any Man had the Face to offer it.

Before the Opening the Seſſion of Parliament, which met the laſt Day of the Year, let us us ſo far imitate Biſhop Kennet's irregular Method as to touch on his Church-Hiſtory, his Honours and Preferments. And truly the former conſiſts now of nothing, but the Diſputes and Animoſities againſt which the Dioceſs of Worceſter caution'd their Proctors with Reſpect to the Right of Adjournment, which the Lower Houſe of Convocation would have raviſh'd from the Upper Houſe, and Wrangling about Toland's Book, and Biſhop Burnet's Expoſition of the Thirty-nine Articles. A large Account of the latter being in the Biſhop's own Writings, we ſhall ſay nothing of it here.

Wrangling in Convocation.

The Lower Houſe, where Atterbury, &c. beforementioned had the Influence, and arrogantly aſſum'd the Protection of the Church, in Oppoſition to my Lords, the Biſhops, and the Clergy who ſubmitted to their Authority, demanded a Free Conference, about the Adjourning Power. A Word, ſays Biſhop Kennet, which never appear'd in the Acts of any former Convocation. The ſame Set of Men held intermediate Seſſions directly contrary to the Authority of the Lord Preſident, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. An Affectation of Independence, continues Biſhop Kennet, never before attempted by any Presbyters in any Epiſcopal Church, which is fit to be taken Notice of, becauſe theſe very Men valu'd themſelves above all their Brethren for their Enmity to Presbyterians, and an invincible Diſpoſition to perſecute, diſtreſs and ruin them. But there was at the ſame Time, and have always been in the worſt of Times, ſuch as when Laud's and Atterbury's Maxims prevailed, a great Body of the Church of England Clergy, truly Proteſtant and equally eminent for Piety, Learning, Abilities, Moderation and Charity. We find at this very Juncture, and on the Occaſion of this Revolt of the Presbyters, from their Biſhops, many ſuch who proteſted againſt it. But the Atterburies, &c. refuſ'd to receive their Proteſtation, which was ſubſcrib'd by

Theſe good Churchmen, not in an affected Senſe, as the Party ſo denominated us'd, but in a real Senſe as Chriſtians underſtand the Church, a Number of Chriſtians aſſociated in the Worſhip of God, according to the Truth and Purity of the Goſpel, did not like their Opponents govern themſelves by Precedents in Archbiſhop Laud's Time, but ſubmitted to their Spiritual Fathers, with the Humility of true Sons of our Epiſcopal Church, while the Atterburies, &c. contended for their Right of Independence in Caſe of Adjournments with as much Eagerneſs, ſays a Reverend Doctor, as if the whole of their Religion had been depending.

To keep theſe Convocation Matters together, we muſt add, that a new Convocation being ſummon'd as well as a new Parliament, Dr. Sherlock preach'd the Sermon in Latin, and Dr. Woodward, Dean of Sarum, was choſen Prolocutor in Oppoſition to Dr. Beveridge. Woodward's Merit, according to Biſhop Kennet was the Oppoſing his Dioceſan Biſhop Burnet to whom he ow'd his Preferments. We ſee what a Spirit Atterbury and his Party were acted by. About three Weeks after the Opening of this Synod, the Archbiſhop at the Head of the Biſhops and Clergy preſented this Addreſs to the King.

A. D. 1701.

Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

The Convocation Addreſs againſt the Pretender.

" WE humble beg Leave to lay before " Your Majeſty, now we are aſſem- " bled in Convocation, the deep Reſentment " that every one of us had at our firſt Hear- " ing of the great Indignity, which the French " King offer'd to Your Majeſty and Your Peo- " ple, in declaring the Pretended Prince of " Wales, to be King of Your Majeſty's Realms " and Dominions, We do hereupon take Oc- " caſion to renew our ſincere Proteſtations of " a firm and unſhaken Allegiance to Your " Majeſty, humbly aſſuring Your Majeſty; " That We will do Our utmoſt Endeavours, " by God's Aſſiſtance, (pray mind this was ſaid by Dr. Francis Atterbury, made Biſhop of Rocheſter by the Influence of the Miniſtry after Sacheverel's Sedition, and after that baniſh'd the Kingdom for his Attachment to that very Pretended Prince,) in our reſpective " Places and Stations to defend Your Sacred " Perſon, and to maintain Your Majeſty's " rightful Title to the Imperial Crown of " theſe Realms, and the Succeſſion thereof in " the Proteſtant Line, as now by Law eſta- " bliſhed, againſt the ſaid Pretended Prince, " and all other Your Majeſty's open and ſecret " Enemies.

" We will always, according to our eſpeci- " al Duty, make it our earneſt Prayer to " God, That he will long continue Your Ma- " jeſty's happy Reign over us, that you may " perfect all thoſe great Works, in which he " hath hitherto wonderfully conducted you " with ſo much Glory and Succeſs, for the " Peace and Welfare of theſe Kingdoms, and " the Support of Your Allies, the Safety and " Tranquillity of Europe, and Preſerving the " Proteſtant Religion, both here in this Church " of England by Law Eſtabliſh'd, and in all " other Proteſtant Churches.

This excellent Addreſs was very acceptable to the King, who made this gracious Anſwer.

The King's Anſwer.

My Lords, and the Reſt of the Clergy,

I Cannot but be very much pleas'd with theſe Expreſſions of your Affection to Me, and your Concern for the Honour of the Nation for maintaining the Succeſſion in the Proteſtant Line, and for the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Churches: And I am glad of this Opportunity to give you freſh Aſſurances of my firm Reſolutions in an eſpecial Manner to protect the Church of England, as by Law eſtabliſh'd.

This new Convocation fell immediately into the ſame Diviſions and Diſputes as the former had done, and indeed ſeem'd to refine upon the Obſtinacy and Perverſeneſs of the Majority of the Lower Houſe in the laſt Synod. There was ſome ſo ineffectual Means us'd to moderate them, and bring the Lower Houſe into Temper with the Upper. One was the Appointing Committees of both Sides of the Queſtion about the Right of Adjourning.

Who agreed upon two or three Articles of Temperament, but Atterbury and his Party boaſting of the Advantage they had gain'd on the Side of the Presbyters, Biſhop Kennet, who was one of the other Side writes: "The "other eight Members hearing daily of ma- "ny falſe Conſtructions put upon the Agree- "ment, drew up a Paper of Explanation, which left no Advantage to the Presbyters, ſo determin'd, as to deprive the Biſhops of their Right. Dr. Woodward the Prolocutor dying, they would have proceeded to a new Choice, notwithſtanding the Archbiſhop had prorogu'd them, and Words ariſing in the Debate about it, between Dr. Finch and Dr. Kennet; the former reflected on the latter as a Betrayer of their Rights and Liberties, all which Hiſtory, as much as it is abridg'd, will, I doubt not, be more than enough to ſatisfy all Readers that have any Concern for the Peace of the Church and the Nation. This Aſſembly would very feign have continu'd ſitting after the King's Death, nay, ſome of them were ſo loath to give over their Wrangling, that they propos'd the Offering a Bill to the Houſe of Lords to give them a Reſurrection after they were actually diſſolv'd by the Demiſe of the King, and notwithſtanding the Diſcouragements they met with from the Peers they deſiſted not from this Chimerical Project, till they were told by the Attorney General, That it was againſt the Queen's Eccleſiaſtical Supremacy: Which they did not think fit to cope with.

Extravagant Proceedings.

As to Honours and Preferments, the moſt remarkable were: The making the Earl of Manchester, Secretary of State, the Earl of Pembroke, Lord High Admiral, the Duke of Somerſet, Preſident of the Council, the Earl of Carliſle, firſt Lord Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, and in a lower Sphere, but not with leſs Merit Arthur Manwaring, Eſq; one of the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms, to which Board, he was introduced by his Grace the Duke of Somerſet, and grew afterwards ſo much in the Confidence of the Duke of Marlborough, and the Earl of Godolphin, that no Man of his Rank and Station in Life was more conſulted by them upon Affairs of the higheſt Importance than was Mr. Manwaring, from whom I learnt many Particulars which will come into the next Reign. It is worth Notice, that four Days before the Meeting of the Parliaments, the Inſtruments for uniting the two Eaſt-India-Companies were ſign'd purſuant to the Arbitration of the Lord Godolphin, and Mr. Speaker Harley, on Behalf of the Old Company, and the Lord Halliſax and Mr. Lowndes on Behalf of the New.

Mr. Mainwaring made a Commiſſioner of the Cuſtoms.

The two East India Companies united

On the 30th of December, the Day appointed for the Meeting of the Parliament, the King came to the Houſe of Peers, the Duke of Northumberland in his Robes carrying the Sword before him. The Commons being ſent for, Sir Nathan Wright, Lord Keeper, ſignified his Majeſty's Pleaſure that they ſhould forthwith proceed to the Choice of a Speaker, and preſent him next Morning. The Competition was between Sir Thomas Littleton and Mr. Harley, the Speakers of the two laſt Parliaments. We may aſſure ourſelves the King and Court were not for Mr. Harley. However ſo many Members even of this good Parliament had ſome Motive or other to vote for him, that he had the Majority of fourteen Voices, which is aſtoniſhing when we conſider the different Characters of this Repreſentative and their Speaker. One Reaſon might be that his Majeſty had not had Time to rid himſelf entirely of ſome Hands which he had lately been in, as it was his Deſign to do. The Earl of Rocheſter haſten'd over from Ireland to be ready for the Meeting of this Parliament, and that Earl continuing in ſo exalted a Station as the Lieutenancy of Ireland gave no ſmall Countenance to the Party of which he was a profeſs'd Patron. The Words of a late Hiſtorian will be better taken from himſelf than from me, therefore I give them as I find them: The King had a Mind to reinſtate ſome of the diſcarded Miniſters, and more particularly preſs'd the Lord Somers to take upon him the principal Direction of Affairs, but his Lordſhip anſwering they could have no Aſſurance, his Majeſty would not relapſe into the ſame ill Hands. The King leaning with his Elbow on the Table ſaid, Never, Never, Never, and it had been well for England, and all Europe, if his Succeſſor, Queen Anne, had not made again that fatal Experiment, after ſhe too had been ſenſible of their weak and wicked Counſels and Practices in the two or three firſt Years of her Reign, That Mr. Harley was choſen Speaker by the preceding and ſucceeding Repreſentatives is what might well have been expected, but how he came into the Chair when there was one of the beſt Houſe of Commons that has ſate ſince Queen Elizabeth's Reign is very unaccountable.

Coke, VIII. 104.

K. William ſenſible of the Miſchief of employing Tories.

The Speech his Majeſty made to Both Houſes of Parliament on the laſt Day of the Year Dec. 31. is the moſt memorable one that ever came from the Throne, and was ſo acceptable to the ſound Part of this Nation, and to their Friends abroad, that it was printed with handſome Decorations in Engliſh, Dutch and French, and hung up in Frames almoſt in every Houſe in England and Holland as his Majeſty's precious Legacy to his own and all Proteſtant People.

His laſt Speech to both Houſes.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Promiſe myſelf, you are met together, "full of the juſt Senſe of the common "Danger of Europe, and that Reſentment of "the late Proceedings of the French King, "which has been ſo fully and univerſally ex- "preſſed in the loyal and ſeaſonable Addreſ- "ſes of my People. The owning and ſetting "up the pretended Prince of Wales for King "of England, is not only the higheſt Indig- "nity offered to Me and the Nation, but "but does ſo nearly concern every Man, "who has a Regard for the Proteſtant Re- "ligion, or the preſent and future Happi- "neſs of his Country, that I need not preſs "you to lay it ſeriouſly to Heart, and to "conſider what further effectual Means may "be uſed for ſecuring the Succeſſion of the "Crown in the Proteſtant Line, and extin- "guiſhing the Hopes of all Pretenders, and "their open or ſecret Abettors. By the "French King's placing his Grandſon on the "Throne of Spain, he is in a Condition to "oppreſs the Reſt of Europe, unleſs ſpeedy "and effectual Meaſures be taken. Under "this Pretence he is become the real Maſter

A. D. 1701.

" of the whole Spaniſh Monarchy; he has " made it to be entirely depending on France, " and diſpoſes of it, as of his own Domini- " ons, and by that Means he has ſurrounded " his Neighbours in ſuch a Manner, that tho' " the Name of Peace may be ſaid to continue, " yet they are put to the Expence and In- " conveniences of a War.

" This muſt affect England in the neareſt " and moſt ſenſible Manner, in reſpect to " our Trade, which will ſoon become precа- " rious in all the valuable Branches of it; in " reſpect to our Peace and Safety at Home, " which we cannot hope ſhall long continue, " and in reſpect to that Part which England " ought to take in the Preſervation of the Li- " berty of Europe.

" In order to obviate the general Calami- " ty, with which the Reſt of Chriſtendom is " threatened by this exorbitant Power of " France, I have concluded ſeveral Alliances, " according to the Encouragement given me " by both Houſes of Parliament, which I " will direct ſhall be laid before you, and " which I do not doubt, you will enable me " to make good.

" There are ſome other Treaties ſtill de- " pending, that ſhall be likewiſe communica- " ted to you as ſoon as they are perfected.

" It is fit I ſhould tell you, the Eyes of " all Europe are upon this Parliament, all " Matters are at a Stand, till your Reſolu- " tions are known, and therefore no Time " ought to be loſt.

" You have yet an Opportunity, by God's " Bleſſing, to ſecure to you and your Poſteri- " ty, the quiet Enjoyment of your Religion " and Liberties, if you are not wanting to " yourſelves, but will exert the ancient Vi- " gour of the Engliſh Nation; but I tell you " plainly, my Opinion is, if you do not lay " hold on this Occaſion, you have no Reaſon " to hope for another.

" In order to do your Part, it will be ne- " ceſſary to have a great Strength at Sea, and " to provide for the Security of our Ships in " Harbour, and alſo that there be ſuch a " Force at Land, as is expected in Propor- " tion to the Force of our Allies.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons.

" I do recommend theſe Matters unto you, " with that Concern and Earneſtneſs which " their Importance requires; at the ſame " Time I cannot but preſs you to take Care " of the Publick Credit, which cannot be " preſerved but by keeping ſacred that Ma- " xim; That they ſhall never be Loſers, who " truſt to a Parliamentary Security. It is " always with Regret, when I do ask Aids of " my People, but you will obſerve, that I de- " ſire nothing which relates to any perſonal " Expence of mine, I am only preſſing you to " do all you can for your own Safety and Ho- " nour, at ſo critical and dangerous a time, " and am willing that what is given, ſhould be " wholly approbated to the Purpoſes for " which it is intended.

" And ſince I am ſpeaking on this Head, I " think it proper to put you in mind, that du- " ring the late War, I ordered the Accounts " to be laid Yearly before the Parliament, and " alſo gave my Aſſent to ſeveral Bills for ſta- " ting the publick Accounts, that my Sub- " jects might have Satisfaction how the Mony " given for the War was applied; and I am " willing that matter may be put in any far- " ther way of Examination, that it may ap- " pear whether there were any Miſapplication " and Miſmanagements, or whether the Debt " that remains upon us has really ariſen from " the Shortneſs of the Supplies, or the Defi- " ciency of the Funds.

A. D. 1701.

" I have already told you, how neceſſary " Diſpatch will be for carrying on that great " publick Buſineſs, whereon our Safety, and " all that is valuable to us depends; I hope " what Time can be ſpared, will be employ- " ed about thoſe other very deſirable Things, " which I have ſo often recommended from " the Throne, I mean, the forming ſome " good Bills for employing the Poor, encou- " raging of Trade, and the further ſuppreſ- " ſing of Vice.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I hope you are come together determined " to avoid all manner of Diſputes and Diffe- " rences, and reſolved to act with a general " and hearty Concurrence for promoting the " common Cauſe, which alone can make this " a happy Seſſion.

" I ſhould think it as great a Bleſſing as " could befal England, if I could obſerve you " as much inclined to lay aſide thoſe unhappy " fatal Animoſities, which divide and weak- " en you, as I am diſpoſed to make all my " Subjects ſafe and eaſy as to any, even the " higheſt Offences, committed againſt me.

" Let me conjure you to diſappoint the on- " ly Hopes of our Enemies by your Unanimi- " ty. I have ſhewn, and will always ſhew, " how deſirous I am to be the common Fa- " ther of all my People; do you in like " Manner lay aſide Parties and Diviſions; let " there be no other Diſtinction heard of a- " mong us for the future, but of thoſe who " are for the Proteſtant Religion, and the " preſent Eſtabliſhment, and of thoſe who " mean a Popiſh Prince, and a French Go- " vernment.

" I will only add this, if you do in good " Earneſt deſire to ſee England hold the Ba- " lance of Europe, and to be indeed at the " Head of the Proteſtant Intereſt, it will ap- " pear by your right improving the preſent " Opportunity.

1702. The Lords began to ſhew their grateful Senſe of this wiſe and affectionate Speech by the following Addreſs, Jan. 1.

The Lords Addreſs.

" We Your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and " loyal Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and " Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, did " hear, with all imaginable Satisfaction, " Your Majeſty's moſt gracious Speech to " both Your Houſes of Parliament; for " which we return Your Majeſty our moſt " humble and hearty Thanks. And though " the ſeveral Particulars, which your Ma- " jeſty was pleas'd to recommend to us, are " of the higheſt Importance, and that we will " loſe no Time in proceeding to the Conſide- " ration of them with great Duty to your Ma- " jeſty,

A. D. 1702.

" jesty, yet we cannot defer expressing our " just Resentments of the Proceedings of the " French King in owning and setting up the " Pretended Prince of Wales for King of En- " gland, and other your Majesty's Realms and " Dominions, which we take to be the high- " est Indignity that can be offer'd to your sa- " cred Majesty, and this Kingdom. And we " do assure your Majesty, we are so sensible " thereof, that we are resolv'd to assist Your " Majesty to the utmost of our Power in de- " fending your sacred Person and Government " from all Attempts whatsoever, that shall be " made either from your open or secret Ene- " mies. And that no Enemies to our Religi- " on and Country may ever hope to prosper " in their Attempts against us, when to our " great Unhappiness it shall please God to de- " prive us of your Majesty's Protection, We " do farther declare our Resolution to assist " and defend to the utmost of our Power a- " gainst the Pretended Prince of Wales; and " all other Pretenders whatsoever, every Per- " son and Persons, who have Right to succeed " to the Crown of these Realms, by Virtue of " the two Acts of Parliament, entitled, An " Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the " Subjects and Settling the Succession of the " Crown: And, An Act for the farther Limi- " tation of the Crown, and better securing the " Rights and Liberties of the Subject. And we " conclude, with our earnest Prayers to Al- " mighty God for your Majesty's long and " happy Reign over us.

To which his Majesty made this acceptable Answer.

His Majesty's Answer.

My Lords,

I Heartily thank you for your very seasonable Address, and for all your kind Expressions of Duty to me in it, I recommend to you to take into your speedy Consideration the other Matters mention'd in my Speech, and doubt not but your Resolutions will be for the Honour and Safety of the Kingdom.

The Commons, who were now under no Influence, but that of Love to their King and Country, presented their Address, Jan. 5.

The Commons Address

Most Gracious Sovereign,
